OBS. 17.—With an adverb of comparison or preference, as better, rather, best, as lief, or as lieve, the auxiliary had seems sometimes to be used before the infinitive to form the potential imperfect or pluperfect: as, “He that loses by getting, had better lose than get.”—Penn’s Maxims. “Other prepositions had better have been substituted.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 166. “I had as lief say.”—LOWTH: ib., p. 110. “It compels me to think of that which I had rather forget.”—Bickersteth, on Prayer, p. 25. “You had much better say nothing upon the subject.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 147. “I had much rather show thee what hopes thou hast before thee.”—Baxter. “I had rather speak five words with my understanding, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.”—1 Cor., xiv, 19. “I knew a gentleman in America who told me how much rather he had be a woman than the man he is.”—Martineau’s Society in America, Vol. i, p. 153. “I had as lief go as not.”—Webster’s Dict., w. Lief. “I had as lieve the town crier spoke my lines.”—SHAK.: Hamlet. “We had best leave nature to her own operations.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 310. “What method had he best take?”—Harris’s Hermes, p. ix. These are equivalent to the phrases, might better lose—might better have been substituted—would as lief say—would rather forget—might much better say—would much rather show—would rather speak—how much rather he would be—would as lief go—should best leave—might he best take; and, for the sake of regularity, these latter forms ought to be preferred, as they sometimes are: thus, “For my own part, I would rather look upon a tree in all its luxuriance.”—Addison, Spect., No. 414; Blair’s Rhet., p. 223. The following construction is different: “Augustus had like to have been slain.”—S. Butler. Here had is a principal verb of the indicative imperfect. The following examples appear to be positively erroneous: “Much that was said, had better remained unsaid.”—N. Y. Observer. Say, “might better have remained.” “A man that is lifting a weight, if he put not sufficient strength to it, had as good put none at all.”—Baxter. Say, “might as well put.” “You were better pour off the first infusion, and use the latter.”—Bacon. Say, “might better pour,” or, if you prefer it, “had better pour.” Shakspeare has an expression which is still worse:—

“Or, by the worth of mine eternal soul,
Thou hadst been better have been born a dog.”—Beauties, p. 295.

OBS. 18.—The form of conjugating the active verb, is often called the Active Voice, and that of the passive verb, the Passive Voice. These terms are borrowed from the Latin and Greek grammars, and, except as serving to diversify expression, are of little or no use in English grammar. Some grammarians deny that there is any propriety in them, with respect to any language. De Sacy, after showing that the import of the verb does not always follow its form of voice, adds: “We must, therefore, carefully distinguish the Voice of a Verb from its signification. To facilitate the distinction, I denominate that an Active Verb which contains an Attribute in which the action is considered as performed by the Subject; and that a Passive Verb which contains an Attribute in which the action is considered as suffered by the Subject, and performed upon it by some agent. I call that voice a Subjective Voice which is generally appropriated to the Active Verb, and that an Objective Voice which is generally appropriated to the Passive Verb. As to the Neuter Verbs, if they possess a peculiar form, I call it a Neuter Voice.”—Fosdick’s Translation, p. 99.

OBS. 19.—A recognition of the difference between actives and passives, in our original classification of verbs with respect to their signification,—a principle of division very properly adopted in a great majority of our grammars and dictionaries, but opinionately rejected by Webster, Bolles, and sundry late grammarians,—renders it unnecessary, if not improper, to place Voices, the Active Voice and the Passive, among the modifications of our verbs, or to speak of them as such in the conjugations. So must it be in respect to “a Neuter Voice,” or any other distinction which the classification involves. The significant characteristic is not overlooked; the distinction is not neglected as nonessential; but it is transferred to a different category. Hence I cannot exactly approve of the following remark, which “the Rev. W. Allen” appears to cite with approbation: “The distinction of active or passive,” says the accurate Mr. Jones, ‘is not essential to verbs. In the infancy of language, it was, in all probability, not known. In Hebrew, the difference but imperfectly exists, and, in the early periods of it, probably did not exist at all. In Arabic, the only distinction which obtains, arises from the vowel points, a late invention compared with the antiquity of that language. And in our own tongue, the names of active and passive would have remained unknown, if they had not been learnt in Latin.”—Allen’s Elements of English Gram., p. 96.

OBS. 20.—By the conjugation of a verb, some teachers choose to understand nothing more than the naming of its principal parts; giving to the arrangement of its numbers and persons, through all the moods and tenses, the name of declension. This is a misapplication of terms, and the distinction is as needless, as it is contrary to general usage. Dr. Bullions, long silent concerning principal parts, seems now to make a singular distinction between “conjugating” and “conjugation.” His conjugations include the moods, tenses, and inflections of verbs; but he teaches also, with some inaccuracy, as follows: “The principal parts of the verb are the Present indicative, the Past indicative and the Past participle. The mentioning of these parts is called CONJUGATING THE VERB.”—Analyt. and Pract. Gram., 1849, p. 80.

OBS. 21.—English verbs having but very few inflections to indicate to what part of the scheme of moods and tenses they pertain, it is found convenient to insert in our conjugations the preposition to, to mark the infinitive; personal pronouns, to distinguish the persons and numbers; the conjunction if, to denote the subjunctive mood; and the adverb not, to show the form of negation. With these additions, or indexes, a verb may be conjugated in four ways:—

1. Affirmatively; as, I write, I do write, or, I am writing; and so on.
2. Negatively; as, I write not, I do not write, or, I am not writing.
3. Interrogatively; as, Write I? Do I write? or, Am I writing?
4. Interrogatively and negatively; as, Write I not? Do I not write? or, Am I not writing?

1. SIMPLE FORM, ACTIVE OR NEUTER.

The simplest form of an English conjugation, is that which makes the present and imperfect tenses without auxiliaries; but, even in these, auxiliaries are required for the potential mood, and are often preferred for the indicative.

FIRST EXAMPLE.

THE REGULAR ACTIVE VERB LOVE, CONJUGATED AFFIRMATIVELY.

PRINCIPAL PARTS.

Present.

Love.

Preterit.

Loved.

Imperfect Participle. Perfect Participle.

Loving.

Loved.

INFINITIVE MOOD.*

The infinitive mood is that form of the verb, which expresses the being, action, or passion, in an unlimited manner, and without person or number. It is used only in the present and perfect tenses.

PRESENT TENSE.

This tense is the root, or radical verb; and is usually preceded by the preposition to, which shows its relation to some other word: thus,

TO LOVE.

PERFECT TENSE.

This tense prefixes the auxiliary have to the perfect participle; and, like the infinitive present, is usually preceded by the preposition to: thus,

TO HAVE LOVED.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

The indicative mood is that form of the verb, which simply indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question. It is used in all the tenses.

PRESENT TENSE.

The present indicative, in its simple form, is essentially the same as the present infinitive, or radical verb; except that the verb be has am in the indicative.

1. The simple form of the present tense is varied thus:—

Singular.

1st person, I love,
2d person, Thou lovest,
3d person, He loves;

Plural.

1st person. We love,
2d person, You love,
3d person, They love.

2. This tense may also be formed by prefixing the auxiliary do to the verb: thus,

Singular.

1. I do love,
2. Thou dost love,
3. He does love;

Plural.

1. We do love,
2. You do love,
3. They do love.

---

* "The substantive form, or, as it is commonly termed, infinitive mood, contains at the same time the essence of verbal meaning, and the literal ROOT on which all inflections of the verb are to be grafted. This character being common to the infinitive in all languages, it [this mood] ought to precede the [other] moods of verbs, instead of being made to follow them, as is absurdly practised in almost all grammatical systems."—Enclytica, p. 14.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

This tense, in its simple form is the preterit; which, in all regular verbs, adds d or ed to the present, but in others is formed variously.

1. The simple form of the imperfect tense is varied thus:—

Singular.

1. I loved,
2. Thou lovedst,
3. He loved;

Plural.

1. We loved,
2. You loved,
3. They loved.

2. This tense may also be formed by prefixing the auxiliary did to the present: thus,

Singular.

1. I did love,
2. Thou didst love,
3. He did love;

Plural.

1. We did love,
2. You did love,
3. They did love.

PERFECT TENSE.

This tense prefixes the auxiliary have to the perfect participle: thus,

Singular.

1. I have loved,
2. Thou hast loved,
3. He has loved;

Plural.

1. We have loved,
2. You have loved,
3. They have loved.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

This tense prefixes the auxiliary had to the perfect participle: thus,

Singular.

1. I had loved,
2. Thou hadst loved,
3. He had loved;

Plural.

1. We had loved,
2. You had loved,
3. They had loved.

FIRST-FUTURE TENSE.

This tense prefixes the auxiliary shall or will to the present: thus,

1. Simply to express a future action or event:—

Singular.

1. I shall love,
2. Thou wilt love,
3. He will love;

Plural.

1. We shall love,
2. You will love,
3. They will love;

2. To express a promise, volition, command, or threat:—

Singular. Plural. 1. I will love, 1. We will love, 2. Thou shalt love, 2. You shall love, 3. He shall love; 3. They shall love.

SECOND-FUTURE TENSE.

This tense prefixes the auxiliaries shall have or will have to the perfect participle: thus,

Singular.

1. I shall have loved,

Plural.

1. We shall have loved,

2. Thou wilt have loved,
3. He will have loved;

2. You will have loved,
3. They will have loved.

OBS.—The auxiliary shall may also be used in the second and third persons of this tense, when preceded by a conjunction expressing condition or contingency; as, “If he shall have completed the work by midsummer.”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 80. So, with the conjunctive adverb when; as, “Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power.”—1 Cor., xv, 24. And perhaps will may here be used in the first person to express a promise, though such usage, I think, seldom occurs. Professor Fowler has given to this tense, first, the “Predictive” form, as exhibited above, and then a form which he calls “Promissive,” and in which the auxiliaries are varied thus: “Singular. 1. I will have taken. 2. Thou shalt have taken, you shall have taken. 3. He shall have taken. Plural. 1. We will have taken. 2. Ye or you shall have taken. 3. He [say They,] shall have taken.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo., N. Y., 1850, p. 281. But the other instances just cited show that such a form is not always promissory.

POTENTIAL MOOD.

The potential mood is that form of the verb, which expresses the power, liberty, possibility, or necessity of the being, action, or passion. It is used in the first four tenses; but the potential imperfect is properly an aorist: its time is very indeterminate; as, “He would be devoid of sensibility were he not greatly satisfied.”—Lord Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 11.

PRESENT TENSE.

This tense prefixes the auxiliary may, can, or must, to the radical verb: thus,

Singular.

1. I may love,
2. Thou mayst love,
3. He may love;

Plural.

1. We may love,
2. You may love,
3. They may love.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

This tense prefixes the auxiliary might, could, would, or should, to the radical verb: thus,

Singular.

1. I might love,
2. Thou mightst love,
3. He might love;

Plural.

1. We might love,
2. You might love,
3. They might love.

PERFECT TENSE.

This tense prefixes the auxiliaries, may have, can have, or must have, to the perfect participle: thus,

Singular.

1. I may have loved,
2. Thou mayst have loved,
3. He may have loved;

Plural.

1. We may have loved,
2. You may have loved,
3. They may have loved.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

This tense prefixes the auxiliaries, might have, could have, would have, or should have, to the perfect participle: thus,

Singular.

1. I might have loved,
2. Thou mightst have loved,
3. He might have loved;

Plural.

1. We might have loved,
2. You might have loved,
3. They might have loved.

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.

The subjunctive mood is that form of the verb, which represents the being, action, or passion, as conditional, doubtful, or contingent. This mood is generally preceded by a conjunction; as, if, that, though, lest, unless, except. But sometimes, especially in poetry, it is formed by a mere placing of the verb before the nominative; as, "Were I," for, "If I were;"—" Had he," for, "If he had;"—" Fall we" for, "If we fall;"—" Knew they," for, "If they knew." It does not vary its termination at all, in the different persons.* It is used in the present, and sometimes in the imperfect tense; rarely—and perhaps never properly—in any other. As this mood can be used only in a dependent clause, the time implied in its tenses is always relative, and generally indefinite; as,

"It shall be in eternal restless change,
Self-fed, and self-consum'd: if this fail,
The pillar'd firmament is rottenness."—Milton, Comus, l. 596.

PRESENT TENSE.

This tense is generally used to express some condition on which a future action or event is affirmed. It is therefore erroneously considered by some grammarians, as an elliptical form of the future.

---

* By this, I mean, that the verb in all the persons, both singular and plural, is the same in form. But Lindley Murray, when he speaks of not varying or not changing the termination of the verb, most absurdly means by it, that the verb is inflected, just as it is in the indicative or the potential mood; and when he speaks of changes or variations of termination, he means, that the verb remains the same as in the first person singular! For example: "The second person singular of the imperfect tense in the subjunctive mood, is also very frequently varied in its termination: as, 'If thou loved him truly, thou wouldst obey him.'"—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 209. "The auxiliaries of the potential mood, when applied to the subjunctive, do not change the termination of the second person singular; as, 'If thou mayst or canst go.'"—Ib., p. 210. "Some authors think, that the termination of these auxiliaries should be varied: as, I advise thee, that thou may beware."—Ib., p. 210. "When the circumstances of contingency and futurity concur, it is proper to vary the terminations of the second and third persons singular."—Ib., 210. "It may be considered as a rule, that the changes of termination are necessary, when these two circumstances concur."—Ib., p. 207. "It may be considered as a rule, that no changes of termination are necessary, when these two circumstances concur."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 264. Now Murray and Ingersoll here mean precisely the same thing! Whose fault is that? If Murray's, he has committed many such. But, in this matter, he is contradicted not only by Ingersoll, but, on one occasion, by himself. For he declares it to be an opinion in which he concurs. "That the definition and nature of the subjunctive mood, have no reference to change of termination."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 211. And yet, amidst his strange blunders, he seems to have ascribed the meaning which a verb has in this mood, to the inflections which it receives in the indicative: saying, "That part of the verb which grammarians call the present tense of the subjunctive mood, has a future signification. This is effected by varying the terminations of the second and third persons singular of the indicative!"—Ib., p. 207. But the absurdity which he really means to teach, is, that the subjunctive mood is derived from the indicative,—the primitive or radical verb, from it's derivatives or branches!

Singular.

1. If I love,
2. If Thou love,
3. If He love;

Plural.

1. If we love,
2. If you love,
3. If they love.

OBS.—In this tense, the auxiliary do is sometimes employed; as, “If thou do prosper my way.”—Genesis, xxiv, 42. “If he do not utter it.”—Leviticus, v, 1. “If he do but intimate his desire.”—Murray’s Key, p. 207. “If he do promise, he will certainly perform.”—Ib., p. 208. “An event which, if it ever do occur, must occur in some future period.”—Hiley’s Gram., (3d Ed., Lond.,) p. 89. “If he do but promise, thou art safe.”—Ib., 89.

“Till old experience do attain

To something like prophetic strain.”—MILTON: Il Penseroso.

These examples, if they are right, prove the tense to be present, and not future, as Hiley and some others suppose it to be.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

This tense, like the imperfect of the potential mood, with which it is frequently connected, is properly an aorist, or indefinite tense; for it may refer to time past, present, or future: as, “If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, what further need was there that an other priest should rise?”—Heb., vii, 11. “They must be viewed exactly in the same light, as if the intention to purchase now existed.”—Murray’s Parsing Exercises, p. 24. “If it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.”—Matt., xxiv, 24. “If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing?”—1 Corinthians, xii, 17. “If the thankful refrained, it would be pain and grief to them.”—Atterbury.

Singular.

1. If I loved,
2. If thou loved,
3. If he loved;

Plural.

1. If we loved,
2. If you loved,
3. If they loved.

OBS.—In this tense, the auxiliary did is sometimes employed. The subjunctive may here be distinguished from the indicative, by these circumstances; namely, that the time is indefinite, and that the supposition is always contrary to the fact: as, “Great is the number of those who might attain to true wisdom, if they did not already think themselves wise.”—Dillwyn’s Reflections, p. 36. This implies that they do think themselves wise; but an indicative supposition or concession—(as, “Though they did not think themselves wise, they were so—”) accords with the fact, and with the literal time of the tense,—here time past. The subjunctive imperfect, suggesting the idea of what is not, and known by the sense, is sometimes introduced without any of the usual signs; as, “In a society of perfect men, where all understood what was morally right, and were determined to act accordingly, it is obvious, that human laws, or even human organization to enforce God’s laws, would be altogether unnecessary, and could serve no valuable purpose.”—PRES. SHANNON: Examiner, No. 78.

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

The imperative mood is that form of the verb, which is used in commanding, exhorting, entreating, or permitting. It is commonly used only in the second person of the present tense.

PRESENT TENSE.

|                  |                             |                         |
|------------------|-----------------------------|-------------------------|
| Singular. | 2. Love [thou,]             | or Do thou love; |
| Plural.   | 2. Love [ye or you,] | or Do you love.  |

OBS.—In the Greek language, which has three numbers, the imperative mood is used in the second and third persons of them all; and has also several different tenses, some of which cannot be clearly rendered in English. In Latin, this mood has a distinct form for the third person, both singular and plural. In Italian, Spanish, and French, the first person plural is also given it. Imitations of some of these forms are occasionally employed in English, particularly by the poets. Such imitations must be referred to this mood, unless by ellipsis and transposition we make them out to be something else; and against this there are strong objections. Again, as imprecation on one's self is not impossible, the first person singular may be added; so that this mood may possibly have all the persons and numbers. Examples: "Come we now to his translation of the Iliad."—Pope's Pref. to Dunciad. "Proceed we therefore in our subject."—Ib. "Blessed be he that blesseth thee."—Gen., xxvii, 29. "Thy kingdom come."—Matt., vi, 10. "But pass we that."—W. Scott. "Third person: Be he, Be they."—Churchill's Gram., p. 92.

"My soul, turn from them—turn we to survey," &c.—Goldsmith.

"Then turn we to her latest tribune's name."—Byron.

"Where'er the eye could light these words you read:

"Who comes this way—behold, and fear to sin!"—Pollok.

"Fall he that must, beneath his rival's arms,

And live the rest, secure of future harms."—Pope.

"Cursed be I that did so!—All the charms

Of Sycorax, toads, beetles, bats, light on you!"—Shakspeare.

"Have done thy charms, thou hateful wither'd hag!"—Idem.

PARTICIPLES.

|                          |                        |                           |
|--------------------------|------------------------|---------------------------|
| 1. The Imperfect. | 2. The Perfect. | 3. The Preperfect. |
| Loving.                  | Loved.                 | Having loved.             |

SYNOPSIS OF THE FIRST EXAMPLE.

FIRST PERSON SINGULAR.

IND. I love or do love, I loved or did love, I have loved. I had loved, I shall or will love, I shall or will have loved.

POT. I may, can, or must love; I might, could, would, or should love; I may, can, or must have loved; I might, could, would, or should have loved.

SUBJ. If I love, If I loved.

SECOND PERSON SINGULAR.

IND. Thou lovest or dost love, Thou lovedst or didst love, Thou hast loved, Thou hadst loved, Thou shalt or wilt love, Thou shalt or wilt have loved.

POT. Thou mayst, canst, or must love; Thou mightst, couldst, wouldst, or shouldst love; Thou mayst, canst, or must have loved; Thou mightst, couldst, wouldst or shouldst have loved.

SUBJ. If thou love, If thou loved.

IMP. Love [thou,] or Do thou love.

THIRD PERSON SINGULAR.

IND. He loves or does love, He loved or did love, He has loved, He had loved, He shall or will love, He shall or will have loved.

POT. He may, can, or must love; He might, could, would, or should love; He may, can, or must have loved; He might, could, would, or should have loved.

SUBJ. If he love, If he loved.

FIRST PERSON PLURAL.

IND. We love or do love, We loved or did loved, We have loved, We had loved, We shall or will love, We shall or will have loved.

POT. We may, can, or must love, We might, could, would, or should love; We may, can, or must have loved; We might, could, would, or should have loved.

SUBJ. If we love, If we loved.

SECOND PERSON PLURAL.

IND. You love or do love, You loved or did love, You have loved, You had loved, You shall or will love, You shall or will have loved.

POT. You may, can, or must love; You might, could, would, or should love; You may, can, or must have loved; You might, could, would, or should have loved.

SUBJ. If you love, If you loved.

IMP. Love [ye or you,] or Do you love.

THIRD PERSON PLURAL.

IND. They love or do love, They loved or did love, They have loved, They had loved, They shall or will love, They shall or will have loved.

POT. They may, can, or must love; They might, could, would, or should love; They may, can, or must have loved; They might, could, would, or should have loved.

SUBJ. If they love, If they loved.

FAMILIAR FORM WITH 'THOU.'

NOTE.—In the familiar style, the second person singular of this verb, is usually and more properly formed thus:

IND. Thou lov'st or dost love, Thou loved or did love, Thou hast loved, Thou had loved, Thou shall or will love, Thou shall or will have loved.

POT. Thou may, can, or must love; Thou might, could, would, or should love; Thou may, can, or must have loved; Thou might, could, would, or should have loved.

SUBJ. If thou love, If thou loved.

IMP. Love [thou,] or Do thou love.

SECOND EXAMPLE.

THE IRREGULAR ACTIVE VERB SEE, CONJUGATED AFFIRMATIVELY.

PRINCIPAL PARTS.

| Present. | Preterit. | Imp. Participle. | Perf. Participle. |
|-----------------|------------------|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| See.            | Saw.             | Seeing.                 | Seen.                    |

INFINITIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

TO SEE.

PERFECT TENSE.

TO HAVE SEEN.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I see,
2. Thou seest,
3. He sees;

Plural.

1. We see,
2. You see,
3. They see.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I saw,
2. Thou sawest,
3. He saw;

Plural.

1. We saw,
2. You saw,
3. They saw.

PERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I have seen,
2. Thou hast seen,
3. He has seen;

Plural.

1. We have seen,
2. You have seen,
3. They have seen.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I had seen,
2. Thou hadst seen,
3. He had seen;

Plural.

1. We had seen,
2. You had seen,
3. They had seen.

FIRST-FUTURE TENSE.

Singular.

1. I shall see,
2. Thou wilt see,
3. He will see;

Plural.

1. We shall see,
2. You will see,
3. They will see.

SECOND-FUTURE TENSE.

Singular.

1. I shall have seen,

Plural.

1. We shall have seen,

2. Thou wilt have seen,
3. He will have seen;

2. You will have seen,
3. They will have seen.

POTENTIAL MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I may see,
2. Thou mayst see,
3. He may see;

Plural.

1. We may see,
2. You may see,
3. They may see.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I might see,
2. Thou mightst see,
3. He might see;

Plural.

1. We might see,
2. You might see,
3. They might see.

PERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I may have seen,
2. Thou mayst have seen,
3. He may have seen;

Plural.

1. We may have seen,
2. You may have seen,
3. They may have seen.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I might have seen,
2. Thou mightst have seen,
3. He might have seen;

Plural.

1. We might have seen,
2. You might have seen,
3. They might have seen.

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. If I see,
2. If thou see,
3. If he see;

Plural.

1. If we see,
2. If you see,
3. If they see.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. If I saw,
2. If thou saw,
3. If he saw;

Plural.

1. If we saw,
2. If you saw,
3. If they saw.

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

2. See [thou,] or Do thou see;

Plural.

2. See [ye or you,] or Do you see.

PARTICIPLES.

1. The Imperfect.
Seeing.

2. The Perfect.
Seen.

3. The Preperfect.
Having seen.

NOTES.

NOTE I.—The student ought to be able to rehearse the form of a verb, not only according to the order of the entire conjugation, but also according to the synopsis of the several persons and numbers. One sixth part of the paradigm, thus recited, gives in general a fair sample of the whole: and, in class recitations, this mode of rehearsal will save much time: as, IND. I see or do see, I saw or did see, I have seen, I had seen, I shall or will see, I shall or will have seen. POT. I may, can, or must see; I might, could, would, or should see; I may, can, or must have seen; I might, could, would, or should have seen. SUBJ. If I see, If I saw.

NOTE II.—In the familiar style, the second person singular of this verb is usually and more properly formed thus: IND. Thou seest or dost see, Thou saw or did see, Thou hast seen, Thou had seen, Thou shall or will see, Thou shall or will have seen. POT. Thou may, can, or must see; Thou might, could, would, or should see; Thou may, can, or must have seen; Thou might, could, would, or should have seen. SUBJ. If thou see, If thou saw. IMP. See [thou,] or Do thou see.

THIRD EXAMPLE.

THE IRREGULAR NEUTER VERB BE, CONJUGATED AFFIRMATIVELY.

PRINCIPAL PARTS.

Present. Preterit. Imp. Participle. Perf. Participle. Be. Was. Being. Been.

INFINITIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

TO BE.

PERFECT TENSE.

TO HAVE BEEN.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I am,
2. Thou art,
3. He is;

Plural.

1. We are,
2. You are,
3. They are.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I was,

Plural.

1. We were,

2. Thou wast, (or wert,)*
3. He was;

2. You were,
3. They were.

PERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I have been,
2. Thou hast been,
3. He has been;

Plural.

1. We have been,
2. You have been,
3. They have been.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I had been,
2. Thou hadst been,
3. He had been;

Plural.

1. We had been,
2. You had been,
3. They had been.

FIRST-FUTURE TENSE.

Singular.

1. I shall be,
2. Thou wilt be,
3. He will be;

Plural.

1. We shall be,
2. You will be,
3. They will be.

SECOND-FUTURE TENSE.

Singular.

1. I shall have been,
2. Thou wilt have been,
3. He will have been;

Plural.

1. We shall have been,
2. You will have been,
3. They will have been.

POTENTIAL MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I may be,
2. Thou mayst be,
3. He may be,

Plural.

1. We may be,
2. You may be,
3. They may be.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I might be,
2. Thou mightst be,
3. He might be;

Plural.

1. We might be,
2. You might be,
3. They might be.

PERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I may have been,
2. Thou mayst have been,
3. He may have been;

Plural.

1. We may have been,
2. You may have been,
3. They may have been.

---

* Wert is sometimes used in lieu of wast; and, in such instances, both by authority and by analogy, it appears to belong here, if anywhere. See OBS. 2d and 3d, below.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I might have been,
2. Thou mightst have been,
3. He might have been;

Plural.

1. We might have been,
2. You might have been,
3. They might have been.

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. If I be,
2. If thou be,
3. If he be;

Plural.

1. If we be,
2. If you be,
3. If they be.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. If I were,*
2. If thou were, or wert,†
3. If he were;

Plural.

1. If we were,
2. If you were,
3. If they were.

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.Plural.

2. Be [thou,]
2. Be [ye or you,]

or Do thou be;or Do you be.

PARTICIPLES.

1. The Imperfect.
Being.

2. The Perfect.
Been.

3. The Preperfect.
Having been.

* Some grammarians, regardless of the general usage of authors, prefer was to were in the singular number of this tense of the subjunctive mood. In the following remark, the tense is named "present" and this preference is urged with some critical extravagance: "Was, though the past tense of the indicative mood, expresses the present of the hypothetical; as, 'I wish that I was well.' The use of this hypothetical form of the subjunctive mood, has given rise to a form of expression wholly unwarranted by the rules of grammar. When the verb was is to be used in the present tense singular, in this form of the subjunctive mood, the ear is often pained with a plural were, as, 'Were I your master'—'Were he compelled to do it,' &c. This has become so common that some of the best grammars of the language furnish authority for the barbarism, and even in the second person supply wert, as a convenient accompaniment. If such a conjugation is admitted, we may expect to see Shakspeare's 'thou beest' in full use."—Chandler's Gram., Ed. of 1821, p. 55. In "Chandler's Common School Grammar," of 1847, the language of this paragraph is somewhat softened, but the substance is still retained. See the latter work, p. 80.

† "If I were, If thou were. If he were."—Harrison's Gram., p. 31. "If, or though, I were loved. If, or though, thou were, or wert loved. If, or though, he were loved."—Bicknell's Gram., Part i, p. 69. "If, though, &c. I were burned, thou were burned or you were burned, he were burned."—Buchanan's Gram., p. 53. "Though thou were. Some say, 'though thou wert.'"—Mackintosh's Gram., p. 178. "If or though I were. If or though thou were. If or though he were."—St. Quentin's General Gram., p. 86. "If I was, Thou wast, or You was or were, He was. Or thus: If I were, Thou wert, or you was or were, He were."—Webster's Philosophical Gram., p. 95; Improved Gram., p. 64. "PRESENT TENSE. Before, &c. I be; thou beest, or you be; he, she, or it, be: We, you or ye, they, be. PAST TENSE. Before, &c. I were; thou wert, or you were; he, she, or it, were; We, you or ye, they, were."—WHITE, on the English Verb, p. 52.

FAMILIAR FORM WITH 'THOU.'

NOTE.—In the familiar style, the second person singular of this verb, is usually and more properly formed thus: IND. Thou art, Thou was, Thou hast been, Thou had been, Thou shall or will be, Thou shall or will have been. POT. Thou may, can, or must be; Thou might, could, would, or should be; Thou may, can, or must have been; Thou might, could, would, or should have been. SUBJ. If thou be, If thou were. IMP. Be [thou,] or Do thou be.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—It appears that be, as well as am, was formerly used for the indicative present: as, "I be, Thou beest, He be; We be, Ye be, They be." See Brightland's Gram., p. 114. Dr. Lowth, whose Grammar is still preferred at Harvard University, gives both forms, thus: "I am, Thou art, He is; We are, Ye are, They are. Or, I be, Thou beest, He is; We be, Ye be, They be." To the third person singular, he subjoins the following example and remark: "I think it be thine indeed, for thou liest in it.' Shak. Hamlet. Be, in the singular number of this time and mode, especially in the third person, is obsolete; and is become somewhat antiquated in the plural."—Lowth's Gram., p. 36. Dr. Johnson gives this tense thus: "Sing. I am; thou art; he is; Plur. We are, or be; ye are, or be; they are, or be." And adds, "The plural be is now little in use."—Gram. in Johnson's Dict., p. 8. The Bible commonly has am, art, is, and are, but not always; the indicative be occurs in some places: as, "We be twelve brethren."—Gen., xlii, 32. "What be these two olive branches?"—Zech., iv, 12. Some traces of this usage still occur in poetry: as,

"There be more things to greet the heart and eyes
In Arno's dome of Art's most princely shrine,
Where Sculpture with her rainbow sister vies;
There be more marvels yet—but not for mine."

—Byron's Childe Harold, Canto iv, st. 61.

OBS. 2.—Respecting the verb wert, it is not easy to determine whether it is most properly of the indicative mood only, or of the subjunctive mood only, or of both, or of neither. The regular and analogical form for the indicative, is "Thou wast," and for the subjunctive, "If thou were." Brightland exhibits, "I was or were, Thou wast or wert, He was or were," without distinction of mood, for the three persons singular; and, for the plural, were only. Dr. Johnson gives us, for the indicative, "Thou wast, or wert;" with the remark, "Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be used in the indicative."—Johnson's Gram., p. 8. In his conjunctive (or subjunctive) mood, he has, "Thou beest," and "Thou wert." So Milton wrote, "If thou beest he."—P. Lost, B. i, l. 84. Likewise Shakspeare: "If thou beest Stephano."—Tempest. This inflection of be is obsolete: all now say, "If thou be." But wert is still in use, to some extent, for both moods; being generally placed by the grammarians in the subjunctive only, but much oftener written for the indicative: as, "Whate'er thou art or wert."—Byron's Harold, Canto iv, st. 115. "O thou that wert so happy!"—Ib., st. 109. "Vainly wert thou wed."—Ib., st. 169.

OBS. 3.—Dr. Lowth gave to this verb, BE, that form of the subjunctive mood, which it now has in most of our grammars; appending to it the following examples and questions: "Before the sun, Before the Heavens, thou wert."—Milton. 'Remember what thou wert.'—Dryden. 'I knew thou wert not slow to hear.'—Addison. 'Thou who of old wert sent to Israel's court.'—Prior. 'All this thou wert.'—Pope. 'Thou, Stella, wert no longer young.'—Swift. Shall we, in deference to these great authorities," asks the Doctor, "allow wert to be the same with wast, and common to the indicative and [the] subjunctive mood? or rather abide by the practice of our best ancient writers; the propriety of the language, which requires, as far as may be, distinct forms, for different moods; and the analogy of formation in each mood; I was, thou wast; I were, thou wert? all which conspire to make wert peculiar to the subjunctive mood.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 37; Churchill’s, p. 251. I have before shown, that several of the “best ancient writers” did not inflect the verb were, but wrote “thou were,” and, surely, “the analogy of formation,” requires that the subjunctive be not inflected. Hence “the propriety which requires distinct forms,” requires not wert, in either mood. Why then should we make this contraction of the old indicative form werest, a solitary exception, by fixing it in the subjunctive only, and that in opposition to the best authorities that ever used it? It is worthier to take rank with its kindred beest, and be called an archaism.

OBS. 4.—The chief characteristical difference between the indicative and the subjunctive mood, is, that in the latter the verb is not inflected at all, in the different persons: IND. “Thou magnifiest his work.” SUBJ. “Remember that thou magnify his work.”—Job, xxxvi, 24. IND. “He cuts off, shuts up, and gathers together.” SUBJ. “If he cut off, and shut up, or gather together, then who can hinder him?”—Job, xl, 10. There is also a difference of meaning. The Indicative, “If he was,” admits the fact; the Subjunctive, “If he were,” supposes that he was not. These moods may therefore be distinguished by the sense, even when their forms are alike: as, “Though it thundered, it did not rain.”—“Though it thundered, he would not hear it.” The indicative assumption here is, “Though it did thunder,” or, “Though there was thunder,” the subjunctive, “Though it should thunder,” or, “Though there were thunder.” These senses are clearly different. Writers however are continually confounding these moods; some in one way, some in an other. Thus S. R. Hall, the teacher of a Seminary for Teachers: “SUBJ. Present Tense. 1. If I be, or am, 2. If thou be, or art, 3. If he be, or is; 1. If we be, or are, 2. If ye or you be, or are, 3. If they be, or are. Imperfect Tense. 1. If I were, or was, 2. If thou wert, or wast, 3. If he were, or was; 1. If we were, 2. If ye or you were, 3. If they were.”—Hall’s Grammatical Assistant, p. 11. Again: “SUBJ. Present Tense. 1. If I love, 2. If thou lovest, 3. If he love,” &c. “The remaining tenses of this mode, are, in general, similar to the correspondent tenses of the Indicative mode, only with the conjunction prefixed.”—Id., p. 20. Dr. Johnson observes, “The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded; or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when some convenience of versification does not invite its revival. It is used among the purer writers of former times; as, ‘Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not.’”—Gram. in Joh. Dict., p. 9. To neglect the subjunctive mood, or to confound it with the indicative, is to augment several of the worst faults of the language.

II. COMPOUND OR PROGRESSIVE FORM.

Active and neuter verbs may also be conjugated, by adding the Imperfect Participle to the auxiliary verb BE, through all its changes; as, “I am writing a letter.”—“He is sitting idle.”—“They are going.” This form of the verb denotes a continuance of the action or state of being, and is, on many occasions, preferable to the simple form of the verb.

FOURTH EXAMPLE.

THE IRREGULAR ACTIVE VERB READ, CONJUGATED AFFIRMATIVELY, IN THE COMPOUND FORM.

PRINCIPAL PARTS OF THE SIMPLE VERB.

Present.

Rēad.

Preterit.

Rēad.

Imp. Participle.

Rēading.

Perf. Participle.

Rēad.

INFINITIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE. TO BE READING.

PERFECT TENSE. TO HAVE BEEN READING.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I am reading,
2. Thou art reading,
3. He is reading;

Plural.

1. We are reading,
2. You are reading,
3. They are reading.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I was reading,
2. Thou wast reading,
3. He was reading;

Plural.

1. We were reading,
2. You were reading,
3. They were reading.

PERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I have been reading,
2. Thou hast been reading,
3. He has been reading;

Plural.

1. We have been reading,
2. You have been reading,
3. They have been reading.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I had been reading,
2. Thou hadst been reading,
3. He had been reading;

Plural.

1. We had been reading,
2. You had been reading,
3. They had been reading.

FIRST-FUTURE TENSE.

Singular.

1. I shall be reading,
2. Thou wilt be reading,
3. He will be reading;

Plural.

1. We shall be reading,
2. You will be reading,
3. They will be reading.

SECOND-FUTURE TENSE.

Singular.

1. I shall have been reading,
2. Thou wilt have been reading,
3. He will have been reading;

Plural.

1. We shall have been reading,
2. You will have been reading,
3. They will have been reading.

POTENTIAL MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I may be reading,
2. Thou mayst be reading,
3. He may be reading;

Plural.

1. We may be reading,
2. You may be reading,
3. They may be reading.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I might be reading,
2. Thou mightst be reading,
3. He might be reading;

Plural.

1. We might be reading,
2. You might be reading,
3. They might be reading.

PERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I may have been reading,
2. Thou mayst have been reading,
3. He may have been reading;

Plural.

1. We may have been reading,
2. You may have been reading,
3. They may have been reading.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I might have been reading,
2. Thou mightst have been reading,
3. He might have been reading;

Plural.

1. We might have been reading,
2. You might have been reading,
3. They might have been reading.

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. If I be reading,
2. If thou be reading,
3. If he be reading;

Plural.

1. If we be reading,
2. If you be reading,
3. If they be reading.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. If I were reading,
2. If thou were reading,
3. If he were reading;

Plural.

1. If we were reading,
2. If you were reading,
3. If they were reading.

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

Singular.

2. Be [thou] reading, *or Do thou be reading;Plural.*2. Be [ye or you] reading, or Do you be reading.

PARTICIPLES.

1. The Imperfect.
Being reading.

2. The Perfect.
—————

3. The Preperfect.
Having been reading.

NOTE.—In the familiar style, the second person singular of this verb, is usually and more properly formed thus: IND. Thou art reading, Thou was reading, Thou hast been reading, Thou had been reading, Thou shall or will be reading, Thou shall or will have been reading. POT. Thou may, can, or must be reading; Thou might, could, would, or should be reading; Thou may, can, or must have been reading; Thou might, could, would, or should have been reading. SUBJ. If thou be reading, If thou were reading. IMP. Be [thou,] reading, or Do thou be reading.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Those verbs which, in their simple form, imply continuance, do not admit the compound form: thus we say, “I respect him;” but not, “I am respecting him.” This compound form seems to imply that kind of action, which is susceptible of intermissions and renewals. Affections of the mind or heart are supposed to last; or, rather, actions of this kind are complete as soon as they exist. Hence, to love, to hate, to desire, to fear, to forget, to remember, and many other such verbs, are incapable of this method of conjugation.* It is true, we often find in grammars such models, as, “I was loving, Thou wast loving, He was loving,” &c. But this language, to express what the authors intend by it, is not English. “He was loving,” can only mean, “He was affectionate,” in which sense, loving is an adjective, and susceptible of comparison. Who, in common parlance, has ever said, “He was loving me,” or any thing like it? Yet some have improperly published various examples, or even whole conjugations, of this spurious sort. See such in Adam’s Gram., p. 91; Gould’s Adam, 83; Bullions’s English Gram., 52; his Analyt. and Pract. Gram., 92; Chandler’s New Gram., 85 and 86; Clark’s, 80; Cooper’s Plain and Practical, 70; Frazer’s Improved, 66 and 69; S. S. Greene’s, 234; Guy’s, 25; Hallock’s, 103; Hart’s, 88; Hendrick’s, 38; Lennie’s, 31; Lowth’s, 40; Harrison’s, 34; Perley’s, 36; Pinneo’s Primary, 101.

OBS. 2.—Verbs of this form have sometimes a passive signification; as, “The books are now selling.”—Allen’s Gram., p. 82. “As the money was paying down.”—Ainsworth’s Dict., w. As. “It requires no motion in the organs whilst it is forming.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 8. “Those works are long forming which must always last.”—Dr. Chetwood. “While the work of the temple was carrying on.”—Dr. J. Owen. “The designs of Providence are carrying on.”—Bp. Butler. “A scheme, which has been carrying on, and is still carrying on.”—Id., Analogy, p. 188. “We are permitted to know nothing of what is transacting in the regions above us.”—Dr. Blair. “While these things were transacting in Germany.”—Russell’s Modern Europe, Part First, Let. 59. “As he was carrying to execution, he demanded to be heard.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, Vol. i, p. 163. “To declare that the action was doing or done.”—Booth’s

---

* The text in Acts, xxii, 20th, “I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death,” ought rather to be, “I also stood by, and consented to his death,” but the present reading is, thus far, a literal version from the Greek, though the verb “kept,” that follows, is not. Montanus renders it literally: “Et ipse eram astans, et consentiens interemptioni ejus, et custodiens vestimenta interficientium illum.” Beza makes it better Latin thus: “Ego quoque adstabam, et una assentiebar cædi ipsius, et custodiebam pallia eorum qui interimebant eum.” Other examples of a questionable or improper use of the progressive form may occasionally be found in good authors; as, “A promising boy of six years of age, was missing by his parents.”—Whittier, Stranger in Lowell, p. 100. Missing, wanting, and willing, after the verb to be, are commonly reckoned participial adjectives; but here “was missing” is made a passive verb, equivalent to was missed, which, perhaps, would better express the meaning. To miss, to perceive the absence of, is such an act of the mind, as seems unsuited to the compound form, to be missing; and, if we cannot say, “The mother was missing her son,” I think we ought not to use the same form passively, as above.

Introd., p. 28. "It is doing by thousands now."—Abbott's Young Christian, p. 121. "While the experiment was making, he was watching every movement."—Ib., p. 309. "A series of communications from heaven, which had been making for fifteen hundred years."—Ib., p. 166. "Plutarch's Lives are re-printing."—L. Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 64. "My Lives are reprinting."—DR. JOHNSON: Worcester's Univ. and Crit. Dict., p. xlv. "All this has been transacting within 130 miles of London."—Byron: Perley's Gram., p. 37. "When the heart is corroding by vexations."—Student's Manual, p. 336. "The padlocks for our lips are forging."—WHITTIER: Liberator, No. 993. "When his throat is cutting."—Collier's Antoninus. "While your story is telling."—Adams's Rhet., i, 425. "But the seeds of it were sowing some time before."—Bolingbroke, on History, p. 168. "As soon as it was formed, nay even whilst it was forming."—Ib., p. 163. "Strange schemes of private ambition were formed and forming there."—Ib., p. 291. "Even when it was making and made."—Ib., 299. "Which have been made and are making."—HENRY CLAY: Liberator, ix, p. 141. "And they are in measure sanctified, or sanctifying, by the power thereof."—Barclay's Works, i, 537. "Which is now accomplishing amongst the uncivilized countries of the earth."—Chalmers, Sermons, p. 281. "Who are ruining, or ruined, [in] this way."—Locke, on Ed., p. 155. "Whilst they were undoing."—Ibid. "Whether he was employing fire to consume [something,] or was himself consuming by fire."—Crombie, on Etym. and Syntax, p. 148. "At home, the greatest exertions are making to promote its progress."—Sheridan's Elocution, p. iv. "With those [sounds] which are uttering."—Ib., p. 125. "Orders are now concerting for the dismissal of all officers of the Revenue marine."—Providence Journal, Feb. 1, 1850. Expressions of this kind are condemned by some critics, under the notion that the participle in ing must never be passive; but the usage is unquestionably of far better authority, and, according to my apprehension, in far better taste, than the more complex phraseology which some late writers adopt in its stead; as, "The books are now being sold."—"In all the towns about Cork, the whiskey shops are being closed, and soup, coffee, and tea houses [are] establishing generally."—Dublin Evening Post, 1840.

OBS. 3.—The question here is, Which is the most correct expression, "While the bridge was building,"—"While the bridge was a building,"—or, "While the bridge was being built?" And again, Are they all wrong? If none of these is right, we must reject them all, and say, "While they were building the bridge,"—"While the bridge was in process of erection,"—or resort to some other equivalent phrase. Dr. Johnson, after noticing the compound form of active-intransitives, as, "I am going"—"She is dying,"—"The tempest is raging,"—"I have been walking," and so forth, adds: "There is another manner of using the active participle, which gives it a passive signification.* as, The grammar is now printing, Grammatica jam

* Some grammarians, contrary to the common opinion, suppose the verbs here spoken of, to have, not a passive, but a neuter signification. Thus, Joseph Guy, Jun., of London: "Active verbs often take a neuter sense; as, A house is building; here, is building is used in a neuter signification, because it has no object after it. By this rule are explained such sentences as, Application is wanting; The grammar is printing; The lottery is drawing; It is flying, &c."—Guy's English Gram., p. 21. "Neuter," here, as in many other places, is meant to include the active-intransitives. "Is flying" is of this class; and "is wanting," corresponding to the Latin caret, appears to be neuter; but the rest seem rather to be passives. Tried, however, by the usual criterion,—the naming of the "agent" which, it is said, "a verb passive necessarily implies,"—what may at first seem progressive passives, may not always be found such. "Most verbs signifying action" says Dr. Johnson, "may likewise signify condition, or habit, and become neuters, [i. e. active-intransitives]; as I love, I am in love; I strike, I am now striking."—Gram. before Quarto Dict., p. 7. So sell, form, make, and many others, usually transitive, have sometimes an active-intransitive sense which nearly approaches the passive, and of which are selling, is forming, are making, and the like, may be only equivalent expressions. For example: "It is cold, and ice forms rapidly—is forming rapidly—or is formed rapidly."—Here, with little difference of meaning, is the appearance of both voices, the Active and the Passive; while "is forming," which nunc chartis imprimitur. The brass is forging, Æra excuduntur. This is, in my opinion," says he, "a vitious expression, probably corrupted from a phrase more pure, but now somewhat obsolete: The book is a printing, The brass is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns signifying action, according to the analogy of this language."—Gram. in Joh. Dict., p. 9.

OBS. 4.—A is certainly sometimes a preposition; and, as such, it may govern a participle, and that without converting it into a "verbal noun." But that such phraseology ought to be preferred to what is exhibited with so many authorities, in a preceding paragraph, and with an example from Johnson among the rest, I am not prepared to concede. As to the notion of introducing a new and more complex passive form of conjugation, as, "The bridge is being built," "The bridge was being built," and so forth, it is one of the most absurd and monstrous innovations ever thought of. Yet some two or three men, who seem to delight in huge absurdities, declare that this "modern innovation is likely to supersede" the simpler mode of expression. Thus, in stead of, "The work is now publishing," they choose to say, "The work is now being published."—Kirkham's Gram., p. 82. This is certainly no better English than, "The work was being published, has been being published, had been being published, shall or will be being published, shall or will have been being published;" and so on, through all the moods and tenses. What a language shall we have when our verbs are thus conjugated!

OBS. 5.—A certain Irish critic, who even outdoes in rashness the above-cited American, having recently arrived in New York, has republished a grammar, in which he not only repudiates the passive use of the participle in ing, but denies the usual passive form of the present tense, "I am loved, I am smitten" &c., as taught by Murray and others, to be good English; and tells us that the true form is, "I am being loved, I am being smitten," &c. See the 98th and 103d pages of Joseph W. Wright's Philosophical Grammar, (Edition of 1838,) dedicated "TO COMMON SENSE!"* But both are offset, if not refuted, by the following observations from a source decidedly better: "It has lately become common to use the present participle passive [,] to express the suffering of an action as continuing, instead of the participle in -ing in the passive sense; thus, instead of, 'The house is building,' we now very frequently hear, 'The house is being built.' This mode of expression, besides being awkward, is incorrect, and does not express the idea intended. This will be obvious, I think, from the following considerations.

"1. The expression, 'is being,' is equivalent to 'is,' and expresses no more; just as, 'is loving,' is equivalent to, 'loves.' Hence, 'is being built,' is precisely equivalent to, 'is built.'

"2. 'Built,' is a perfect participle; and therefore cannot, in any connexion, express an action, or the suffering of an action, now in progress. The verb to be, signifies to exist; 'being,' therefore, is equivalent to 'existing.' If then we substitute the synonyme, the nature some will have for an example of "the Middle voice," may be referred to either. If the following passive construction is right, is wanting or are wanting may be a verb of three or four different sorts: "Reflections that may drive away despair, cannot be wanting by him, who considers," &c.—Johnson's Rambler, No. 129: Wright's Gram., p. 196.

---

* Dr. Bullions, in his grammar of 1849, says, "Nobody would think of saying, 'He is being loved'—'This result is being desired.'"—Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 237. But, according to J. W. Wright, whose superiority in grammar has sixty-two titled vouchers, this unheard-of barbarism is, for the present passive, precisely and solely what one ought to say! Nor is it, in fact, any more barbarous, or more foreign from usage, than the spurious example which the Doctor himself takes for a model in the active voice: "I am loving. Thou art loving, &c; I have been loving, Thou hast been loving, &c."—A. and P. Gr., p. 92. So: "James is loving me."—Ib., p 235.

of the expression will be obvious; thus, 'the house is being built,' is, in other words, 'the house is existing built,' or more simply as before, 'the house is built,' plainly importing an action not progressing, but now existing in a finished state.

"3. If the expression, 'is being built,' be a correct form of the present indicative passive, then it must be equally correct to say in the perfect, 'has been being built;' in the past perfect, 'had been being built;' in the present infinitive, 'to be being built;' in the perfect infinitive, 'to have been being built;' and in the present participle, 'being being built;' which all will admit to be expressions as incorrect as they are inelegant, but precisely analogous to that which now begins to prevail."—Bullions's Principles of English Gram., p. 58.

OBS. 6.—It may be replied, that the verbs to be and to exist are not always synonymous; because the former is often a mere auxiliary, or a mere copula, whereas the latter always means something positive, as to be in being, to be extant. Thus we may speak of a thing as being destroyed, or may say, it is annihilated; but we can by no means speak of it as existing destroyed, or say, it exists annihilated. The first argument above is also nugatory. These drawbacks, however, do not wholly destroy the force of the foregoing criticism, or at all extenuate the obvious tautology and impropriety of such phrases as, is being, was being, &c. The gentlemen who affirm that this new form of conjugation "is being introduced into the language," (since they allow participles to follow possessive pronouns) may very fairly be asked, "What evidence have you of its being being introduced?" Nor can they, on their own principles, either object to the monstrous phraseology of this question, or tell how to better it!*

OBS. 7.—D. H. Sanborn, an other recent writer, has very emphatically censured this innovation, as follows: "English and American writers have of late introduced a new kind of phraseology, which has become quite prevalent in the periodical and popular publications of the day. Their intention, doubtless, is, to supersede the use of the verb in the definite form, when it has a passive signification. They say, 'The ship is being built,'—'time is being wasted,'—'the work is being advanced,' instead of, 'the ship is building, time is wasting, the work is advancing.' Such a phraseology is a solecism too palpable to receive any favor; it is at war with the practice of the most distinguished writers in the English language, such as Dr. Johnson and Addison. "When an individual says, 'a house is being burned,' he declares that a house is existing, burned, which is impossible; for being means existing, and burned, consumed by fire. The house ceases to exist as such, after it is consumed by fire. But when he says, 'a house is burning,' we understand that it is consuming by fire; instead of inaccuracy, doubt, and ambiguity, we have a form of expression perfectly intelligible, beautiful, definite, and appropriate."—Sanborn's Analytical Gram., p. 102.

OBS. 8.—Dr. Perley speaks of this usage thus: "An attempt has been made of late to introduce a kind of passive participial voice; as, 'The temple is being built.' This ought not to be encouraged. For, besides being an innovation, it is less convenient than the use of the present participle in the passive sense. Being built signifies action finished; and how can, Is being built, signify an action unfinished?"—Perley's Gram., p. 37.

OBS. 9.—The question now before us has drawn forth, on either side, a deal of ill scholarship and false logic, of which it would be tedious to give even a synopsis.

---

* "The predicate in the form, 'The house is being built,' would be, according to our view, 'BEING BEING built,' which is manifestly an absurd tautology."—Mulligan's Gram., 1852, p. 151.

Concerning the import of some of our most common words and phrases, these ingenious masters,—Bullions, Sanborn, and Perley,—severally assert some things which seem not to be exactly true. It is remarkable that critics can err in expounding terms so central to the language, and so familiar to all ears, as “be, being, being built, burned, being burned, is, is burned, to be burned,” and the like. That to be and to exist, or their like derivatives, such as being and existing, is and exists, cannot always explain each other, is sufficiently shown above; and thereby is refuted Sanborn’s chief argument, that, “is being burned,” involves the contradiction of “existing, burned,” or “consumed by fire.” According to his reasoning, as well as that of Bullions, is burned must mean exists consumed; was burned, existed consumed; and thus our whole passive conjugation would often be found made up of bald absurdities! That this new unco-passive form conflicts with the older and better usage of taking the progressive form sometimes passively, is doubtless a good argument against the innovation; but that “Johnson and Addison” are fit representatives of the older “practice” in this case, may be doubted. I know not that the latter has anywhere made use of such phraseology; and one or two examples from the former are scarcely an offset to his positive verdict against the usage. See OBS. 3rd, above.

OBS. 10.—As to what is called “the present or the imperfect participle passive,”—as, “being burned,” or “being burnt,”—if it is rightly interpreted in any of the foregoing citations, it is, beyond question, very improperly thus named. In participles, ing denotes continuance: thus being usually means continuing to be; loving, continuing to love; building, continuing to build,—or (as taken passively) continuing to be built: i. e., (in words which express the sense more precisely and certainly,) continuing to be in process of construction. What then is “being built,” but “continuing to be built,” the same, or nearly the same, as “building” taken passively? True it is, that built, when alone, being a perfect participle, does not mean “in process of construction,” but rather, “constructed” which intimates completion; yet, in the foregoing passive phrases, and others like them, as well as in all examples of this unco-passive voice, continuance of the passive state being first suggested, and cessation of the act being either regarded as future or disregarded, the imperfect participle passive is for the most part received as equivalent to the simple imperfect used in a passive sense. But Dr. Bullions, who, after making “is being built” precisely equivalent to is built,” classes the two participles differently, and both erroneously,—the one as a “present participle,” and the other, of late, as a “past,”—has also said above, “‘Built,’ is a perfect participle: and THEREFORE cannot, in any connexion, express an action, or the suffering of an action, now in progress.” And Dr. Perley, who also calls the compound of being a “present participle,” argues thus: “Being built signifies an action, finished; and how can Is being built, signify an action unfinished?” To expound a passive term actively, or as “signifying action,” is, at any rate, a near approach to absurdity; and I shall presently show that the fore-cited notion of “a perfect participle,” now half abandoned by Bullions himself, has been the seed of the very worst form of that ridiculous neology which the good Doctor was opposing.

OBS. 11.—These criticisms being based upon the meaning of certain participles, either alone or in phrases, and the particular terms spoken of being chiefly meant to represent classes, what is said of them may be understood of their kinds. Hence the appropriate naming of the kinds, so as to convey no false idea of any participle’s import, is justly brought into view; and I may be allowed to say here, that, for the first participle passive, which begins with “being,” the epithet “Imperfect” is better than “Present,” because this compound participle denotes, not always what is present, but always the state of something by which an action is, or was, or will be, undergone or undergoing—a state continuing, or so regarded, though perhaps the action causative may be ended—or sometimes perhaps imagined only, and not yet really begun. With a marvellous instability of doctrine, for the professed systematizer of different languages and grammars, Dr. Bullions has recently changed his names of the second and third participles, in both voices, from “Perfect” and “Compound Perfect,” to “Past” and “Perfect.” His notion now is, that, “The Perfect participle is always compound; as, Having finished, Having been finished.”—Bullions’s Analyt. and Pract. Grammar, 1849, p. 77. And what was the “Perfect” before, in his several books, is now called the “Past,” though, with this change, he has deliberately made an other which is repugnant to it: this participle, being the basis of three tenses always, and of all the tenses sometimes, is now allowed by the Doctor to lend the term “perfect” to the three,—“Present-perfect, Past-perfect, Future-perfect,”—even when itself is named otherwise!

OBS. 12.—From the erroneous conception, that a perfect participle must, in every connexion, express “action finished,” action past,—or perhaps from only a moiety of this great error,—the notion that such a participle cannot, in connexion with an auxiliary, constitute a passive verb of the present tense,—J. W. Wright, above-mentioned, has not very unnaturally reasoned, that, “The expression, ‘I am loved,’ which Mr. Murray has employed to exhibit the passive conjugation of the present tense, may much more feasibly represent past than present time.”—See Wright’s Philosophical Gram., p. 99. Accordingly, in his own paradigm of the passive verb, he has formed this tense solely from what he calls the participle present, thus: “I am being smitten, Thou art being smitten,” &c.—Ib., p. 98. His “Passed Tense,” too, for some reason which I do not discover, he distinguishes above the rest by a double form, thus: “I was smitten, or being smitten; Thou wast smitten, or being smitten,” &c.—P. 99. In his opinion, “Few will object to the propriety of the more familiar phraseology, ‘I am in the ACT,—or, suffering the ACTION of BEING SMITTEN,’ and yet,” says he, “in substance and effect, it is wholly the same as, ‘I am being smitten,’ which is THE TRUE FORM of the verb in the present tense of the passive voice!”—Ibid. Had we not met with some similar expressions of English or American blunderers, “the act or action of being smitten,” would be accounted a downright Irish bull; and as to this ultra notion of neologizing all our passive verbs, by the addition of “being,”—with the author’s cool talk of “the presentation of this theory, and [the] consequent suppression of that hitherto employed,”—there is a transcendency in it, worthy of the most sublime aspirant among grammatical newfangers.

OBS. 13.—But, with all its boldness of innovation, Wright’s Philosophical Grammar is not a little self-contradictory in its treatment of the passive verb. The entire “suppression” of the usual form of its present tense, did not always appear, even to this author, quite so easy and reasonable a matter, as the foregoing citations would seem to represent it. The passive use of the participle in ing, he has easily disposed of: despite innumerable authorities for it, one false assertion, of seven syllables, suffices to make it quite impossible.* But the usual passive form, which, with some show of truth, is accused of not

---

* “Suppose a criminal to be enduring the operation of binding:—Shall we say, with Mr. Murray,—‘The criminal is binding?’ If so, HE MUST BE BINDING SOMETHING,—a circumstance, in effect, quite opposed to the fact presented. Shall we then say, as he does, in the present tense conjugation of his passive verb,—‘The criminal is bound?’ If so, the action of binding, which the criminal is suffering, will be represented as completed,—a position which the action its self will palpably deny.” See Wright’s Phil. Gram., p. 102. It is folly for a man to puzzle himself or others thus, with fictitious examples, imagined on purpose to make good usage seem wrong. There is bad grammar enough, for all useful purposes, in the actual writings of valued authors; but who can show, by any proofs, that the English language, as heretofore written, is so miserably having always precisely the same meaning as the progressive used passively,—that is, of not always denoting continuance in the state of receiving continued action,—and which is, for that remarkable reason, judged worthy of rejection, is nevertheless admitted to have, in very many instances, a conformity to this idea, and therefore to “belong [thus far] to the present tense.”—P. 103. This contradicts to an indefinite extent, the proposition for its rejection. It is observable also, that the same examples, ‘I am loved’ and ‘I am smitten,’—the same “tolerated, but erroneous forms,” (so called on page 103,) that are given as specimens of what he would reject,—though at first pronounced “equivalent in grammatical construction,” censured for the same pretended error, and proposed to be changed alike to “the true form” by the insertion of “being,”—are subsequently declared to “belong to” different classes and different tenses. “I am loved,” is referred to that “numerous” class of verbs, which “detail ACTION of prior, but retained, endured, and continued existence; and therefore, in this sense, belong to the present tense.” But “I am smitten,” is idly reckoned of an opposite class, (said by Dr. Bullions to be “perhaps the greater number,”) whose “ACTIONS described are neither continuous in their nature, nor progressive in their duration; but, on the contrary, completed and perfected; and [which] are consequently descriptive of passed time and ACTION.”—Wright’s Gram., p. 103. Again: “In what instance soever this latter form and signification can be introduced, their import should be, and, indeed, ought to be, supplied by the perfect tense construction:—for example, ‘I am smitten,’ [should] be, ‘I have been smitten.”—Ib. Here is self-contradiction indefinitely extended in an other way. Many a good phrase, if not every one, that the author’s first suggestion would turn to the unco-passive form, his present “remedy” would about as absurdly convert into “the perfect tense.”

OBS. 14.—But Wright’s inconsistency, about this matter, ends not here: it runs through all he says of it; for, in this instance, error and inconsistency constitute his whole story. In one place, he anticipates and answers a question thus: “To what tense do the constructions, ‘I am pleased,’ ‘He is expected,’ ‘I am smitten,’ ‘He is bound,’ belong?” “We answer:—So far as these and like constructions are applicable to the delineation of continuous and retained ACTION, they express present time; and must be treated accordingly.”—P. 103. This seems to intimate that even, “I am smitten,” and its likes, as they stand, may have some good claim to be of the present tense; which suggestion is contrary to several others made by the author. To expound this, or any other passive term, passively, never enters his mind: with him, as with sundry others, “ACTION,” “finished ACTION,” or “progressive ACTION,” is all any passive verb or participle ever means! No marvel, that awkward perversions of the forms of utterance and the principles of grammar should follow such interpretation. In Wright’s syntax a very queer distinction is apparently made between a passive verb, and the participle chiefly constituting it; and here, too, through a fancied ellipsis of “being” before the latter, most, if not all, of his other positions concerning passives, are again disastrously overthrown by something worse—a word “imperceptibly understood.” “‘I am smitten,’ ‘I was smitten,’ &c., are,” he says, “the universally acknowledged forms of the VERBS in these tenses, in the passive voice:—not of the PARTICIPLE. In all verbal constructions of the character of which we have hitherto treated, (see page 103) and, where the ACTIONS described are continuous in their operations,—the participle BEING is imperceptibly omitted, by ellipsis.”—P. 144.

---

inadequate to our wants, that we need use the strange neologism, “The criminal is being bound,” or any thing similar?

OBS. 15.—Dr. Bullions has stated, that, “The present participle active, and the present participle passive, are not counterparts to each other in signification; [,] the one signifying the present doing, and the other the present suffering of an action, [;] for the latter always intimates the present being of an ACT, not in progress, but completed.”—Prin. of Eng. Gram., p. 58. In this, he errs no less grossly than in his idea of the “action or the suffering” expressed by “a perfect participle,” as cited in OBS. 5th above; namely, that it must have ceased. Worse interpretation, or balder absurdity, is scarcely to be met with; and yet the reverend Doctor, great linguist as he should be, was here only trying to think and tell the common import of a very common sort of English participles; such as, “being loved” and “being seen.” In grammar, “an act,” that has “present being,” can be nothing else than an act now doing, or “in progress;” and if, “the present being of an ACT not in progress,” were here a possible thought, it surely could not be intimated by any such participle. In Acts, i, 3 and 4, it is stated, that our Saviour showed himself to the apostles, “alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God; and, being assembled together with them commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem.” Now, of these misnamed “present participles,” we have here one “active,” one “passive,” and two others—one in each form—that are neuter; but no present time, except what is in the indefinite date of “pertaining.” The events are past, and were so in the days of St. Luke. Yet each of the participles denotes continuance: not, indeed, in or to the present time, but for a time. “Being seen” means continuing to be seen; and, in this instance, the period of the continuance was “forty days” of time past. But, according to the above-cited “principle of English Grammar,” so long and so widely inculcated by “the Rev. Peter Bullions, D. D., Professor of Languages,” &c.,—a central principle of interpretation, presumed by him to hold “always”—this participle must intimate “the present being of an act, not in progress, but completed;”—that is, “the present being of the apostles’ act in formerly seeing the risen Saviour!

OBS. 16.—This grammarian has lately taken a deal of needless pains to sustain, by a studied division of verbs into two classes, similar to those which are mentioned in OBS. 13th above, a part of the philosophy of J. W. Wright, concerning our usual form of passives in the present tense. But, as he now will have it, that the two voices sometimes tally as counterparts, it is plain that he adheres but partially to his former erroneous conception of a perfect or “past” participle, and the terms which hold it “in any connexion.” The awkward substitutes proposed by the Irish critic, he does not indeed countenance; but argues against them still, and, in some respects, very justly. The doctrine now common to these authors, on this point, is the highly important one, that, in respect to half our verbs, what we commonly take for the passive present, is not such—that, in “the second class, (perhaps the greater number,) the present-passive implies that the act expressed by the active voice has ceased. Thus, ‘The house is built.’ * * * Strictly speaking, then,” says the Doctor, “the PAST PARTICIPLE with the verb TO BE is not the present tense in the passive voice of verbs thus used; that is, this form does not express passively the doing of the act.”—Bullions’s Analyt. and Pract. Grammar, Ed. of 1849, p. 235. Thus far these two authors agree; except that Wright seems to have avoided the incongruity of calling that “the present-passive” which he denies to be such. But the Doctor, approving none of this practitioner’s “remedies,” and being less solicitous to provide other treatment than expulsion for the thousands of present passives which both deem spurious, adds, as from the chair, this verdict: “These verbs either have no present-passive, or it is made by annexing the participle in ing, in its passive sense, to the verb to be; as, ‘The house is building.’”—Ib., p. 236.

OBS. 17.—It would seem, that Dr. Bullions thinks, and in reality Wright also, that nothing can be a present passive, but what “expresses passively the DOING of the act.” This is about as wise, as to try to imagine every active verb to express actively the receiving of an act! It borders exceedingly hard upon absurdity; it very much resembles the nonsense of “expressing receptively the giving of something!” Besides, the word “DOING,” being used substantively, does not determine well what is here meant; which is, I suppose, continuance, or an unfinished state of the act received—an idea which seems adapted to the participle in ing, but which it is certainly no fault of a participle ending in d, t, or n, not to suggest. To “express passively the doing of the act,” if the language means any thing rational, may be, simply to say, that the act is or was done. For “doings” are, as often as any-wise, “things done,” as buildings are fabrics built; and “is built,” and “am smitten,” the gentlemen’s choice examples of false passives, and of “actions finished,”—though neither of them necessarily intimates either continuance or cessation of the act suffered, or, if it did, would be the less or the more passive or present,—may, in such a sense, “express the doing of the act,” if any passives can:—nay, the “finished act” has such completion as may be stated with degrees of progress or of frequency; as, “The house is partly built.”—“I am oftener smitten.” There is, undoubtedly, some difference between the assertions, “The house is building,”—and, “The house is partly built,” though, for practical purposes, perhaps, we need not always be very nice in choosing between them. For the sake of variety, however, if for nothing else, it is to be hoped, the doctrine above-cited, which limits half our passive verbs of the present tense, to the progressive form only, will not soon be generally approved. It impairs the language more than unco-passives are likely ever to corrupt it.

OBS. 18.—“No startling novelties have been introduced,” says the preface to the “Analytical and Practical Grammar of the English Language.” To have shunned all shocking innovations, is only to have exercised common prudence. It is not pretended, that any of the Doctor’s errors here remarked upon, or elsewhere in this treatise, will startle any body; but, if errors exist, even in plausible guise, it may not be amiss, if I tell of them. To suppose every verb or participle to be either “transitive” or “intransitive,” setting all passives with the former sort, all neuters with the latter; (p. 59;)—to define the transitive verb or participle as expressing always “an act DONE by one person or thing to another,” (p. 60;)—to say, after making passive verbs transitive, “The object of a transitive verb is in the objective case,” and, “A verb that does not make sense with an objective after it, is intransitive;” (p. 60;)—to insist upon a precise and almost universal identity of “meaning” in terms so obviously contrasted as are the two voices, “active” and “passive;” (pp. 95 and 235;)—to allege, as a general principle, “that whether we use the active, or the passive voice, the meaning is the same, except in some cases in the present tense;” (p. 67;)—to attribute to the forms naturally opposite in voice and sense, that sameness of meaning which is observable only in certain whole sentences formed from them; (pp. 67, 95, and 235;)—to assume that each “VOICE is a particular form of the verb,” yet make it include two cases, and often a preposition before one of them; (pp. 66, 67, and 95;)—to pretend from the words, “The PASSIVE VOICE represents the subject of the verb as acted upon,” (p. 67,) that, “According to the DEFINITION, the passive voice expresses, passively, the same thing that the active does actively;” (p. 235;)—to affirm that, “‘Cæsar conquered Gaul,’ and ‘Gaul was conquered by Cæsar,’ express precisely the same idea,”—and then say, “It will be felt at once that the expressions, ‘Cæsar conquers Gaul,’ and ‘Gaul is conquered by Cæsar,’ do not express the same thing,” (p. 235;)—to deny that passive verbs or neuter are worthy to constitute a distinct class, yet profess to find, in one single tense of the former, such a difference of meaning as warrants a general division of verbs in respect to it; (ib.;)—to announce, in bad English, that, “In regard to this matter [.] there are evidently Two CLASSES of verbs; namely, those whose present-passive expresses precisely the same thing, passively, as the active voice does actively, and those in which it does not.” (ib.;)—to do these several things, as they have been done, is, to set forth, not “novelties” only, but errors and inconsistencies.

OBS. 19.—Dr. Bullions still adheres to his old argument, that being after its own verb must be devoid of meaning; or, in his own words, “that is being built, if it mean anything, can mean nothing more than is built, which is not the idea intended to be expressed.”—Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 237. He had said, (as cited in OBS. 5th above,) “The expression, ‘is being,’ is equivalent to is, and expresses no more; just as, ‘is loving,’ is equivalent to ‘loves.’ Hence, ‘is being built,’ is precisely equivalent to ‘is built.’”—Principles of E. Gram., p. 58. He has now discovered “that there is no progressive form of the verb to be, and no need of it.” and that, “hence, there is no such expression in English as is being.”—Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 236. He should have noticed also, that “is loving” is not an authorized “equivalent to loves;” and, further, that the error of saying “is being built,” is only in the relation of the first two words to each other. If “is being,” and “is loving,” are left unused for the same reason, the truth may be, that is itself, like loves, commonly denotes “continuance;” and that being after it, in stead of being necessary or proper, can only be awkwardly tautologous. This is, in fact, THE GRAND OBJECTION to the new phraseology—“is being practised”—“am being smitten”—and the like. Were there no danger that petty writers would one day seize upon it with like avidity, an other innovation, exactly similar to this in every thing but tense—similar in awkwardness, in tautology, in un mistakeableness—might here be uttered for the sake of illustration. Some men conceive, that “The perfect participle is always compound; as, having seen, having written;”—and that the simple word, seen or written, had originally, and still ought to have, only a passive construction. For such views, they find authorities. Hence, in lieu of the common phrases, “had we seen,” “we have written,” they adopt such English as this; “Had we having seen you, we should have stopped.”—“We have having written but just now, to our correspondent.” Now, “We are being smitten,” is no better grammar than this;—and no worse: “The idea intended” is in no great jeopardy in either case.

OBS. 20.—J. R. Chandler, of Philadelphia, in his Common School Grammar of 1847, has earnestly undertaken the defence of this new and much-mooted passive expression: which he calls “the Definite Passive Voice,” or “the Passive Voice of the Definite Form.” He admits it, however, to be a form that “does not sound well,”—a “novelty that strikes the ear unpleasantly;” but he will have the defect to be, not in the tautologous conceit of “is being,” “was being,” “has been being,” and the like, but in everybody’s organ of hearing,—supposing all ears corrupted, “from infancy,” to a distaste for correct speech, by “the habit of hearing and using words ungrammatically!”—See p. 89. Claiming this new form as “the true passive,” in just contrast with the progressive active, he not only rebukes all attempts “to evade” the use of it, “by some real or supposed equivalent,” but also declares, that, “The attempt to deprive the transitive definite verb of [this] its passive voice, is to strike at the foundation of the language, and to strip it of one of its most important qualities; that of making both actor and sufferer, each in turn and at pleasure, the subject of conversation.”—Ibid. Concerning equivalents, he evidently argues fallaciously; for he urges, that the using of them “does not dispense with the necessity of the definite passive voice.”—P. 88. But it is plain, that, of the many fair substitutes which may in most cases be found, if any one is preferred, this form, and all the rest, are of course rejected for the time.

OBS. 21.—By Chandler, as well as others, this new passive form is justified only on the supposition, that the simple participle in ing can never with propriety be used passively. No plausible argument, indeed, can be framed for it, without the assumption, that the simpler form, when used in the same sense, is ungrammatical. But this is, in fact, a begging of the main question; and that, in opposition to abundant authority for the usage condemned. (See OBS. 3d, above.) This author pretends that, “The RULE of all grammarians declares the verb is, and a present participle (is building, or is writing), to be in the active voice” only.—P. 88. (I add the word “only,” but this is what he means, else he merely quibbles.) Now in this idea he is wrong, and so are the several grammarians who support the principle of this imaginary “RULE.” The opinion of critics in general would be better represented by the following suggestions of the Rev. W. Allen: “When the English verb does not signify mental affection, the distinction of voice is often disregarded: thus we say, actively, they were selling fruit; and, passively, the books are now selling. The same remark applies to the participle used as a noun: as, actively, drawing is an elegant amusement, building is expensive; and, passively, his drawings are good, this is a fine building.”—Allen’s Elements of E. Gram., p. 82.

OBS. 22.—Chandler admits, that, “When it is said, ‘The house is building,’ the meaning is easily obtained; though,” he strangely insists, “it is exactly opposite to the assertion.”—P. 89. He endeavours to show, moreover, by a fictitious example made for the purpose, that the progressive form, if used in both voices, will be liable to ambiguity. It may, perhaps, be so in some instances; but, were there weight enough in the objection to condemn the passive usage altogether, one would suppose there might be found, somewhere, an actual example or two of the abuse. Not concurring with Dr. Bullions in the notion that the active voice and the passive usually “express precisely the same thing,” this critic concludes his argument with the following sentence: “There is an important difference between doing and suffering; and that difference is grammatically shown by the appropriate use of the active and passive voices of a verb.”—Chandler’s Common School Gram., p. 89.

OBS. 23.—The opinion given at the close of OBS. 2d above, was first published in 1833. An opposite doctrine, with the suggestion that it is “improper to say, ‘the house is building,’ instead of ‘the house is being built,’”—is found on page 64th of the Rev. David Blair’s Grammar, of 1815,—“Seventh Edition,” with a preface dated, “October 20th, 1814.” To any grammarian who wrote at a period much earlier than that, the question about unco-passives never occurred. Many critics have passed judgement upon them since, and so generally with reprobation, that the man must have more hardihood than sense, who will yet disgust his readers or hearers with them.* That “This new form has been used by some respectable writers,” we need not deny; but let us look at the given “instances of it: ‘For those who are being educated in our seminaries.’ R. SOUTHEY.—‘It was being uttered.’

---

* It is a very strange event in the history of English grammar, that such a controversy as this should have arisen; but a stranger one still, that, after all that has been said, more argument is needed. Some men, who hope to be valued as scholars, yet stickle for an odd phrase, which critics have denounced as follows: “But the history of the language scarcely affords a parallel to the innovation, at once unphilosophical and hypercritical, pedantic and illiterate, which has lately appeared in the excruciating refinement ‘is being’ and its unmerciful variations. We hope, and indeed believe, that it has not received the sanction of any grammar adopted in our popular education, as it certainly never will of any writer of just pretensions to scholarship.”—The True Sun. N. Y., April 16, 1846.

COLERIDGE.—“The foundation was being laid.” BRIT. CRITIC.—English Grammar with Worcester’s Univ. and Crit. Dict., p. xlv. Here, for the first example, it would be much better to say, “For those who are educated,” *—or, “who are receiving their education,” for the others, “It was uttering,”—“was uttered,”—or, “was in uttering.”—“The foundation was laying,”—“was laid,”—or, “was about being laid.” Worcester’s opinion of the “new form” is to be inferred from his manner of naming it in the following sentence: “Within a few years, a strange and awkward neologism has been introduced, by which the present passive participle is substituted, in such cases as the above, for the participle in ing.”—Ibid. He has two instances more, in each of which the phrase is linked with an expression of disapprobation; “‘It τετυμμένοσ signifies properly, though in uncouth English, one who is being beaten.’ ABP. WHATELY.—‘The bridge is being built, and other phrases of the like kind, have pained the eye.’ D. BOOTH.”—Ibid.†

OBS. 24.—Richard Hiley, in the third edition of his Grammar, published in London, in 1840, after showing the passive use of the participle in ing, proceeds thus: “No ambiguity arises, we presume, from the use of the participle in this manner. To avoid, however, affixing a passive signification to the participle in ing, an attempt has lately been made to substitute the passive participle in its place. Thus instead of ‘The house was building,’ ‘The work imprinting,’ we sometimes hear, ‘The house was being built,’ ‘The work is being printed.’ But this mode is contrary to the English idiom, and has not yet obtained the sanction of reputable authority.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 30.

OBS. 25.—Professor Hart, of Philadelphia, whose English Grammar was first published in 1845, justly prefers the usage which takes the progressive form occasionally in a passive sense; but, in arguing against the new substitute, he evidently remoulds the early reasoning of Dr. Bullions, errors and all; a part of which he introduces thus: “I know the correctness of this mode of expression has lately been very much assailed, and an attempt, to some extent successful, has been made [,] to introduce the form [,] ‘is being built.’ But, in the first place, the old mode of expression is a well established usage of the language, being found in our best and most correct writers. Secondly, is being built does not convey the idea intended, [;] namely [,] that of progressive action. Is being, taken together, means simply is, just as is writing means writes; therefore, is being built means is built, a perfect and not a progressive ACTION. Or, if being [and] built be taken together, they signify an ACTION COMPLETE, and the phrase means, as before, the house is (EXISTS)

* Education is a work of continuance, yet completed, like many others, as fast as it goes on. It is not, like the act of loving or hating, so complete at the first moment as not to admit the progressive form of the verb; for one may say of a lad, “I am educating him for the law;” and possibly, “He is educating for the law;” though not so well as, “He is to be educated for the law.” But, to suppose that “is educated” or “are educated” implies unnecessarily a cessation of the educating is a mistake. That conception is right, only when educated is taken adjectively. The phrase, “those who are educated in our seminaries,” hardly includes such as have been educated there in times past: much less does it apply to these exclusively, as some seem to think. “Being,” as inserted by Southey, is therefore quite needless: so it is often, in this new phraseology, the best correction being its mere omission.

† Worcester has also this citation: “The Eclectic Review remarks, ‘That a need of this phrase, or an equivalent one, is felt, is sufficiently proved by the extent to which it is used by educated persons and respectable writers.’”—Gram. before Dict., p. xlv. Sundry phrases, equivalent in sense to this new voice, have long been in use, and are, of course, still needed; something from among them being always, by every accurate writer, still preferred. But this awkward innovation, use it who will, can no more be justified by a plea of “need,” than can every other hackneyed solecism extant. Even the Archbishop, if quoted right by Worcester, has descended to “uncouth English,” without either necessity or propriety, having thereby only misexpounded a very common Greek word—a “perfect or pluperfect” participle, which means “beaten, struck, or having been beaten”—G. BROWN.

being built.”—Hart’s Gram., p. 76. The last three sentences here are liable to many objections, some of which are suggested above.

OBS. 26.—It is important, that the central phraseology of our language be so understood, as not to be misinterpreted with credit, or falsely expounded by popular critics and teachers. Hence errors of exposition are the more particularly noticed in these observations. In “being built,” Prof. Hart, like sundry authors named above, finds nothing but “ACTION COMPLETE.” Without doubt, Butler interprets better, when he says, “‘The house is built,’ denotes an existing state, rather than a completed action.” But this author, too, in his next three sentences, utters as many errors; for he adds: “The name of the agent cannot be expressed in phrases of this kind. We cannot say, ‘The house is built by John.’ When we say, ‘The house is built by mechanics,’ we do not express an existing state.”—Butler’s Practical Gram., p. 80. Unquestionably, “is built by mechanics,” expresses nothing else than the “existing state” of being “built by mechanics,” together with an affirmation:—that is, the “existing state” of receiving the action of mechanics, is affirmed of “the house.” And, in my judgement, one may very well say, “The house is built by John,” meaning, “John is building the house.” St. Paul says, “Every house is builded by SOME MAN.”—Heb., iii, 4. In this text, the common “name of the agent” is “expressed.”

OBS. 27.—Wells and Weld, whose grammars date from 1846, being remarkably chary of finding anything wrong in “respectable writers,” hazard no opinion of their own, concerning the correctness or incorrectness of either of the usages under discussion. They do not always see absurdity in the approbation of opposites; yet one should here, perhaps, count them with the majorities they allow. The latter says, “The participle in ing is sometimes used passively; as, forty and six years was this temple in building; not in being built.”—Weld’s English Gram., 2d Ed., p. 170. Here, if he means to suggest, that “in being built” would “not” be good English, he teaches very erroneously; if his thought is, that this phrase would “not” express the sense of the former one, “in building,” he palpably contradicts his own position! But he proceeds, in a note, thus: “The form of expression, is being built, is being committed, &c., is almost universally condemned by grammarians; but it is sometimes met with in respectable writers. It occurs most frequently in newspaper paragraphs, and in hasty compositions.”—Ibid. Wells comments thus: “Different opinions have long existed among critics respecting this passive use of the imperfect participle. Many respectable writers substitute the compound passive participle; as, ‘The house is being built,’ ‘The book is being printed.’ But the prevailing practice of the best authors is in favor of the simple form; as, ‘The house is building.’”—Wells’s School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 148; 113th Ed., p. 161.*

---

* Wells has also the following citations, which most probably accord with his own opinions, though the first is rather extravagant: “The propriety of these imperfect passive tenses has been doubted by almost all our grammarians; though I believe but few of them have written many pages without condescending to make use of them. Dr. Beattie says, ‘One of the greatest defects of the English tongue, with regard to the verb, seems to be the want of an imperfect passive participle.’ And yet he uses the imperfect participle in a passive sense as often as most writers.”—Pickbourn’s Dissertation on the English Verb.

“Several other expressions of this sort now and then occur, such as the new-fangled and most uncouth solecism, ‘is being done,’ for the good old English idiomatic expression, ‘is doing,’—an absurd periphrasis, driving out a pointed and pithy turn of the English language.”—N. A. Review. See Wells’s Grammar, 1850, p. 161.

The term, “imperfect passive tenses,” seems not a very accurate one; because the present, the perfect, &c., are included. Pickbourn applies it to any passive tenses formed from the simple “imperfect participle;” but the phrase, “passive verbs in the progressive form,” would better express the meaning. The term, “compound passive participle,” which Wells applies above to “being built,” “being printed,” and the like, is also

OBS. 28.—S. W. Clark, in the second edition of his Practical Grammar, stereotyped and published in New York in 1848, appears to favour the insertion of “being” into passive verbs; but his instructions are so obscure, so often inaccurate, and so incompatible one with an other, that it is hard to say, with certainty, what he approves. In one place, he has this position: “The Passive Voice of a verb is formed by adding the Passive Participle of that verb, to the verb be. EXAMPLES—To be loved. I am feared. They are worshipped.”—Page 69. In an other, he has this: “When the Subject is to be represented as receiving the action, the Passive Participle should be used. EXAMPLE—Henry’s lesson is BEING RECITED.”—P. 132. Now these two positions utterly confound each other; for they are equally general, and “the Passive Participle” is first one thing, and then an other. Again, he has the following assertions, both false: “The Present (or First) Participle always ends in ing, and is limited to the Active Voice. The Past (or Second) Participle of Regular Verbs ends in d or ed, and is limited to the Passive Voice.”—P. 131. Afterwards, in spite of the fancied limitation, he acknowledges the passive use of the participle in ing, and that there is “authority” for it; but, at the same time, most absurdly supposes the word to predicate “action,” and also to be wrong: saying, “Action is sometimes predicated of a passive subject. EXAMPLE—‘The house is building,.. for.. ‘The house is being built,’.. which means.. The house is becoming built.” On this, he remarks thus: “This is one of the instances in which Authority is against Philosophy. For an act cannot properly be predicated of a passive agent. Many good writers properly reject this idiom. ‘Mansfield’s prophecy is being realized.’—MICHELET’S LUTHER.”—Clark’s Practical Gram., p. 133. It may require some study to learn from this which idiom it is. that these “many good writers reject:” but the grammarian who can talk of “a passive agent,” without perceiving that the phrase is self-contradictory and absurd, may well be expected to entertain a “Philosophy” which is against “Authority,” and likewise to prefer a ridiculous innovation to good and established usage.

OBS. 29.—As most verbs are susceptible of both forms, the simple active and the compound or progressive, and likewise of a transitive and an intransitive sense in each; and as many, when taken intransitively, may have a meaning which is scarcely distinguishable from that of the passive form; it often happens that this substitution of the imperfect participle passive for the simple imperfect in ing, is quite needless, even when the latter is not considered passive. For example: “See by the following paragraph, how widely the bane is being circulated!”—Liberator, No. 999, p. 34. Here is circulating would be better; and so would is circulated. Nor would either of these much vary the sense, if at all; for “circulate” may mean, according to Webster, “to be diffused,” or, as Johnson and Worcester have it, “to be dispersed.” See the second marginal note on p. 378.

OBS. 30.—R. G. Parker appears to have formed a just opinion of the “modern innovation,” the arguments for which are so largely examined in the foregoing observations; but the “principle” which he adduces as “conclusive” against it, if principle it can be called, has scarcely any bearing on the question; certainly no more than has the simple assertion of one reputable critic, that our participle in ing may occasionally be used passively. “Such expressions as the following,” says he, “have recently become very both unusual and inaccurate. Most readers would sooner understand by it the form, having been built, having been printed, &c. This author’s mode of naming participles is always either very awkward or not distinctive. His scheme makes it necessary to add here, for each of these forms, a third epithet, referring to his main distinction of “imperfect and perfect,” as, “the compound imperfect participle passive,” and “the compound perfect participle passive.” What is “being builded” or “being printed,” but “an imperfect passive participle?” Was this, or something else, the desideratum of Beattie?

---

common, not only in the periodical publications of the day, but are likewise finding favor with popular writers; as, 'The house is being built.' 'The street is being paved.' 'The actions that are now being performed,' &c. 'The patents are being prepared.' The usage of the best writers does not sanction these expressions; and Mr. Pickbourn lays down the following principle, which is conclusive upon the subject. 'Whenever the participle in ing is joined by an auxiliary verb to a nominative capable of the action, it is taken actively; but, when joined to one incapable of the action, it becomes passive. If we say, The men are building a house, the participle building is evidently used in an active sense; because the men are capable of the action. But when we say, The house is building, or, Patents are preparing, the participles building and preparing must necessarily be understood in a passive sense; because neither the house nor the patents are capable of action.'—See Pickbourn on the English Verb, pp. 78-80."—Parker's Aids to English Composition, p. 105. Pickbourn wrote his Dissertation before the question arose which he is here supposed to decide. Nor is he right in assuming that the common Progressive Form, of which he speaks, must be either active-transitive or passive: I have shown above that it may be active-intransitive, and perhaps, in a few instances, neuter. The class of the verb is determined by something else than the mere capableness of the "nominative."

III. FORM OF PASSIVE VERBS.

Passive verbs, in English, are always of a compound form; being made from active-transitive verbs, by adding the Perfect Participle to the auxiliary verb BE, through all its changes: thus from the active-transitive verb love, is formed the passive verb be loved.

FIFTH EXAMPLE.

THE REGULAR PASSIVE VERB BE LOVED, CONJUGATED AFFIRMATIVELY.

PRINCIPAL PARTS OF THE ACTIVE VERB.

| Present. | Preterit. | Imp. Participle. | Perf. Participle. |
|-----------------|------------------|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| Love.           | Loved.           | Loving.                 | Loved.                   |

INFINITIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

TO BE LOVED.

PERFECT TENSE.

TO HAVE BEEN LOVED.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

| Singular.   | Plural.     |
|--------------------|--------------------|
| 1. I am loved,     | 1. We are loved,   |
| 2. Thou art loved, | 2. You are loved,  |
| 3. He is loved;    | 3. They are loved. |

IMPERFECT TENSE.

| Singular. | Plural. |
|------------------|----------------|
|------------------|----------------|

1. I was loved,
2. Thou wast loved,
3. He was loved;

1. We were loved,
2. You were loved,
3. They were loved.

PERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I have been loved,
2. Thou hast been loved,
3. He has been loved;

Plural.

1. We have been loved,
2. You have been loved,
3. They have been loved.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I had been loved,
2. Thou hadst been loved,
3. He had been loved;

Plural.

1. We had been loved,
2. You had been loved,
3. They had been loved.

FIRST-FUTURE TENSE.

Singular.

1. I shall be loved,
2. Thou wilt be loved,
3. He will be loved;

Plural.

1. We shall be loved,
2. You will be loved,
3. They will be loved.

SECOND-FUTURE TENSE.

Singular.

1. I shall have been loved,
2. Thou wilt have been loved,
3. He will have been loved;

Plural.

1. We shall have been loved,
2. You will have been loved,
3. They will have been loved.

POTENTIAL MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I may be loved,
2. Thou mayst be loved,
3. He may be loved;

Plural.

1. We may be loved,
2. You may be loved,
3. They may be loved.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I might be loved,
2. Thou mightst be loved,
3. He might be loved;

Plural.

1. We might be loved,
2. You might be loved,
3. They might be loved.

PERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I may have been loved,
2. Thou mayst have been loved,
3. He may have been loved;

Plural.

1. We may have been loved,
2. You may have been loved,
3. They may have been loved.

PLUPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. I might have been loved,
2. Thou mightst have been loved,
3. He might have been loved;

Plural.

1. We might have been loved,
2. You might have been loved,
3. They might have been loved.

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

1. If I be loved,
2. If thou be loved,
3. If he be loved;

Plural.

1. If we be loved,
2. If you be loved,
3. If they be loved.

IMPERFECT TENSE.

Singular.

1. If I were loved,
2. If thou were loved,
3. If he were loved;

Plural.

1. If we were loved,
2. If you were loved,
3. If they were loved.

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

PRESENT TENSE.

Singular.

2. Be [thou] loved,

or Do thou be loved;Plural.

2. Be [ye or you] loved,

or Do you be loved.

PARTICIPLES.

1. The Imperfect.

Being loved.

2. The Perfect.

Loved.

3. The Preperfect.

Having been loved.

FAMILIAR FORM WITH 'THOU.'

NOTE.—In the familiar style, the second person singular of this verb, is usually and more properly formed thus: IND. Thou art loved, Thou was loved, Thou hast been loved, Thou had been loved, Thou shall or will be loved, Thou shall or will have been loved. POT. Thou may, can, or must be loved; Thou might, could, would, or should be loved; Thou may, can, or must have been loved; Thou might, could, would, or should have been loved. SUBJ. If thou be loved, If thou were loved. IMP. Be [thou] loved, or Do thou be loved.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—A few active-intransitive verbs, that signify mere motion, change of place, or change of condition, may be put into this form, with a neuter signification; making not passive but neuter verbs, which express nothing more than the state which results from the change: as, "I am come."—"She is gone."—"He is risen."—"They are fallen." These are what Dr. Johnson and some others call "neuter passives;" a name which never was very proper, and for which we have no frequent use.

OBS. 2.—Most neuter verbs of the passive form, such as, "am grown, art become, is lain, are flown, are vanished, are departed, was sat, were arrived," may now be considered errors of conjugation, or perhaps of syntax. In the verb, to be mistaken, there is an irregularity which ought to be particularly noticed. When applied to persons, this verb is commonly taken in a neuter sense, and signifies, to be in error, to be wrong; as, “I am mistaken, thou art mistaken, he is mistake.” But, when used of things, it is a proper passive verb, and signifies, to be misunderstood, or to be taken wrong; as, “The sense of the passage is mistaken; that is, not rightly understood.” See Webster’s Dict., w. Mistaken. “I have known a shadow across a brook to be mistaken for a footbridge.”

OBS. 3.—Passive verbs may be easily distinguished from neuter verbs of the same form, by a reference to the agent or instrument, common to the former class, but not to the latter. This frequently is, and always may be, expressed after passive verbs; but never is, and never can be, expressed after neuter verbs: as, “The thief has been caught by the officer.”—“Pens are made with a knife.” Here the verbs are passive; but, “I am not yet ascended,” (John, xx, 17,) is not passive, because it does not convey the idea of being ascended by some one’s agency.

OBS. 4.—Our ancient writers, after the manner of the French, very frequently employed this mode of conjugation in a neuter sense; but, with a very few exceptions, present usage is clearly in favour of the auxiliary have in preference to be, whenever the verb formed with the perfect participle is not passive; as, “They have arrived,”—not, “They are arrived.” Hence such examples as the following, are not now good English: “All these reasons are now ceased.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 157. Say, “have now ceased.” “Whether he were not got beyond the reach of his faculties.”—Ib., p. 158. Say, “had not got.” “Which is now grown wholly obsolete.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 330. Say, “has now grown.” “And when he was entered into a ship.”—Bible. Say, “had entered.”—“What is become of decency and virtue?”—Murray’s Key, p. 196. Say, “has become.”

OBS. 5.—Dr. Priestley says, “It seems not to have been determined by the English grammarians, whether the passive participles of verbs neuter require the auxiliary am or have before them. The French, in this case, confine themselves strictly to the former. ‘What has become of national liberty?’ Hume’s History, Vol. 6. p. 254. The French would say, what is become; and, in this instance, perhaps, with more propriety.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 128. It is no marvel that those writers who have not rightly made up their minds upon this point of English grammar, should consequently fall into many mistakes. The perfect participle of a neuter verb is not “passive,” as the doctor seems to suppose it to be; and the mode of conjugation which he here inclines to prefer, is a mere Gallicism, which is fast wearing out from our language, and is even now but little countenanced by good writers.

OBS. 6.—There are a few verbs of the passive form which seem to imply that a person’s own mind is the agent that actuates him; as, “The editor is rejoiced to think,” &c.—Juvenile Keepsake. “I am resolved what to do.”—Luke, xvi, 4. “He was resolved on going to the city to reside.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 114. “James was resolved not to indulge himself.”—Murray’s Key, ii, 220. “He is inclined to go.”—“He is determined to go.”—“He is bent on going.” These are properly passive verbs, notwithstanding there are active forms which are nearly equivalent to most of them; as, “The editor rejoices to think.”—“I know what to do.”—“He had resolved on going.”—“James resolved not to indulge himself.” So in the phrase, “I am ashamed to beg,” we seem to have a passive verb of this sort; but, the verb to ashame being now obsolete, ashamed is commonly reckoned an adjective. Yet we cannot put it before a noun, after the usual manner of adjectives. To be indebted, is an other expression of the same kind. In the following example, “am remember’d” is used for do remember, and, in my opinion, inaccurately:

“He said mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And, now I am remember’d, scorn’d at me.”—Shakspeare.

IV. FORM OF NEGATION.

A verb is conjugated negatively, by placing the adverb not after it, or after the first auxiliary; but the infinitive and participles take the negative first: as, Not to love, Not to have loved; Not loving, Not loved, Not having loved.

FIRST PERSON SINGULAR.

IND. I love not, or I do not love; I loved not, or I did not love; I have not loved; I had not loved; I shall not, or will not, love; I shall not, or will not, have loved.

POT. I may, can, or must not love; I might, could, would, or should not love; I may, can, or must not have loved; I might, could, would, or should not have loved, SUBJ. If I love not, If I loved not.

SECOND PERSON SINGULAR.

SOLEMN STYLE:—

IND. Thou lovest not, or Thou dost not love; Thou lovedst not, or Thou didst not love; Thou hast not loved; Thou hadst not loved; Thou shalt not, or wilt not, love; Thou shalt not, or wilt not, have loved.

POT. Thou mayst, canst, or must not love; Thou mightst, couldst, wouldst, or shouldst not love; Thou mayst, canst, or must not have loved; Thou mightst, couldst, wouldst, or shouldst not have loved.

SUBJ. If thou love not, If thou loved not.

IMP. Love [thou] not, or Do thou not love.

FAMILIAR STYLE:—

IND. Thou lov’st not, or Thou dost not love; Thou loved not, or Thou did not love; Thou hast not loved; Thou had not loved; Thou shall not, or will not, love; Thou shall not, or will not, have loved.

POT. Thou may, can, or must not love; Thou might, could, would, or should not love; Thou may, can, or must not have loved; Thou might, could, would, or should not have loved.

SUBJ. If thou love not, If thou loved not.

IMP. Love [thou] not, or Do [thou] not love.

THIRD PERSON SINGULAR.

IND. He loves not, or He does not love; He loved not, or He did not love; He has not loved; He had not loved; He shall not, or will not, love; He shall not, or will not, have loved.

POT. He may, can, or must not love; He might, could, would, or should not love; He may, can, or must not have loved; He might, could, would, or should not have loved.

SUBJ. If he love not, If he loved not.

V. FORM OF QUESTION.

A verb is conjugated interrogatively, in the indicative and potential moods, by placing the nominative after it, or after the first auxiliary: as,

FIRST PERSON SINGULAR.

IND. Love I? or Do I love? Loved I? or Did I love? Have I loved? Had I loved? Shall I love? Shall I have loved?

POT. May, can, or must I love? Might, could, would, or should I love? May, can, or must I have loved? Might, could, would, or should I have loved?

SECOND PERSON SINGULAR.

SOLEMN STYLE:—

IND. Lovest thou? or Dost thou love? Lovedst thou? or Didst thou love? Hast thou loved? Hadst thou loved? Wilt thou love? Wilt thou have loved?

POT. Mayst, canst, or must thou love? Mightst, couldst, wouldst, or shouldst thou love? Mayst, canst, or must thou have loved? Mightst, couldst, wouldst, or shouldst thou have loved?

FAMILIAR STYLE:—

IND. Lov'st thou? or Dost thou love? Loved thou? or Did thou love? Hast thou loved? Had thou loved? Will thou love? Will thou have loved?

POT. May, can, or must thou love? Might, could, would, or should thou love? May, can, or must thou have loved? Might, could, would, or should thou have loved?

THIRD PERSON SINGULAR.

IND. Loves he? or Does he love? Loved he? or Did he love? Has he loved? Had he loved? Shall or will he love? Will he have loved?

POT. May, can, or must he love? Might, could, would, or should he love? May, can, or must he have loved? Might, could, would, or should he have loved?

VI. FORM OF QUESTION WITH NEGATION.

A verb is conjugated interrogatively and negatively, in the indicative and potential moods, by placing the nominative and the adverb not after the verb, or after the first auxiliary: as,

FIRST PERSON PLURAL.

IND. Love we not? or Do we not love? Loved we not? or Did we not love? Have we not loved? Had we not loved? Shall we not love? Shall we not have loved?

POT. May, can, or must we not love? Might, could, would, or should we not love? May, can, or must we not have loved? Might, could, would, or should we not have loved?

SECOND PERSON PLURAL.

IND. See ye not? or Do you not see? Saw ye not? or Did you not see? Have you not seen? Had you not seen? Will you not see? Will you not have seen?

POT. May, can, or must you not see? Might, could, would, or should you not see? May, can, or must you not have seen? Might, could, would, or should you not have seen?

THIRD PERSON PLURAL.

IND. Are they not loved? Were they not loved? Have they not been loved? Had they not been loved? Shall or will they not be loved? Will they not have been loved?

POT. May, can, or must they not be loved? Might, could, would, or should they not be loved? May, can, or must they not have been loved? Might, could, would, or should they not have been loved?

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—In a familiar question or negation, the compound or auxiliary form of the verb is, in general, preferable to the simple: as, “No man lives to purpose, who does not live for posterity.”—Dr. Wayland. It is indeed so much more common, as to seem the only proper mode of expression: as, “Do I say these things as a man?”—“Do you think that we excuse ourselves?”—“Do you not know that a little leaven leavens the whole lump?”—“Dost thou revile?” &c. But in the solemn or the poetic style, though either may be used, the simple form is more dignified, and perhaps more graceful: as, “Say I these things as a man?”—1 Cor., ix, 8. “Think ye that we excuse ourselves?”—2 Cor., xii, 19. “Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?”—1 Cor., v, 6. “Revilest thou God’s high priest?”—Acts. “King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets?”—Ib. “Understandest thou what thou readest?”—Ib. “Of whom speaketh the prophet this?”—Id. “And the man of God said, Where fell it?”—2 Kings, vi, 6.

“What! heard ye not of lowland war?”—Sir W. Scott, L. L.

“Seems he not, Malise, like a ghost?”—Id., L. of Lake.

“Where thinkst thou he is now? Stands he, or sits he?

Or does he walk? or is he on his horse?”—Shak., Ant. and Cleop.

OBS. 2.—In interrogative sentences, the auxiliaries shall and will are not always capable of being applied to the different persons agreeably to their use in simple declarations: thus, “Will I go?” is a question which there never can be any occasion to ask in its literal sense; because none knows better than I, what my will or wish is. But “Shall I go?” may properly be asked; because shall here refers to duty, and asks to know what is agreeable to the will of an other. In questions, the first person generally requires shall; the second, will; the third admits of both: but, in the second-future, the third, used interrogatively, seems to require will only. Yet, in that figurative kind of interrogation which is sometimes used to declare a negative, there may be occasional exceptions to these principles; as, “Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats?”—Psalms, 1, 13. That is, I will not eat, &c.

OBS. 3.—Cannot is not properly one word, but two: in parsing, the adverb must be taken separately, and the auxiliary be explained with its principal. When power is denied, can and not are now generally united—perhaps in order to prevent ambiguity; as, “I cannot go.” But when the power is affirmed, and something else is denied, the words are written separately; as, “The Christian apologist can not merely expose the utter baseness of the infidel assertion, but he has positive ground for erecting an opposite and confronting assertion in its place.”—Dr. Chalmers. The junction of these terms, however, is not of much importance to the sense; and, as it is plainly contrary to analogy, some writers,—(as Dr. Webster, in his late or “improved” works; Dr. Bullions, in his; Prof. W. C. Fowler, in his new “English Grammar,” 8vo; R. C. Trench, in his “Study of Words;” T. S. Pinneo, in his “revised” grammars; J. R. Chandler, W. S. Cardell, O. B. Peirce,—) always separate them. And, indeed, why should we write, “I cannot go, Thou canst not go, He cannot go?” Apart from the custom, we have just as good reason to join not to canst as to can; and sometimes its union with the latter is a gross error: as, “He cannot only make a way to escape, but with the injunction to duty can infuse the power to perform.”—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 287. The fear of ambiguity never prevents us from disjoining can and not whenever we wish to put a word between them: as, “Though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it.”—Jeremiah, v, 22. “Which then I can resist not.”—Byron’s Manfred, p. 1.

“Can I not mountain maiden spy,
But she must bear the Douglas eye?”—Scott.

OBS. 4.—In negative questions, the adverb not is sometimes placed before the nominative, and sometimes after it: as, “Told not I thee?”—Numb., xxiii, 26. “Spake I not also to thy messengers?”—Ib., xxiv, 12. “Cannot I do with you as this potter?”—Jer., xviii, 6. “Art not thou a seer?”—2 Sam., xv, 27. “Did not Israel know?”—Rom., x, 19. “Have they not heard?”—Ib., 18. “Do not they blaspheme that worthy name?”—James, ii, 7. This adverb, like every other, should be placed where it will sound most agreeably, and best suit the sense. Dr. Priestley imagined that it could not properly come before the nominative. He says, “When the nominative case is put after the verb, on account of an interrogation, no other word should be interposed between them. [EXAMPLES:] ‘May not we here say with Lucretius?’—Addison on Medals, p. 29. May we not say? ‘Is not it he.’ [?] Smollett’s Voltaire, Vol 18, p. 152. Is it not he. [?]”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 177.

OBS. 5.—In grave discourse, or in oratory, the adverb not is spoken as distinctly as other words; but, ordinarily, when placed before the nominative, it is rapidly slurred over in utterance and the o is not heard. In fact, it is generally (though inelegantly) contracted in familiar conversation, and joined to the auxiliary: as, IND. Don’t they do it? Didn’t they do it? Haven’t they done it? Hadn’t they done it? Shan’t, or won’t they do it? Won’t they have done it? POT. Mayn’t, can’t, or mustn’t they do it? Mightn’t, couldn’t, wouldn’t, or shouldn’t they do it? Mayn’t, can’t, or mustn’t they have done it? Mightn’t, couldn’t, wouldn’t, or shouldn’t they have done it?

OBS. 6.—Well-educated people commonly utter their words with more distinctness and fullness than the vulgar, yet without adopting ordinarily the long-drawn syllables of poets and orators, or the solemn phraseology of preachers and prophets. Whatever may be thought of the grammatical propriety of such contractions as the foregoing, no one who has ever observed how the English language is usually spoken, will doubt their commonness, or their antiquity. And it may be observed, that, in the use of these forms, the distinction of persons and numbers in the verb, is almost, if not entirely, dropped. Thus don’t is used for dost not or does not, as properly as for do not; and, “Thou can’t do it, or shan’t do it,” is as good English as, “He can’t do it, or shan’t do it.” Will, according to Webster, was anciently written woll: hence won’t acquired the o, which is long in Walker’s orthoëpy. Haven’t, which cannot be used for has not or hast not, is still further contracted by the vulgar, and spoken ha’nt, which serves for all three. These forms are sometimes found in books; as, “WONT, a contraction of woll not, that is, will not.”—Webster’s Dict. “HA’NT, a contraction of have not or has not.”—Id. “WONT, (wōnt or wūnt,) A contraction of would not:—used for will not.”—Worcester’s Dict. “HAN’T, (hānt or hānt,) A vulgar contraction for has not, or have not.”—Id. In the writing of such contractions, the apostrophe is not always used; though some think it necessary for distinction’s sake: as, “Which is equivalent, because what can’t be done won’t be done.”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 312.

IRREGULAR VERBS.

An irregular verb is a verb that does not form the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed; as, see, saw, seeing, seen. Of this class of verbs there are about one hundred and ten, beside their several derivatives and compounds.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Regular verbs form their preterits and perfect participles, by adding d to final e, and ed to all other terminations; the final consonant of the verb being sometimes doubled, (as in dropped,) and final y sometimes changed into i, (as in cried,) agreeably to the rules for spelling in such cases. The verb hear, heard, hearing, heard, adds d to r, and is therefore irregular. Heard is pronounced hěrd by all our lexicographers, except Webster: who formerly wrote it heerd, and still pronounces it so; alleging, in despite of universal usage against him, that it is written “more correctly heared.”—Octavo Dict., 1829. Such pronunciation would doubtless require this last orthography, “heared,” but both are, in fact, about as fanciful as his former mode of spelling, which ran thus: “Az I had heerd suggested by friends or indifferent reeders.”—Dr. Webster’s Essays, Preface, p. 10.

OBS. 2.—When a verb ends in a sharp consonant, t is sometimes improperly substituted for ed, making the preterit and the perfect participle irregular in spelling, when they are not so in sound; as, distrest for distressed, tost for tossed, mixt for mixed, cract for cracked. These contractions are now generally treated as errors in writing; and the verbs are accordingly (with a few exceptions) accounted regular. Lord Kames commends Dean Swift for having done “all in his power to restore the syllable ed,” says, he “possessed, if any man ever did, the true genius of the English tongue;” and thinks that in rejecting these ugly contractions, “he well deserves to be imitated.”—Elements of Criticism, Vol. ii, p. 12. The regular orthography is indeed to be preferred in all such cases; but the writing of ed restores no syllable, except in solemn discourse; and, after all, the poems of Swift have so very many of these irregular contractions in t, that one can hardly believe his lordship had ever read them. Since the days of these critics still more has been done towards the restoration of the ed, in orthography, though not in sound; but, even at this present time, our poets not unfrequently write, est for essed or ess’d, in forming the preterits or participles of verbs that end in the syllable ess. This is an ill practice, which needlessly multiplies our redundant verbs, and greatly embarrasses what it seems at first to simplify: as,

“O friend! I know not which way I must look
For comfort, being, as I am, opprest,
To think that now our life is only drest
For show.”—Wordsworth’s Poetical Works, 8vo, p. 119.

OBS. 3.—When the verb ends with a smooth consonant, the substitution of t for ed produces an irregularity in sound as well as in writing. In some such irregularities, the poets are indulged for the sake of rhyme; but the best speakers and writers of prose prefer the regular form, wherever good use has sanctioned it: thus learned is better than learnt; burned, than burnt; penned, than pent; absorbed, than absorb’t; spelled, than spelt; smelled, than smelt. So many of this sort of words as are allowably contracted, belong to the class of redundant verbs, among which they may be seen in a subsequent table.

OBS. 4.—Several of the irregular verbs are variously used by the best authors; redundant forms are occasionally given to some verbs, without sufficient authority; and many preterits and participles which were formerly in good use, are now obsolete, or becoming so. The simple irregular verbs in English are about one hundred and ten, and they are nearly all monosyllables. They are derived from the Saxon, in which language they are also, for the most part, irregular.

OBS. 5.—The following alphabetical list exhibits the simple irregular verbs, as they are now generally used. In this list, those preterits and participles which are supposed to be preferable, and best supported by authorities, are placed first. Nearly all compounds that follow the form of their simple verbs, or derivatives that follow their primitives, are here purposely omitted. Welcome and behave are always regular, and therefore belong not here. Some words which are obsolete, have also been omitted, that the learner might not mistake them for words in present use. Some of those which are placed last, are now little used.

LIST OF THE IRREGULAR VERBS.

| Present. | Preterit.        | Imperfect Participle | Perfect Participle. |
|-----------------|-------------------------|-----------------------------|----------------------------|
| Arise,          | arose,                  | arising,                    | arisen.                    |
| Be,             | was,                    | being,                      | been.                      |
| Bear,           | bore or bare,    | bearing,                    | borne or born.*     |
| Beat,           | beat,                   | beating,                    | beaten or beat.     |
| Begin,          | began or begun,† | beginning,                  | begun.                     |
| Behold,         | beheld,                 | beholding,                  | beheld.                    |
| Beset,          | beset,                  | besetting,                  | beset.                     |
| Bestead,        | bestead,                | bestead,                    | bestead.‡                  |
| Bid,            | bid or bade,     | bidding,                    | bidden or bid.      |
| Bind,           | bound,                  | bing,                       | bound.                     |
| Bite,           | bit,                    | biting,                     | bitten or bit.      |
| Bleed,          | bled,                   | bleeding,                   | bled.                      |
| Break,          | broke,§                 | breaking,                   | broken.                    |

* Borne usually signifies carried; born signifies brought forth. J. K. Worcester, the lexicographer, speaks of these two participles thus: “☞ The participle born is used in the passive form, and borne in the active form, [with reference to birth]; as, ‘He was born blind,’ John ix.; ‘The barren hath borne seven,’ I Sam. ii. This distinction between born and borne, though not recognized by grammars, is in accordance with common usage, at least in this country. In many editions of the Bible it is recognized; and in many it is not. It seems to have been more commonly recognized in American, than in English, editions.”—Worcester’s Universal and Critical Dict., w. Bear. In five, out of seven good American editions of the Bible among my books, the latter text is, “The barren hath born seven;” in two, it is as above, “hath borne.” In Johnson’s Quarto Dictionary, the perfect participle of bear is given erroneously, “bore, or born,” and that of forbear, which should be forborne, is found, both in his columns and in his preface, “forborn.”

† According to Murray, Lennie, Bullions, and some others, to use begun for began or run for ran, is improper; but Webster gives run as well as ran for the preterit, and begun may be used in like manner, on the authority of Dryden, Pope, and Parnell.

‡ “And they shall pass through it, hardly bestead, and hungry.”—Isaiah, viii, 21.

§ “Brake [for the preterit of Break] seems now obsolescent.”—Dr. Crombie, Etymol. and Syntax, p. 193. Some recent grammarians, however, retain it; among whom are Bullions and M’Culloch. Wells retains it, but marks it as, “Obsolete,” as he does also the preterits bare, clave, drove, gat, slang, spake, span, spat, sware, tare, writ; and the participles hoven, loaden, rid from ride, spitten, stricken, and writ. In this he is not altogether consistent. Forms really obsolete belong not to any modern list of irregular verbs; and even such as are archaic and obsolescent, it is sometimes better to omit. If “loaden,” for example, is now out of use,

|          |                        |             |                          |
|----------|------------------------|-------------|--------------------------|
| Breed,   | bred,                  | breeding,   | bred.                    |
| Bring,   | brought,               | bringing,   | brought.                 |
| Buy,     | bought,                | buying,     | bought.                  |
| Cast,    | cast,                  | casting,    | cast.                    |
| Chide,   | chid,                  | chiding,    | chidden or chid.  |
| Choose,  | chose,                 | choosing,   | chosen.                  |
| Cleave,* | cleft or clove, | cleaving,   | cleft or cloven.  |
| Cling,   | clung,                 | clinging,   | clung.                   |
| Come,    | came,                  | coming,     | come.                    |
| Cost,    | cost,                  | costing,    | cost.                    |
| Cut,     | cut,                   | cutting,    | cut.                     |
| Do,      | did,                   | doing,      | done.                    |
| Draw,    | drew,                  | drawing,    | drawn.                   |
| Drink,   | drank,                 | drinking,   | drunk, or drank.† |
| Drive,   | drove,                 | driving,    | driven.                  |
| Eat,     | ate or ēat,     | eating,     | eaten or eat.     |
| Fall,    | fell,                  | falling,    | fallen.                  |
| Feed,    | fed,                   | feeding,    | fed.                     |
| Feel,    | felt,                  | feeling,    | felt.                    |
| Fight,   | fought,                | fighting,   | fought.                  |
| Find,    | found,                 | finding,    | found.                   |
| Flee,    | fled,                  | fleeing,    | fled.                    |
| Fling,   | flung,                 | flinging,   | flung.                   |
| Fly,     | flew,                  | flying,     | flown.                   |
| Forbear, | forbore,               | forbearing, | forborne.                |
| Forsake, | forsook,               | forsaking,  | forsaken.                |
| Get,     | got,                   | getting,    | got or gotten.    |
| Give,    | gave,                  | giving,     | given.                   |
| Go,      | went,                  | going,      | gone.                    |

why should “load, unload, and overload,” be placed, as they are by this author, among “irregular verbs;” while freight and distract, in spite of fraught and distraught, are reckoned regular? “Rid,” for rode or ridden, though admitted by Worcester, appears to me a low vulgarity.

* Cleave, to split, is most commonly, if not always, irregular, as above; cleave, to stick, or adhere, is usually considered regular, but clave was formerly used in the preterit, and clove still may be: as, “The men of Judah clave unto their king.”—Samuel. “The tongue of the public prosecutor clove to the roof of his mouth.”—Boston Atlas, 1855.

† Respecting the preterit and the perfect participle of this verb, drink, our grammarians are greatly at variance. Dr. Johnson says, “preter. drank or drunk; part. pass, drunk or drunken.” Dr. Webster: “pret. and pp. drank. Old pret. and pp. drunk; pp. drunken.” Lowth: “pret. drank; part, drunk or drunken.” So Stamford. Webber, and others. Murray has it: “Imperf. drank, Perf. Part, drunk.” So Comly, Lennie, Bullions, Blair, Butler. Frost, Felton, Goldsburry, and many others. Churchill cites the text, “Serve me till I have eaten and drunken,” and observes, “Drunken is now used only as an adjective. The impropriety of using the preterimperfect [drank] for the participle of this verb is very common.”—New Gram., p. 261. Sanborn gives both forms for the participle, preferring drank to drunk. Kirkham prefers drunk to drank; but contradicts himself in a note, by unconsciously making drunk an adjective: “The men were drunk; i. e. inebriated. The toasts were drank.”—Gram., p. 140. Cardell, in his Grammar, gives, “drink, drank, drunk,” but in his story of Jack Halyard, on page 59, he wrote, “had drinked,” and this, according to Fowle’s True English Grammar, is not incorrect. The preponderance of authority is yet in favour of saying, “had drunk,” but drank seems to be a word of greater delicacy, and perhaps it is sufficiently authorized. A hundred late writers may be quoted for it, and some that were popular in the days of Johnson. “In the choice of what is fit to be eaten and drank.”—Beattie’s Moral Science, Vol. 1, p. 51. “Which I had no sooner drank.”—Addison, Tattler, No. 131.

“Thy brother’s blood the thirsty earth hath drank, Broach’d with the steely point of Clifford’s lance.”—Shakspeare.

|        |                      |           |                         |
|--------|----------------------|-----------|-------------------------|
| Grow,  | grew,                | growing,  | grown.                  |
| Have,  | had,                 | having,   | had.                    |
| Hear,  | heard,               | hearing,  | heard.                  |
| Hide,  | hid,                 | hiding,   | hidden or hid.   |
| Hit,   | hit,                 | hitting,  | hit.                    |
| Hold,  | held,                | holding,  | held or holden.* |
| Hurt,  | hurt,                | hurting,  | hurt.†                  |
| Keep,  | kept,‡               | keeping,  | kept.                   |
| Know,  | knew,                | knowing,  | known.                  |
| Lead,  | led,                 | leading,  | led.                    |
| Leave, | left,                | leaving,  | left.                   |
| Lend,  | lent,                | lending,  | lent.                   |
| Let,   | let,                 | letting,  | let.                    |
| Lie,§  | lay,                 | lying,    | lain.                   |
| Lose,  | lost,                | losing,   | lost.                   |
| Make,  | made,                | making,   | made.                   |
| Meet,  | met,                 | meeting,  | met.                    |
| Outdo, | outdid,              | outdoing, | outdone.                |
| Put,   | put,                 | putting,  | put.                    |
| Read,  | rēad,                | reading,  | rēad.                   |
| Rend,  | rent,                | rending,  | rent.                 |
| Rid,   | rid,                 | ridding,  | rid.                    |
| Ride,  | rode,                | riding,   | ridden or rode.  |
| Ring,  | rung or rang, | ringing,  | rung.                   |
| Rise,  | rose,                | rising,   | risen.                  |
| Run,   | ran or run,   | running,  | run.                    |
| Say,   | said,                | saying,   | said.††                 |
| See,   | saw,                 | seeing,   | seen.                   |
| Seek,  | sought,              | seeking,  | sought.                 |
| Sell,  | sold,                | selling,  | sold.                   |
| Send,  | sent,                | sending,  | sent.                   |
| Set,   | set,                 | setting,  | set.                    |
| Shed,  | shed,                | shedding, | shed.                   |

* “Holden is not in general use; and is chiefly employed by attorneys.”—Crombie, on Etymology and Synt., p. 190. Wells marks this word as, “Obsolescent.”—School Gram., p. 103. L. Murray rejected it; but Lowth gave it alone, as a participle, and held only as a preterit.

† “I have been found guilty of killing cats I never hurted.”—Roderick Random, Vol. i, p. 8.

‡ “They keepped aloof as they passed her bye.”—J. Hogg, Pilgrims of the Sun, p. 19.

§ Lie, to be at rest, is irregular, as above; but lie, to utter falsehood, is regular, as follows: lie, lied, lying, lied.

“Thus said, at least, my mountain guide,
Though deep, perchance, the villain lied.”—Scott’s Lady of the Lake.

** Perhaps there is authority sufficient to place the verb rend among those which are redundant.

“Where’er its cloudy veil was rended.”—Whittier’s Moll Pitcher.

“Mortal, my message is for thee; thy chain to earth is rended;
I bear thee to eternity; prepare! thy course is ended.”—The Amulet.

“Come as the winds come, when forests are rended.”—Sir W. Scott.

“The hunger pangs her sons which rended.”—NEW QUARTERLY REVIEW: Examiner, No. 119.

†† We find now and then an instance in which gainsay is made regular: as, “It can neither be rivalled nor gainsayed.”—Chapman’s Sermons to Presbyterians, p. 36. Perhaps it would be as well to follow Webster here, in writing rivalled with one l: and the analogy of the simple verb say, in forming this compound irregularly, gainsaid. Usage warrants the latter, however, better than the former.

|         |                                   |            |                                        |
|---------|-----------------------------------|------------|----------------------------------------|
| Shoe,   | shod,                             | shoeing,   | shod.*                                 |
| Shoot,  | shot,                             | shooting,  | shot.                                  |
| Shut,   | shut,                             | shutting,  | shut.                                  |
| Shred,  | shred,                            | shredding, | shred.                                 |
| Shrink, | shrunk or shrank,          | shrinking, | shrunk or shrunken.             |
| Sing,   | sung or sang, † | singing,   | sung.                                  |
| Sink,   | sunk or sank,              | sinking,   | sunk.                                  |
| Sit,    | sat,                              | sitting,   | sat. ‡                      |
| Slay,   | slew,                             | slaying,   | slain.                                 |
| Sling,  | slung,                            | slinging,  | slung.                                 |
| Slink,  | slunk or slank,            | slinking,  | slunk.                                 |
| Smite,  | smote,                            | smiting,   | smitten or smit.                |
| Speak,  | spoke,                            | speaking,  | spoken.                                |
| Spend,  | spent,                            | spending,  | spent.                                 |
| Spin,   | spun,                             | spinning,  | spun.                                  |
| Spit,   | spit or spat,              | spitting,  | spit or spitten.                |
| Spread, | spread,                           | spreading, | spread.                                |
| Spring, | sprung or sprang,          | springing, | sprung.                                |
| Stand,  | stood,                            | standing,  | stood.                                 |
| Steal,  | stole,                            | stealing,  | stolen.                                |
| Stick,  | stuck,                            | sticking,  | stuck.                                 |
| Sting,  | stung,                            | stinging,  | stung.                                 |
| Stink,  | stunk or stank,            | stinking,  | stunk.                                 |
| Stride, | strode or strid,           | striding,  | stridden or strid. § |
| Strike, | struck,                           | striking,  | struck or stricken.             |
| Swear,  | swore,                            | swearing,  | sworn.                                 |

* "Shoe, shoed or shod, shoeing, shoed or shod."—Old Gram., by W. Ward, p. 64; and Fowle's True English Gram., p. 46.

† "A. Murray has rejected sung as the Preterite, and L. Murray has rejected sang. Each Preterite, however, rests on good authority. The same observation may be made, respecting sank and sunk. Respecting the preterites which have a or u, as slang, or slung, sank, or sunk, it would be better were the former only to be used, as the Preterite and Participle would thus be discriminated."—Dr. Crombie, on Etymology and Syntax, p. 199. The preterits which this critic thus prefers, are rang, sang, stung, sprang, swang, sank, shrank, slank, stank, swam, and span for spun. In respect to them all, I think he makes an ill choice. According to his own showing, fling, string, and sting, always make the preterit and the participle alike; and this is the obvious tendency of the language, in all these words. I reject slang and span, as derivatives from sling and spin; because, in such a sense, they are obsolete, and the words have other uses. Lindley Murray, in his early editions, rejected sang, sank, slang, swang, shrank, slank, stank, and span; and, at the same time, preferred rang, sprang, and swam, to rung, sprung, and swum. In his later copies, he gave the preference to the u, in all these words; but restored sang and sank, which Crombie names above, still omitting the other six, which did not happen to be mentioned to him.

‡ Sate for the preterit of sit, and sitten for the perfect participle, are, in my opinion, obsolete, or no longer in good use. Yet several recent grammarians prefer sitten to sat; among whom are Crombie, Lennie, Bullions, and M'Culloch. Dr. Crombie says, "Sitten, though formerly in use, is now obsolescent. Laudable attempts, however, have been made to restore it."—On Etymol. and Syntax, p. 199. Lennie says, "Many authors, both here and in America, use sate as the Past time of sit; but this is improper, for it is apt to be confounded with sate to glut. Sitten and spitten are preferable [to sat and spit,] though obsolescent."—Principles of E. Gram., p. 45. Bullions says, "Sitten and spitten are nearly obsolete, though preferable to sat and spit."—Principles of E. Gram., p. 64. M'Culloch gives these verbs in the following form: "Sit, sat, sitten or sat. Spit, spit or spat, spit or spitten."—Manual of E. Gram., p. 65.

§ "He will find the political hobby which he has bestrided no child's nag."—The Vanguard, a Newspaper.

"Through the pressed nostril, spectacle-bestrid."—Cowper.

"A lank haired hunter strided."—Whittier's Sabbath Scene.

|         |                        |            |                         |
|---------|------------------------|------------|-------------------------|
| Swim,   | swum or swam,   | swimming,  | swum.                   |
| Swing,  | swung or swang, | swinging,  | swung.                  |
| Take,   | took,                  | taking,    | taken.                  |
| Teach,  | taught,                | teaching,  | taught.                 |
| Tear,   | tore,                  | tearing,   | torn.                   |
| Tell,   | told,                  | telling,   | told.                   |
| Think,  | thought,               | thinking,  | thought.                |
| Thrust, | thrust,                | thrusting, | thrust.                 |
| Tread,  | trod,                  | treading,  | trodden or trod. |
| Wear,   | wore,                  | wearing,   | worn.                   |
| Win,    | won,                   | winning,   | won.                    |
| Write,  | wrote,                 | writing,   | written.*               |

REDUNDANT VERBS.

A redundant verb is a verb that forms the preterit or the perfect participle in two or more ways, and so as to be both regular and irregular; as, thrive, thrived or throve, thriving, thrived or thriven. Of this class of verbs, there are about ninety-five, beside sundry derivatives and compounds.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Those irregular verbs which have more than one form for the preterit or for the perfect participle, are in some sense redundant; but, as there is no occasion to make a distinct class of such as have double forms that are never regular, these redundancies are either included in the preceding list of the simple irregular verbs, or omitted as being improper to be now recognized for good English. Several examples of the latter kind, including both innovations and archaisms, will appear among the improprieties for correction, at the end of this chapter. A few old preterits or participles may perhaps be accounted good English in the solemn style, which are not so in the familiar: as, “And none spake a word unto him.”—Job, ii, 13. “When I brake the five loaves.”—Mark, viii, 19. “And he drave them from the judgement-seat.”—Acts, xviii, 16. “Serve me till I have eaten and drunken.”—Luke, xvii, 8. “It was not possible that he should be holden of it.”—Acts, ii, 24. “Thou castedst them down into destruction.”—Psal., lxxiii, 18. “Behold, I was shapen in iniquity.”—Ib., li, 5. “A meat-offering baken in the oven.”—Leviticus, ii, 4.

“With casted slough, and fresh celerity.”—SHAK., Henry V.

“Thy dreadful vow, loaden with death.”—ADDISON: in Joh. Dict.

OBS. 2.—The verb bet is given in Worcester’s Dictionary, as being always regular: “BET, v. a. [i. BETTED; pp. BETTING, BETTED.] To wager; to lay a wager or bet. SHAK.”—Octavo Dict. In Ainsworth’s Grammar, it is given as being always irregular: “Present, Bet; Imperfect, Bet; Participle, Bet.”—Page 36. On the authority of these, and of some others cited in OBS. 6th below, I have put it with the redundant verbs. The verb prove is redundant, if proven,

* In the age of Pope, writ was frequently used both for the participle and for the preterit of this verb. It is now either obsolete or peculiar to the poets. In prose it seems vulgar: as, “He writ it, at least, published it, in 1670.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. i, p. 77.

“He, who, supreme in judgement, as in wit,

Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ.”—Pope, Ess. on Crit.

Dr. Crombie remarked, more than thirty years ago, that, “Wrote as the Participle [of Write,] is generally disused, and likewise writ.”—Treatise on Etym. and Synt., p. 202.

which is noticed by Webster, Bolles, and Worcester, is an admissible word. “The participle proven is used in Scotland and in some parts of the United States, and sometimes, though rarely, in England.—‘There is a mighty difference between not proven and disproven.’ DR. TH. CHALMERS. ‘Not proven.’ QU. REV.”—Worcester’s Universal and Critical Dict. The verbs bless and dress are to be considered redundant, according to the authority of Worcester, Webster, Bolles, and others. Cobbett will have the verbs, cast, chide, cling, draw, grow, shred, sling, slink, spring, sting, stride, swim, swing, and thrust, to be always regular; but I find no sufficient authority for allowing to any of them a regular form; and therefore leave them, where they always have been, in the list of simple irregulars. These fourteen verbs are a part of the long list of seventy which this author says, “are, by some persons, erroneously deemed irregular.” Of the following nine only, is his assertion true; namely, dip, help, load, overflow, slip, snow, stamp, strip, whip. These nine ought always to be formed regularly; for all their irregularities may well be reckoned obsolete. After these deductions from this most erroneous catalogue, there remain forty-five other very common verbs, to be disposed of contrary to this author’s instructions. All but two of these I shall place in the list of redundant verbs; though for the use of throwed I find no written authority but his and William B. Fowle’s. The two which I do not consider redundant are spit and strew, of which it may be proper to take more particular notice.

OBS. 3.—Spit, to stab, or to put upon a spit, is regular; as, “I spitted frogs, I crushed a heap of emmets.”—Dryden. Spit, to throw out saliva, is irregular, and most properly formed thus: spit, spit, spitting, spit. “Spat is obsolete.”—Webster’s Dict. It is used in the Bible; as, “He spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle.”—John, ix, 6. L. Murray gives this verb thus: “Pres. Spit; Imp. spit, spat; Perf. Part. spit, spitten.” NOTE: “Spitten is nearly obsolete.”—Octavo Gram., p. 106. Sanborn has it thus: “Pres. Spit; Imp. spit; Pres. Part. spitting; Perf. Part. spit, spat.”—Analytical Gram., p. 48. Cobbett, at first, taking it in the form, “to spit, I spat, spitten,” placed it among the seventy which he so erroneously thought should be made regular; afterwards he left it only in his list of irregulars, thus: “to spit, I spit, spitten.”—Cobbett’s E. Gram., of 1832, p. 54. Churchill, in 1823, preferring the older forms, gave it thus: “Spit, spat or spit, spitten or spit.”—New Gram., p. 111. NOTE:—“Johnson gives spat as the preterimperfect, and spit or spitted as the participle of this verb, when it means to pierce through with a pointed instrument: but in this sense, I believe, it is always regular; while, on the other hand, the regular form is now never used, when it signifies to eject from the mouth; though we find in Luke, xviii, 32, ‘He shall be spitted on.’—Churchill’s New Gram., p. 264. This text ought to have been, “He shall be spit upon.”

OBS. 4.—To strew is in fact nothing else than an other mode of spelling the verb to strow; as shew is an obsolete form for show; but if we pronounce the two forms differently, we make them different words. Walker, and some others, pronounce them alike, stro; Sheridan, Jones, Jameson, and Webster, distinguish them in utterance, stroo and stro. This is convenient for the sake of rhyme, and perhaps therefore preferable. But strew, I incline to think, is properly a regular verb only, though Wells and Worcester give it otherwise: if strewn has ever been proper, it seems now to be obsolete. EXAMPLES: “Others cut down branches from the trees, and strewed them in the way.”—Matt., xxi, 8. “Gathering where thou hast not strewed.”—Matt., xxv, 24.

“Their name, their years, spelt by th’ unletter’d muse,
The place of fame and elegy supply;

And many a holy text around she strews,
That teach the rustic moralist to die.”—Gray.

OBS. 5.—The list which I give below, prepared with great care, exhibits the redundant verbs, as they are now generally used, or as they may be used without grammatical impropriety.* Those forms which are supposed to be preferable, and best supported by authorities, are placed first. No words are inserted here, but such as some modern authors countenance. L. Murray recognizes bereaved, catched, dealed, digged, dwelled, hanged, knitted, shined, spilled; and, in his early editions, he approved of bended, builded, creeped, weaved, worked, wringed. His two larger books now tell us, “The Compiler has not inserted such verbs as learnt, spelt, spilt, &c. which are improperly terminated by t, instead of ed.”—Octavo Gram., p. 107; Duodecimo, p. 97. But if he did not, in all his grammars, insert, “Spill, spilt, R. spilt, R.,” (pp. 106, 96,) preferring the irregular form to the regular, somebody else has done it for him. And, what is remarkable, many of his amenders, as if misled by some evil genius, have contradicted themselves in precisely the same way! Ingersoll, Fisk, Merchant, and Hart, republish exactly the foregoing words, and severally become “The Compiler” of the same erroneous catalogue! Kirkham prefers spilt to spilled, and then declares the word to be “improperly terminated by t instead of ed.”—Gram., p. 151. Greenleaf, who condemns learnt and spelt, thinks dwelt and spilt are “the only established forms;” yet he will have dwelt and spill to be “regular” verbs, as well as “irregular!”—Gram. Simp., p. 29. Webber prefers spilled to spilt; but Picket admits only the latter. Cobbett and Sanborn prefer bereaved, builded, dealed, digged, dreamed, hanged, and knitted, to bereft, built, dealt, dug, dreamt, hung, and knit. The former prefers creeped to crept, and freezed to froze; the latter, slitted to slit, wringed to wrung; and both consider, “I bended,” “I bursted” and “I blowed,” to be good modern English. W. Allen acknowledges freezed and slided; and, like Webster, prefers hove to hoven: but the latter justly prefers heaved to both. EXAMP.: “The supple kinsman slided to the helm.”—New Timon. “The rogues slided me into the river.”—Shak. “And the sand slided from beneath my feet.”—DR. JOHNSON: in Murray’s Sequel, p. 179. “Wherewith she freez’d her foes to congeal’d stone.”—Milton’s Comus, l. 449. “It freezed hard last night. Now, what was it that freezed so hard?”—Emmons’s Gram., p. 25. “Far hence lies, ever freez’d, the northern main.”—Savage’s Wanderer, l. 57. “Has he not taught, beseached, and shed abroad the Spirit unconfined?”—Pollok’s Course of Time, B. x, l. 275.

OBS. 6.—D. Blair supposes catched to be an “erroneous” word and unauthorized: “I catch’d it,” for “I caught it,” he sets down for a “vulgarism.”—E. Gram., p. 111. But catched is used by some of the most celebrated authors. Dearborn prefers the regular form of creep: “creep, creeped or crept, creeped or crept.”—Columbian Gram., p. 38. I adopt no man’s opinions implicitly; copy nothing without examination; but, to prove all my decisions to be right, would be an endless task. I shall do as much as ought to be expected, toward showing that they are so. It is to be remembered, that the poets, as well as the vulgar, use some forms which a gentleman would be likely to avoid, unless he meant to quote or imitate; as,

“So clomb the first grand thief into God’s fold;
 So since into his church lewd hirelings climb.”—Milton, P. L., B. iv, l. 192.

* A word is not necessarily ungrammatical by reason of having a rival form that is more common. The regular words, beseached, blowed, bursted, digged, freezed, bereaved, hanged, meaned, sawed, showed, stringed, weaped, I admit for good English, though we find them all condemned by some critics.

“He shore his sheep, and, having packed the wool, Sent them unguarded to the hill of wolves.”—Pollok, C. of T., B. vi, l. 306.

———“The King of heav’n
Bar’d his red arm, and launching from the sky
His writhen bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming felon strook.”—Dryden.

OBS. 7.—The following are examples in proof of some of the forms acknowledged below:
“Where etiquette and precedence abided far away.”—Paulding’s Westward-Ho! p. 6. “But there were no secrets where Mrs. Judith Paddock abided.”—Ib., p. 8. “They abided by the forms of government established by the charters.”—John Quincy Adams, Oration, 1831. “I have abode consequences often enough in the course of my life.”—Id., Speech, 1839. “Present, bide, or abide; Past, bode, or abode.”—Coar’s Gram., p. 104. “I awaked up last of all.”—Ecclus., xxxiii, 16. “For this are my knees bended before the God of the spirits of all flesh.”—Wm. Penn. “There was never a prince bereaved of his dependencies,” &c.—Bacon. “Madam, you have bereft me of all words.”—Shakspeare. “Reave, reaved or reft, reaving, reaved or reft. Bereave is similar.”—Ward’s Practical Gram., p. 65. “And let them tell their tales of woful ages, long ago betid.”—Shak. “Of every nation blent, and every age.”—Pollok, C. of T., B vii, p. 153. “Rider and horse,—friend, foe,—in one red burial blent!”—Byron, Harold, C. iii, st. 28. “I builded me houses.”—Ecclesiastes, ii, 4. “For every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God.”—Heb. iii, 4. “What thy hands builded not, thy wisdom gained.”—Milton’s P. L., X, 373. “Present, bet; Past, bet; Participle, bet.”—Mackintosh’s Gram., p. 197; Alexander’s, 38. “John of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much upon his head.”—SHAKSPEARE: Joh. Dict, w. Bet. “He lost every earthly thing he betted.”—PRIOR: ib. “A seraph kneeled.”—Pollok, C. T., p. 95.

“At first, he declared he himself would be blowed, Ere his conscience with such a foul crime he would load.”—J. R. Lowell.

“They are caught without art or industry.”—Robertson’s Amer.,—Vol. i, p. 302. “Apt to be caught and dazzled.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 26. “The lion being caught in a net.”—Art of Thinking, p. 232. “In their self-will they digged down a wall.”—Gen., xlix, 6. “The royal mother instantly dove to the bottom and brought up her babe unharmed.”—Trumbull’s America, i, 144. “The learned have diven into the secrets of nature.”—CARNOT: Columbian Orator, p. 82. “They have awoke from that ignorance in which they had slept.”—London Encyclopedia. “And he slept and dreamed the second time.”—Gen., xli, 5. “So I awoke.”—Ib., 21. “But he hanged the chief baker.”—Gen., xl, 22. “Make as if you hanged yourself.”—ARBUTHNOT: in Joh. Dict. “Graven by art and man’s device.”—Acts, xvii, 29. “Grav’d on the stone beneath yon aged thorn.”—Gray. “That the tooth of usury may be grinded.”—Lord Bacon. “MILN-EE, The hole from which the grinded corn falls into the chest below.”—Glossary of Craven, London, 1828. “UNGRUND, Not grinded.”—Ibid. “And he built the inner court with three rows of hewed stone.”—1 Kings, vi, 36. “A thing by which matter is hewed.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of Europ. Lang., Vol. i, p. 378. “SCAGD or SCAD meaned distinction, dividing.”—Ib., i, 114. “He only meaned to acknowledge him to be an extraordinary person.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 12. “The determines what particular thing is meaned.”—Ib., p. 11. “If Hermia mean’d to say Lysander lied.”—Shak. “As if I meaned not the first but the second creation.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 289. “From some stones have rivers *burst*ed forth.”—Sale’s Koran, Vol. i, p. 14.

“So move we on; I only meant

To show the reed on which you leant.”—Scott, L. L., C. v, st. 11.

OBS. 8.—Layed, payed, and stayed, are now less common than laid, paid, and staid; but perhaps not less correct, since they are the same words in a more regular and not uncommon orthography: “Thou takest up that [which] thou layedst not down.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE, SMITH’S, BRUCE’S: Luke, xix, 21. Scott’s Bible, in this place, has “layest,” which is wrong in tense. “Thou layedst affliction upon our loins.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Psalms, lxvi, 11. “Thou laidest affliction upon our loins.”—SCOTT’S BIBLE, and BRUCE’S. “Thou laidst affliction upon our loins.”—SMITH’S BIBLE, Stereotyped by J. Howe. “Which gently lay’d my knighthood on my shoulder.”—SINGER’S SHAKSPEARE: Richard II, Act i, Sc. 1. “But no regard was payed to his remonstrance.”—Smollett’s England, Vol. iii, p. 212. “Therefore the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit.”—Haggai, i, 10. “STAY, i. STAYED or STAID; pp. STAYING, STAYED or STAID.”—Worcester’s Univ. and Crit. Dict. “Now Jonathan and Ahimaaz stayed by En-rogel.”—2 Sam., xvii, 17. “This day have I payed my vows.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Prov, vii, 14. Scott’s Bible has “paid.” “They not only stayed for their resort, but discharged divers.”—HAYWARD: in Joh. Dict. “I stayed till the latest grapes were ripe.”—Waller’s Dedication. “To lay is regular, and has in the past time and participle layed or laid.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 54. “To the flood, that stay’d her flight.”—Milton’s Comus, l. 832. “All rude, all waste, and desolate is lay’d.”—Rowe’s Lucan, B. ix, l. 1636. “And he smote thrice, and stayed.”—2 Kings, xiii, 18.

“When Cobham, generous as the noble peer
That wears his honours, pay’d the fatal price

Of virtue blooming, ere the storms were laid.”—Shenstone, p. 167.

OBS. 9.—By the foregoing citations, lay, pay, and stay, are clearly proved to be redundant. But, in nearly all our English grammars, lay and pay are represented as being always irregular; and stay is as often, and as improperly, supposed to be always regular. Other examples in proof of the list: “I lit my pipe with the paper.”—Addison.

“While he whom learning, habits, all prevent,
Is largely mulct for each impediment.”—Crabbe, Bor., p. 102.

“And then the chapel—night and morn to pray,
Or mulct and threaten’d if he kept away.”—Ib., p. 162.

“A small space is formed, in which the breath is pent up.”—Gardiner’s Music of Nature, p. 493. “Pen, when it means to write, is always regular. Boyle has penned in the sense of confined.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 261. “So far as it was now pled.”—ANDERSON: Annals of the Bible, p. 25. “Rapped with admiration.”—HOOKER: Joh. Dict. “And being rapt with the love of his beauty.”—Id., ib. “And rapt in secret studies.”—SHAK.: ib. “I’m rapt with joy.”—ADDISON: ib. “Roast with fire.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Exod., xii, 8 and 9. “Roasted with fire.”—SCOTT’S BIBLE: Exod., xii, 8 and 9. “Upon them hath the light shined.”—Isaiah, ix, 2. “The earth shined with his glory.”—Ezekiel, xliii, 2. “After that he had showed wonders.”—Acts, vii, 36. “Those things which God before had showed.”—Acts, iii, 18. “As shall be shewed in Syntax.”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 28. “I have shown you, that the two first may be dismissed.”—Cobbett’s E. Gram., ¶ 10. “And in this struggle were sowed the seeds of the revolution.”—Everett’s Address, p. 16. “Your favour showed to the performance, has given me boldness.”—Jenks’s Prayers, Ded. “Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel.”—Rom., xv, 20. “Art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf?”—Shakspeare. “Hamstring’d behind, unhappy Gyges died.”—Dryden. “In Syracuse was I born and wed.”—Shakspeare. “And thou art wedded to calamity.”—Id. “I saw thee first, and wedded thee.”—Milton. “Sprung the rank weed, and thrived with large increase.”—Pope. “Some errors never would have thriven, had it not been for learned refutation.”—Book of Thoughts, p. 34. “Under your care they have thriven.”—Junius, p. 5. “Fixed by being rolled closely, compacted, knitted.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist., Vol. i, p. 374. “With kind converse and skill has weaved.”—Prior. “Though I shall be wetted to the skin.”—Sandford and Merton, p. 64. “I speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility.”—Shakspeare. “And pure grief shore his old thread in twain.”—Id. “And must I ravel out my weaved-up follies?”—Id., Rich. II. “Tells how the drudging Goblin swet.”—Milton’s L’Allegro. “Weave, wove or weaved, weaving, wove, weaved, or woven.”—Ward’s Gram., p. 67.

“Thou who beneath the frown of fate hast stood,
And in thy dreadful agony sweat blood.”—Young, p. 238.

OBS. 10.—The verb to shake is now seldom used in any other than the irregular form, shake, shook, shaking, shaken; and, in this form only, is it recognized by our principal grammarians and lexicographers, except that Johnson improperly acknowledges shook as well as shaken for the perfect participle: as, “I’ve shook it off.”—DRYDEN: Joh. Dict. But the regular form, shake, shaked, shaking, shaked, appears to have been used by some writers of high reputation; and, if the verb is not now properly redundant, it formerly was so. Examples regular: “The frame and huge foundation of the earth shak’d like a coward.”—SHAKSPEARE: Hen. IV. “I am he that is so love-shaked.”—ID.: As You Like it. “A sly and constant knave, not to be shak’d.”—ID.: Cymbeline: Joh. Dict. “I thought he would have shaked it off.”—TATTLER: ib. “To the very point I shaked my head at.”—Spectator, No. 4. “From the ruin’d roof of shak’d Olympus.”—Milton’s Poems. “None hath shak’d it off.”—Walker’s English Particles, p. 89. “They shaked their heads.”—Psalms, cix, 25. Dr. Crombie says, “Story, in his Grammar, has, most unwarrantably, asserted, that the Participle of this Verb should be shaked.”—ON ETYMOLOGY AND SYNTAX, p. 198. Fowle, on the contrary, pronounces shaked to be right. See True English Gram., p. 46.

OBS. 11.—All former lists of our irregular and redundant verbs are, in many respects, defective and erroneous; nor is it claimed for those which are here presented, that they are absolutely perfect. I trust, however, they are much nearer to perfection, than are any earlier ones. Among the many individuals who have published schemes of these verbs, none have been more respected and followed than Lowth, Murray, and Crombie; yet are these authors’ lists severally faulty in respect to as many as sixty or seventy of the words in question, though the whole number but little exceeds two hundred, and is commonly reckoned less than one hundred and eighty. By Lowth, eight verbs are made redundant, which I think are now regular only: namely, bake, climb, fold, help, load, owe, wash. By Crombie, as many: to wit, bake, climb, freight, help, lift, load, shape, writhe. By Murray, two: load and shape. With Crombie, and in general with the others too, twenty-seven verbs are always irregular, which I think are sometimes regular, and therefore redundant: abide, beseech, blow, burst, creep, freeze, grind, lade, lay, pay, rive, seethe, shake, show, sleep, slide, speed, string, strive, strow, sweat, thrive, throw, weave, weep, wind, wring. Again, there are, I think, more than twenty redundant verbs which are treated by Crombie,—and, with one or two exceptions, by Lowth and Murray also,—as if they were always regular: namely, betide, blend, bless, burn, dive, dream, dress, geld, kneel, lean, leap, learn, mean, mulct, pass, pen, plead, prove, reave, smell, spell, stave, stay, sweep, wake, whet, wont. Crombie’s list contains the auxiliaries, which properly belong to a different table. Erroneous as it is, in all these things, and more, it is introduced by the author with the following praise, in bad English: “Verbs, which depart from this rule, are called Irregular, of which I believe the subsequent enumeration to be nearly complete.”—TREATISE ON ETYM. AND SYNT., p. 192.

OBS. 12.—Dr. Johnson, in his Grammar of the English Tongue, recognizes two forms which would make teach and reach redundant. But taached is now “obsolete,” and rought is “old,” according to his own Dictionary. Of loaded and loaden, which he gives as participles of load, the regular form only appears to be now in good use. For the redundant forms of many words in the foregoing list, as of abode or abided, awaked or awoke, besought or beseached, caught or catched, hewed or hewn, mowed or mown, laded or laden, seethed or sod, sheared or shore, sowed or sown, waked or woke, wove or weaved, his authority may be added to that of others already cited. In Dearborn’s Columbian Grammar, published in Boston in 1795, the year in which Lindley Murray’s Grammar first appeared in York, no fewer than thirty verbs are made redundant, which are not so represented by Murray. Of these I have retained nineteen in the following list, and left the other eleven to be now considered always regular. The thirty are these: “bake, bend, build, burn, climb, creep, dream, fold, freight, geld, heat, heave, help, lay, leap, lift, light, melt, owe, quit, rent, rot, seethe, spell, split, strive, wash, weave, wet, work.” See Dearborn’s Gram., p. 37-45.

LIST OF THE REDUNDANT VERBS.

| Present. | Preterit.             | Imperfect Participle. | Perfect Participle.    |
|-----------------|------------------------------|------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| Abide           | abode or abided       | abiding                      | abode or abided.       |
| Awake           | awaked or awoke       | awaking                      | awaked or awoke.       |
| Belay           | belayed or belaid     | belaying                     | belayed or belaid.     |
| Bend            | bent or bended        | bending                      | bent or bended.        |
| Bereave         | bereft or bereaved    | bereaving                    | bereft or bereaved.    |
| Beseech         | besought or beseeched | beseeking                    | besought or beseeched. |
| Bet             | betted or bet         | betting                      | betted or bet.         |
| Betide          | betided or betid      | betiding                     | betided or betid.      |
| Bide            | bode or bided         | biding                       | bode or bided.         |
| Blend           | blended or blent      | blending                     | blended or blent.      |
| Bless           | blessed or blest      | blessing                     | blessed or blest.      |
| Blow            | blew or blowed        | blowing                      | blown or blowed.       |
| Build           | built or builded      | building                     | built or builded.      |
| Burn            | burned or burnt       | burning                      | burned or burnt.       |
| Burst           | burst or bursted      | bursting                     | burst or bursted.      |
| Catch           | caught or catched     | catching                     | caught or catched.     |
| Clothe          | clothed or clad       | clothing                     | clothed or clad.       |
| Creep           | crept or creeped      | creeping                     | crept or creeped.      |
| Crow            | crowed or crew        | crowing                      | crowed.                       |
| Curse           | cursed or curst       | cursing                      | cursed or curst.       |
| Dare            | dared or durst        | daring                       | dared.                        |
| Deal            | dealt or dealed       | dealing                      | dealt or dealed.       |
| Dig             | dug or digged         | digging                      | dug or digged.         |
| Dive            | dived or dove         | diving                       | dived or diven.        |
| Dream           | dreamed or dreamt     | dreaming                     | dreamed or dreamt.     |
| Dress           | dressed or drest      | dressing                     | dressed or drest.      |

|                |                          |          |                           |
|----------------|--------------------------|----------|---------------------------|
| Dwell          | dwelt or dwelled  | dwelling | dwelt or dwelled.  |
| Freeze         | froze or froze    | freezing | frozen or froze.   |
| Geld           | gelded or gelt    | gelding  | gelded or gelt.    |
| Gild           | gilded or gilt    | gilding  | gilded or gilt.    |
| Gird           | girded or girt    | girding  | girded or girt.    |
| Grave          | graved                   | graving  | graved or graven.  |
| Grind          | ground or grinded | grinding | ground or grinded. |
| Hang           | hung or hanged    | hanging  | hung or hanged.    |
| Heat           | heated or het     | heating  | heated or het.     |
| Heave          | heaved or hove    | heaving  | heaved or hoven.   |
| Hew            | hewed                    | hewing   | hewed or hewn.     |
| Kneel          | kneeled or knelt  | kneeling | kneeled or knelt.  |
| Knit           | knit or knitted   | knitting | knit or knitted.   |
| Lade           | laded                    | lading   | laded or laden.    |
| Lay            | laid or layed     | laying   | laid or layed.     |
| Lean           | leaned or leant   | leaning  | leaned or leant.   |
| Leap           | leaped or leapt   | leaping  | leaped or leapt.*  |
| Learn          | learned or learnt | learning | learned or learnt. |
| Light          | lighted or lit    | lighting | lighted or lit.    |
| Mean           | meant or meant    | meaning  | meant or meant.    |
| Mow            | mowed                    | mowing   | mowed or mown.     |
| Mulct          | mulcted or mulct  | mulcting | mulcted or mulct.  |
| Pass           | passed or past    | passing  | passed or past.    |
| Pay            | paid or payed     | paying   | paid or payed.     |
| Penn,(to coop) | penned or pent    | penning  | penned or pent.    |
| Plead          | pleaded or pled   | pleading | pleaded or pled.   |
| Prove          | proved                   | proving  | proved or proven.  |
| Quit           | quitted or quit   | quitting | quitted or quit†.  |
| Rap            | rapped or rapt    | rapping  | rapped or rapt.    |
| Reave          | reft or reaved    | reaving  | reft or reaved.    |
| Rive           | rived                    | riving   | riven or rived.    |
| Roast          | roasted or roast  | roasting | roasted or roast.  |
| Saw            | sawed                    | sawing   | sawed or sawn.     |
| Seethe         | seethed or sod    | seething | seethed or sodden. |
| Shake          | shook or shaken   | shaking  | shaken or shaken.  |
| Shape          | shaped                   | shaping  | shaped or shapen.  |
| Shave          | shaved                   | shaving  | shaved or shaven.  |
| Shear          | sheared or shorn  | shearing | sheared or shorn.  |
| Shine          | shined or shone   | shining  | shined or shone.   |
| Show           | showed                   | showing  | showed or shown.   |

* “And the man in whom the evil spirit was, leapt on them.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Acts, xix, 16. In Scott’s Bible, and several others, the word is “leaped.” Walker says, “The past time of this verb is generally heard with the diphthong short; and if so, it ought to be spelled leapt, rhyming with kept.”—Walker’s Pron. Dict., w. Leap. Worcester, who improperly pronounces leaped in two ways, “lêpt or lêpt,” misquotes Walker, as saying, “it ought to be spelled lept.”—Universal and Critical Dict., w. Leap. In the solemn style, leaped is, of course, two syllables. As for leapedst or leapest, I know not that either can be found.

† Acquit is almost always formed regularly, thus: acquit, acquitted, acquitting, acquitted. But, like quit, it is sometimes found in an irregular form also; which, if it be allowable, will make it redundant: as, “To be acquit from my continual smart.”—SPENCER: Johnson’s Dict. “The writer holds himself acquit of all charges in this regard.”—Judd, on the Revolutionary War, p. 5. “I am glad I am so acquit of this tinder-box.”—SHAK.

|        |                           |           |                                |
|--------|---------------------------|-----------|--------------------------------|
| Sleep  | slept or slept     | sleeping  | slept or slept.         |
| Slide  | slid or slid       | sliding   | slidden, slid, or slid. |
| Slit   | slitted or slit    | slitting  | slitted or slit.        |
| Smell  | smelled or smelt   | smelling  | smelled or smelt.       |
| Sow    | sowed                     | sowing    | sowed or sown.          |
| Speed  | sped or speeded    | speeding  | sped or speeded.        |
| Spell  | spelled or spelt   | spelling  | spelled or spelt.       |
| Spill  | spilled or spilt   | spilling  | spilled or spilt.       |
| Split  | split or splitted  | splitting | split or splitted.*     |
| Spoil  | spoiled or spoilt  | spoiling  | spoiled or spoilt.      |
| Stave  | stove or staved    | staving   | stove or staved.        |
| Stay   | staid or stayed    | staying   | staid or stayed.        |
| String | strung or stringed | stringing | strung or stringed.     |
| Strive | strived or strove  | striving  | strived or striven.     |
| Strow  | strowed                   | strowing  | strowed or strown.      |
| Sweat  | sweated or sweat   | sweating  | sweated or sweat.       |
| Sweep  | swept or swept     | sweeping  | swept or swept.         |
| Swell  | swelled                   | swelling  | swelled or swollen.     |
| Thrive | thrived or throve  | thriving  | thrived or thriven.     |
| Throw  | threw or throwed   | throwing  | thrown or throwed.      |
| Wake   | waked or woke      | waking    | waked or woke.          |
| Wax    | waxed                     | waxing    | waxed or waxen.         |
| Weave  | wove or weaved     | weaving   | woven or weaved.        |
| Wed    | wedded or wed      | wedding   | wedded or wed.          |
| Weep   | wept or weeped     | weeping   | wept or weeped.         |
| Wet    | wet or wetted      | wetting   | wet or wetted.          |
| Whet   | whetted or whet    | whetting  | whetted or whet.†       |
| Wind   | wound or winded    | winding   | wound or winded.        |
| Wont   | wont or wonted     | wonting   | wont or wonted.         |
| Work   | worked or wrought  | working   | worked or wrought.      |
| Wring  | wringed or wrung   | wringing  | wringed or wrung.‡      |

* “Not know my voice! O, time’s extremity!
Hast thou so crack’d and splitted my poor tongue?”

—SHAK.: Com. of Er.

† Whet is made redundant in Webster’s American Dictionary, as well as in Wells’s Grammar; but I can hardly affirm that the irregular form of it is well authorized.

‡ In S. W. Clark’s Practical Grammar, first published in 1847—a work of high pretensions, and prepared expressly “for the education of Teachers”—sixty-three out of the foregoing ninety-five Redundant Verbs, are treated as having no regular or no irregular forms. (1.) The following twenty-nine are omitted by this author, as if they were always regular; belay, bet, betide, blend, bless, curse, dive, dress, geld, lean, leap, learn, mulet, pass, pen, plead, prove, rap, reave, roast, seethe, smell, spoil, stave, stay, wake, wed, whet, wont. (2.) The following thirty-four are given by him as being always irregular; abide, bend, beseech, blow, burst, catch, chide, creep, deal, freeze, grind, hang, knit, lade, lay, mean, pay, shake, sleep, slide, speed, spell, spill, split, string, strive, sweat, sweep, thrive, throw, weave, weep, wet, wind. Thirty-two of the ninety-five are made redundant by him, though not so called in his book.

In Wells’s School Grammar, “the 113th Thousand,” dated 1850, the deficiencies of the foregoing kinds, if I am right, are about fifty. This author’s “List of Irregular Verbs” has forty-four Redundants, to which he assigns a regular form as well as an irregular. He is here about as much nearer right than Clark, as this number surpasses thirty-two, and comes towards ninety-five. The words about which they differ, are—pen, seethe, and whet, of the former number; and catch, deal, hang, knit, spell, spill, sweat, and thrive, of the latter.

DEFECTIVE VERBS.

A defective verb is a verb that forms no participles, and is used in but few of the moods and tenses; as, beware, ought, quoth.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1. When any of the principal parts of a verb are wanting, the tenses usually derived from those parts are also, of course, wanting. All the auxiliaries, except do, be, and have, if we compare them with other verbs, are defective; but, as auxiliaries, they lack nothing; for no complete verb is used throughout as an auxiliary, except be. And since an auxiliary differs essentially from a principal verb, the propriety of referring may, can, must, and shall, to the class of defective verbs, is at least questionable. In parsing there is never any occasion to call them defective verbs, because they are always taken together with their principals. And though we may technically say, that their participles are "wanting," it is manifest that none are needed.

OBS. 2. Will is sometimes used as a principal verb, and as such it is regular and complete; will, willed, willing, willed: as, "His Majesty willed that they should attend."—Clarendon. "He wills for them a happiness of a far more exalted and enduring nature."—Gurney. "Whether thou willest it to be a minister to our pleasure."—Harris. "I will; be thou clean."—Luke, v, 13. "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou will."—Matt., xxvi, 39. "To will is present with me."—Rom., vii, 18. But would is sometimes also a principal verb; as, "What would this man?"—Pope. "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets."—Numb., xi, 29. "And Israel would none of me."—Psalm, lxxxi, 11. If we refer this indefinite preterit to the same root, will becomes redundant; will, willed or would, willing, willed. In respect to time, would is less definite than willed, though both are called preterits. It is common, and perhaps best, to consider them distinct verbs. The latter only can be a participle: as,

"How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was will'd to love his enemies!"—Shakspeare.

OBS. 3. The remaining defective verbs are only five or six questionable terms, which our grammarians know not well how else to explain; some of them being now nearly obsolete, and others never having been very proper. Begone is a needless coalition of be and gone, better written separately, unless Dr. Johnson is right in calling the compound an interjection: as,

"Begone! the goddess cries with stern disdain, Begone! nor dare the hallow'd stream to stain!"—Addison.

Beware also seems to be a needless compound of be and the old adjective ware, wary, aware, cautious. Both these are, of course, used only in those forms of expression in which be is proper; as, "Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision."—Philippians, iii, 2. "But we must beware* of carrying our attention to this beauty too far."—Blair's Rhet., p. 119. These words were formerly separated: as, "Of whom

* In the following example, there is a different phraseology, which seems not so well suited to the sense: "But we must be aware of imagining, that we render style strong and expressive, by a constant and multiplied use of epithets"—Blair's Rhet., p. 287. Here, in stead of "be aware," the author should have said, "beware," or "be ware," that is, be wary, or cautious; for aware means apprised, or informed, a sense very different from the other.

be thou ware also.”—1 Tim., iv, 15. “They were ware of it.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE, and ALGER’S: Acts, xiii, 6. “They were aware of it.”—Scott’s Bible: ib. “And in an hour that he is not ware of him.”—Johnson’s Dict., w. Ware. “And in an hour that he is not aware of.”—Common Bibles: Matt., xxiv, 50. “Bid her well be ware and still erect.”—MILTON: in Johnson’s Dict. “That even Silence was took ere she was ware.”—Id., Comus, line 558. The adjective ware is now said to be “obsolete,” but the propriety of this assertion depends upon that of forming such a defective verb. What is the use of doing so?

“This to disclose is all thy guardian can;
Beware of all, but most beware of man.”—Pope.

The words written separately will always have the same meaning, unless we omit the preposition of, and suppose the compound to be a transitive verb. In this case, the argument for compounding the terms appears to be valid; as,

“Beware the public laughter of the town;
 Thou springst a-leak already in thy crown.”—Dryden.

OBS. 4. The words ought and own, without question, were originally parts of the redundant verb to owe; thus: owe, owed or ought, owing, owed or own. But both have long been disjoined from this connexion, and hence owe has become regular. Own, as now used, is either a pronominal adjective, as, “my own hand,” or a regular verb thence derived, as, “to own a house.” Ought, under the name of a defective verb, is now generally thought to be properly used, in this one form, in all the persons and numbers of the present and the imperfect tense of the indicative and subjunctive moods. Or, if it is really of one tense only, it is plainly an aorist; and hence the time must be specified by the infinitive that follows: as, “He ought to go; He ought to have gone.” “If thou ought to go; If thou ought to have gone.” Being originally a preterit, it never occurs in the infinitive mood, and is entirely invariable, except in the solemn style, where we find oughtest in both tenses; as, “How thou oughtest to behave thyself.”—1 Tim., iii, 15. “Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers.”—Matt., xxiv, 27. We never say, or have said, “He, she, or it, oughts or oughteth.” Yet we manifestly use this verb in the present tense, and in the third person singular; as, “Discourse ought always to begin with a clear proposition.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 217. I have already observed that some grammarians improperly call ought an auxiliary. The learned authors of Brightland’s Grammar, (which is dedicated to Queen Anne,) did so; and also affirmed that must and ought “have only the present time,” and are alike invariable. “It is now quite obsolete to say, thou oughtest; for ought now changes its ending no more than must.”—Brightland’s Gram., (approved by Isaac Bickerstaff, Esq.) p. 112.

“Do, will, and shall, must, OUGHT, and may,
Have, am, or be, this Doctrine will display.”—Ib., p. 107.

OBS. 5.—Wis, preterit wist, to know, to think, to suppose, to imagine, appears to be now nearly or quite obsolete; but it may be proper to explain it, because it is found in the Bible: as, “I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest.”—Acts, xxiii, 5. “He himself ‘wist not that his face shone.’”—Life of Schiller, p. iv. Wit, to know, and wot, knew, are also obsolete, except in the phrase to wit; which, being taken abstractly, is equivalent to the adverb namely, or to the phrase, that is to say. The phrase, “we do you to wit,” (in 2 Cor., viii, 1st,) means, “we inform you.” Churchill gives the present tense of this verb three forms, weet, wit, and wot; and there seems to have been some authority for them all: as,

“He was, to weet, a little roguish page.”—Thomson. “But little wotteth he the might of the means his folly despiseth.”—Tupper’s Book of Thoughts, p. 35. To wit, used alone, to indicate a thing spoken of, (as the French use their infinitive, savoir, à savoir, or the phrase, c’est à savoir,) is undoubtedly an elliptical expression: probably for, “I give you to wit,” i. e., “I give you to know.” Trow, to think, occurs in the Bible; as, “I trow not.”—N. Test. And Coar gives it as a defective verb; and only in the first person singular of the present indicative, “I trow.” Webster and Worcester mark the words as obsolete; but Sir W. Scott, in the Lady of the Lake, has this line:

“Thinkst thou he trow’d thine omen ought?”—Canto iv, stanza 10.

Quoth and quod, for say, saith, or said, are obsolete, or used only in ludicrous language. Webster supposes these words to be equivalent, and each confined to the first and third persons of the present and imperfect tenses of the indicative mood. Johnson says, that, “quoth you,” as used by Sidney, is irregular; but Tooke assures us, that “The th in quoth, does not designate the third person.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii, p. 323. They are each invariable, and always placed before the nominative: as, quoth I, quoth he.

“Yea, so sayst thou, (quod Tröylus,) alas!”—Chaucer.

“I feare, quod he, it wyll not be.”—Sir T. More.

“Stranger, go! Heaven be thy guide!

Quod the beadsman of Nith-side.”—Burns.

OBS. 6.—Methinks, (i. e., to me it thinks,) for I think, or, it seems to me, with its preterit methought, (i. e., to me it thought,) is called by Dr. Johnson an “ungrammatical word.” He imagined it to be “a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I.”—Joh. Dict. It is indeed a puzzling anomaly in our language, though not without some Anglo-Saxon or Latin parallels; and, like its kindred, “me seemeth,” or “meseems,” is little worthy to be countenanced, though often used by Dryden, Pope, Addison, and other good writers. Our lexicographers call it an impersonal verb, because, being compounded with an objective, it cannot have a nominative expressed. It is nearly equivalent to the adverb apparently; and if impersonal, it is also defective; for it has no participles, no “methinking,” and no participial construction of “methought,” though Webster’s American Dictionary, whether quarto or octavo, absurdly suggests that the latter word may be used as a participle. In the Bible, we find the following text: “Me thinketh the running of the foremost is like the running of Ahimaaz.”—2 Sam., xviii, 27. And Milton improperly makes thought an impersonal verb, apparently governing the separate objective pronoun him; as,

“Him thought he by the brook of Cherith stood.”—P. R., B. ii, l. 264.

OBS. 7.—Some verbs from the nature of the subjects to which they refer, are chiefly confined to the third person singular; as, “It rains; it snows; it freezes; it hails; it lightens; it thunders.” These have been called impersonal verbs; because the neuter pronoun it, which is commonly used before them, does not seem to represent any noun, but, in connexion with the verb, merely to express a state of things. They are however, in fact, neither impersonal nor defective. Some, or all of them, may possibly take some other nominative, if not a different person; as, “The Lord rained upon Sodom, and upon Gomorrah, brimstone and fire.”—Gen., xix, 24. “The God of glory thundereth.”—Psalms, xxix, 3. “Canst thou thunder with a voice like him?”—Job, xl, 9. In short, as Harris observes, "The doctrine of Impersonal Verbs has been justly rejected by the best grammarians, both ancient and modern."—Hermes, p. 175.

OBS. 8.—By some writers, words of this kind are called Monopersonal Verbs; that is, verbs of one person. This name, though not very properly compounded, is perhaps more fit than the other; but we have little occasion to speak of these verbs as a distinct class in our language. Dr. Murray says, "What is called an impersonal verb, is not so; for lic-et, juv-at, and oport-et, have Tha, that thing, or it, in their composition."—History of European Languages, Vol. ii, p. 146. Ail, irk, and behoove, are regular verbs and transitive; but they are used only in the third person singular: as, "What ails you?"—"It irks me."—"It behooves you." The last two are obsolescent, or at least not in very common use. In Latin, passive verbs, or neuters of the passive form, are often used impersonally, or without an obvious nominative; and this elliptical construction is sometimes imitated in English, especially by the poets: as,

"Meanwhile, ere thus was sinn'd and judg'd on earth, Within the gates of Hell sat Sin and Death."—Milton, P. L., B. x, l. 230.

"Forthwith on all sides to his aid was run
By angels many and strong, who interpos'd."—Id., B. vi, l. 335.

LIST OF THE DEFECTIVE VERBS.

| Present. | Preterit. | Present.   | Preterit.   |
|-----------------|------------------|-------------------|--------------------|
| Beware,         | ———              | Shall,            | should,            |
| Can,            | could.           | Will † | would.             |
| May,            | might.           | Quoth,            | quoth.             |
| Methinks,       | methought.       | Wis,              | wist. ‡ |
| Must,           | must.*           | Wit,              | wot.               |
| Ought,          | ought.*          |                   |                    |

EXAMPLES FOR PARSING.

PRAXIS VI—ETYMOLOGICAL.

In the Sixth Praxis, it is required of the pupil—to distinguish and define the different parts of speech, and the classes and modifications of the ARTICLES, NOUNS, ADJECTIVES, PRONOUNS, and VERBS.

The definitions to be given in the Sixth Praxis, are two for an article, six for a noun, three for an adjective, six for a pronoun, seven for a verb finite, five for an infinitive, and one for a participle, an adverb, a conjunction, a preposition, or an interjection. Thus:—

* Dr. Crombie contends that must and ought are used only in the present tense. (See his Treatise, p. 204.) In this he is wrong, especially with regard to the latter word. Lennie, and his copyist Bullions, adopt the same notion; but Murray, and many others, suppose them to "have both a present and [a] past signification."

† Dr. Crombie says, "This Verb, as an auxiliary, is inflexible; thus we say, 'he will go;' and 'he wills to go.'"—Treatise on Etym. and Syntax, p. 203. He should have confined his remarks to the familiar style, in which all the auxiliaries, except do, be, and have, are inflexible. For, in the solemn style, we do not say, "Thou will go," but, "Thou wilt go."

‡ "HAD-I-WIST. A proverbial expression, Oh that I had known. Gower."—Chalmers's Dict., also Webster's. In this phrase, which is here needlessly compounded, and not very properly explained, we see wist used as a perfect participle. But the word is obsolete. "Had I wist," is therefore an obsolete phrase, meaning. If I had known, or, "O that I had known."

EXAMPLE PARSED.

“The freedom of choice seems essential to happiness; because, properly speaking, that is riot our own which is imposed upon us.”—Dillwyn's Reflections, p. 109.

The is the definite article. 1. An article is the word the, an, or a, which we put before nouns to limit their signification. 2. The definite article is the, which denotes some particular thing or things.

Freedom is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The nominative case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the subject of a finite verb.

Of is a preposition. 1. A preposition is a word used to express some relation of different things or thoughts to each other, and is generally placed before a noun or a pronoun.

Choice is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case. 1. A noun is; the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle, or preposition.

Seems is a regular neuter verb, from seem, seemed, seeming, seemed; found in the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and singular number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act, or to be acted upon. 2. A regular verb is a verb that forms the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. A neuter verb is a verb that expresses neither action nor passion, but simply being, or a state of being. 4. The indicative mood is that form of the verb, which simply indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question. 5. The present tense is that which expresses what now exists, or is taking place. 6. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 7. The singular number is that which denotes but one. Essential is a common adjective, compared by means of the adverbs; essential, more essential, most essential; or, essential, less essential, least essential. 1. An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, and generally expresses quality. 2. A common adjective is any ordinary epithet, or adjective denoting quality or situation. 3. Those adjectives which may be varied in sense, but not in form, are compared by means of adverbs.

To is a preposition. 1. A preposition is a word used to express some relation of different things or thoughts to each other, and is generally placed before a noun or a pronoun.

Happiness is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle, or preposition.

Because is a conjunction. 1. A conjunction is a word used to connect words or sentences in construction, and to show the dependence of the terms so connected.

Properly is an adverb. 1. An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner.

Speaking is a participle. 1. A participle is a word derived from a verb, participating the properties of a verb, and of an adjective or a noun; and is generally formed by adding ing, d, or ed, to the verb.

That is a pronominal adjective, not compared; standing for that thing, in the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case. [See OBS. 14th, p. 290.] 1. An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, and generally expresses quality. 2. A pronominal adjective is a definitive word which may either accompany its noun, or represent it understood. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The nominative case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the subject of a finite verb.

Is is an irregular neuter verb, from be, was, being, been; found in the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and singular number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act, or to be acted upon. 2. An irregular verb is a verb that does not form the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. A neuter verb is a verb that expresses neither action nor passion, but simply being, or a state of being. 4. The indicative mood is that form of the verb, which simply indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question. 5. The present tense is that which expresses what now exists, or is taking place. 6. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 7. The singular number is that which denotes but one.

Not is an adverb. 1. An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner.

Our is a personal pronoun, of the first person, plural number, masculine gender, and possessive case. 1. A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun. 2. A personal pronoun is a pronoun that shows, by its form, of what person it is. 3. The first person is that which denotes the speaker or writer. 4. The plural number is that which denotes more than one. 5. The masculine gender is that which denotes persons or animals of the male kind. 6. The possessive case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the relation of property.

Own is a pronominal adjective, not compared. 1. An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, and generally expresses quality. 2. A pronominal adjective is a definitive word which may either accompany its noun, or represent it understood. 3. Those adjectives whose signification does not admit of different degrees cannot be compared.

Which is a relative pronoun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case. 1. A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun. 2. A relative pronoun is a pronoun that represents an antecedent word or phrase, and connects different clauses of a sentence. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The nominative case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun which usually denotes the subject of a finite verb.

Is imposed is a regular passive verb, from the active verb, impose, imposed, imposing, imposed,—passive, to be imposed; found in the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and singular number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act, or to be acted upon. 2. A regular verb is a verb that forms the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. A passive verb is a verb that represents the subject, or what the nominative expresses, as being acted upon. 4. The indicative mood is that form of the verb which simply indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question. 5. The present tense is that which expresses what now exists, or is taking place. 6. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 7. The singular number is that which denotes but one.

Upon is a preposition. 1. A preposition is a word used to express some relation of different things or thoughts to each other, and is generally placed before a noun or a pronoun.

Us is a personal pronoun, of the first person, plural number, masculine gender, and objective case. 1. A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun. 2. A personal pronoun is a pronoun that shows, by its form, of what person it is. 3. The first person is that which denotes the speaker or writer. 4. The plural number is that which denotes more than one. 5. The masculine gender is that which denotes persons or animals of the male kind. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle, or preposition.

LESSON I.—PARSING.

“He has desires after the kingdom, and mates no question but it shall be his; he wills, runs, strives, believes, hopes, prays, reads scriptures, observes duties, and regards ordinances.”—Penington, ii, 124.

“Wo unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye enter not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered.”—Luke, xi, 52.

“Above all other liberties, give me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely, according to my conscience.”—Milton.

“Eloquence is to be looked for only in free states. Longinus illustrates this observation with a great deal of beauty. ‘Liberty,’ he remarks, ‘is the nurse of true genius; it animates the spirit, and invigorates the hopes, of men; it excites honourable emulation, and a desire of excelling in every art.’”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 237.

“None of the faculties common to man and the lower animals, conceive the idea of civil liberty, any more than that of religion.”—Spurzheim, on Education, p. 259.

“Whoever is not able, or does not dare, to think, or does not feel contradictions and absurdities, is unfit for a refined religion and civil liberty.”—Ib., p. 258.

“The too great number of journals, and the extreme partiality of their authors, have much discredited them. A man must have great talents to please all sorts of readers; and it is impossible to please all authors, who, generally speaking, cannot bear with the most judicious and most decent criticisms.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 170.

“Son of man, I have broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and, lo, it shall not be bound up to be healed, to put a roller to bind it, to make it strong to hold the sword.”—Ezekiel, xxx, 21.

“Yet he was humble, kind, forgiving, meek,
Easy to be entreated, gracious, mild;
And, with all patience and affection, taught,
Rebuked, persuaded, solaced, counselled, warned.”—Pollok, B. ix.

LESSON II.—PARSING.

“What is coming, will come; what is proceeding onward, verges towards completion.”—Dr. Murray’s Europ. Lang., i, 324.

“Sir, if it had not been for the art of printing, we should now have had no learning at all; for books would have perished faster than they could have been transcribed.”—Dr. Johnson’s Life, iii, 400.

“Passionate reproofs are like medicines given scalding hot: the patient cannot take them. If we wish to do good to those whom we rebuke, we should labour for meekness of wisdom, and use soft words and hard arguments.”—Dodd.

“My prayer for you is, that God may guide you by his counsel, and in the end bring you to glory: to this purpose, attend diligently to the dictates of his good spirit, which you may hear within you; for Christ saith, ‘He that dwelleth with you, shall be in you.’ And, as you hear and obey him, he will conduct you through this troublous world, in ways of truth and righteousness, and land you at last in the habitations of everlasting rest and peace with the Lord, to praise him for ever and ever.”—T. Gwin.

“By matter, we mean, that which is tangible, extended, and divisible; by mind, that which perceives, reflects, wills, and reasons. These properties are wholly dissimilar and admit of no comparison. To pretend that mind is matter, is to propose a contradiction in terms; and is just as absurd, as to pretend that matter is mind.”—Gurney’s Portable Evidence, p. 78.

“If any one should think all this to be of little importance, I desire him to consider what he would think, if vice had, essentially, and in its nature, these advantageous tendencies, or if virtue had essentially the direct contrary ones.”—Butler, p. 99.

“No man can write simpler and stronger English than the celebrated Boz, and this renders us the more annoyed at those manifold vulgarities and slipshod errors, which unhappily have of late years disfigured his productions.”—LIVING AUTHORS OF ENGLAND: The Examiner, No. 119.

“Here Havard, all serene, in the same strains, Loves, hates, and rages, triumphs, and complains.”—Churchill, p. 3.

“Let Satire, then, her proper object know,
And ere she strike, be sure she strike a foe.”—John Brown.

LESSON III.—PARSING.

“The Author of nature has as truly directed that vicious actions, considered as mischievous to society, should be punished, and has as clearly put mankind under a necessity of thus punishing them, as he has directed and necessitated us to preserve our lives by food.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 88.

“An author may injure his works by altering, and even amending, the successive editions: the first impression sinks the deepest, and with the credulous it can rarely be effaced; nay, he will be vainly employed who endeavours to eradicate it.”—Werter, p. 82.

“It is well ordered, that even the most innocent blunder is not committed with impunity; because, were errors licensed where they do no hurt, inattention would grow into habit, and be the occasion of much hurt.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 285.

“The force of language consists in raising complete images; which have the effect to transport the reader, as by magic, into the very place of the important action, and to convert him as it were into a spectator, beholding every thing that passes.”—Id., ib., ii, 241.

“An orator should not put forth all his strength at the beginning, but should rise and grow upon us, as his discourse advances.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 309.

“When a talent is given to any one, an account is open with the giver of it, who appoints a day in which he will arrive and ‘redemand his own with usury.’”—West’s Letters to a Young Lady, p. 74.

“Go, and reclaim the sinner, instruct the ignorant, soften the obdurate, and (as occasion shall demand) cheer, depress, repel, allure, disturb, assuage, console, or terrify.”—Jerningham’s Essay on Eloquence, p. 97.

“If all the year were playing holydays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work:
But when they seldom come, they wish’d-for come,
And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.”—Shak., Hen. V.

“The man that once did sell the lion’s skin While the beast liv’d, was kill’d with hunting him.”
—Id., Joh. Dict., w. Beast.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

ERRORS OF VERBS.

LESSON I.—PRETERITS.

“In speaking on a matter which toucht their hearts.”—Philological Museum, Vol. i, p. 441.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the verb toucht is terminated in t. But, according to Observation 2nd, on the irregular verbs, touch is regular. Therefore, this t should be changed to ed; thus, “In speaking on a matter which touched their hearts.”]

“Though Horace publisht it some time after.”—Ib., i, 444. “The best subjects with which the Greek models furnisht him.”—Ib., i, 444. “Since he attacht no thought to it.”—Ib., i, 645. “By what slow steps the Greek alphabet reacht its perfection.”—Ib., i, 651. “Because Goethe wisht to erect an affectionate memorial.”—Ib., i, 469. “But the Saxon forms soon dropt away.”—Ib., i, 668. “It speaks of all the towns that perisht in the age of Philip.”—Ib., i, 252. “This enricht the written language with new words.”—Ib., i, 668. “He merely furnisht his friend with matter for laughter.”—Ib., i, 479. “A cloud arose and stopt the light.”—Swift's Poems, p. 313. “She slipt zpadillo in her breast.”—Ib., p. 371. “I guest the hand.”—Ib., p. 372. “The tyrant stript me to the skin: My skin he flay'd, my hair he cropt; At head and foot my body lopt.”—Ib., On a Pen, p. 338. “I see the greatest owls in you, That ever screecht or ever flew.”—Ib., p. 403. “I sate with delight, from morning till night.”—Ib., p. 367. “Dick nimbly skipt the gutter.”—Ib., p. 375. “In at the pantry door this morn I slipt.”—Ib., p. 369. “Nobody living ever toucht me but you.”—Walker's Particles, p. 92. “Present, I ship; Past, I shipped or shipt; Participle, shipped or shipt.”—Murray the schoolmaster. Gram., p. 31. “Then the king arose, and tare his garments.”—2 Sam., xiii, 31. “When he lift up his foot, he knew not where he should set it next.”—Bunyan. “He lift up his spear against eight hundred, whom he slew at one time.”—2 SAM.: in Joh. Dict. “Upon this chaos rid the distressed ark.”—BURNET: ib. “On whose foolish honesty, my practices rid easy.”—SHAK.: ib. “That form of the first or primogenial Earth, which rise immediately out of chaos.”—BURNET: ib. “Sir, how come it you have help to make this rescue?”—SHAK.: in Joh. Dict. “He sware he had rather lose all his father's images than that table.”—PEACHAM: ib. “When our language dropt its ancient terminations.”—Dr. Murray's Hist., ii, 5. “When themselves they vilify'd.”—Milton, P. L., xi, 515. “But I choosed rather to do thus.”—Barclay's Works, i, 456. “When he plead against the parsons.”—School History, p. 168. “And he that saw it, bear record.”—Cutler's Gram., p. 72. “An irregular verb has one more variation, as drive, drivest, drives, drivedst, drove, driving, driven.”—REV. MATT. HARRISON, on the English Language, p. 260. “Beside that village Hannibal pitcht his camp.”—Walker's Particles, p. 79. “He fetcht it even from Tmolus.”—Ib., p. 114. “He supt with his morning gown on.”—Ib., p. 285. “There stampt her sacred name.”—Barlow's Columbiad, B. i, l. 233.

“Fixt on the view the great discoverer stood,
And thus address the messenger of good.”—Barlow, B, i, l. 658.

LESSON II.—MIXED.

“Three freemen were being tried at the date of our last information.”—Newspaper.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the participle being is used after its own verb were. But, according to Observation 4th, on the compound form of the conjugation, this complex passive form is an absurd innovation. Therefore, the expression should be changed; thus, “Three freemen were on trial”—or, “were receiving their trial—at the date of our last information.”]

“While the house was being built, many of the tribe arrived.”—Ross Cox's Travels, p. 102. “But a foundation has been laid in Zion, and the church is being built upon it.”—The Friend, ix, 377. “And one fourth of the people are being educated.”—East India Magazine.

“The present, or that which is now being done.”—Beck’s Gram., p. 13. “A new church, called the Pantheon, is just being completed in an expensive style.”—G. A. Thompson’s Guatemala, p. 467. “When I last saw him, he was grown considerably.”—Murray’s Key, p. 223; Merchants, 198. “I know what a rugged and dangerous path I am got into.”—Duncan’s Cicero, p. 83. “You were as good preach case to one on the rack.”—Locke’s Essay, p. 285. “Thou hast heard me, and art become my salvation.”—Psal., cxviii, 21. “While the Elementary Spelling-Book was being prepared for the press.”—L. Cobb’s Review, p. vi. “Language is become, in modern times, more correct and accurate.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 16. “If the plan have been executed in any measure answerable to the author’s wishes.”—Robbins’s Hist., p. 3. “The vial of wrath is still being poured out on the seat of the beast.”—Christian Experience, p. 409. “Christianity was become the generally adopted and established religion of the whole Roman Empire.”—Gurney’s Essays, p. 35. “Who wrote before the first century was elapsed.”—Ib., p. 13. “The original and analogical form is grown quite obsolete.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 56. “Their love, and their hatred, and their envy, are perished.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 149. “The poems were got abroad and in a great many hands.”—Pref. to Waller. “It is more harmonious, as well as more correct, to say, ‘the bubble is almost bursted.’”—Cobbett’s E. Gram., ¶ 109. “I drave my suitor from his mad humour of love.”—Shak. “Se viriliter expedit. (Cicero.) He hath plaid the man.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 214. “Wilt thou kill me, as thou diddest the Egyptian yesterday.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Acts, vii, 28. “And we, methoughts, look’d up t’him from our hill.”—Cowley’s Davideis, B. iii, l. 386. “I fear thou doest not think as much of best things as thou oughtest.”—Memoir of M. C. Thomas, p. 34. “When this work was being commenced.”—Wright’s Gram., p. 10. “Exercises and Key to this work are being prepared.”—Ib., p. 12. “James is loved, or being loved by John.”—Ib., p. 64. “Or that which is being exhibited.”—Ib., p. 77. “He was being smitten.”—Ib., p. 78. “In the passive state we say, ‘I am being loved.’”—Ib., p. 80. “Subjunctive Mood: If I am being smitten, If thou art being smitten, If he is being smitten.”—Ib., p. 100. “I will not be able to convince you how superficial the reformation is.”—Chalmers’s Sermons, p. 88. “I said to myself, I will be obliged to expose the folly.”—Chazotte’s Essay, p. 3. “When Clodius, had he meant to return that day to Rome, must have been arrived.”—Adams’s Rhetoric, i, 418. “That the fact has been done, is being done, or shall or will be done.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., pp. 347 and 356. “Am I being instructed?”—Wright’s Gram., p. 70. “I am choosing him.”—Ib., p. 112. “John, who was respecting his father, was obedient to his commands.”—Barrett’s Revised Gram., p. 69. “The region echos to the clash of arms.”—Beattie’s Poems, p. 63.

“And sitt’st on high, and mak’st creation’s top
Thy footstool; and behold’st below thee, all.”—Pollok, B. vi, l. 663.

“And see if thou can’st punish sin, and let Mankind go free. Thou fail’st—be not surprised.”—Id., B. ii, l. 118.

LESSON III.—MIXED.

“What follows, had better been wanting altogether.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 201.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the phrase had better been, is used in the sense of the potential pluperfect. But, according to Observation 17th, on the conjugations, this substitution of one form for another is of questionable propriety. Therefore, the regular form should here be preferred; thus, “What follows, might better have been wanting altogether.”]

“This member of the sentence had much better have been omitted altogether.”—Ib., p. 212. “One or [the] other of them, therefore, had better have been omitted.”—Ib., p. 212. “The whole of this last member of the sentence had better have been dropped.”—Ib., p. 112. “In this case, they had much better be omitted.”—Ib., p. 173. “He had better have said, ‘the productions’”—Ib., p. 220. “The Greeks have ascribed the origin of poetry to Orpheus, Linus, and Musæus.”—Ib., p. 377. “It has been noticed long ago, that all these fictitious names have the same number of syllables.”—Phil. Museum, i, 471. “When I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, I have determined to send him.”—Acts, xxv, 25. “I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God.”—Ps., lxxxiv, 10. “As for such, I wish the Lord open their eyes.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 263. “It would a made our passidge over the river very difficult.”—Walley, in 1692. “We should not a been able to have carried our great guns.”—Id. “Others would a questioned our prudence, if wee had.”—Id. See Hutchinson’s Hist. of Mass., i, 478. “Beware thou bee’st not BECÆSAR’D; i.e. Beware that thou dost not dwindle into a mere Cæsar.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 183. “Thou raisedest thy voice to record the stratagems of needy heroes.”—ARBUTHNOT: in Joh. Dict., w. Scalade. “Life hurrys off apace: thine is almost up already.”—Collier’s Antoninus, p. 19. “‘How unfortunate has this accident made me!’ crys such a one.”—Ib., p. 60. “The muse that soft and sickly wooes the ear.”—Pollok, i, 13. “A man were better relate himself to a statue.”—Bacon. “I heard thee say but now, thou lik’dst not that.”—Shak. “In my whole course of wooing, thou cried’st, Indeed!”—Id. “But our ears are grown familiar with I have wrote, I have drank, &c., which are altogether as ungrammatical.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 63; Churchill’s, 114. “The court was sat before Sir Roger came.”—Addison, Spect., No. 122. “She need be no more with the jaundice possest.”—Swift’s Poems, p. 346. “Besides, you found fault with our victuals one day that you was here.”—Ib., p. 333. “If spirit of other sort, So minded, have o’erleap’d these earthy bounds.”—Milton, P. L., B. iv, l. 582. “It should have been more rational to have forborn this.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. iii, p. 265. “A student is not master of it till he have seen all these.”—Dr. Murray’s Life, p. 55. “The said justice shall summons the party.”—Brevard’s Digest. “Now what is become of thy former wit and humour?”—Spect., No. 532. “Young stranger, whither wand’rest thou?”—Burns, p. 29. “SUBJ.: Pres. If I love, If thou lovest, If he love. Imp. If I loved, If thou lovedst, If he loved.”—Merchant’s Gram., p. 51. “SUBJ.: If I do not love, If thou dost not love, If he does not love;” &c.—Ib., p. 56. “If he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.”—James, v, 15. “Subjunctive Mood of the verb to call, second person singular: If Thou callest. If Thou calledst. If Thou hast called. If Thou hadst called. If Thou call. If Thou shalt or wilt have called.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 41. “Subjunctive Mood of the verb to love, second person singular: If thou love. If thou do love. If thou lovedst. If thou didst love. If thou hast loved. If thou hadst loved. If thou shalt or wilt love. If thou shalt or wilt have loved.”—Bullions’s E. Gram., p. 46. “I was; thou wast, or you was; he, she, or it was: We, you or ye, they, were.”—White, on the English Verb, p. 51. “I taught, thou taughtest, he taught.”—Coar’s English Gram., p. 66. “We say, if it rains, suppose it rains, lest it should rain, unless it rains. This manner of speaking is called the SUBJUNCTIVE mode.”—Weld’s Gram., 2d Ed., p. 72; Abridged Ed., 59. “He is arrived at what is deemed the age of manhood.”—Priestley’s Gram., 163. “He had much better have let it alone.”—Tooke’s Diversions, i, 43. “He were better be without it.”—Locke, on Education, p. 105. “Hdest not thou been by.”—Beauties of Shak., p. 107. “I learned geography. Thou learnedest arithmetick. He learned grammar.”—Fuller’s Gram., p. 34. “Till the sound is ceased.”—Sheridan’s Elocution, p. 126. “Present, die; Preterit, died; Perf. Participle, dead.”—British Gram., p. 158; Buchanan’s, 58; Priestley’s, 48; Ash’s, 45; Fisher’s, 71; Bicknell’s, 73.

“Thou bowed’st thy glorious head to none, feared’st none.”—Pollok, B. viii, l. 603.

“Thou look’st upon thy boy as though thou guessedst it.”—N. A. Reader, p. 320.

“As once thou slept’st, while she to life was form’d”—Milt., P. L., B. xi, l. 369.

“Who finds the partridge in the puttock’s nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead?”—SHAK.: Joh. Dict.

“Which might have well becom’d the best of men.”—Id., Ant. and Cleop.

CHAPTER VII.—PARTICIPLES.

A Participle is a word derived from a verb, participating the properties of a verb, and of an adjective or a noun; and is generally formed by adding ing, d, or ed, to the verb: thus, from the verb rule, are formed three participles, two simple and one compound; as, 1. ruling, 2. ruled, 3. having ruled.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Almost all verbs and participles seem to have their very essence in motion, or the privation of motion—in acting, or ceasing to act. And to all motion and rest, time and place are necessary concomitants; nor are the ideas of degree and manner often irrelevant. Hence the use of tenses and of adverbs. For whatsoever comes to pass, must come to pass sometime and somewhere; and, in every event, something must be affected somewhat and somehow. Hence it is evident that those grammarians are right, who say, that “all participles imply time.” But it does not follow, that the English participles divide time, like the tenses of a verb, and specify the period of action; on the contrary, it is certain and manifest, that they do not. The phrase, “men labouring,” conveys no other idea than that of labourers at work; it no more suggests the time, than the place, degree, or manner, of their work. All these circumstances require other words to express them; as, “Men now here awkwardly labouring much to little purpose.” Again: “Thenceforward will men, there labouring hard and honourably, be looked down upon by dronish lordlings.”

OBS. 2.—Participles retain the essential meaning of their verbs; and, like verbs, are either active-transitive, active-intransitive, passive, or neuter, in their signification. For this reason, many have classed them with the verbs. But their formal meaning is obviously different. They convey no affirmation, but usually relate to nouns or pronouns, like adjectives, except when they are joined with auxiliaries to form the compound tenses of their verbs; or when they have in part the nature of substantives, like the Latin gerunds. Hence some have injudiciously ranked them with the adjectives. The most discreet writers have commonly assigned them a separate place among the parts of speech; because, in spite of all opposite usages, experience has shown that it is expedient to do so.

OBS. 3.—According to the doctrine of Harris, all words denoting the attributes of things, are either verbs, or participles, or adjectives. Some attributes have their essence in motion: as, to walk, to run, to fly, to strike, to live; or, walking, running, flying, striking, living. Others have it in the privation of motion: as, to stop, to rest, to cease, to die; or, stopping, resting, ceasing, dying. And there are others which have nothing to do with either motion or its privation; but have their essence in the quantity, quality, or situation of things; as, great and small, white and black, wise and foolish, eastern and western. These last terms are adjectives; and those which denote motion or its privation, are either verbs or participles, according to their formal meaning; that is, according to their manner of attribution. See Hermes, p. 95. Verbs commonly say or affirm something of their subjects; as, “The babe wept.” Participles suggest the action or attribute without affirmation; as, “A babe weeping,”—“An act regretted.”

OBS. 4.—A verb, then, being expressive of some attribute, which it ascribes to the thing or person named as its subject; of time, which it divides and specifies by the tenses; and also, (with the exception of the infinitive,) of an assertion or affirmation; if we take away the affirmation and the distinction of tenses, there will remain the attribute and the general notion of time; and these form the essence of an English participle. So that a participle is something less than a verb, though derived immediately from it; and something more than an adjective, or mere attribute, though its manner of attribution is commonly the same. Hence, though the participle by rejecting the idea of time may pass almost insensibly into an adjective, and become truly a participial adjective; yet the participle and the adjective are by no means one and the same part of speech, as some will have them to be. There is always an essential difference in their meaning. For instance: there is a difference between a thinking man and a man thinking; between a bragging fellow and a fellow bragging; between a fast-sailing ship and a ship sailing fast. A thinking man, a bragging fellow, or a fast-sailing ship, is contemplated as being habitually or permanently such; a man thinking, a fellow bragging, or a ship sailing fast, is contemplated as performing a particular act; and this must embrace a period of time, whether that time be specified or not. John Locke was a thinking man; but we should directly contradict his own doctrine, to suppose him always thinking.

OBS. 5.—The English participles are all derived from the roots of their respective verbs, and do not, like those of some other languages, take their names from the tenses. On the contrary, they are reckoned among the principal parts in the conjugation of their verbs, and many of the tenses are formed from them. In the compound forms of conjugation, they are found alike in all the tenses. They do not therefore, of themselves, express any particular time; but they denote the state of the being, action, or passion, in regard to its progress or completion. This I conceive to be their principal distinction. Respecting the participles in Latin, it has been matter of dispute, whether those which are called the present and the perfect, are really so in respect to time or not. Sanctius denies it. In Greek, the distinction of tenses in the participles is more apparent, yet even here the time to which they refer, does not always correspond to their names. See remarks on the Participles in the Port Royal Latin and Greek Grammars.

OBS. 6.—Horne Tooke supposes our participles in ed to express time past, and those in ing to have no signification of time. He says, “I did not mean to deny the adsignification of time to all the participles; though I continue to withhold it from that which is called the participle present.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii, p. 415. Upon the same point, he afterwards adds, “I am neither new nor singular; for Sanctius both asserted and proved it by numerous instances in the Latin. Such as, ‘Et abfui proficiscens in Græciam.’ Cicero. ‘Sed postquam amans accessit pretium pollicens.’ Terent. ‘Ultro ad cam venies indicans te amare.’ Terent. ‘Turnum fugientem hæc terra videbit.’ Virg.”—Tooke’s Div., ii, 420. Again: “And thus I have given you my opinion concerning what is called the present participle. Which I think improperly so called; because I take it to be merely the simple verb adjectived, without any adsignification of manner or time.”—Tooke’s Div., Vol. ii, p. 423.

OBS. 7.—I do not agree with this author, either in limiting participles in ed to time past, or in denying all signification of time to those in ing; but I admit that what is commonly called the present participle, is not very properly so denominated, either in English or in Latin, or perhaps in any language. With us, however, this participle is certainly, in very many instances, something else than “merely the simple verb adjectived.” For, in the first place, it is often of a complex character, as being loved, being seen, in which two verbs are “adjectived” together, and that by different terminations. Yet do these words as perfectly coalesce in respect to time, as to everything else; and being loved or being seen is confessedly as much a “present” participle, as being, or loving, or seeing—neither form being solely confined to what now is. Again, our participle in ing stands not only for the present participle of the Latin or Greek grammarians, but also for the Latin gerund, and often for the Greek infinitive used substantively; so that by this ending, the English verb is not only adjectived, but also substantived, if one may so speak. For the participle when governed by a preposition, partakes not of the qualities “of a verb and an adjective,” but rather of those of a verb and a noun.

CLASSES.

English verbs, not defective, have severally three participles;* which have been very variously denominated, perhaps the most accurately thus: the Imperfect, the Perfect, and the Preperfect. Or, as their order is undisputed, they may be conveniently called the First, the Second, and the Third.

I. The Imperfect participle is that which ends commonly in ing, and implies a continuance of the being, action, or passion: as, being, acting, ruling, loving, defending, terminating.

II. The Perfect participle is that which ends commonly in ed or en, and implies a completion of the being, action, or passion: as, been, acted, ruled, loved, defended, terminated.

III. The Preperfect participle is that which takes the sign having, and implies a previous completion of the being, action, or passion: as, having loved, having seen, having written; having been loved, having been writing, having been written.

The First or Imperfect Participle, when simple, is always formed by adding ing to the radical verb; as, look, looking: when compound, it is formed by prefixing being to some other simple participle; as, being reading, being read, being completed.

The Second or Perfect Participle is always simple, and is regularly formed by adding d or ed to the radical verb: those verbs from which it is formed otherwise, are either irregular or redundant.

---

* That is, passive verbs, as well as others, have three participles for each; so that, from one active-transitive root, there come six participles—three active, and three passive. Those numerous grammarians who, like Lindley Murray, make passive verbs a distinct class, for the most part, very properly state the participles of a verb to be “three,” but, to represent the two voices as modifications of one species of verbs, and then say, “The Participles are three,” as many recent writers do, is manifestly absurd: because two threes should be six. Thus, for example, Dr. Bullions: “In English [,] the transitive verb has always two voices, the Active and [the] Passive.”—Prin. of E. Gram., p. 33. “The Participles are three, [:] the Present, the Perfect, and the Compound Perfect.”—Ib., p. 57. Again: “Transitive verbs have two voices, called the Active and the Passive.”—Bullions’s Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 66. “Verbs have three participles—the present, the past, and the perfect; as, loving, loved, having loved, in the active voice: AND being loved, loved, having been loved, in the passive.”—Ib., p. 76. Now either not all these are the participles of one verb, or that verb has more than three. Take your choice. Redundant verbs usually have duplicate forms of all the participles except the Imperfect Active; as, lighting, lighted or lit, having lighted or having lit; so again, being lighted or being lit, lighted or lit, having been lighted or having been lit.

The Third or Preperfect Participle is always compound, and is formed by prefixing having to the perfect, when the compound is double, and having been to the perfect or the imperfect, when the compound is triple: as, having spoken, having been spoken, having been speaking.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Some have supposed that both the simple participles denote present time; some have supposed that the one denotes present, and the other, past time; some have supposed that the first denotes no time, and the second time past; some have supposed that neither has any regard to time; and some have supposed that both are of all times. In regard to the distinction of voice, or the manner of their signification, some have supposed the one to be active, and the other to be passive; some have supposed the participle in ing to be active or neuter, and the other active or passive; and some have supposed that either of them may be active, passive, or neuter. Nor is there any more unanimity among grammarians, in respect to the compounds. Hence several different names have been loosely given to each of the participles: and sometimes with manifest impropriety; as when Buchanan, in his conjugations, calls being, “Active,”—and been, having been, having had, “Passive.” Learned men may differ in opinion respecting the nature of words, but grammar can never well deserve the name of science, till at least an ordinary share of reason and knowledge appears in the language of those who teach it.

OBS. 2.—The FIRST participle has been called the Present, the Progressive, the Imperfect, the Simple Imperfect, the Indefinite, the Active, the Present Active, the Present Passive, the Present Neuter, and, in the passive voice, the Preterimperfect, the Compound Imperfect, the Compound Passive, the Passive. The SECOND, which, though it is always but one word, some authors treat as being two participles, or three, has been called the Perfect, the Preter, the Preterperfect, the Imperfect, the Simple Perfect, the Past, the Simple Past, the First Past, the Preterit, the Passive, the Present Passive, the Perfect Active, the Past Active, the Auxiliary Perfect, the Perfect Passive, the Perfect Neuter, the Simple Perfect Active, the Simple Perfect Passive. The THIRD has been called the Compound, the Compound Active, the Compound Passive, the Compound Perfect, the Compound Perfect Active, the Compound Perfect Passive, the Compound Preter, the Present, the Present Perfect, the Past, the Second Past, the Past Compound, the Compound Past, the Prior-perfect, the Prior-present, the Perfect, the Pluperfect, the Preterperfect, the Preperfect.* In teaching others to speak and write well, it becomes us to

---

* The diversity in the application of these names, and in the number or nature of the participles recognized in different grammars, is quite as remarkable as that of the names themselves. To prepare a general synopsis of this discordant teaching, no man will probably think it worth his while. The following are a few examples of it:

1. “How many Participles, are there; There are two, the Active Participle which ends in (ing), as burning, and the Passive Participle which ends in (ed) as, burned.”—The British Grammar, p. 140. In this book, the participles of Be are named thus: “ACTIVE. Being. PASSIVE. Been, having been.”—Ib., p. 138.

2. “How many Sorts of Participles are there? A. Two; the Active Participle, that ends always in ing; as, loving, and the Passive Participle, that ends always in ed, t, or n; as, loved, taught, slain.”—Fisher’s Practical New Gram., p. 75.

3. “ACTIVE VOICE. Participles. Present, calling. Past, having called. Future, being about to call. PASSIVE VOICE. Present, being called. Past, having been called. Future, being about to be called.”—Ward’s Practical Gram., pp. 55 and 59.

4. ACT. “Present, loving; Perfect, loved; Past, having loved.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 39. The participles passive are not given by Lowth; but, by inference from his rule for forming “the passive verb,” they must be these: “Present, being loved; Perfect, loved, or been loved; Past, having been loved.” See Lowth’s Gram., p. 44.

express our doctrines in the most suitable terms; but the application of a name is of no great consequence, so that the thing itself be rightly understood by the learner. Grammar should be taught in a style at once neat and plain, clear and brief. Upon the choice of his terms, the writer of this work has bestowed much reflection; yet he finds it impossible either to please everybody, or to explain, without intolerable prolixity, all the reasons for preference.

OBS. 3.—The participle in ing represents the action or state as continuing and ever incomplete; it is therefore rightly termed the IMPERFECT participle: whereas the participle in ed always, or at least usually, has reference to the action as done and complete; and is, by

5. "ACT. V. Present, Loving. Past, Loved. Perfect, Having loved. PAS. V. Pres. Being loved. Past, Loved. Perf. Having been loved."—Lennie's Gram., pp. 25 and 33; Greene's Analysis, p. 225; Bullions's Analyt. and Pract. Gram., pp. 87 and 95. This is Bullions's revised scheme, and much worse than his former one copied from Murray.

6. ACT. "Present. Loving. Perfect. Loved. Compound Perfect, Having loved." PAS. "Present. Being loved. Perfect or Passive. Loved. Compound Perfect. Having been loved."—L. Murray's late editions, pp. 98 and 99; Hart's Gram., pp. 85 and 88; Bullions's Principles of E. Gram., pp. 47 and 55. No form or name of the first participle passive was adopted by Murray in his early editions.

7. ACT. "Present. Pursuing. Perfect. Pursued. Compound perfect. Having pursued." PAS. "Present and Perfect. Pursued, or being pursued. Compound Perfect. Having been pursued."—Rev. W. Allen's Gram., pp. 88 and 93. Here the first two passive forms, and their names too, are thrown together; the former as equivalents, the latter as coalescents.

8. "TRANSITIVE. Pres. Loving, Perf. Having loved. PASSIVE. Pres. Loved or Being loved, Perf. Having been loved."—Parkhurst's Gram. for Beginners, p. 110. Here the second active form is wanting; and the second passive is confounded with the first.

9. ACT. "Imperfect, Loving [;] Perfect, Having loved [;]" PAS. "Imperfect, Being loved [;] Perfect, Loved, Having been loved."—Wells's School Gram., pp. 99 and 101. Here, too, the second active is not given; the third is called by the name of the second; and the second passive is confounded with the third, as if they were but forms of the same thing.

10. ACT. "Imperfect, (Present,) Loving. Perfect. Having loved. Auxiliary Perfect, Loved." PAS. "Imperfect, (Present,) Being loved. Perfect, Having been loved. Passive, Loved."—N. Butler's Pract. Gram., pp. 84 and 91. Here the common order of most of the participles is very improperly disturbed, and as many are misnamed.

11. ACT. "Present, Loving [;] Perfect, Loved [;] Comp. Perf. Having loved [;]" PAS. "Present, Being loved [;] Perfect, Loved, or been loved [;] Compound Perfect, Having been loved."—Frazee's Improved Gram., 63 and 73. Here the second participle passive has two forms, one of which, "been loved," is not commonly recognized, except as part of some passive verb or preperfect participle.

12. ACT. V. "Imperfect, Seeing. Perfect, Seen. Compound, Having seen." PAS. V. "Preterimperfect, Being seen. Preterperfect, Having been seen."—Churchill's New Gram., p. 102. Here the chief and radical passive participle is lacking, and neither of the compounds is well named.

13. ACT. "Present, Loving, [;] Past, Loved, [;] Com. Past, Having loved." PAS. "Present, Being loved. [;] Past, Loved. [;] Com. Past. [;] Having been loved."—Felton's Analyt. and Pract. Gram., of 1843, pp. 37 and 50.

14. ACT. "Present. [;] Loving. [;] Perfect. [;] Loved. [;] Compound Perfect. [;] Having loved." PAS. "Perfect or Passive. Loved. Compound Perfect. Having been loved."—Bicknell's Gram. Lond., 1790, Part I, pp. 66 and 70; L. Murray's 2d Edition, York, 1796, pp. 72 and 77. Here "Being loved," is not noticed.

15. "Participles. Active Voice. Present. Loving. Past. Loved, or having loved. Participles. Passive Voice. Present. Being loved. Past. Having been loved."—John Burn's Practical Gram., p. 70. Here the chief Passive term, "Loved," is omitted, and two of the active forms are confounded.

16. "Present, loving, Past, loved, Compound, having loved."—S. W. Clark's Practical Gram., of 1848, p. 71. "ACT. VOICE.—Present ... Loving [;] Compound [;] Having loved..... Having been loving."—Ib., p. 81. "PAS. VOICE.—Present..... Loved, or, being loved [;] Compound..... Having been loved."—Ib., p. 83. "The Compound Participle consists of the Participle of a principal verb, added to the word having, or being, or to the two words having been. Examples—Having loved—being loved—having been loved."—Ib., p. 71. Here the second extract is deficient, as may be seen by comparing it with the first; and the fourth is grossly erroneous, as is shown by the third. The participles, too, are misnamed throughout.

The reader may observe that the punctuation of the foregoing examples is very discrepant. I have, in brackets, suggested some corrections, but have not attempted a general adjustment of it.

proper contradistinction, called the PERFECT participle. It is hardly necessary to add, that the terms perfect and imperfect, as thus applied to the English participles, have no reference to time, or to those tenses of the verb which are usually (but not very accurately) named by these epithets. The terms present and past, which some still prefer to imperfect and perfect, do denote time, and are in a kind of oblique contradistinction; but how well they apply to the participles, may be seen by the following texts: “God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself.”—“We pray you in Christ’s stead, be ye reconciled to God.”—ST. PAUL: 2 Cor., v, 19, 20. Here reconciling refers to the death of Christ, and reconciled, to the desired conversion of the Corinthians; and if we call the former a present participle, and the latter a past, (as do Bullions, Burn, Clark, Felton, S. S. Greene, Lennie, Pinneo, and perhaps others,) we nominally reverse the order of time in respect to the events, and egregiously misapply both terms.

OBS. 4.—Though the participle in ing has, by many, been called the Present participle, it is as applicable to past or future, as to present time; otherwise, such expressions as, “I had been writing,”—“I shall be writing,” would be solecisms. It has also been called, almost as frequently, the Active participle. But it is not always active, even when derived from an active verb; for such expressions as, “The goods are selling,”—“The ships are now building,” are in use, and not without good authority: as, “And hope to allay, by rational discourse, the pains of his joints tearing asunder.”—Locke’s Essay, p. 285. “Insensible of the designs now forming by Philip.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, ii, 48. “The improved edition now publishing.”—BP. HALIFAX: Pref. to Butler. “The present tense expresses an action now doing.”—Emmons’s Gram., p. 40. The distinguishing characteristic of this participle is, that it denotes an unfinished and progressive state of the being, action, or passion; it is therefore properly denominated the IMPERFECT participle. If the term were applied with reference to time, it would be no more objectionable than the word present, and would be equally supported by the usage of the Greek linguists. I am no more inclined to “innovation,” than are the pedants who, for the choice here made, have ignorantly brought the false charge against me. This name, authorized by Beattie and Pickbourn, is approved by Lindley Murray,* and adopted by several of the more recent grammarians. See the works of Dr. Crombie, J. Grant, T. O. Churchill, R. Hiley, B. H. Smart, M. Harrison, and W. G. Lewis, published in London; and J. M. M’Culloch’s Grammar, published in Edinburgh; also some American grammars, as E. Hazen’s, N. Butler’s, D. B. Tower’s, W. H. Wells’s, the Sanderses’.

OBS. 5.—The participle in ed, as is mentioned above, usually denotes a completion of the being, action, or passion, and should therefore be denominated the PERFECT participle. But this completion may be spoken of as present, past, or future; for the participle itself has no tenses, and makes no distinction of time, nor should the name be supposed to

---

* “The most unexceptionable distinction which grammarians make between the participles, is, that the one points to the continuation of the action, passion, or state denoted by the verb; and the other, to the completion of it. Thus, the present participle signifies imperfect action, or action begun and not ended: as, ‘I am writing a letter.’ The past participle signifies action perfected, or finished: as, ‘I have written a letter.’—‘The letter is written.’”—Murray’s Grammar, 8vo, p. 65. “The first [participle] expresses a continuation; the other, a completion.”—W. Allen’s Grammar, 12mo, London, 1813. “The idea which this participle [e.g. ‘tearing’] really expresses, is simply that of the continuance of an action in an incomplete or unfinished state. The action may belong to time present, to time past, or to time future. The participle which denotes the completion of an action, as torn, is called the perfect participle; because it represents the action as perfect or finished.”—Barnard’s Analytic Gram., p. 51. Emmons stealthily copies from my Institutes as many as ten lines in defence of the term ‘Imperfect’ and yet, in his conjugations, he calls the participle in ing, “Present.” This seems inconsistent. See his “Grammatical Instructor,” p. 61.

refer to the perfect tense. The conjugation of any passive verb, is a sufficient proof of all this: nor is the proof invalidated by resolving verbs of this kind into their component parts. Of the participles in ed applied to present time, the following is an example: “Such a course would be less likely to produce injury to health, than the present course pursued at our colleges.”—Literary Convention, p. 118. Tooke’s notion of grammatical time, appears to have been in several respects a strange one: he accords with those who call this a past participle, and denies to the other not only the name and notion of a tense, but even the general idea of time. In speaking of the old participial termination and or ende,* which our Anglo-Saxon ancestors used where we write ing, he says, “I do not allow that there are any present participles, or any present tense of the verb.” †—Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii, p. 41.

OBS. 6.—The Perfect participle of transitive verbs, being used in the formation of passive verbs, is sometimes called the Passive participle. It usually has in itself a passive signification, except when it is used in forming the compound tenses of the active verb. Hence the difference between the sentences, “I have written a letter,” and, “I have a letter written;” the former being equivalent to Scripti literas, and the latter to Sunt mihi literæ scriptæ. But there are many perfect participles which cannot with any propriety be called passive. Such are all those which come from intransitive or neuter verbs; and also those which so often occur in the tenses of verbs not passive. I have already noticed some instances of this misnomer; and it is better to preclude it altogether, by adhering to the true name of this Participle, THE PERFECT. Nor is that entirely true which some assert, “that this participle in the active is only found in combination;” that, “Whenever it stands alone to be parsed as a participle, it is passive.”—Hart’s English Gram., p. 75. See also Bullions’s Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 77; and Greene’s Analysis, or Gram., p. 225. “Rebelled,” in the following examples, cannot with any propriety be called a passive participle:

“Rebelled, did I not send them terms of peace,
Which not my justice, but my mercy asked?”—Pollok, x, 253.

“Arm’d with thy might, rid Heav’n of these rebell’d,
To their prepar’d ill mansion driven down.”—Milton, vi, 737.

OBS. 7.—The third participle has most generally been called the Compound, or the Compound perfect. The latter of these terms seems to be rather objectionable on account of its length; and against the former it may be urged that, in the compound forms of conjugation, the first or imperfect participle is a compound: as, being writing, being seen. Dr. Adam calls having loved the perfect participle active, which he says must be rendered in Latin by the pluperfect of the subjunctive; as, he having loved, quum amavisset; (Lat. and Eng. Gram., p. 140;) but it is manifest that the perfect participle of the verb to love,

* “The ancient termination (from the Anglo-Saxon) was and; as, ‘His schynand sword.’ Douglas. And sometimes ende; as, ‘She, between the deth and life, Swounende lay full ofte.’ Gower.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 88. “The present Participle, in Saxon, was formed by ande, ende, or onde; and, by cutting off the final e, it acquired a Substantive signification, and extended the idea to the agent: as, alysende, freeing, and alysend, a redeemer; freonde, loving or friendly, and freond, a lover or a friend.”—Booth’s Introd. to Dict., p. 75.

† William B. Fowle, a modern disciple of Tooke, treats the subject of grammatical time rather more strangely than his master. Thus: “How many times or tenses have verbs? Two, [the] present and [the] past,” To this he immediately adds in a note: “We do not believe in a past any more than a future tense of verbs.”—The True English Gram., p. 30. So, between these two authors, our verbs will retain no tenses at all. Indeed, by his two tenses, Fowle only meant to recognize the two simple forms of an English verb. For he says, in another place, “We repeat our conviction that no verb in itself expresses time of any sort.”—Ib., p. 69.

whether active or passive, is the simple word loved, and not this compound. Dr. Adam, in fact, if he denies this, only contradicts himself; for, in his paradigms of the English Active Voice, he gives the participles as two only, and both simple, thus: “Present, Loving; Perfect, Loved:”—“Present, Having; Perfect, Had.” So of the Neuter Verb: “Present, Being; Perfect, Been.”—Ib., pp. 81 and 82. His scheme of either names or forms is no model of accuracy. On the very next page, unless there is a misprint in several editions, he calls the Second participle the “imperfect,” saying, “The whole of the passive voice in English is formed by the auxiliary verb to be, and the participle imperfect; as, I am loved, I was loved, &c.” Further: “In many verbs,” he adds, “the present participle also is used in a passive sense; as, These things are doing, were doing, &c.; The house is building, was building, &c.”—Ib., p. 83. N. Butler, in his Practical Grammar, of 1845, names, and counts, and orders, the participles very oddly: “Every verb,” he says, “has two participles—the imperfect and the perfect.”—P. 78. Yet, for the verb love, he finds these six: two “IMPERFECT, Loving and Being loved,” two “PERFECT, Having loved, and Having been loved,” one “AUXILIARY PERFECT, Loved,” of the “Active Voice,” and one “PASSIVE, Loved,” of the “Passive Voice.” Many old writers erroneously represent the participle in ing as always active, and the participle in ed or en as always passive; and some, among whom is Buchanan, making no distinction between the simple perfect loved and the compound having loved, place the latter with the former, and call it passive also. The absurdity of this is manifest: for having loved or having seen is active; having been or having sat is neuter; and having been loved or having been seen is passive. Again, the triple compound, having been writing, is active; and having been sitting is neuter; but if one speak of goods as having been selling low, a similar compound is passive.

OBS. 8.—Now all the compound participles which begin with having are essentially alike; and, as a class of terms, they ought to have a name adapted to their nature, and expressive of their leading characteristic. Having loved differs from the simple participle loved, in signification as well as in form; and, if this participle is to be named with reference to its meaning, there is no more suitable term for it than the epithet PREPERFECT,—a word which explains itself, like prepaid or prerequisite. Of the many other names, the most correct one is PLUPERFECT,—which is a term of very nearly the same meaning. Not because this compound is really of the pluperfect tense, but because it always denotes being, action, or passion, that is, or was, or will be, completed before the doing or being of something else; and, of course, when the latter thing is represented as past, the participle must correspond to the pluperfect tense of its verb; as, “Having explained her views, it was necessary she should expatiate on the vanity and futility of the enjoyments promised by Pleasure.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 181. Here having explained is exactly equivalent to when she had explained. Again: “I may say, He had commanded, and we obeyed; or, He having commanded, we obeyed.”—Fetch’s Comprehensive Gram., p. ix. Here the two phrases in Italics correspond in import, though not in construction.

OBS. 9.—Pluperfect is a derivative contracted from the Latin plusquam-perfectum, and literally signifies more than complete, or beyond the perfect; i. e., (as confirmed by use,) antecedently finished, or completed before. It is the usual name of our fourth tense; is likewise applicable to a corresponding tense in other tongues; and is a word familiar to every scholar. Yet several grammarians,—too ready, perhaps, for innovation,—have shown their willingness to discard it altogether. Bullions, Butler, Hiley, Perley, Wells, and some others, call the English pluperfect tense, the past-perfect, and understand either epithet to mean—“completed at or before a certain past time;” (Bullions’s E. Gram., p. 39;) that is—“finished or past, at some past time.”—Butler’s Pract. Gram., p. 72. The relation of the tense is before the past, but the epithet pluperfect is not necessarily limited to this relation, any more than what is perfect is necessarily past. Butler has urged, that, “Pluperfect does not mean completed before,” but is only “a technical name of a particular tense;” and, arguing from this erroneous assumption, has convinced himself, “It would be as correct to call this the second future participle, as the pluperfect.”—Ib., p. 79. The technical name, as limited to the past, is preterpluperfect, from the older term præteritum plusquam perfectum; so preterperfect, from præteritum perfectum, i. e. past perfect, is the name of an other tense, now called the perfect: wherefore the substitution of past-perfect for pluperfect is the less to be commended. There may be a convenience in having the name of the tense to differ from that of the participle, and this alone induces me to prefer preperfect to pluperfect for the name of the latter.

OBS. 10.—From the participle in ed or en, we form three tenses, which the above-named authors call perfect;—“the present-perfect, the past-perfect, and the future-perfect,”—as, have seen, had seen, will have seen. Now it is, doubtless, the participle, that gives to these their perfectness; while diversity in the auxiliaries makes their difference of time. Yet it is assumed by Butler, that, in general, the simple participle in ed or en, “does not denote an action done and completed,” and is not to be called perfect; (p. 80;)—that, “If we wish to express by a participle, an action completed at any time, we use the compound form, and this is THE perfect participle,” (p. 79;)—that, “The characteristic of the participle in ed is, that it implies the reception of an action;” (p. 79;)—that, hence, it should be called the passive, though it “is usually called the perfect participle;” (p. 79;)—that, “The use of this participle in the perfect tenses of the active voice should not be taken into consideration in giving it a name or a definition;” (p. 80;)—that its active, neuter, or intransitive use is not a primitive idiom of the language, but the result of a gradual change of the term from the passive to the active voice; (p. 80;)—that, “the participle has changed its mode of signification, so that, instead of being passive, it is now active in sense;” (p. 105;)—that, “having changed its original meaning so entirely, it should not be considered the same participle;” (p. 78;)—that, “in such cases, it is a perfect participle,” and, “for the sake of distinction [,] this may be called the auxiliary perfect participle.”—Ib. These speculations I briefly throw before the reader, without designing much comment upon them. It will be perceived that they are, in several respects, contradictory one to another. The author himself names the participle in reference to a usage which he says, “should not be taken into consideration;” and names it absurdly too; for he calls that “the auxiliary,” which is manifestly the principal term. He also identifies as one what he professes to distinguish as two.

OBS. 11.—Participles often become adjectives, and are construed before nouns to denote quality. The terms so converted form the class of participial adjectives. Words of a participial form may be regarded as adjectives, under the following circumstances: 1. When they reject the idea of time, and denote something customary or habitual, rather than a transient act or state; as, “A lying rogue,”—i. e., one that is addicted to lying. 2. When they admit adverbs of comparison; as, “A more learned man.” 3. When they are compounded with something that does not belong to the verb; as, “unfeeling, unfelt.” there is no verb to unfeel, therefore these words cannot be participles. Adjectives are generally placed before their nouns; participles, after them. The words beginning with un, in the following lines may be classed with participial adjectives:

“No king, no subject was; unscutcheoned all;
Uncrowned, unplumed, unhelmed, unpedigreed;
Unlaced, uncoroneted, unbestarred.”—Pollok, C. of T., B. viii, l. 89.

OBS. 12.—Participles in ing often become nouns. When preceded by an article, an adjective or a noun or pronoun of the possessive case, they are construed as nouns; and, if wholly such, have neither adverbs nor active regimen: as, “He laugheth at the shaking of a spear.”—Job, xli, 29. “There is no searching of his understanding.”—Isaiah, xl, 28. “In their setting of their threshold by ray threshold.”—Ezekiel, xliii, 8. “That any man should make my glorying void.”—1 Cor., ix, 15. The terms so converted form the class of verbal or participial nouns. But some late authors—(J. S. Hart, S. S. Greene, W. H. Wells, and others—) have given the name of participial nouns to many participles,—such participles, often, as retain all their verbal properties and adjuncts, and merely partake of some syntactical resemblance to nouns. Now, since the chief characteristics of such words are from the verb, and are incompatible with the specific nature of a noun, it is clearly improper to call them nouns. There are, in the popular use of participles, certain mixed constructions which are reprehensible; yet it is the peculiar nature of a participle, to participate the properties of other parts of speech,—of the verb and adjective,—of the verb and noun,—or sometimes, perhaps, of all three. A participle immediately preceded by a preposition, is not converted into a noun, but remains a participle, and therefore retains its adverb, and also its government of the objective case; as, “I thank you for helping him so seasonably.” Participles in this construction correspond with the Latin gerund, and are sometimes called gerundives.

OBS. 13.—To distinguish the participle from the participial noun, the learner should observe the following four things: 1. Nouns take articles and adjectives before them; participles, as such, do not. 2. Nouns may govern the possessive case before them, but not the objective after them; participles may govern the objective case, but not so properly the possessive. 3. Nouns, if they have adverbs, require the hyphen; participles take adverbs separately, as do their verbs. 4. Participial nouns express actions as things, and are sometimes declined like other nouns; participles usually refer actions to their agents or recipients, and have in English no grammatical modifications of any kind.

OBS. 14.—To distinguish the perfect participle from the preterit of the same form, observe the sense, and see which of the auxiliary forms will express it: thus, loved for being loved, is a participle; but loved for did love, is a preterit verb. So held for did hold, stung for did sting, taught for did teach, and the like, are irregular verbs; but held for being held, stung for being stung, taught for being taught, and the like, are perfect participles.

OBS. 15.—Though the English participles have no inflections, and are consequently incapable of any grammatical agreement or disagreement, those which are simple, are sometimes elegantly taken in a plural sense, with the apparent construction of nouns; but, under these circumstances, they are in reality neither nouns nor participles, but participial adjectives construed elliptically, as other adjectives often are, and relating to plural nouns understood. The ellipsis is sometimes of a singular noun, though very rarely, and much less properly. Examples: “To them who are the called according to his purpose.”—Rom., x, 28. That is—“the called ones or persons.” “God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.”—Matt., xxii, 32. “Neither is it found in the land of the living.”—Job, xxviii, 13. “The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day.”—Isaiah, xxxviii, 19. “Till we are made fit to live and reign with him and all his redeemed, in the heavenly glory forever.”—Jenks’s Prayers, p. 18.

“Ye blessed of my Father, come, ye just,
Enter the joy eternal of your Lord.”—Pollok, B. x, l. 591.

“Depart from me, ye cursed, into the fire Prepared eternal in the gulf of Hell.”—Id., B. x, l. 449.

EXAMPLES FOR PARSING.

PRAXIS VII.—ETYMOLOGICAL.

In the Seventh Praxis it is required of the pupil—to distinguish and define the different parts of speech, and the classes and modifications of the ARTICLES, NOUNS, ADJECTIVES, PRONOUNS, VERBS, and PARTICIPLES.

The definitions to be given in the Seventh Praxis, are two for an article, six for a noun, three for an adjective, six for a pronoun, seven for a verb finite, five for an infinitive, two for a participle,—and one for an adverb, a conjunction, a preposition, or an interjection. Thus:—

EXAMPLE PARSED.

“Religion, rightly understood and practised, has the purest of all joys attending it.”

Religion is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The nominative case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the subject of a finite verb.

Rightly is an adverb. 1. An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner.

Understood is a perfect participle, from the irregular active-transitive verb, understand, understood, understanding, understood. 1. A participle is a word derived from a verb, participating the properties of a verb, and of an adjective or a noun; and is generally formed by adding ing, d, or ed, to the verb. 2. The perfect participle is that which ends commonly in ed or en, and implies a completion of the being, action, or passion.

And is a conjunction. 1. A conjunction, is a word used to connect words or sentences in construction, and to show the dependence of the terms so connected.

Practised is a perfect participle, from the regular active-transitive verb, practise, practised, practising, practised. 1. A participle is a word derived from a verb, participating the properties of a verb, and of an adjective or a noun; and is generally formed by adding ing, d, or ed, to the verb. 2. The perfect participle is that which ends commonly in ed or en, and implies a completion of the being, action, or passion.

Has is an irregular active-transitive verb, from have, had, having, had; found in the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and singular number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act, or to be acted upon. 2. An irregular verb is a verb that does not form the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. An active-transitive verb is a verb that expresses an action which has some person or thing for its object. 4. The indicative mood is that form of the verb, which simply indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question. 5. The present tense is that which expresses what now exists, or is taking place. 6. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 7. The singular number is that which denotes but one.

The is the definite article. 1. An article is the word the, an, or a, which we put before nouns to limit their signification. 2. The definite article is the, which denotes some particular thing or things.

Purest is a common adjective, of the superlative degree; compared regularly, pure, purer, purest. 1. An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, and generally expresses quality. 2. A common adjective is any ordinary epithet, or adjective denoting quality or situation. 3. The superlative degree is that which is most or least of all included with it.

Of is a preposition. 1. A preposition is a word used to express some relation of different things or thoughts to each other, and is generally placed before a noun or a pronoun.

All is a pronominal adjective, not compared. 1. An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, and generally expresses quality. 2. A pronominal adjective is a definitive word which may either accompany its noun or represent it understood. 3. Those adjectives whose signification does not admit of different degrees, cannot be compared.

Joys is a common noun, of the third person, plural number, neuter gender, and objective case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The plural number is that which denotes more than one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle, or preposition.

Attending is an imperfect participle, from the regular active-transitive verb, attend, attended, attending, attended. 1. A participle is a word derived from a verb, participating the properties of a verb, and of an adjective or a noun; and is generally formed by adding ing, d, or ed, to the verb. 2. The imperfect participle is that which ends commonly in ing, and implies a continuance of the being, action, or passion.

It is a personal pronoun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case. 1. A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun. 2. A personal pronoun is a pronoun that shows, by its form, of what person it is. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle, or preposition.

LESSON I.—PARSING.

“A Verb is a word whereby something or other is represented as existing, possessing, acting, or being acted upon, at some particular time, past, present, or future; and this in various manners.”—White, on the English Verb, p. 1.

“Error is a savage, lurking about on the twilight borders of the circle illuminated by truth, ready to rush in and take possession, the moment her lamp grows dim.”—Beecher.

“The science of criticism may be considered as a middle link, connecting the different parts of education into a regular chain.”—Ld. Kames, El. of Crit., p. xxii.

“When I see a man walking, a tree growing, or cattle grazing, I cannot doubt but that these objects are really what they appear to be. Nature determines us to rely on the veracity of our senses; for otherwise they could not in any degree answer their end, that of laying open things existing and passing around us.”—Id., ib., i, 85.

“But, advancing farther in life, and inured by degrees to the crooked ways of men; pressing through the crowd, and the bustle of the world; obliged to contend with this man’s craft, and that man’s scorn; accustomed, sometimes, to conceal their sentiments, and often to stifle their feelings; they become at last hardened in heart, and familiar with corruption.”—BLAIR: Murray’s Sequel, p. 140.

“Laugh’d at, he laughs again; and stricken hard, Turns to his stroke his adamantine scales, That fear no discipline of human hands.”—Cowper’s Task, p. 47.

LESSON II.—PARSING.

“Thus shame and remorse united in the ungrateful person, and indignation united with hatred in the hearts of others, are the punishments provided by nature for injustice.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 288.

“Viewing man as under the influence of novelty, would one suspect that custom also should influence him?—Human nature, diversified with many and various springs of action, is wonderfully, and, indulging the expression, intricately constructed.”—Id., ib., i, 325.

“Dryden frequently introduces three or four persons speaking upon the same subject, each throwing out his own notions separately, without regarding what is said by the rest.”—Id., ib., ii, 294.

“Nothing is more studied in Chinese gardens, than to raise wonder and surprise. Sometimes one is led insensibly into a dark cavern, terminating unexpectedly in a landscape enriched with all that nature affords the most delicious.”—Id., ib., ii, 334.

“The answer to the objection here implied, is obvious, even on the supposition of the questions put being answered in the affirmative.”—Prof. Vethake.

“As birds flying, so will the Lord of hosts defend Jerusalem; defending also, he will deliver it; and, passing over, he will preserve it.”—Isaiah, xxxi, 5.

“Here, by the bonds of nature feebly held, Minds combat minds, repelling and repell’d.”—Goldsmith.

“Suffolk first died, and York, all haggled over, Comes to him where in gore he lay insteeped.”—Shakspeare.

LESSON III.—PARSING.

“Every change in the state of things is considered as an effect, indicating the agency, characterizing the kind, and measuring the degree, of its cause.”—Dr. Murray, Hist. of En. L., i, 179.

“Having loved his own who were in the world, he loved them unto the end. And supper being ended, (the devil having now put it into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon’s son, to betray him,) Jesus, knowing that the Father had given all things into his hand, and that he had come from God and was going to God, arose from supper, and laid aside his coat, and, taking a towel, girded himself: then he poured some water into a basin, and began to wash the disciples’ feet, and to wipe them with the towel with which he was girded.”—See John, xiii.

“Spiritual desertion is naturally and judicially incurred by sin. It is the withdrawal of that divine unction which enriches the acquiescent soul with moral power and pleasure. The subtraction leaves the mind enervated, obscured, confused, degraded, and distracted.”—HOMO: N. Y. Observer.

“Giving no offence in any thing, but in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God: as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things.”—2 Cor., vi.

“O may th’ indulgence of a father’s love,
Pour’d forth on me, be doubled from above.”—Young.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

ERRORS OF PARTICIPLES.

☞ [As the principles upon which our participles ought to be formed, were necessarily anticipated in the preceding chapter on verbs, the reader must recur to that chapter for the doctrines by which the following errors are to be corrected. The great length of that chapter seemed a good reason for separating these examples from it, and it was also thought, that such words as are erroneously written for participles, should, for the sake of order, be chiefly noticed in this place. In many of these examples, however, the participle is not really a separate part of speech, but is in fact taken with an auxiliary to form some compound tense of its verb.]

LESSON I.—IRREGULARS.

“Many of your readers have mistook that passage.”—Steele, Spect., No. 544.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the preterit verb mistook is here used for the perfect participle. But, according to the table of irregular verbs, we ought to say, mistake, mistook, mistaking, mistaken; after the form of the simple verb, take, took, taking, taken. Therefore, the sentence should be amended thus: “Many of your readers have mistaken that passage.”]

“Had not my dog of a steward ran away.”—Addison, Spect. “None should be admitted, except he had broke his collar-bone thrice.”—Spect., No. 474. “We could not know what was wrote at twenty.”—Pref. to Waller. “I have wrote, thou hast wrote, he has wrote; we have wrote, ye have wrote, they have wrote.”—Ash’s Gram., p. 62. “As if God had spoke his last words there to his people.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 462. “I had like to have came in that ship myself.”—N. Y. Observer, No. 453. “Our ships and vessels being drove out of the harbour by a storm.”—Hutchinson’s Hist. of Mass., i, 470. “He will endeavour to write as the ancient author would have wrote, had he writ in the same language.”—Bolingbroke, on Hist., i, 68. “When his doctrines grew too strong to be shook by his enemies.”—Atterbury. “The immortal mind that hath forsook Her mansion.”—Milton. “Grease that’s sweaten from the murderer’s gibbet, throw into the flame.”—Shak., Macbeth. “The court also was chided for allowing such questions to be put.”—Col. Stone, on Freemasonry, p. 470. “He would have spoke.”—Milton, P. L., B. x, l. 517. “Words interwove with sighs found out their way.”—Id., ib., i, 621. “Those kings and potentates who have strove.”—Id., Eiconoclast, xvii. “That even Silence was took.”—Id., Comus, l. 557. “And envious Darkness, ere they could return, had stole them from me.”—Id., Comus, l. 195. “I have chose this perfect man.”—Id., P. R., B. i, l. 165. “I will scarce think you have swam in a gondola.”—Shak., As You Like It. “The fragrant brier was wove between.”—Dryden, Fables. “Then finish what you have began.”—Id., Poems, ii, 172. “But now the years a numerous train have ran.”—Pope’s Odyssey, B. xi, l. 555. “Repeats your verses wrote on glasses.”—Prior. “Who by turns have rose.”—Id. “Which from great authors I have took.”—Id., Alma. “Ev’n there he should have fell.”—Id., Solomon.

“The sun has rose, and gone to bed,
Just as if Partridge were not dead.”—Swift.

“And though no marriage words are spoke,
They part not till the ring is broke.”—Id., Riddles.

LESSON II.—REGULARS.

“When the word is stript of all the terminations.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of En. L., i, 319.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the participle stript is terminated in t. But, according to Observation 2d, on the irregular verbs, stript is regular. Therefore, this t should be changed to ed; and the final p should be doubled, according to Rule 3d for Spelling: thus, “When the word is stripped of all the terminations.”]

“Forgive him, Tom; his head is crackt.”—Swift’s Poems, p. 397. “For ‘tis the sport, to have the engineer hoist with his own petar.”—Hamlet, Act 3. “As great as they are, I was nurst by their mother.”—Swift’s Poems, p. 310. “If he should now be cry’d down since his change.”—Ib., p. 306. “Dipt over head and ears—in debt.”—Ib., p. 312. “We see the nation’s credit crackt.”—Ib., p. 312. “Because they find their pockets pickt.”—Ib., p. 338. “O what a pleasure mixt with pain!”—Ib., p. 373. “And only with her Brother linkt.”—Ib., p. 387. “Because he ne’er a thought allow’d, That might not be confest.”—Ib., p. 361. “My love to Sheelah is more firmly fixt.”—Ib., p. 369. “The observations annext to them will be intelligible.”—Philological Museum, Vol. i, p. 457. “Those eyes are always fixt on the general principles.”—Ib., i, 458. “Laborious conjectures will be banisht from our commentaries.”—Ib., i, 459. “Tiridates was dethroned, and Phraates was reestablisht in his stead.”—Ib., i,

462. "A Roman who was attacht to Augustus."—Ib., i, 466. "Nor should I have spoken of it, unless Baxter had talkt about two such."—Ib., i, 467. "And the reformers of language have generally rusht on."—Ib., i, 649. "Three centuries and a half had then elapst since the date."—Ib., i, 249. "Of such criteria, as has been remarkt already, there is an abundance."—Ib., i, 261. "The English have surpast every other nation in their services."—Ib., i, 306. "The party addrest is next in dignity to the speaker."—Harris's Hermes, p. 66. "To which we are many times helpt."—Walker's Particles, p. 13. "But for him, I should have lookt well enough to myself."—Ib., p. 88. "Why are you vext, Lady? why do frown?"—Milton, Comus, l. 667. "Obtruding false rules prankt in reason's garb."—Ib., l. 759. "But, like David equipt in Saul's armour, it is encumbered and oppressed."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 378.

"And when their merchants are blown up, and crackt, Whole towns are cast away in storms, and wreckt."—Butler, p. 163.

LESSON III.—MIXED.

"The lands are holden in free and common soccage."—Trumbull's Hist, i, 133.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the participle holden is not in that form which present usage authorizes. But, according to the table of irregular verbs, the four parts of the verb to hold, as now used, are hold, held, holding, held. Therefore, holden should be held; thus, "The lands are held in free and common soccage."]

"A stroke is drawn under such words."—Cobbett's E. Grammar, Edition of 1832, ¶ 154. "It is striked even, with a strickle."—Walkers Particles, p. 115. "Whilst I was wandring, without any care, beyond my bounds."—Ib., p. 83. "When one would do something, unless hindred by something present."—Johnson's Gram. Com., p. 311. "It is used potentially, but not so as to be rendred by these signs."—Ib., p. 320. "Now who would dote upon things hurried down the stream thus fast?"—Collier's Antoninus, p. 89. "Heaven hath timely try'd their growth."—Milton, Comus, l. 970. "O! ye mistook, ye should have snatcht his wand."—Ib., p. 815. "Of true virgin here distrest."—Ib., p. 905. "So that they have at last come to be substitute in the stead of it."—Barclay's Works, i, 339. "Though ye have lien among the pots."—Psal., lxxviii, 13. "And, lo, in her mouth was an olive-leaf pluckt off."—FRIENDS' BIBLE, and BRUCE'S: Gen., viii, 11. "Brutus and Cassius Are rid like madmen, through the gates of Rome."—Shak. "He shall be spitted on."—Luke, xviii, 32. "And are not the countries so overflown still situate between the tropics?"—Bentley's Sermons. "Not trickt and frounc't as she was wont, But kercheft in a comely cloud."—Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 123. "To satisfy his rigor, Satisfy'd never."—Id., P. L., B. x, l. 804. "With him there crucify'd."—Id., P. L., B. xii, l. 417. "Th' earth cumber'd, and the wing'd air darkt with plumes."—Id., Comus, l. 730. "And now their way to Earth they had descry'd."—Id., P. L., B. x, l. 325. "Not so thick swarm'd once the soil Bedropt with blood of Gorgon."—Ib., B. x, l. 527. "And in a troubled sea of passion tost."—Ib., B. x, l. 718. "The cause, alas, is quickly guest."—Swift's Poems, p. 404. "The kettle to the top was hoist"—Ib., p. 274. "In chains thy syllables are linkt."—Ib., p. 318. "Rather than thus be overtopt, Would you not wish their laurels cropt?"—Ib., p. 415. "The hyphen, or conjoiner, is a little line, drawn to connect words, or parts of words."—Cobbett's E. Gram., 1832, ¶ 150. "In the other manners of dependence, this general rule is sometimes broke."—Joh. Gram. Com., p. 334. "Some intransitive verbs may be rendered transitive by means of a preposition prefixt to them."—Grant's Lat. Gram., p. 66. "Whoever now should place the accent on the first syllable of Valerius, would set every body a-laughing.”—Walker’s Dict.

 “Being mocked, scourged, spitted on, and crucified.”—Gurney’s Essays, p. 40.

“For rhyme in Greece or Rome was never known,
 Till by barbarian deluges o’erflown.”—Roscommon.

“In my own Thames may I be drowneded,
 If e’er I stoop beneath a crown’d-head.”—Swift.

CHAPTER VIII.—ADVERBS.

An Adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner: as, They are now here, studying very diligently.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Adverbs briefly express what would otherwise require several words: as Now, for at this time;—Here, for in this place;—Very, for in a high degree;—Diligently, for in an industrious manner. Thus the meaning of almost any adverb, may be explained by some phrase beginning with a preposition and ending with a noun.

OBS. 2.—There are several customary combinations of short words, which are used adverbially, and which some grammarians do not analyze in parsing; as, not at all, at length, in fine, in full, at least, at present, at once, this once, in vain, no doubt, on board. But all words that convey distinct ideas, and rightly retain their individuality, ought to be taken separately in parsing. With the liberty of supposing a few ellipses, an ingenious parser will seldom find occasion to speak of “adverbial phrases.” In these instances, length, doubt, fine, and board, are unquestionably nouns; once, too, is used as a noun; full and all may be parsed either as nouns, or as adjectives whose nouns are understood; at least, is, at the least measure; at present, is, at the present time; and in vain, is, in a vain course, or manner.

OBS. 3.—A phrase is a combination of two or more separable parts of speech, the parsing of which of course implies their separation. And though the division of our language into words, and the division of its words into parts of speech, have never yet been made exactly to correspond, it is certainly desirable to bring them as near together as possible. Hence such terms as everywhere, anywhere, nowadays, forever, verso, to-day, to-morrow, by-and-by, inside-out, upside-down, if they are to be parsed simply as adverbs, ought to be compounded, and not written as phrases.

OBS. 4.—Under nearly all the different classes of words, some particular instances may be quoted, in which other parts of speech seem to take the nature of adverbs, so as either to become such, or to be apparently used for them. (1.) ARTICLES: “This may appear incredible, but it is not the less true.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist., i, 337. “The other party was a little coy.”—D. Webster. (2.) NOUNS: “And scrutiny became stone * blind.”—Couper. “He will

* “STONE’-BLIND,” “STONE’-COLD,” and “STONE’-DEAD,” are given in Worcester’s Dictionary, as compound adjectives; and this is perhaps their best classification; but, if I mistake not, they are usually accented quite as strongly on the latter syllable, as on the former, being spoken rather as two emphatic words. A similar example from Sigourney, “I saw an infant marble cold,” is given by Frazee under this Note: “Adjectives come home to-morrow.”—Clark. “They were travelling post when he met them.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 69. “And with a vengeance sent from Media post to Egypt.”—Milton, P. L., B. iv, l. 170. “That I should care a groat whether he likes the work or not.”—Kirkham. “It has snowed terribly all night, and is vengeance cold.”—Swift. (3.) ADJECTIVES: “Drink deep, or taste not.”—Pope. “A place wondrous deep.”—Webster’s Dict. “That fools should be so deep contemplative.”—Shak. “A man may speak louder or softer in the same key; when he speaks higher or lower, he changes his key.”—Sheridan’s Elocution, p. 116. (4.) PRONOUNS: “What am I eased?”—Job. “What have I offended thee?”—Gen., xx, 9. “He is somewhat arrogant.”—Dryden. (5.) VERBS: “Smack went the whip, round went the wheels.”—Cowper. “For then the farmers came jog, jog, along the miry road.”—Id. “Crack! went something on deck.”—Robinson Crusoe. “Then straight went the yard slap over their noddle.”—Arbuthnot. (6.) PARTICIPLES: “Like medicines given scalding hot.”—Dodd. “My clothes are almost dripping wet.”—“In came Squire South, stark, staring mad.”—Arbuthnot. “An exceeding high mountain.”—Matt., iv, 8. “How sweet, how passing sweet, the hour to me!”—Ch. Observer. “When we act according to our duty.”—Dr. Johnson. “A man was famous according as he had lifted up axes upon the thick trees.”—Psal., lxxiv, 5. (7.) CONJUNCTIONS: “Look, as I blow this feather from my face.”—Shak. “Not at all, or but very gently.”—Locke. “He was but born to try the lot of man.”—Pope. (8.) PREPOSITIONS: “They shall go in and out.”—Bible. “From going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down in it.”—Id. These are actually adverbs, and not prepositions, because they govern nothing. (9.) INTERJECTIONS are never used as adverbs, though the Greek grammarians refer them nearly all to this class. The using of other words for adverbs, (i. e., the adverbial use of any words that we do not actually call adverbs,) may be referred to the figure enallage.* as, “Tramp, tramp, across the land they speed,

Splash, splash, across the sea.”—Burger.

OBS. 5.—As other parts of speech seem sometimes to take the nature of adverbs, so adverbs sometimes, either really or apparently, assume the nature of other parts of speech. (1.) OF NOUNS: as, “A committee is not needed merely to say Yes or No; that will do very little good; the yes or the no must be accompanied and supported by reasons.”—Dr. McCartee. “Shall I tell you why? Ay, sir, and wherefore; for, they say, every why hath a wherefore.”—Shak. (2.) OF ADJECTIVES: as, “Nebuchadnezzar invaded the country, and reduced it to an almost desert.”—Wood’s Dict., w. Moab. “The then bishop of London, Dr. Laud, attended on his Majesty.”—Clarendon. “With upward speed his agile wings he spread.”—Prior. “She lights the downward heaven, and rises there.”—Dryden. (3.) OF PRONOUNS: as, “He liked the ground whereon she trod.”—Milton. “Wherein have you been galled by the king?”—Shak. “O how unlike the place from whence they fell!”—Par. Lost, B. i, l. 75. Here whereon is exactly equivalent in sense to on which; wherein, to in what; and whence, to which: but none of them are actually reckoned pronouns. (4.) OF VERBS: as, “If he be hungry, more than wanton, bread alone will down.”—Locke. “To down proud hearts that would not willing die.”—Sidney. “She never could away with me.”—Shak. “Away, and glister like the god of war.”—Id. “Up, get ye out of this place.”—Gen., xix, 14. (5.) OF CONJUNCTIONS: as, “I, even I, am he.”—Isaiah, xliii, 25. “If I will that he tarry till I come.”—John, xxi, 22. “I will go and see him before I die.”—Gen., xlv, 28. “Before I go whence I sometimes belong to other adjectives; as, ‘red hot iron.’”—Improved Gram., p. 141. But Webster himself, from whom this doctrine and the example are borrowed, (see his Rule XIX,) makes “RED’-HOT” but one word in his Dictionary; and Worcester gives it as one word, in a less proper form, even without a hyphen, “RED-HOT.”

---

* “OF ENALLAGE.—The construction which may be reduced to this figure in English, chiefly appears when one part of speech, is used with the power and effect of another.”—Ward’s English Gram., p. 150.

shall not return.”—Job, x, 21. (6) OF PREPOSITIONS: as, “Superior to any that are dug out the ground.”—Eames’s Lect., p. 28. “Who act so counter heavenly mercy’s plan.”—Burns. Better perhaps, “out of” and “counter to.” (7.) OF INTERJECTIONS: as, “Up, up, Glentarkin! rouse thee, ho!”—Scott. “Down, down, cried Mar, your lances down!”—Id. “Off! or I fly for ever from thy sight.”—Smith.

OBS. 6.—In these last examples, up, and down, and off, have perhaps as much resemblance to imperative verbs, as to interjections; but they need not be referred to either of these classes, because by supplying a verb we may easily parse them as adverbs. I neither adopt the notion of Horne Tooke, that the same word cannot belong to different parts of speech, nor refer every word to that class to which it may at first sight appear to belong; for both of these methods are impracticable and absurd. The essential nature of each part of speech, and every important peculiarity of its individual terms, it is hoped, will be sufficiently explained in some part or other of this work; but, as the classification of words often depends upon their construction, some explanations that go to determine the parts of speech, must be looked for under the head of Syntax.

OBS. 7.—The proper classification, or subdivision, of adverbs, though it does not appear to have been discovered by any of our earlier grammarians, is certainly very clearly indicated by the meaning and nature of the words themselves. The four important circumstances of any event or assertion, are the when, the where, the how-much, and the how; or the time, the place, the degree, and the manner. These four are the things which we usually express by adverbs. And seldom, if ever, do we find any adverb the notion of which does not correspond to that of sometime, somewhere, somewhat, or somehow. Hence, the general classes of this sort of words ought to be formed under these four heads. The classification heretofore most commonly adopted in English grammar, has every fault which the spirit of awkwardness could possibly give it. The head of it is this: “Adverbs, though very numerous, may be reduced to certain classes, the chief of which are those of Number, Order, Place, Time, Quantity, Manner or Quality, Doubt, Affirmation, Negation, Interrogation, and Comparison.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 115; Comly’s, 66; Kirkham’s, 86; R. C. Smith’s, 34; Hall’s, 26; and others.

CLASSES.

Adverbs may be reduced to four general classes; namely, adverbs of time, of place, of degree, and of manner. Besides these, it is proper to distinguish the particular class of conjunctive adverbs.

I. Adverbs of time are those which answer to the question, When? How long? How soon? or, How often? including these which ask.

OBS.—Adverbs of time may be subdivided as follows:—

1. Of time present; as, Now, yet, to-day, nowadays, presently, instantly, immediately, straightway, directly, forthwith.
2. Of time past; as, Already, just now, lately, recently, yesterday, formerly, anciently, once, heretofore, hitherto, since, till now, long ago, erewhile, erst.
3. Of time to come; as, To-morrow, hereafter, henceforth, henceforward, by-and-by, soon, erelong, shortly.

4. Of time relative; as, When, then, first, just, before, after, while, whilst, meanwhile, as, till, until, seasonably, betimes, early, late, whenever, afterward, afterwards, otherwhile, otherwhiles.
5. Of time absolute; as, Always, ever, never, aye, eternally, forever, perpetually, continually, incessantly, endlessly, evermore, everlastingly.
6. Of time repeated; as, Often, oft, again, occasionally, frequently, sometimes, seldom, rarely, daily, weekly, monthly, yearly, annually, once, twice, thrice, or three times. Above this, we use only the phrases four times, five times, six times, &c. Whether these ought to be reckoned adverbs, or not, is questionable: times, for repetitions, or instances, may be supposed a noun; but such phrases often appear to be used adverbially.

II. Adverbs of place are those which answer to the question, Where? Whither? Whence? or, Whereabout? including these which ask.

OBS.—Adverbs of place may be subdivided as follows:—

1. Of place in which; as, Where, here, there, yonder, above, below, about, around, somewhere, anywhere, elsewhere, otherwhere, everywhere, nowhere, wherever, wheresoever, within, without, whereabout, whereabouts, hereabout, hereabouts, thereabout, thereabouts.
2. Of place to which; as, Whither, hither, thither, in, up, down, back, forth, aside, ashore, abroad, aloft, home, homewards, inwards, upwards, downwards, backwards, forwards. Inward, homeward, upward, downward, backward, and forward, are also adverbs, as well as adjectives; but some critics, for distinction's sake, choose to use these only as adjectives.
3. Of place from which; as, Whence, hence, thence, away, out, off, far, remotely.
4. Of the order of place; as, First, secondly, thirdly, fourthly, &c. Thus, secondly means in the second place; thirdly, in the third place; &c. For order, or rank, implies place, though it may consist of relative degrees.

III. Adverbs of degree are those which answer to the question, How much? How little? or, to the idea of more or less.

OBS.—Adverbs of degree may be subdivided as follows:—

1. Of excess or abundance; as, Much, more, most, too, very, greatly, far, besides; chiefly, principally, mainly, mostly, generally; entirely, full, fully, completely, perfectly, wholly, totally, altogether, all, quite, clear, stark; exceedingly, excessively, extravagantly, intolerably; immeasurably, inconceivably, infinitely.
2. Of equality or sufficiency; as, Enough, sufficiently, competently, adequately, proportionally, equally, so, as, even, just, exactly, precisely.
3. Of deficiency or abatement; as, Little, less, least, scarcely, hardly, scanty, scantily, merely, barely, only, but, partly, partially, nearly, almost, well-nigh, not quite.
4. Of quantity in the abstract; as, How, (meaning, in what degree,) however, howsoever, everso, something, anything, nothing, a groat, a sixpence, a sou-markee, and other nouns of quantity used adverbially.

IV. Adverbs of manner are those which answer to the question, How? or, by affirming, denying, or doubting, show how a subject is regarded.

OBS.—Adverbs of manner may be subdivided as follows:—

1. Of manner from quality; as, Well, ill, wisely, foolishly, justly, wickedly, and many others formed by adding ly to adjectives of quality. Ly is a contraction of like; and is the most common termination of English adverbs. When added to nouns, it forms adjectives; but some few of these are also used adverbially; as, daily, weekly, monthly, which denote time.
2. Of affirmation or assent; as, *Yes, yea, ay, verily, truly, indeed, surely, certainly, doubtless, undoubtedly, assuredly, certes, forsooth,* amen*.
3. Of negation; as, No, nay, not, nowise, noway, nowadays, nohow.
4. Of doubt or uncertainty; as, Perhaps, haply, possibly, perchance, peradventure, may-be.
5. Of mode or way; as, Thus, so, how, somehow, nohow, anyhow, however, howsoever, like, else, otherwise, across, together, apart, asunder, namely, particularly, necessarily, hesitatingly, trippingly, extempore, headlong, lengthwise.

V. Conjunctive adverbs are those which perform the office of conjunctions, and serve to connect sentences, as well as to express some circumstance of time, place, degree, or the like. This class embraces a few words not strictly belonging to any of the others: as, (1.) The adverbs of cause; why, wherefore, therefore; but the last two of these are often called conjunctions. (2.) The pronominal compounds; herein, therein, wherein, &c.; in which the former term is a substitute, and virtually governed by the enclitic particle.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Conjunctive adverbs often relate equally to two verbs in different clauses, on which account it is the more necessary to distinguish them from others; as, “And they feared when they heard that they were Romans,”—Acts, xvi, 38. Here when is a conjunctive adverb of time, and relates equally to feared and to heard. “The right of coming on the shore for their purposes in general, as and when they please.”—Holroyd. Here as is a conjunctive adverb of manner, and when, of time; both relating equally to coming and to please.

OBS. 2.—The following words are the most frequently used as conjunctive adverbs: after, again, also, as, before, besides, consequently, else, ere, even, furthermore, hence, how, however, moreover, nevertheless, otherwise, since, so, still, till, then, thence, therefore, too, until, when, where, wherefore, whither, and while, or whilst.

OBS. 3.—Adverbs of time, place, and manner, are generally connected with verbs or participles; those of degree are more frequently placed before adjectives or adverbs: the latter, however, sometimes denote the measure of actions or effects; as, “And I wept much”—Rev., v, 4. “And Isaac trembled very exceedingly”—Gen., xxvii, 33. “Writers who had felt less, would have said more”—Fuller.

“Victors and vanquished, in the various field,
Nor wholly overcome, nor wholly yield.”—Dryden.

OBS. 4.—The adverbs here, there, and where, when compounded with prepositions, have the force of pronouns, or of pronominal adjectives: as, Hereby, for by this; thereby, for by that; whereby, for by which, or by what. The prepositions which may be subjoined in this manner, are only the short words, at, by, for, from, in, into, of, on, to, unto, under, upon, and with. Compounds of this kind, although they partake of the nature of pronouns with respect to the nouns going before, are still properly reckoned adverbs, because they relate as such to the verbs which follow them; as, “You take my life, when you do take the means whereby I live.”—Shak. Here whereby is a conjunctive adverb, representing means, and relating to the verb live.* This mode of expression is now somewhat antiquated, though still frequently used by good authors, and especially by the poets.

---

* Forsooth is literally a word of affirmation or assent, meaning for truth, but it is now almost always used ironically: as, “In these gentlemen whom the world forsooth calls wise and solid, there is generally either a moroseness that persecutes, or a dullness that tires you.”—Home’s Art of Thinking, p. 24.

OBS. 5.—The adverbs, when, where, whither, whence, how, why, wherefore, wherein, whereof, whereby, and other like compounds of where, are sometimes used as interrogatives; but, as such, they still severally belong to the classes under which they are placed in the foregoing distribution, except that words of interrogation are not at the same time connectives. These adverbs, and the three pronouns, who, which, and what, are the only interrogative words in the language; but questions may be asked without any of them, and all have other uses than to ask questions.

OBS. 6.—The conjunctive adverbs, when, where, whither, whence, how, and why, are sometimes so employed as to partake of the nature of pronouns, being used as a sort of special relatives, which refer back to antecedent nouns of time, place, manner, or cause, according to their own respective meanings; yet being adverbs, because they relate as such, to the verbs which follow them: as, “In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men.”—Rom., ii, 16. “In a time when thou mayest be found.”—Psal., xxxii, 6. “I sought for some time what I at length found here, a place where all real wants might be easily supplied.”—Dr. Johnson. “To that part of the mountain where the declivity began to grow craggy.”—Id. “At Canterbury, whither some voice had run before.”—Wotton. “Look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged.”—Isaiah, li, 1. “We may remark three different sources whence it arises.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 163. “I’ll tell you a way how you may live your time over again.”—Collier’s Antoninus, p. 108. “A crude account of the method how they perceive truth.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 404. “The order how the Psalter is appointed to be read.”—Common Prayer. “In the same reasoning we see the cause, why no substantive is susceptible of these comparative degrees.”—Hermes, p. 201. “There seems no reason why it should not work prosperously.”—Society in America, p. 68. “There are strong reasons why an extension of her territory would be injurious to her.”—Ib. “An other reason why it deserved to be more studied.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 123. “The end why God hath ordained faith, is, that his free grace might be glorified.”—Goodwin.

OBS. 7.—The direct use of adverbs for pronouns, is often, if not generally, inelegant; and, except the expression may be thereby agreeably shortened, it ought to be considered ungrammatical. The following examples, and perhaps also some of the foregoing, are susceptible of improvement: “Youth is the time, when we are young.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 120. Say rather, “Youth is that part of life which succeeds to childhood.” “The boy gave a satisfactory reason why he was tardy.”—Ibid. Say rather, “The boy gave a satisfactory reason for his tardiness.” “The several sources from whence these pleasures are derived.”—Murray’s Key, p. 258. Say rather—“sources from which” “In cases where it is only said, that a question has been asked.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 117. Say, “In those cases in which.” “To the false rhetoric of the age when he lived.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 415. Say rather—“of the age in which he lived.”

---

* In most instances, however, the words hereof, thereof, and whereof, are placed after nouns, and have nothing to do with any verb. They are therefore not properly adverbs, though all our grammarians and lexicographers call them so. Nor are they adjectives; because they are not used adjectively, but rather in the sense of a pronoun governed by of; or, what is nearly the same thing, in the sense of the possessive or genitive case. Example: “And the fame hereof went abroad.”—Matt., ix, 26. That is, “the fame of this miracle,” which last is a better expression, the other being obsolete, or worthy to be so, on account of its irregularity.

OBS. 8.—When a conjunctive adverb is equivalent to both an antecedent and a relative, the construction seems to be less objectionable, and the brevity of the expression affords an additional reason for preferring it, especially in poetry: as, “But the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.”—Matt., viii, 20. “There might they see whence Po and Ister came.”—Hoole’s Tasso. “Tell how he formed your shining frame.”—Ogilvie. “The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth.”—John, iii, 8. In this construction, the adverb is sometimes preceded by a preposition; the noun being, in fact, understood: as, “Sinks, like a sea-weed, into whence she rose.”—Byron.

“Here Machiavelli’s earth return’d to whence it rose.”—Id.

OBS. 9.—The conjunctive adverb so, very often expresses the sense of some word or phrase going before; as, “Wheresoever the speech is corrupted, so is the mind.”—Seneca’s Morals, p. 267. That is, the mind is also corrupted. “I consider grandeur and sublimity, as terms synonymous, or nearly so.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 29. The following sentence is grossly wrong, because the import of this adverb was not well observed by the writer: “We have now come to far the most complicated part of speech; and one which is sometimes rendered still more so, than the nature of our language requires.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 38. So, in some instances, repeats the import of a preceding noun, and consequently partakes the nature of a pronoun; as,

“We think our fathers fools, so wise we grow;
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so.”—Pope, on Crit.

OBS. 10.—“Since is often improperly used for ago: as, ‘When were you in France?—Twenty years since.’ It ought to be, ‘Twenty years ago.’ Since may be admitted to supply the place of ago that: it being equally correct to say, ‘It is twenty years since I was in France;’ and, ‘It is twenty years ago, that I was in France.’”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 337. The difference between since and ago is clearly this: the former, being either a preposition or a conjunctive adverb, cannot with strict propriety be used adjectively; the latter, being in reality an old participle, naturally comes after a noun, in the sense of an adjective; as, a year ago, a month ago, a week ago. “Go, ago, ygo, gon, agon, gone, agone, are all used indiscriminately by our old English writers as the past participle of the verb to go.”—Tooke’s Diversions, Vol. i, p. 376. “Three days agone, I fell sick.”—1 Samuel, xxx, 13.

MODIFICATIONS.

Adverbs have no modifications, except that a few are compared, after the manner of adjectives: as, soon, sooner, soonest; often, oftener, oftenest; long, longer, longest; fast, faster, fastest.

---

* Seldom is sometimes compared in this manner, though not frequently; as, “This kind of verse occurs the seldomest, but has a happy effect in diversifying the melody.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 385. In former days, this word, as well as its correlative often, was sometimes used adjectively; as, “Thine often infirmities.”—1 Tim., v, 23. “I hope God’s Book hath not been my seldomest lectures.”—Queen Elizabeth, 1585. John Walker has

The following are irregularly compared: well, better, best; badly or ill, worse, worst; little less, least; much, more, most; far, farther, farthest; forth, further, furthest. Rath, rather, rathest, is now used only in the comparative.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Most adverbs that are formed from adjectives by the addition of ly, will admit the comparative adverbs more and most, less and least, before them: as, wisely, more wisely, most wisely; culpably, less culpably, least culpably. This is virtually a comparison of the latter adverb, but the grammatical inflection, or degree, belongs only to the former; and the words being written separately, it is certainly most proper to parse them separately, ascribing the degree of comparison to the word which expresses it. As comparison does not belong to adverbs in general, it should not be mentioned in parsing, except in the case of those few which are varied by it.

OBS. 2.—In the works of Milton, and occasionally in those of some other poets of his age,* adverbs of two syllables, ending in ly, are not only compared regularly like adjectives of the same ending, but are used in the measure of iambic verse as if they still formed only two syllables. Examples:—

“But God hath wiselier arm’d his vengeful ire.”—P. Lost, B. x, l. 1022.

“Destroyers rightlier call’d and plagues of men.”—Ib., B. xi, l. 699.

“And on his quest, where likeliest he might find.”—Ib., B. ix, l. 414.

“Now amplier known thy Saviour and thy Lord.”—Ib., B. xii, l. 544.

“Though thou wert firmlier fasten’d than a rock.”—Sam. Agon., l. 1398.

“Not rustic, as before, but seemlier clad.”—P. Reg., B. ii, l. 299.

—————“Whereof to thee anon

Plainlier shall be reveal’d.”—Paradise Lost, B. xii, l. 150.

—————“To show what coast thy sluggish erare Might easiliest harbour in.”—Shakspeare, Cymb., Act IV.

“Shall not myself be kindlier mov’d than thou art?”—Id., Tempest, Act V.

“But earthlier happy is the rose distill’d.”—Id., M. S. N. Dream, Act I.

OBS. 3.—The usage just cited is clearly analogical, and has the obvious advantage of adding to the flexibility of the language, while it also multiplies its distinctive forms. If carried out as it might be, it would furnish to poets and orators an ampler choice of phraseology, and at the same time, obviate in a great measure the necessity of using the same words both adjectively and adverbially. The words which are now commonly used in this twofold character, are principally monosyllables; and, of adjectives, monosyllables are the class which we oftenest compare by er and est: next to which come dissyllables ending in y; as, holy, happy, lovely. But if to any monosyllable we add ly to form an adverb, we have of course a dissyllable ending in y; and if adverbs of this class may be compared regularly, after the manner of adjectives, there can be little or no occasion to use the regularly compared the adverb forward: in describing the latter L, he speaks of the tip of the tongue as being “brought a little forwarder to the teeth.”—Pron. Dict., Principles, No. 55.

---

* A few instances of the regular inflection of adverbs ending in ly, may be met with in modern compositions, as in the following comparisons: “As melodies will sometimes ring sweetlier in the echo.”—The Dial, Vol. i, p. 6. “I remember no poet whose writings would safelier stand the test.”—Coleridge’s Biog. Lit., Vol. ii, p. 53.

primitive word otherwise than as an adjective. But, according to present usage, few adverbs are ever compared by inflection, except such words as may also be used adjectively. For example: cleanly, comely, deadly, early, kindly, kingly, likely, lively, princely, seemly, weakly, may all be thus compared; and, according to Johnson and Webster, they may all be used either adjectively or adverbially. Again: late, later, latest, is commonly contrasted in both senses, with early, earlier, earliest; but if lately, latelier, lateliest, were adopted in the adverbial contrast, early and late, earlier and later, earliest and latest, might be contrasted as adjectives only.

OBS. 4.—The using of adjectives for adverbs, is in general a plain violation of grammar. Example: “To is a preposition, governing the verb sell, in the infinitive mood, agreeable to Rule 18, which says, The preposition TO governs the infinitive mood.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 137. Here agreeable ought to be agreeably; an adverb, relating to the participle governing. Again, the using of adverbs for adjectives, is a fault as gross. Example: “Apprehending the nominative to be put absolutely.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 155. Here absolutely ought to be absolute; an adjective, relating to the word nominative. But, in poetry, there is not only a frequent substitution of quality for manner, in such a way that the adjective may still be parsed adjectively; but sometimes also what appears to be (whether right or wrong) a direct use of adjectives for adverbs, especially in the higher degrees of comparison: as, “Firmer he roots him the runder it blow.”—Scott, L. of L., C. ii, st. 19.

“True ease in writing comes from art, not chance,
As those move easiest who have learn’d to dance.”—Pope, Ess. on Crit.

“And also now the sluggard soundest slept.”—Pollok, C. of T., B. vi, l. 257.

“In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,
What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so.”—Milton, P. R., B. iv, l. 361.

OBS. 5.—No use of words can be right, that actually confounds the parts of speech; but in many instances, according to present practice, the same words may be used either adjectively or adverbially. Firmer and runder are not adverbs, but adjectives. In the example above, they may, I think, be ranked with the instances in which quality is poetically substituted for manner, and be parsed as relating to the pronouns which follow them. A similar usage occurs in Latin, and is considered elegant. Easiest, as used above by Pope, may perhaps be parsed upon the same principle; that is, as relating to those, or to persons understood before the verb move. But soundest, plainest, and easiest, as in the latter quotations, cannot be otherwise explained than as being adverbs. Plain and sound, according to our dictionaries, are used both adjectively and adverbially; and, if their superlatives are not misapplied in these instances, it is because the words are adverbs, and regularly compared as such. Easy, though sometimes used adverbially by reputable writers, is presented by our lexicographers as an adjective only; and if the latter are right, Milton’s use of easiest in the sense and construction of most easily, must be considered an error in grammar. And besides, according to his own practice, he ought to have preferred plainliest to plainest, in the adverbial sense of most plainly.

OBS. 6.—Beside the instances already mentioned, of words used both adjectively and adverbially, our dictionaries exhibit many primitive terms which are to be referred to the one class or the other, according to their construction; as, soon, late, high, low, quick, slack, hard, soft, wide, close, clear, thick, full, scant, long, short, clean, near, scarce, sure, fast; to which may as well be added, slow, loud, and deep; all susceptible of the regular form of comparison, and all regularly convertible into adverbs in ly; though soonly and longly are now obsolete, and fastly, which means firmly, is seldom used. In short, it is, probably, from an idea, that no adverbs are to be compared by er and est unless the same words may also be used adjectively, that we do not thus compare lately, highly, quickly, loudly, &c., after the example of Milton. But, however custom may sanction the adverbial construction of the foregoing simple terms, the distinctive form of the adverb is in general to be preferred, especially in prose. For example: "The more it was complained of, the louder it was praised."—Daniel Webster, in Congress, 1837. If it would seem quaint to say, "The loudlier it was praised," it would perhaps be better to say, "The more loudly it was praised;" for our critics have not acknowledged loud or louder to be an adverb. Nor have slow and deep been so called. Dr. Johnson cites the following line to illustrate the latter as an adjective:

"Drink hellebore, my boy! drink deep, and scour thy brain. DRYDEN."—Joh. Dict., w. Deep.

"Drink hellebore, my boy! drink deep, and purge thy brain."—Dryd. IV. Sat. of Persius.

OBS. 7.—In some instances, even in prose, it makes little or no difference to the sense, whether we use adjectives referring to the nouns, or adverbs of like import, having reference to the verbs: as, "The whole conception is conveyed clear and strong to the mind."—Blair's Rhet., p. 138. Here clear and strong are adjectives, referring to conception; but we might as well say, "The whole conception is conveyed clearly and strongly to the mind." "Against a power that exists independent of their own choice."—Webster's Essays, p. 46. Here we might as well say, "exists independently;" for the independence of the power, in whichever way it is expressed, is nothing but the manner of its existence. "This work goeth fast on and prospereth."—Ezra. "Skill comes so slow, and life so fast doth fly."—Davies. Dr. Johnson here takes fast and slow to be adjectives, but he might as well have called them adverbs, so far as their meaning or construction is concerned. For what here qualifies the things spoken of, is nothing but the manner of their motion; and this might as well be expressed by the words, rapidly, slowly, swiftly. Yet it ought to be observed, that this does not prove the equivalent words to be adverbs, and not adjectives. Our philologists have often been led into errors by the argument of equivalence.

EXAMPLES FOR PARSING.

PRAXIS VIII.—ETYMOLOGICAL.

In the Eighth Praxis, it is required of the pupil—to distinguish and define the different parts of speech, and the classes and modifications of the ARTICLES, NOUNS, ADJECTIVES, PRONOUNS, VERBS, PARTICIPLES, and ADVERBS.

The definitions to be given in the Eighth Praxis, are two for an article, six for a noun, three for an adjective, six for a pronoun, seven for a verb finite, five for an infinitive, two for a participle, two (and sometimes three) for an adverb,—and one for a conjunction, a preposition, or an interjection. Thus:—

EXAMPLE PARSED.

"When was it that Rome attracted most strongly the admiration of mankind?"—R. G. Harper.

When is an adverb of time. 1. An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree or manner. 2. Adverbs of time are those which answer to the question, When? How long? How soon? or, How often? including these which ask.

Was is an irregular neuter verb, from be, was, being, been; found in the indicative mood, imperfect tense, third person, and singular number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act, or to be acted upon. 2. An irregular verb is a verb that does not form the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. A neuter verb is a verb that expresses neither action nor passion, but simply being, or a state of being. 4. The indicative mood is that form of the verb, which simply indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question. 5. The imperfect tense is that which expresses what took place, or was occurring, in time fully past. 6. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 7. The singular number is that which denotes but one.

It is a personal pronoun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case. 1. A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun. 2. A personal pronoun is a pronoun that shows, by its form, of what person it is. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The nominative case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the subject of a finite verb.

That is a conjunction. 1. A conjunction is a word used to connect words or sentences in construction, and to show the dependence of the terms so connected.

Rome is a proper noun, of the third person, singular number, personified feminine, and nominative case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A proper noun is the name of some particular individual, or people, or group. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The feminine gender is that which denotes persons or animals of the female kind. 6. The nominative case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the subject of a finite verb.

Attracted is a regular active-transitive verb, from attract, attracted, attracting, attracted; found in the indicative mood, imperfect tense, third person, and singular number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act, or to be acted upon. 2. A regular verb is a verb that forms the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. An active-transitive verb is a verb that expresses an action which has some person or thing for its object. 4. The indicative mood is that form of the verb, which simply indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question. 5. The imperfect tense is that which expresses what took place, or was occurring, in time fully past. 6. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 7. The singular number is that which denotes but one.

Most is an a adverb of degree, compared, much, more, most, and found in the superlative. 1. An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner. 2. Adverbs of degree are those which answer to the question, How much? How little? or to the idea of more or less. 3. The superlative degree is that which is most or least of all included with it.

Strongly is an adverb of manner. 1. An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner. 2. Adverbs of manner are those which answer to the question, How? or, by affirming, denying, or doubting, show how a subject is regarded.

The is the definite article. 1. An article is the word the, an, or a, which we put before nouns to limit their signification. 2. The definite article is the, which denotes some particular thing or things.

Admiration is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle, or preposition.

Of is a preposition. 1. A preposition is a word used to express some relation of different things or thoughts to each other, and is generally placed before a noun or a pronoun.

Mankind is a common noun, collective, of the third person, conveying the idea of plurality, masculine gender, and objective case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A collective noun, or noun of multitude, is the name of many individuals together. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The plural number is that which denotes more than one. 5. The masculine gender is that which denotes persons or animals of the male kind. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle, or preposition.

LESSON I.—PARSING.

“Wisely, therefore, is it ordered, and agreeably to the system of Providence, that we should have nature for our instructor.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 358.

“It is surprising, how quickly, and for the most part how correctly, we judge of character from external appearance.”—Id., ib., i, 359.

“The members of a period connected by proper copulatives, glide smoothly and gently along, and are a proof of sedateness and leisure in the speaker.”—Id., ib., ii, 33.

“Antithesis ought only to be occasionally studied, when it is naturally demanded by the comparison or opposition of objects.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 102.

“Did men always think clearly, and were they at the same time fully masters of the language in which they write, there would be occasion for few rules.”—Ib., 102.

“Rhetoric, or oratory, is the art of speaking justly, methodically, floridly, and copiously, upon any subject, in order to touch the passions, and to persuade.”—Bradley’s Literary Guide, p. 155.

“The more closely we follow the natural order of any subject we may be investigating, the more satisfactorily and explicitly will that subject be opened to our understanding.”—Gurney's Essays, p. 160.

“Why should we doubt of that, whereof our sense
Finds demonstration from experience?
Our minds are here, and there, below, above;
Nothing that's mortal, can so swiftly move.”—Denham.

LESSON II.—PARSING.

“If we can discern particularly and precisely what it is, which is most directly obedience or disobedience to the will and commands of God; what is truly morally beautiful, or really and absolutely deformed; the question concerning liberty, as far as it respects ethics, or morality, will be sufficiently decided.”—West, on Agency, p. xiii.

“Thus it was true, historically, individually, philosophically, and universally, that they did not like to retain God in their knowledge.”—Cox, on Christianity, p. 327.

“We refer to Jeremiah Evarts and Gordon Hall. They had their imperfections, and against them they struggled discreetly, constantly, successfully, until they were fitted to ascend to their rest.”—N. Y. Observer, Feb. 2d, 1833.

“Seek not proud riches; but such as thou mayst get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully and leave contentedly.”—Ld. Bacon.

“There are also some particularly grievous sins, of which conscience justly accuses us; sins committed more or less presumptuously and willingly, deliberately and repeatedly.”—Bickersteth, on Prayer, p. 59.

“And herein I apprehend myself now to suffer wrongfully, being slanderously reported, falsely accused, shamefully and despitefully used, and hated without a cause.”—Jenks's Prayers, p. 173.

“Of perfect knowledge, see, the dawning light
Foretells a noon most exquisitely bright!
Here, springs of endless joy are breaking forth!
There, buds the promise of celestial worth!”—Young.

LESSON III.—PARSING.

“A true friend unbosoms freely, advises justly, assists readily, adventures boldly, takes all patiently, defends courageously, and continues a friend unchangeably.”—Penn's Maxims.

“That mind must be wonderfully narrow, that is wholly wrapped up in itself; but this is too visibly the character of most human minds.”—Burgh's Dignity, ii, 35.

“There is not a man living, who wishes more sincerely than I do, to see a plan adopted for the abolition of slavery; but there is only one proper and effectual mode by which it can be accomplished, and that is, by legislative authority.”—Geo. Washington, 1786.

“Sloth has frequently and justly been denominated the rust of the soul. The habit is easily acquired; or, rather, it is a part of our very nature to be indolent.”—Student's Manual, p. 176.

“I am aware how improper it is to talk much of my wife; never reflecting how much more improper it is to talk much of myself.”—Home's Art of Thinking, p. 89.

“Howbeit whereinsoever any is bold, (I speak foolishly,) I am bold also. Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I. Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool,) I am more.”—2 Cor., xi.

“Oh, speak the wondrous man! how mild, how calm, How greatly humble, how divinely good, How firm establish'd on eternal truth.”—Thomson.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

ERRORS RESPECTING ADVERBS.

“We can much easier form the conception of a fierce combat.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 167.

[FORMULE—Not proper, because the adjective easier is used as an adverb, to qualify the verb can form. But, according to Observation 4th on the Modifications of Adverbs, “The using of adjectives for adverbs, is in general a plain violation of grammar.” Therefore, easier should be more easily; thus, “We can much more easily form the conception of a fierce combat.”]

“When he was restored, agreeable to the treaty, he was a perfect savage.”—Webster's Essays, p. 235. “How I shall acquit myself suitable to the importance of the trial.”—Duncan's Cic., p. 85. “Can any thing show your holiness how unworthy you treat mankind?”—Spect., No. 497. “In what other [language,] consistent with reason and common sense, can you go about to explain it to him?”—Louth's Gram., Pref., p. viii. “Agreeable to this rule, the short vowel Sheva has two characters.”—Wilson's Hebrew Gram., p. 46. “We shall give a remarkable fine example of this figure.”—Murray's Gram., p. 347. “All of which is most abominable false.”—Barclay's Works, iii, 431. “He heaped up great riches, but passed his time miserable.”—Murray's Key, 8vo, ii, 202. “He is never satisfied with expressing any thing clearly and simple.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 96. “Attentive only to exhibit his ideas clear and exact, he appears dry.”—Ib., p. 100. “Such words as have the most liquids and vowels, glide the softest.”—Ib., p. 129. “The simplest points, such as are easiest apprehended.”—Ib., p. 312. “Too historical, to be accounted a perfect regular epic poem.”—Ib., p. 441. “Putting after them the oblique case, agreeable to the French construction.”—Priestley's Gram., p. 108. “Where the train proceeds with an extreme slow pace.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 151. “So as scarce to give an appearance of succession.”—Ib., i, 152. “That concord between sound and sense, which is perceived in some expressions independent of artful pronunciation.”—Ib., ii, 63. “Cornaro had become very corpulent, previous to the adoption of his temperate habits.”—Hitchcock, on Dysp., p. 396. “Bread, which is a solid and tolerable hard substance.”—Sandford and Merton, p. 38. “To command every body that was not dressed as fine as himself.”—Ib., p. 19. “Many of them have scarce outlived their authors.”—Pref. to Lily's Gram., p. ix. “Their labour, indeed, did not penetrate very deep.”—Wilson's Heb. Gram., p. 30. “The people are miserable poor, and subsist on fish.”—Hume's Hist., ii, 433. “A scale, which I took great pains, some years since, to make.”—Bucke's Gram., p. 81. “There is no truth on earth so well established as the truth of the Bible.”—Taylor’s District School, p. 288. “I know of no work so much wanted as the one Mr. Taylor has now furnished.”—DR. NOTT: ib., p. ii. “And therefore their requests are seldom and reasonable.”—Taylor: ib., p. 58. “Questions are easier proposed than rightly answered.”—Dillwyn’s Reflections, p. 19. “Often reflect on the advantages you possess, and on the source from whence they are all derived.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 374. “If there be no special Rule which requires it to be put forwarder.”—Milnes’s Greek Gram., p. 234. “The Masculine and Neuter have the same Dialect in all Numbers, especially when they end the same.”—Ib., p. 259.

“And children are more busy in their play
Than those that wisely’st pass their time away.”—Butler, p. 163.

CHAPTER IX.—CONJUNCTIONS.

A Conjunction is a word used to connect words or sentences in construction, and to show the dependence of the terms so connected: as, “Thou and he are happy, because you are good.”—Murray.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Our connective words are of four kinds; namely, relative pronouns, conjunctive adverbs,* conjunctions, and prepositions. These have a certain resemblance to one another, so far as they are all of them connectives; yet there are also characteristic differences by which they may in general be easily distinguished. Relative pronouns represent antecedents, and stand in those relations which we call cases; conjunctive adverbs assume the connective power in addition to their adverbial character, and consequently sustain a double relation; conjunctions, (except the introductory correspondents,) join words or sentences together, showing their relation either to each other or to something else; prepositions, though naturally subject themselves to something going before, assume the government of the terms which follow them, and in this they differ from all the rest.

OBS. 2.—Conjunctions do not express any of the real objects of the understanding, whether things, qualities, or actions, but rather the several modes of connexion or contrast under which these objects are contemplated. Hence conjunctions were said by Aristotle and his followers to be in themselves “devoid of signification,” a notion which Harris, with no great propriety, has adopted in his faulty definition† of this part of speech. It is the office of this class of particles, to link together words, phrases, or sentences, that * De Sacy, in his Principles of General Grammar, calls the relative pronouns “Conjunctive Adjectives.” See Fosdick’s Translation, p. 57. He also says, “The words who, which, etc. are not the only words which connect the function of a Conjunction with another design. There are Conjunctive Nouns and Adverbs, as well as Adjectives; and a characteristic of these words is, that we can substitute for them another form of expression in which shall be found the words who, which, etc. Thus, when, where, what, how, as, and many others, are Conjunctive words: [as,] ‘I shall finish when I please;’ that is, ‘I shall finish at the time at which I please.’—‘I know not where I am;’ i.e. ‘I know not the place in which I am.’”—Ib., p. 58. In respect to the conjunctive adverbs, this is well enough, so far as it goes; but the word who appears to me to be a pronoun, and not an adjective; and of his “Conjunctive Nouns,” he ought to have given us some examples, if he knew of any.

† “Now the Definition of a CONJUNCTION is as follows—a Part of Speech, void of Signification itself, but so formed as to help Signification by making TWO or more significant Sentences to be ONE significant Sentence.”—Harris’s Hermes, 6th Edition, London, p. 238.

would otherwise appear as loose shreds, or unconnected aphorisms; and thus, by various forms of dependence, to give to discourse such continuity as may fit it to convey a connected train of thought or reasoning. The skill or inability of a writer may as strikingly appear in his management of these little connectives, as in that of the longest and most significant words in the language.

“The current is often evinced by the straws,
And the course of the wind by the flight of a feather;
So a speaker is known by his ands and his ors,
Those stitches that fasten his patchwork together.”—Robert F. Mott.

OBS. 3.—Conjunctions sometimes connect entire sentences, and sometimes particular words or phrases only. When one whole sentence is closely linked with an other, both become clauses or members of a more complex sentence; and when one word or phrase is coupled with an other, both have in general a common dependence upon some other word in the same sentence. In etymological parsing, it may be sufficient to name the conjunction as such, and repeat the definition above; but, in syntactical parsing, the learner should always specify the terms connected. In many instances, however, he may conveniently abbreviate his explanation, by parsing the conjunction as connecting “what precedes and what follows;” or, if the terms are transposed, as connecting its own clause to the second, to the third, or to some other clause in the context.

OBS. 4.—However easy it may appear, for even the young parser to name the terms which in any given instance are connected by the conjunction, and of course to know for himself what these terms are,—that is, to know what the conjunction does or does not, connect,—it is certain that a multitude of grammarians and philosophers, great and small, from Aristotle down to the latest modifier of Murray, or borrower from his text, have been constantly contradicting one another, if not themselves, in relation to this matter. Harris avers, that “the Conjunction connects, not Words, but Sentences,” and frames his definition accordingly. See Hermes, p. 237. This doctrine is true of some of the conjunctions, but it is by no means true of them all. He adds, in a note, “Grammarians have usually considered the Conjunction as connecting rather single Parts of Speech, than whole Sentences, and that too with the addition of like with like, Tense with Tense, Number with Number, Case with Case, &c. This Sanctius justly explodes.”—Ib., p. 238. If such has been the usual doctrine of the grammarians, they have erred on the one side, as much as our philosopher, and his learned authorities, on the other. For, in this instance, Harris’s quotations of Latin and Greek writers, prove only that Sanctius, Scaliger, Apollonius, and Aristotle, held the same error that he himself had adopted;—the error which Latham and others now inculcate, that, “There are always two propositions where there is one Conjunction.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, p. 557.

OBS. 5.—The common doctrine of L. Murray and others, that, “Conjunctions connect the same moods and tenses of verbs, and cases of nouns and pronouns,” is not only badly expressed, but is pointedly at variance with their previous doctrine, that, “Conjunctions very often unite sentences, when they appear to unite only words; as in the following instances: ‘Duty and interest forbid vicious indulgences;’ ‘Wisdom or folly governs us.’ Each of these forms of expression,” they absurdly say, “contains two sentences.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 124; Smith’s, 95; Fisk’s, 84; Ingersoll’s, 81. By “the same moods, tenses, or cases,” we must needs here understand some one mood, tense, or case, in which the connected words agree; and, if the conjunction has any thing to do with this agreement, or sameness of mood, tense, or case, it must be because words only, and not sentences, are connected by it. Now, if, that, though, lest, unless, or any other conjunction that introduces the subjunctive, will almost always be found to connect different moods, or rather to subjoin one sentence to another in which there is a different mood. On the contrary, and, as, even, than, or, and nor, though they may be used to connect sentences, do, in very many instances, connect words only; as, “The king and queen are an amiable pair.”—Murray. “And a being of more than human dignity stood before me.”—Dr. Johnson. It cannot be plausibly pretended, that and and than, in these two examples, connect clauses or sentences. So and and or, in the examples above, connect the nouns only, and not “sentences:” else our common rules for the agreement of verbs or pronouns with words connected, are nothing but bald absurdities. It is idle to say, that the construction and meaning are not what they appear to be; and it is certainly absurd to contend, that conjunctions always connect sentences; or always, words only. One author very strangely conceives, that, “Conjunctions may be said either always to connect words only, or always to connect sentences, according to the view which may be taken of them in analyzing.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 77.

OBS. 6.—“Several words belonging to other parts of speech, are occasionally used as conjunctions. Such are the following: provided, except, verbs; both, an adjective; either, neither, that, pronouns; being, seeing, participles; before, since, for, prepositions. I will do it, provided you lend some help. Here provided is a conjunction, that connects the two sentences. ‘Paul said, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.’ Here except is a conjunction. Excepting is also used as a participle and conjunction. ‘Being this reception of the gospel was so anciently foretold.’—Bishop Pearson. ‘Seeing all the congregation are holy.’—Bible. Here being and seeing are used as conjunctions.”—Alexander’s Gram., p. 50. ‘The foregoing remark, though worthy of some attention, is not altogether accurate. Before, when it connects sentences, is not a conjunction, but a conjunctive adverb. Provided, as cited above, resembles not the verb, but the perfect participle. Either and neither, when they are not conjunctions, are pronominal adjectives, rather than pronouns. And, to say, that, “words belonging to other parts of speech, are used as conjunctions,” is a sort of solecism, which leaves the learner in doubt to what class they really belong. Being, and being that, were formerly used in the sense of because, since, or seeing that; (Lat. cum, quoniam, or quando;) but this usage is now obsolete. So there is an uncommon or obsolete use of without, in the sense of unless, or except; (Lat. nisi;) as, “He cannot rise without he be helped.” Walker’s Particles, p. 425. “Non potest nisi adjutus exsurgere.”—Seneca.

CLASSES.

Conjunctions are divided into two general classes, copulative and disjunctive; and a few of each class are particularly distinguished from the rest, as being corresponsive.

I. A copulative conjunction is a conjunction that denotes an addition, a cause, a consequence, or a supposition: as, “He and I shall not dispute; for, if he has any choice, I shall readily grant it.”

II. A disjunctive conjunction is a conjunction that denotes opposition of meaning: as, “Though he were dead, yet shall he live.”—St. John’s Gospel. “Be not faithless, but believing.”—Id.

III. The corresponsive conjunctions are those which are used in pairs, so that one refers or answers to the other: as, “John came neither eating nor drinking.”—Matt., xi, 18. “But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you.”—Ib., xii, 28.

OBS.—Not all terms which stand in the relation of correspondents, or correspondives, are therefore to be reckoned conjunctions; nor are both words in each pair always of the same part of speech: some are adverbs; one or two are adjectives; and sometimes a conjunction answers to a preceding adverb. But, if a word is seen to be the mere precursor, index, introductory sign, or counterpart, of a conjunction, and has no relation or import which should fix it in any other of the ten classes called parts of speech, it is, clearly, a conjunction,—a corresponding or corresponsive conjunction. It is a word used preparatively, “to connect words or sentences in construction, and to show the dependence of the terms so connected.”

LIST OF THE CONJUNCTIONS.

1. The Copulatives; And, as, both, because, even, for, if, that, then, since, seeing, so.
2. The Disjunctives; Or, nor, either, neither, than, though, although, yet, but, except, whether, lest, unless, save, provided, notwithstanding, whereas.
3. The Corresponsives; Both—and; as—as; as—so; if—then; either—or; neither—nor; whether—or; though, or although—yet.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—By some writers, the words, also, since, too, then, therefore, and wherefore, are placed among the copulative conjunctions; and as, so, still, however, and albeit, among the disjunctive; but Johnson and Webster have marked most of these terms as adverbs only. It is perhaps of little moment, by which name they are called; for, in some instances, conjunctions and conjunctive adverbs do not differ very essentially. As, so, even, then, yet, and but, seem to belong sometimes to the one part of speech, and sometimes to the other. I call them adverbs when they chiefly express time, manner, or degree; and conjunctions when they appear to be mere connectives. As, yet, and but, are generally conjunctions; but so, even, and then, are almost always adverbs. Seeing and provided, when used as connectives, are more properly conjunctions than any thing else; though Johnson ranks them with the adverbs, and Webster, by supposing many awkward ellipses, keeps them with the participles. Examples: “For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day.”—Acts, ii, 15. “The senate shall have power to adjourn themselves, provided such adjournment shall not exceed two days at a time.”—Constitution of New Hampshire.

OBS. 2.—Since, when it governs a noun after it, is a preposition: as, “Hast thou commanded the morning since thy days?”—Job. Albeit is equivalent in sense to although, and is properly a conjunction; but this old compound is now nearly or quite obsolete. As is sometimes a relative pronoun, sometimes a conjunctive adverb, and sometimes a copulative conjunction. Example of the last: “We present ourselves as petitioners.” If as is ever disjunctive, it is not so here; nor can we parse it as an adverb, because it comes between two words that are essentially in apposition. The equivalent Latin term quasi is called an adverb, but, in such a case, not very properly: as, “Et colles quasi pulverem pones;”—“And thou shalt make the hills as chaff.”—Isaiah, xli, 15. So even, which in English is frequently a sign of emphatic repetition, seems sometimes to be rather a conjunction than an adverb: as, “I, even I, am the Lord.”—Isaiah, xliii, 11.

OBS. 3.—Save and saving, when they denote exception, are not adverbs, as Johnson denominates them, or a verb and a participle, as Webster supposes them to be, or prepositions, as Covell esteems them, but disjunctive conjunctions; and, as such, they take the same case after as before them; as, “All the conspirators, save only he, did that they did, in envy of great Cæsar.”—Shak. “All this world’s glory seemeth vain, and all their shows but shadows, saving she.”—Spenser. “Israel burned none of them, save Hazor only.”—Joshua. xi, 13. “And none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian.”—Luke, iv, 27. Save is not here a transitive verb, for Hazor was not saved in any sense, but utterly destroyed; nor is Naaman here spoken of as being saved by an other leper, but as being cleansed when others were not. These two conjunctions are now little used; and therefore the propriety of setting the nominative after them and treating them as conjunctions, is the more apt to be doubted. The Rev. Matt. Harrison, after citing five examples, four of which have the nominative with save, adds, without naming the part of speech, or assigning any reason, this decision, which I think erroneous: “In all these passages, save requires after it the objective case.” His five examples are these: “All, save I, were at rest, and enjoyment.”—Frankenstein. “There was no stranger with us, in the house, save we two.”—1 Kings, iii, 18.

“And nothing wanting is, save she, alas!”—DRUMMOND of Hawthornden.

“When all slept sound, save she, who bore them both.”—ROGERS, Italy, p. 108.

“And all were gone, save him, who now kept guard.”—Ibid., p. 185.

OBS. 4.—The conjunction if is sometimes used in the Bible to express, not a supposition of what follows it, but an emphatic negation: as, “I have sworn in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest.”—Heb., iv, 3. That is, that they shall not enter. The same peculiarity is found in the Greek text, and also in the Latin, and other versions. Or, in the obsolete phrase, “or ever,” is not properly a conjunction, but a conjunctive adverb of time, meaning before. It is supposed to be a corruption of ere: as, “I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was.”—Prov., viii, 23. “And we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.”—Acts, xxiii, 15. This term derives no support from the original text.

OBS. 5.—There are some peculiar phrases, or combinations of words, which have the force of conjunctions, and which it is not very easy to analyze satisfactorily in parsing: as, “And for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken.”—John, xxi, 11. Here for all is equivalent to although, or notwithstanding; either of which words would have been more elegant. Nevertheless is composed of three words, and is usually reckoned a conjunctive adverb; but it might as well be called a disjunctive conjunction, for it is obviously equivalent to yet, but, or notwithstanding; as, “I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me.”—Gal., ii, 20. Here, for nevertheless and but, we have in the Greek the same particle δὲ. “Each man’s mind has some peculiarity, as well as his face.”—Locke. “Relative pronouns, as well as conjunctions, serve to connect sentences.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 124. Here the first as corresponds to the second, but well not being used in the literal sense of an adverb, some judicious grammarians take the whole phrase as a conjunction. It is, however, susceptible of division: as, “It is adorned with admirable pieces of sculpture, as well modern as ancient.”—Addison.

OBS. 6.—So the phrases, for as much as, in as much as, in so much that, if taken collectively, have the nature of conjunctions; yet they contain within themselves correspondent terms and several different parts of speech. The words are sometimes printed separately, and sometimes partly together. Of late years, forasmuch, inasmuch, insomuch, have been usually compounded, and called adverbs. They might as well, perhaps, be called conjunctions, as they were by some of our old grammarians; for two conjunctions sometimes come together: as, “Answering their questions, as if * it were a matter that needed it.”—Locke. “These should be at first gently treated, as though we expected an imposthumation,”—Sharp. “But there are many things which we must acknowledge to be true, notwithstanding that we cannot comprehend them.”—Beattie’s Moral Science, p. 211. “There is no difference, except that some are heavier than others.”—“We may be playful, and yet innocent; grave, and yet corrupt.”—Murray’s Key, p. 166.

OBS. 7.—Conjunctions have no grammatical modifications, and are consequently incapable of any formal agreement or disagreement with other words; yet their import as connectives, copulative or disjunctive, must be carefully observed, lest we write or speak them improperly. Example of error: “Prepositions are generally set before nouns and pronouns.”—Wilbur’s Gram., p. 20. Here and should be or, because, although a preposition usually governs a noun or a pronoun, it seldom governs both at once. And besides, the assertion above seems very naturally to mean, that nouns and pronouns are generally preceded by prepositions—as gross an error as dullness could invent! L. Murray also says of prepositions: “They are, for the most part, put before nouns and pronouns.”—Gram., p. 117. So Felton: “They generally stand before nouns and pronouns.”—Analytic and Prac. Gram., p. 61. The blunder however came originally from Lowth, and out of the following admirable enigma: “Prepositions, standing by themselves in construction, are put before nouns and pronouns; and sometimes after verbs; but in this sort of composition they are chiefly prefixed to verbs: as, to outgo, to overcome.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 66.

OBS. 8.—The opposition suggested by the disjunctive particle or, is sometimes merely nominal, or verbal: as, “That object is a triangle, or figure contained under three right lines.”—Harris. “So if we say, that figure is a sphere, or a globe, or a ball.”—Id., Hermes, p. 258. In these cases, the disjunction consists in nothing but an alternative of words; for the terms connected describe or name the same thing. For this sense of or, the Latins had a peculiar particle, sive, which they called Subdisjunctiva, a Subdisjunctive: as, “Alexander sive Paris; Mars sive Mavors.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 258. In English, the conjunction or is very frequently equivocal: as, “They were both more ancient than Zoroaster or Zerdusht.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 250; Murray’s Gram., p. 297. Here, if the reader does not happen to know that Zoroaster and Zerdusht mean the same person, he will be very likely to mistake the sense. To avoid this ambiguity, we substitute, (in judicial proceedings,) the Latin adverb alias, otherwise; using it as a conjunction subdisjunctive, in lieu of or, or the Latin sive: as, “Alexander, alias Ellick.”—“Simson, alias Smith, alias Baker.”—Johnson’s Dict.

---

* Whether these, or any other conjunctions that come together, ought to be parsed together, is doubtful. I am not in favour of taking any words together, that can well be parsed separately. Goodenow, who defines a phrase to be “the union of two or more words having the nature and construction of a single word,” finds an immense number of these unions, which he cannot, or does not, analyze. As examples of “a conjunctive phrase,” he gives “as if” and “as though.”—Gram., p. 25. But when he comes to speak of ellipsis, he says: “After the conjunctions than, as, but, &c., some words are generally understood; as, ‘We have more than [that is which] will suffice;’ ‘He acted as [he would act] if he were mad.’”—Ib., p. 41. This doctrine is plainly repugnant to the other.

EXAMPLES FOR PARSING.

PRAXIS IX.—ETYMOLOGICAL.

In the Ninth Praxis, it is required of the pupil—to distinguish and define the different parts of speech, and the classes and modifications of the ARTICLES, NOUNS, ADJECTIVES, PRONOUNS, VERBS, PARTICIPLES, ADVERBS, and CONJUNCTIONS.

The definitions to be given in the Ninth Praxis, are two for an article, six for a noun, three for an adjective, six for a pronoun, seven for a verb finite, five for an infinitive, two for a participle, two (and sometimes three) for an adverb, two for a conjunction,—and one for a preposition, or an interjection. Thus:—

EXAMPLE PARSED.

“If thou hast done a good deed, boast not of it.”—Maxims.

If is a copulative conjunction. 1. A conjunction is a word used to connect words or sentences in construction, and to show the dependence of the terms so connected. 2. A copulative conjunction is a conjunction that denotes an addition, a cause, a consequence, or a supposition.

Thou is a personal pronoun, of the second person, singular number, masculine gender, and nominative case. 1. A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun. 2. A personal pronoun is a pronoun that shows, by its form, of what person it is. 3. The second person is that which denotes the hearer, or the person addressed. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The masculine gender is that which denotes persons or animals of the male kind. 6. The nominative case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the subject of a finite verb.

Hast done is an irregular active-transitive verb, from do, did, doing, done; found in the indicative mood, perfect tense, second person, and singular number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act or to be acted upon. 2. An irregular verb is a verb that does not form the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. An active-transitive verb is a verb that expresses an action which has some person or thing for its object. 4. The indicative mood is that form of the verb, which simply indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question. 5. The perfect tense is that which expresses what has taken place, within some period of time not yet fully past. 6. The second person is that which denotes the hearer, or the person addressed. 7. The singular number is that which denotes but one.

A is the indefinite article. 1. An article is the word the, an, or a, which we put before nouns to limit their signification. 2. The indefinite article is an or a, which denotes one thing of a kind, but not any particular one.

Good is a common adjective, of the positive degree; compared irregularly, good, better, best. 1. An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, and generally expresses quality. 2. A common adjective is any ordinary epithet, or adjective denoting quality or situation. 3. The positive degree is that which is expressed by the adjective in its simple form.

Deed is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle or preposition.

Boast is a regular active-intransitive verb, from boast, boasted, boasting, boasted; found in the imperative mood, present tense, second person, and singular number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act or to be acted upon. 2. A regular verb is a verb that forms the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. An active-intransitive verb is a verb that expresses an action which has no person or thing for its object. 4. The imperative mood is that form of the verb, which is used in commanding, exhorting, entreating, or permitting. 5. The present tense is that which expresses what now exists, or is taking place. 6. The second person is that which denotes the hearer, or the person addressed. 7. The singular number is that which denotes but one.

Not is an adverb or manner, expressing negation. 1. An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner. 2. Adverbs of manner are those which answer to the question, How? or, by affirming, denying, or doubting, show how a subject is regarded. Of is a preposition. 1. A preposition is a word used to express some relation of different things or thoughts to each other, and is generally placed before a noun or a pronoun.

It is a personal pronoun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case. 1. A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun. 2. A personal pronoun is a pronoun that shows, by its form, of what person it is. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle, or preposition.

LESSON I.—PARSING.

“In all gratifications, disgust ever lies nearest to the highest pleasures; and therefore let us not marvel, if this is peculiarly the case in eloquence. By glancing at either poets or orators, we may easily satisfy ourselves, that neither a poem nor an oration which aims continually at what is fine, showy, and sparkling, can please us long. Wherefore, though we may wish for the frequent praise of having expressed ourselves well and properly, we should not covet repeated applause for being bright and splendid.”—CICERO, de Oratore.

“The foundation of eloquence, as well as of every other high attainment, is practical wisdom. For it happens in oratory, as in life, that nothing is more difficult, than to discern what is proper and becoming. Through lack of such discernment, gross faults are very often committed. For neither to all ranks, fortunes, and ages, nor to every time, place, and auditory, can the same style either of language or of sentiment be adapted. In every part of a discourse, as in every part of life, we must consider what is suitable and decent; and this must be determined with reference both to the matter in question, and to the personal character of those who speak and those who hear.”—CICERO, Orator ad Brutum.

“So spake th’ Omnipotent, and with his words
All seem’d well pleas’d; all seem’d, but were not all.”—Milton.

LESSON II.—PARSING.

“A square, though not more regular than a hexagon or an octagon, is more beautiful than either: for what reason, but that a square is more simple, and the attention is less divided?”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 175.

“We see the material universe in motion; but matter is inert; and, so far as we know, nothing can move it but mind: therefore God is a spirit. We do not mean that his nature is the same as that of our soul; for it is infinitely more excellent. But we mean, that he possesses intelligence and active power in supreme perfection; and, as these qualities do not belong to matter, which is neither active nor intelligent, we must refer them to that which is not matter, but mind.”—Beattie’s Moral Science, p. 210.

“Men are generally permitted to publish books, and contradict others, and even themselves, as they please, with as little danger of being confuted, as of being understood.”—Boyle.

“Common reports, if ridiculous rather than dangerous, are best refuted by neglect.”—Kames’s Thinking, p. 76.

“No man is so foolish, but that he may give good counsel at a time; no man so wise, but he may err, if he take no counsel but his own.”—Ib., p. 97.

“Young heads are giddy, and young hearts are warm,
And make mistakes for manhood to reform.”—Cowper.

LESSON III.—PARSING.

“The Nouns denote substances, and those either natural, artificial, or abstract. They moreover denote things either general, or special, or particular. The Pronouns, their substitutes, are either prepositive, or subjunctive.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 85.

“In a thought, generally speaking, there is at least one capital object considered as acting or as suffering. This object is expressed by a substantive noun: its action is expressed by an active verb; and the thing affected by the action is expressed by an other substantive noun: its suffering, or passive state, is expressed by a passive verb; and the thing that acts upon it, by a substantive noun. Beside these, which are the capital parts of a sentence, or period, there are generally underparts; each of the substantives, as well as the verb, may be qualified: time, place, purpose, motive, means, instrument, and a thousand other circumstances, may be necessary to complete the thought.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 34.

“Yet those whom pride and dullness join to blind,
To narrow cares and narrow space confined,
Though with big titles each his fellow greets,
Are but to wits, as scavengers to streets.”—Mallet.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

ERRORS RESPECTING CONJUNCTIONS.

“A Verb is so called from the Latin verbum, or word.”—Bucke’s Classical Gram., p. 56.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the conjunction or, connecting verbum and word, supposes the latter to be Latin. But, according to Observation 7th, on the Classes of Conjunctions, “The import of connectives, copulative or disjunctive, must be carefully observed, lest we write or speak them improperly.” In this instance, or should be changed to a; thus, “A Verb is so called from the Latin verbum, a word” that is, “which means, a word.”]

“References are often marked by letters and figures.”—Gould’s Adam’s Gram., p. 283. (1.) “A Conjunction is a word which joins words and sentences together.”—Lennie’s E. Gram., p. 51; Bullions’s, 70; Brace’s, 57. (2.) “A conjunction is used to connect words and sentences together.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 37. (3.) “A conjunction is used to connect words and sentences.”—Maunders Gram., p. 1. (4.) “Conjunctions are words used to join words and sentences.”—Wilcox’s Gram., p. 3. (5.) “A Conjunction is a word used to connect words and sentences.”—M’Culloch’s Gram., p. 36; Hart’s, 92; Day’s, 10. (6.) “A Conjunction joins words and sentences together.”—Mackintosh’s Gram., p. 115; Hiley’s, 10 and 53. (7.) “The Conjunction joins words and sentences together.”—L. Murray’s Gram., 2d Edition, p. 28. (8.) “Conjunctions connect words and sentences to each other.”—Wright’s Gram., p. 35. (9.) “Conjunctions connect words and sentences.”—Wilcox’s Gram., p. 80; Wells’s, 1st Ed., 159 and 168. (10.) “The conjunction is a part of speech used to connect words and sentences.”—Weld’s Gram., 2d Ed., p. 49. (11.) “A conjunction is a word used to connect words and sentences together.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., §329. (12.) “Connectives are words which unite words and sentences in construction.”—Webster’s Philos. Gram., p. 123; Improved Gram., 81. “English Grammar is miserably taught in our district schools; the teachers know but little or nothing about it.”—Taylor’s District School, p. 48. “Least, instead of preventing, you draw on Diseases.”—Locke, on Ed., p. 40. “The definite article the is frequently applied to adverbs in the comparative and superlative degree.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 33; Ingersoll’s, 33; Lennie’s, 6; Bullions’s, 8; Fisk’s, 53, and others. “When nouns naturally neuter are converted into masculine and feminine.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 38. “This form of the perfect tense represents an action completely past, and often at no great distance, but not specified.”—Ib., p. 74. “The Conjunction Copulative serves to connect or to continue a sentence, by expressing an addition, a supposition, a cause, &c.”—Ib., p. 123. “The Conjunction Disjunctive serves, not only to connect and continue the sentence, but also to express opposition of meaning in different degrees.”—Ib., p. 123. “Whether we open the volumes of our divines, philosophers, historians, or artists, we shall find that they abound with all the terms necessary to communicate their observations and discoveries.”—Ib., p. 138. “When a disjunctive occurs between a singular noun, or pronoun, and a plural one, the verb is made to agree with the plural noun and pronoun.”—Ib., p. 152: R. G. Smith, Alger, Gomly, Merchant, Picket, et al. “Pronouns must always agree with their antecedents, and the nouns for which they stand, in gender and number.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 154. “Verbs neuter do not act upon, or govern, nouns and pronouns.”—Ib., p. 179. “And the auxiliary both of the present and past imperfect times.”—Ib., p. 72. “If this rule should not appear to apply to every example, which has been produced, nor to others which might be adduced.”—Ib., p. 216. “An emphatical pause is made, after something has been said of peculiar moment, and on which we desire to fix the hearer’s attention.”—Ib., p. 248; Hart’s Gram., 175. “An imperfect phrase contains no assertion, or does not amount to a proposition or sentence.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 267. “The word was in the mouth of every one, but for all that, the subject may still be a secret.”—Ib., p. 213. “A word it was in the mouth of every one, but for all that, as to its precise and definite idea, this may still be a secret.”—Harris’s Three Treatises, p. 5. “It cannot be otherwise, in regard that the French prosody differs from that of every other country in Europe.”—Smollett’s Voltaire, ix, 306. “So gradually as to allow its being engrafted on a subtonic.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. 255. “Where the Chelsea or Maiden bridges now are.”—Judge Parker. “Adverbs are words joined to verbs, participles, adjectives, and other adverbs.”—Smith’s Productive Gram., p. 92. “I could not have told you, who the hermit was, nor on what mountain he lived.”—Bucke’s Classical Gram., p. 32. “Am, or be (for they are the same) naturally, or in themselves signify being.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. 113. “Words are distinct sounds, by which we express our thoughts and ideas.”—Infant School Gram., p. 13. “His fears will detect him, but he shall not escape.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 64. “Whose is equally applicable to persons or things.”—WEBSTER in Sanborn’s Gram., p. 95. “One negative destroys another, or is equivalent to an affirmative.”—Bullions, Eng. Gram., p. 118.

“No sooner does he peep into
The world, but he has done his do.”—Hudibras.

CHAPTER X.—PREPOSITIONS.

A Preposition is a word used to express some relation of different things or thoughts to each other, and is generally placed before a noun or a pronoun: as, “The paper lies before me on the desk.”

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—The relations of things to things in nature, or of words to words in discourse, are infinite in number, if not also in variety. But just classification may make even infinites the subjects of sure science. Every relation of course implies more objects, and more terms, than one; for any one thing, considered merely in itself, is taken independently, abstractly, irrelatively, as if it had no relation or dependence. In all correct language, the grammatical relation of the words corresponds exactly to the relation of the things or ideas expressed; for the relation of words, is their dependence, or connexion, according to the sense. This relation is oftentimes immediate, as of one word to an other, without the intervention of a preposition; but it is seldom, if ever, reciprocally equal; because dependence implies subordination; and mere adjunction is a sort of inferiority.

OBS. 2.—To a preposition, the prior or antecedent term may be a noun, an adjective, a pronoun, a verb, a participle, or an adverb; and the subsequent or governed term may be a noun, a pronoun, a pronominal adjective, an infinitive verb, or a participle. In some instances, also, as in the phrases, in vain, on high, at once, till now, for ever, by how much, until then, from thence, from above, we find adjectives used elliptically, and adverbs substantively, after the preposition. But, in phrases of an adverbial character, what is elsewhere a preposition often becomes an adverb. Now, if prepositions are concerned in expressing the various relations of so many of the different parts of speech, multiplied, as these relations must be, by that endless variety of combinations which may be given to the terms; and if the sense of the writer or speaker is necessarily mistaken, as often as any of these relations are misunderstood, or their terms misconceived; how shall we estimate the importance of a right explanation, and a right use, of this part of speech?

OBS. 3.—The grammarian whom Lowth compliments, as excelling all others, in “acuteness of investigation, perspicuity of explication, and elegance of method;” and as surpassing all but Aristotle, in the beauty and perfectness of his philological analysis; commences his chapter on conjunctions in the following manner: “Connectives are the subject of what follows; which, according as they connect either Sentences or Words, are called by the different Names of Conjunctions OR Prepositions. Of these Names, that of the Preposition is taken from a mere accident, as it commonly stands in connection before the Part, which it connects. The name of the Conjunction, as is evident, has reference to its essential character. Of these two we shall consider the Conjunction first, because it connects, not Words, but Sentences.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 237.

OBS. 4.—In point of order, it is not amiss to treat conjunctions before prepositions; though this is not the method of Lowth, or of Murray. But, to any one who is well acquainted with these two parts of speech, the foregoing passage cannot but appear, in three sentences out of the four, both defective in style and erroneous in doctrine. It is true, that conjunctions generally connect sentences, and that prepositions as generally express relations between particular words: but it is true also, that conjunctions often connect words only; and that prepositions, by governing antecedents, relatives, or even personal pronouns, may serve to subjoin sentences to sentences, as well as to determine the relation and construction of the particular words which they govern. Example: “The path seems now plain and even, but there are asperities and pitfalls, over which Religion only can conduct you.”—Dr. Johnson. Here are three simple sentences, which are made members of one compound sentence, by means of but and over which; while two of these members, clauses, or subdivisions, contain particular words connected by and.

OBS. 5.—In one respect, the preposition is the simplest of all the parts of speech: in our common schemes of grammar, it has neither classes nor modifications. Every connective word that governs an object after it, is called a preposition, because it does so; and in etymological parsing, to name the preposition as such, and define the name, is, perhaps, all that is necessary. But in syntactical parsing, in which we are to omit the definitions, and state the construction, we ought to explain what terms the preposition connects, and to give a rule adapted to this office of the particle. It is a palpable defect in nearly all our grammars, that their syntax contains NO SUCH RULE. “Prepositions govern the objective case,” is a rule for the objective case, and not for the syntax of prepositions. “Prepositions show the relations of words, and of the things or thoughts expressed by them,” is the principle for the latter; a principle which we cannot neglect, without a shameful lameness in our interpretation;—that is, when we pretend to parse syntactically.

OBS. 6.—Prepositions and their objects very often precede the words on which they depend, and sometimes at a great distance. Of this we have an example, at the opening of Milton’s Paradise Lost; where “Of,” the first word, depends upon “Sing,” in the sixth line below; for the meaning is—“Sing of man’s first disobedience,” &c. To find the terms of the relation, is to find the meaning of the passage; a very useful exercise, provided the words have a meaning which is worth knowing. The following text has for centuries afforded ground of dispute, because it is doubtful in the original, as well as in many of the versions, whether the preposition in (i. e., “in the regeneration”) refers back to have followed, or forward to the last verb shall sit: “Verily I say unto you that ye who have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.”—Matt., xix, 28. The second in is manifestly wrong: the Greek word is ἐνι, on or upon; i. e., “upon the throne of his glory.”

OBS. 7.—The prepositions have, from their own nature, or from custom, such an adaptation to particular terms and relations, that they can seldom be used one for another without manifest impropriety. Example of error: “Proper seasons should be allotted for retirement.”—Murray’s Key, p. 173. We do not say “allotted for,” but “allotted to,” hence for is either wrong in itself or misplaced. Such errors always vex an intelligent reader. He sees the terms mismatched, the intended connection doubtful, the sense obscured, and wishes the author could have valued his own meaning enough to have made it intelligible;—that is, (to speak technically,) enough to have made it a certain clew to his syntax. We can neither parse nor correct what we do not understand. Did the writer mean, “Proper seasons should be allotted to retirement?”—or, “Proper seasons for retirement should be allotted?”—or, “Seasons proper for retirement should be allotted?” Every expression is incorrigibly bad, the meaning of which cannot be known. Expression? Nay, expression it is not, but only a mock utterance or an abortive attempt at expression.

OBS. 8.—Harris observes, in substance, though in other words, that almost all the prepositions were originally formed to denote relations of place; that this class of relations is primary, being that which natural bodies maintain at all times one to another; that in the continuity of place these bodies form the universe, or visible whole; that we have some prepositions to denote the contiguous relation of bodies, and others for the detached relation; and that both have, by degrees, been extended from local relations, to the relations of subjects incorporeal. He appears also to assume, that, in such examples as the following,—“Caius walketh with a staff;”—“The statue stood upon a pedestal;”—“The river ran over a sand;”—“He is going to Turkey;”—“The sun is risen above the hills;”—“These figs came from Turkey;”—the antecedent term of the relation is not the verb, but the noun or pronoun before it. See Hermes, pp. 266 and 267. Now the true antecedent is, unquestionably, that word which, in the order of the sense, the preposition should immediately follow: and a verb, a participle, or an adjective, may sustain this relation, just as well as a substantive. “The man spoke of colour,” does not mean, “The man of colour spoke,” nor does, “The member from Delaware replied,” mean, “The member replied from Delaware”

OBS. 9.—To make this matter more clear, it may be proper to observe further, that what I call the order of the sense, is not always that order of the words which is fittest to express the sense of a whole period; and that the true antecedent is that word to which the preposition, and its object would naturally be subjoined, were there nothing to interfere with such an arrangement. In practice it often happens, that the preposition and its object cannot be placed immediately after the word on which they depend, and which they would naturally follow. For example: “She hates the means by which she lives.” That is, “She hates the means which she lives by.” Here we cannot say, “She hates the means she lives by which,” and yet, in regard to the preposition by, this is really the order of the sense. Again: “Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him.”—Prov., xxvii, 23. Here is no transposition to affect our understanding of the prepositions, yet there is a liability to error, because the words which immediately precede some of them, are not their true antecedents: the text does not really speak of “a mortar among wheat” or of “wheat with a pestle.” To what then are the mortar, the wheat, and the pestle, to be mentally subjoined? If all of them, to any one thing, it must be to the action suggested by the verb bray, and not to its object fool; for the text does not speak of “a fool with a pestle,” though it does seem to speak of “a fool in a mortar, and among wheat.” Indeed, in this instance, as in many others, the verb and its object are so closely associated that it makes but little difference in regard to the sense, whether you take both of them together, or either of them separately, as the antecedent to the preposition. But, as the instrument of an action is with the agent rather than with the object, if you will have the substantives alone for antecedents, the natural order of the sense must be supposed to be this: “Though thou with a pestle shouldest bray a, fool in a mortar [and] among wheat, yet will not his foolishness from him depart.” This gives to each of the prepositions an antecedent different from that which I should assign. Sanborn observes, “There seem to be two kinds of relation expressed by prepositions,—an existing and a connecting relation.”—Analyt. Gram., p. 225. The latter, he adds, “is the most important.”—Ib., p. 226. But it is the former that admits nothing but nouns for antecedents. Others besides Harris may have adopted this notion, but I have never been one of the number, though a certain author scruples not to charge the error upon me. See O. B Peirce’s Gram., p. 165.

OBS. 10.—It is a very common error among grammarians, and the source of innumerable discrepancies in doctrine, as well as one of the chief means of maintaining their interminable disputes, that they suppose ellipses at their own pleasure, and supply in every given instance just what words their fancies may suggest. In this work, I adopt for myself, and also recommend to others, the contrary course of avoiding on all occasions the supposition of any needless ellipses. Not only may the same preposition govern more than one object, but there may also be more than one antecedent word, bearing a joint relation to that which is governed by the preposition. (1.) Examples of joint objects: “There is an inseparable connection BETWEEN piety and virtue.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 171. “In the conduct of Parmenio, a mixture OF wisdom and folly was very conspicuous.”—Ib., p. 178. “True happiness is an enemy TO pomp and noise”—Ib., p. 171. (2.) Examples of joint antecedents: “In unity consist the welfare and security OF every society.”—Ib., p. 182. “It is our duty to be just and kind TO our fellow—creatures, and to be pious and faithful TO Him that made us.”—Ib., p. 181. If the author did not mean to speak of being pious to God as well as faithful to Him, he has written incorrectly: a comma after pious, would alter both the sense and the construction. So the text, “For I am meek, and lowly in heart,” is commonly perverted in our Bibles, for want of a comma after meek. The Saviour did not say, he was meek in heart: the Greek may be very literally rendered thus: “For gentle am I, and humble in heart.”

OBS. 11.—Many writers seem to suppose, that no preposition can govern more than one object. Thus L. Murray, and his followers: “The ellipsis of the preposition, as well as of the verb, is seen in the following instances: ‘He went into the abbeys, halls, and public buildings;’ that is, ‘He went into the abbeys, he went into the halls, and he went into the public buildings.’—‘He also went through all the streets, and lanes of the city;’ that is, ‘Through all the streets, and through all the lanes,’ &c.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 219. See the same interpretations in Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 155; Merchant’s, 100; Picket’s, 211; Alger’s, 73; Fish’s, 147; Guy’s, 91; Adams’s, 82; R. C. Smith’s, 183; Hamlin’s, 105; Putnam’s, 139; Weld’s, 292. Now it is plain, that in neither of these examples is there any such ellipsis at all. Of the three prepositions, the first governs three nouns; the second, two; and the third, one only. But the last, (which is of,) has two antecedents, streets and lanes, the comma after streets being wrong; for the author does not speak of all the streets in the world, but of all the streets and lanes of a particular city. Dr. Ash has the same example without the comma, and supposes it only an ellipsis of the preposition through, and even that supposition is absurd. He also furnished the former example, to show an ellipsis, not of the verb went, but only of the preposition into; and in this too he was utterly wrong. See Ash's Gram., p. 100. Bicknell also, whose grammar appeared five years before Murray's, confessedly copied the same examples from Ash; and repeated, not the verb and its nominative, but only the prepositions through and into, agreeably to Ash's erroneous notion. See his Grammatical Wreath, Part i, p. 124. Again the principles of Murray's supposed ellipses, are as inconsistent with each other, as they are severally absurd. Had the author explained the second example according to his notion of the first, he should have made it to mean, 'He also went through all the streets of the city, and he also went through all the lanes of the city.' What a pretty idea is this for a principle of grammar! And what a multitude of admirers are pretending to carry it out in parsing! One of the latest writers on grammar says, that, "Between him and me" signifies, "Between him, and between me!"—Wright's Philosophical Gram., p. 206. And an other absurdly resolves a simple sentence into a compound one, thus: "There was a difficulty between John, and his brother.' That is, there was a difficulty between John, and there was a difficulty between his brother."—James Brown's English Syntax, p. 127; and again, p. 130.

OBS. 12.—Two prepositions are not unfrequently connected by a conjunction, and that for different purposes, thus: (1.) To express two different relations at once; as, "The picture of my travels in and around Michigan."—Society in America, i, 231. (2.) To suggest an alternative in the relation affirmed; as, "The action will be fully accomplished at or before the time."—Murray's Gram., i, 72. Again: "The First Future Tense represents the action as yet to come, either with or without respect to the precise time."—Ib.; and Felton's Gram., p. 23. With and without being direct opposites, this alternative is a thing of course, and the phrase is an idle truism. (3.) To express two relations so as to affirm the one and deny the other; as, "Captain, yourself are the fittest to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people."—Dryden. Here, perhaps, "the people" may be understood after over. (4.) To suggest a mere alternative of words; as, "NEGATIVELY, adv. With or by denial."—Webster's Dict. (5.) To add a similar word, for aid or force; as, "Hence adverbs of time were necessary, over and above the tenses."—See Murray's Gram., p. 116. "To take effect from and after the first day of May."—Newspaper.

OBS. 13.—In some instances, two prepositions come directly together, so as jointly to express a sort of compound relation between what precedes the one and what follows the other: as, "And they shall sever the wicked from among the just."—Matt., xiii, 49. "Moses brought out all the rods from before the Lord."—Numb., xvii, 9. "Come out from among them."—2 Cor., vi, 17. "From Judea, and from beyond Jordan."—Matt. iv, 25. "Nor a lawgiver from between his feet."—Gen., xlix, 10. Thus the preposition from, being itself adapted to the ideas of motion and separation, easily coincides with any preposition of place, to express this sort of relation; the terms however have a limited application, being used only between a verb and a noun, because the relation itself is between motion and the place of its beginning: as, "The sand slided from beneath my feet."—Dr. Johnson. In this manner, we may form complex prepositions beginning with from, to the number of about thirty; as, from amidst, from around, from before, from behind, &c. Besides these, there are several others, of a more questionable character, which are sometimes referred to the same class; as, according to, as to, as for, because of, instead of, off of, out of, over against, and round about. Most or all of these are sometimes resolved in a different way, upon the assumption that the former word is an adverb; yet we occasionally find some of them compounded by the hyphen: as, "Pompey's lieutenants, Afranius and Petreius, who lay over-against him, decamp suddenly."—Rowe's Lucan, Argument to B. iv. But the common fashion is, to write them separately; as, "One thing is set over against an other."—Bible.

OBS. 14.—It is not easy to fix a principle by which prepositions may in all cases be distinguished from adverbs. The latter, we say, do not govern the objective case; and if we add, that the former do severally require some object after them, it is clear that any word which precedes a preposition, must needs be something else than a preposition. But this destroys all the doctrine of the preceding paragraph, and admits of no such thing as a complex preposition; whereas that doctrine is acknowledged, to some extent or other, by every one of our grammarians, not excepting even those whose counter-assertions leave no room for it. Under these circumstances, I see no better way, than to refer the student to the definitions of these parts of speech, to exhibit examples in all needful variety, and then let him judge for himself what disposition ought to be made of those words which different grammarians parse differently.

OBS. 15.—If our prepositions were to be divided into classes, the most useful distinction would be, to divide them into Single and Double. The distinction which some writers make, who divide them into “Separable and Inseparable,” is of no use at all in parsing, because the latter are mere syllables; and the idea of S. R. Hall, who divides them into “Possessive and Relative,” is positively absurd; for he can show us only one of the former kind, and that one, (the word of,) is not always such. A Double Preposition, if such a thing is admissible, is one that consists of two words which in syntactical parsing must be taken together, because they jointly express the relation between two other terms; as, “The waters were dried up from off the earth.”—Gen., viii, 13. “The clergy kept this charge from off us.”—Leslie, on Tithes, p. 221. “Confidence in an unfaithful man in time of trouble, is like a broken tooth, and a foot out of joint.”—Prov., xxv, 19. “The beam out of the timber shall answer it.”—Hab., ii, 11. Off and out are most commonly adverbs, but neither of them can be called an adverb here.

OBS. 16.—Again, if according to or as to is a preposition, then is according or as a preposition also, although it does not of itself govern the objective case. As, thus used, is called a conjunction by some, an adverb by others. Dr. Webster considers according to be always a participle, and expressly says, “It is never a preposition.”—Octavo Dict. The following is an instance in which, if it is not a preposition, it is a participle: “This is a construction not according to the rules of grammar.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. ii, p. 22. But according to and contrary to are expressed in Latin and Greek by single prepositions; and if to alone is the preposition in English, then both according and contrary must, in many instances, be adverbs. Example: “For dost thou sit as judging me according to the law, and contrary to law command me to be smitten?” (See the Greek of Acts, xxiii, 3.) Contrary, though literally an adjective, is often made either an adverb, or a part of a complex preposition, unless the grammarians are generally in error respecting it: as, “He dares not act contrary to his instructions.”—Murray’s Key, p. 179.

OBS. 17.—J. W. Wright, with some appearance of analogy on his side, but none of usage, everywhere adds ly to the questionable word according; as, “We are usually estimated accordingly to our company.”—Philosophical Gram., p. 127. “Accordingly to the forms in which they are employed.”—Ib., p. 137. “Accordingly to the above principles, the adjective ACCORDING (or agreeable) is frequently, but improperly, substituted for the adverb ACCORDINGLY (or agreeably.)”—Ib., p. 145. The word contrary he does not notice; but, on the same principle, he would doubtless say, “He dares not act contrarily to his instructions.” We say indeed, “He acted agreeably to his instructions;”—and not, “He acted agreeable to his instructions.” It must also be admitted, that the adverbs accordingly and contrarily are both of them good English words. If these were adopted, where the character of according and contrary is disputable, there would indeed be no longer any occasion to call these latter either adverbs or prepositions. But the fact is, that no good writers have yet preferred them, in such phrases; and the adverbial ending ly gives an additional syllable to a word that seems already quite too long.

OBS. 18.—Instead is reckoned an adverb by some, a preposition by others; and a few write instead-of with a needless hyphen. The best way of settling the grammatical question respecting this term, is, to write the noun stead as a separate word, governed by in. Bating the respect that is due to anomalous usage, there would be more propriety in compounding in quest of, in lieu of, and many similar phrases. For stead is not always followed by of, nor always preceded by in, nor always made part of a compound. We say, in our stead, in your stead, in their stead, &c.; but lieu, which has the same meaning as stead, is much more limited in construction. Examples: “In the stead of sinners, He, a divine and human person, suffered.”—Barnes’s Notes. “Christ suffered in the place and stead of sinners.”—Ib. “For, in its primary sense, is pro, loco alterius, in the stead or place of another.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 65.

“If it may stand him more in stead to lie.”—Milt., P. L., B. i, l. 473.

“But here thy sword can do thee little stead.”—Id., Comus, l. 611.

OBS. 19.—From forth and from out are two poetical phrases, apparently synonymous, in which there is a fanciful transposition of the terms, and perhaps a change of forth and out from adverbs to prepositions. Each phrase is equivalent in meaning to out of or out from. Forth, under other circumstances, is never a preposition; though out, perhaps, may be. We speak as familiarly of going out doors, as of going up stairs, or down cellar. Hence from out may be parsed as a complex preposition, though the other phrase should seem to be a mere example of hyperbaton:

“I saw from out the wave her structures rise.”—Byron.

“Peeping from forth their alleys green.”—Collins.

OBS. 20.—“Out of and as to,” says one grammarian, “are properly prepositions, although they are double words. They may be called compound prepositions.”—Cooper’s Gram., p. 103. I have called the complex prepositions double rather than compound, because several of the single prepositions are compound words; as, into, notwithstanding, overthwart, throughout, upon, within, without. And even some of these may follow the preposition from; as, “If he shall have removed from within the limits of this state.” But in and to, up and on, with and in, are not always compounded when they come together, because the sense may positively demand that the former be taken as an adverb, and the latter only as a preposition: as, “I will come in to him, and will sup with him.”—Rev., iii, 20. “A statue of Venus was set up on Mount Calvary.”—M’Ilvaine’s Lectures, p. 332. “The troubles which we meet with in the world.”—Blair. And even two prepositions may be brought together without union or coalescence; because the object of the first one may be expressed or understood before it: as, “The man whom you spoke within the street;”—“The treatment you complain of on this occasion;”—“The house that you live in in the summer;”—“Such a dress as she had on in the evening.”

OBS. 21.—Some grammarians assume, that, “Two prepositions in immediate succession require a noun to be understood between them; as, ‘Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes, From betwixt two aged oaks.’—‘The mingling notes came softened from below.’—Nutting’s Gram., p. 105. This author would probably understand here—‘From the space betwixt two aged oaks;’—‘came softened from the region below us.’ But he did not consider all the examples that are included in his proposition; nor did he rightly regard even those which he cites. The doctrine will be found a very awkward one in practice; and an other objection to it is, that most of the ellipses which it supposes, are entirely imaginary. If there were truth in his assumption, the compounding of prepositions would be positively precluded. The terms over-against and round-about are sometimes written with the hyphen, and perhaps it would be well if all the complex prepositions were regularly compounded; but, as I before suggested, such is not the present fashion of writing them, and the general usage is not to be controlled by what any individual may think.

OBS. 22.—Instances may, doubtless, occur, in which the object of a preposition is suppressed by ellipsis, when an other preposition follows, so as to bring together two that do not denote a compound relation, and do not, in any wise, form one complex preposition. Of such suppression, the following is an example; and, I think, a double one: ‘They take pronouns after instead of before them.’—Fowler, E. Gram., §521. This may be interpreted to mean, and probably does mean—‘They take pronouns after them in stead of taking them before them.’

OBS. 23.—In some instances, the words in, on, of, for, to, with, and others commonly reckoned prepositions, are used after infinitives or participles, in a sort of adverbial construction, because they do not govern any objective; yet not exactly in the usual sense of adverbs, because they evidently express the relation between the verb or participle and a nominative or objective going before. Examples: ‘Houses are built to live in, and not to look on; therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had.’—Ld. Kames. ‘These are not mysteries for ordinary readers to be let into.’—ADDISON: Joh. Dict., w. Let. ‘Heaven is worth dying for, though earth is not worth living for.’—R. Hall. ‘What! have ye not houses to eat and to drink in?’—1 Cor., xi, 22. This is a very peculiar idiom of our language; and if we say, ‘Have ye not houses in which to eat and to drink?’ we form an other which is not much less so. Greek: ‘Μὴ γὰρ οἰκίας οὐκ ἔχετε εἰς τὸ ἐσθίειν καὶ πίνειν;’ Latin: ‘Num enim domos non habetis ad manducandum et bibendum?’—Leusden. ‘N’avez vous pas des maisons pour manger et pour boire?’—French Bible.*

OBS. 24.—In OBS. 10th, of Chapter Fourth, on Adjectives, it was shown that words of place, (such as, above, below, beneath, under, and the like,) are sometimes set before nouns in the character of adjectives, and not of prepositions: as, ‘In the above list,’—‘From the above list.’—Bullions’, E. Gram., p. 70. To the class of adjectives also, rather than to that of adverbs, may some such words be referred, when, without governing the objective case, they are put after nouns to signify place: as, ‘The way of life is above to the wise, that he may depart from hell beneath.’—Prov., xv, 24. ‘Of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath.’—Exod., xx, 4.

---

* Of the construction noticed in this observation, the Rev. Matt. Harrison cites a good example; pronounces it elliptical; and scarcely forbears to condemn it as bad English: ‘In the following sentence, the relative pronoun is three times omitted:—‘Is there a God to swear by, and is there none to believe in, none to trust to?’—Letters and Essays, Anonymous. By, in, and to, as prepositions, stand alone, denuded of the relatives to which they apply. The sentence presents no attractions worthy of imitation. It exhibits a license carried to the extreme point of endurance.’—Harrison’s English Language, p. 196.

“Say first, of God above or man below,
What can we reason but from what we know?”—Pope.

LIST OF THE PREPOSITIONS.

The following are the principal prepositions, arranged alphabetically: Aboard, about, above, across, after, against, along, amid or amidst, among or amongst, around, at, athwart;—Bating, before, behind, below, beneath, beside or besides, between or betwixt, beyond, by;—Concerning;—Down, during;—Ere, except, excepting;—For, from;—In, into;—Mid or midst;—Notwithstanding;—*Of, off,* on, out, over, overthwart*;—Past, pending;—Regarding, respecting, round;—Since;—Through, throughout, till, to, touching, toward or towards;—Under, underneath, until, unto, up, upon;—With, within, without.

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Grammarians differ considerably in their tables of the English prepositions. Nor are they all of one opinion, concerning either the characteristics of this part of speech, or the particular instances in which the acknowledged properties of a preposition are to be found. Some teach that, “Every preposition requires an objective case after it.”—Lennie, p. 50; Bullions, Prin. of E. Gram., p. 69. In opposition to this, I suppose that the preposition to may take an infinitive verb after it; that about also may be a preposition, in the phrase, “about to write,” that about, above, after, against, by, for, from, in, of, and some other prepositions, may govern participles, as such; (i. e. without making them nouns, or cases;) and, lastly, that after a preposition an adverb is sometimes construed substantively, and yet is indeclinable; as, for once, from afar, from above, at unawares.

OBS. 2.—The writers just quoted, proceed to say: “When a preposition does not govern an objective case, it becomes an adverb; as, ‘He rides about.’ But in such phrases as, cast up, hold out, fall on, the words up, out, and on, must be considered as a part of the verb, rather than as prepositions or adverbs.”—Lennie’s Prin. of E. Gram., p. 50; Bullions’s, p. 59; his Analyt. and P. Gram., p. 109. Both these sentences are erroneous: the one, more particularly so, in expression; the other, in doctrine. As the preposition is chiefly distinguished by its regimen, it is absurd to speak of it as governing nothing; yet it does not always govern the objective case, for participles and infinitives have no cases. About, up, out, and on, as here cited, are all of them adverbs; and so are all other particles that thus qualify verbs, without governing any thing. L. Murray grossly errs when he assumes that, “The distinct component parts of such phrases as, to cast up, to fall on, to bear oat, to give over, &c., are no guide to the sense of the whole.” Surely, “to cast up” is to cast somehow, though the meaning of the phrase may be “to compute.” By this author, and some others, all such adverbs are absurdly called prepositions, and are also as absurdly declared to be parts of the preceding verbs! See Murray’s Gram., p. 117; W. Allen’s, 179; Kirkham’s, 95; R. G. Smith’s, 93; Fisk’s, 86; Butler’s, 63; Wells’s, 146.

OBS. 3.—In comparing the different English grammars now in use, we often find the primary distinction of the parts of speech, and every thing that depends upon it, greatly perplexed by the fancied ellipses, and forced constructions, to which their authors resort.

* “An ellipsis of from after the adverb off has caused the latter word sometimes to be inserted incorrectly among the prepositions. Ex. ‘off (from) his horse.’”—Hart’s Gram., p. 96. Off and on are opposites; and, in a sentence like the following, I see no more need of inserting “from” after the former, than to after the latter: “Thou shalt not come down off that bed on which thou art gone up.”—2 Kings, i, 16.

Thus Kirkham: "Prepositions are sometimes erroneously called adverbs, when their nouns are understood. 'He rides about,' that is, about the town, country, or something else. 'She was near [the act or misfortune of] falling;' 'But do not after [that time or event] lay the blame on me.' 'He came down [the ascent] from the hill;' 'They lifted him up [the ascent] out of the pit.' 'The angels above;'—above us—'Above these lower heavens, to us invisible, or dimly seen.'"—Gram., p. 89. The errors of this passage are almost as numerous as the words; and those to which the doctrine leads are absolutely innumerable. That up and down, with verbs of motion, imply ascent and descent, as wisely and foolishly imply wisdom and folly, is not to be denied; but the grammatical bathos of coming "down [the ascent] from the hill" of science, should startle those whose faces are directed upward! Downward ascent is a movement worthy only of Kirkham, and his Irish rival, Joseph W. Wright. The brackets here used are Kirkham's, not mine.

OBS. 4.—"Some of the prepositions," says L. Murray, "have the appearance and effect of conjunctions: as, 'After their prisons were thrown open,' &c. 'Before I die;' 'They made haste to be prepared against their friends arrived:' but if the noun time, which is understood, be added, they will lose their conjunctive form: as, 'After [the time when] their prisons,' &c."—Octavo Gram., p. 119. Here, after, before, and against, are neither conjunctions nor prepositions, but conjunctive adverbs of time, referring to the verbs which follow them, and also, when the sentences are completed, to others antecedent. The awkward addition of "the time when," is a sheer perversion. If after, before, and the like, can ever be adverbs, they are so here, and not conjunctions, or prepositions.

OBS. 5.—But the great Compiler proceeds: "The prepositions, after, before, above, beneath, and several others, sometimes appear to be adverbs, and may be so considered: as, 'They had their reward soon after;' 'He died not long before;' 'He dwells above;' but if the nouns time and place be added, they will lose their adverbial form: as, 'He died not long before that time,' &c."—Ib. Now, I say, when any of the foregoing words "appear to be adverbs," they are adverbs, and, if adverbs, then not prepositions. But to consider prepositions to be adverbs, as Murray here does, or seems to do; and to suppose "the NOUNS time AND place" to be understood in the several examples here cited, as he also does, or seems to do; are singly such absurdities as no grammarian should fail to detect, and together such a knot of blunders, as ought to be wondered at, even in the Compiler's humblest copyist. In the following text, there is neither preposition nor ellipsis:

"Above, below, without, within, around, Confus'd, unnumber'd multitudes are found."—Pope, on Fame.

OBS. 6.—It comports with the name and design of this work, which is a broad synopsis of grammatical criticism, to notice here one other absurdity; namely, the doctrine of "sentential nouns." There is something of this in several late grammars: as, "The prepositions, after, before, ere, since, till, and until, frequently govern sentential nouns; and after, before, since, notwithstanding, and some others, frequently govern a noun or pronoun understood. A preposition governing a sentential noun, is, by Murray and others, considered a conjunction; and a preposition governing a noun understood, an adverb."—J. L. PARKHURST: in Sanborn's Gram., p. 123. "Example: 'He will, before he dies, sway the sceptre.' He dies is a sentential noun, third person, singular number; and is governed by before; before he dies, being equivalent in meaning to before his death."—Sanborn, Gram., p. 176. "After they had waited a long time, they departed.' After waiting."—Ib. This last solution supposes the phrase, "waiting a long time," or at least the participle waiting, to be a noun; for, upon the author's principle of equivalence, "they had waited," will otherwise be a "sentential" participle—a thing however as good and as classical as the other!

OBS. 7.—If a preposition can ever be justly said to take a sentence for its object, it is chiefly in certain ancient expressions, like the following: "For in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God."—Rom., vi, 10. "My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh."—Gen., vi, 3. "For, after that, in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."—1 Cor., i, 21. Here, in, for, and after, are all followed by the word that; which Tooke, Webster, Frazee, and some others, will have to be "a substitute," or "pronoun," representing the sentence which follows it, and governed by the preposition. But that, in this sense, is usually, and perhaps more properly, reckoned a conjunction. And if we take it so, in, for, and after, (unless the latter be an adverb,) must either be reckoned conjunctions also, or be supposed to govern sentences. The expressions however are little used; because "in that" is nearly equivalent to as; "for that" can be better expressed by because; and "after that," which is equivalent to ἐπειδὴ, postquam, may well be rendered by the term, seeing that, or since. "Before that Philip called thee," is a similar example; but "that" is here needless, and "before" may be parsed as a conjunctive adverb of time. I have one example more: "But, besides that he attempted it formerly with no success, it is certain the Venetians keep too watchful an eye," &c.—Addison. This is good English, but the word "besides" if it be not a conjunction, may as well be called an adverb, as a preposition.

OBS. 8.—There are but few words in the list of prepositions, that are not sometimes used as being of some other part of speech. Thus bating, excepting, concerning, touching, respecting, during, pending, and a part of the compound notwithstanding, are literally participles; and some writers, in opposition to general custom, refer them always to their original class. Unlike most other prepositions, they do not refer to place, but rather to action, state, or duration; for, even as prepositions, they are still allied to participles. Yet to suppose them always participles, as would Dr. Webster and some others, is impracticable. Examples: "They speak concerning virtue."—Bullions, Prin. of E. Gram., p. 69. Here concerning cannot be a participle, because its antecedent term is a verb, and the meaning is, "they speak of virtue." "They are bound during life." that is, durante vitâ, life continuing, or, as long as life lasts. So, "Notwithstanding this," i.e., "hoc non obstante," this not hindering. Here the nature of the construction seems to depend on the order of the words. "Since he had succeeded, notwithstanding them, peaceably to the throne."—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 31. "This is a correct English idiom, Dr. Lowth's criticism, to the contrary notwithstanding."—Webster's Improved Gram., p. 85. In the phrase, "notwithstanding them," the former word is clearly a preposition governing the latter; but Dr. Webster doubtless supposed the word "criticism" to be in the nominative case, put absolute with the participle: and so it would have been, had he written not withstanding as two words, like "non obstante;" but the compound word notwithstanding is not a participle, because there is no verb to notwithstanding. But notwithstanding, when placed before a nominative, or before the conjunction that, is a conjunction, and, as such, must be rendered in Latin by tamen, yet, quamvis, although, or nihilominus, nevertheless.

OBS. 9.—For, when it signifies because, is a conjunction: as, "Boast not thyself of tomorrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."—Prov., xxvii, 1. For has this meaning, and, according to Dr. Johnson, is a conjunction, when it precedes that; as, "Yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men.”—Spenser. The phrase, as I have before suggested, is almost obsolete; but Murray, in one place, adopts it from Dr. Beattie: “For that those parts of the verb are not properly called tenses.”—Octavo Gram., p. 75. How he would have parsed it, does not appear. But both words are connectives. And, from the analogy of those terms which serve as links to other terms, I should incline to take for that, in that, after that, and besides that, (in which a known conjunction is put last,) as complex conjunctions; and also, to take as for, as to, and because of, (in which a known preposition is put last,) as complex prepositions. But there are other regular and equivalent expressions that ought in general to be preferred to any or all of these.

OBS. 10.—Several words besides those contained in the list above, are (or have been) occasionally employed in English as prepositions: as, A, (chiefly used before participles,) abaft, adown, afore, aloft, aloof, alongside, anear, aneath, anent, aslant, aslope, astride, atween, atwixt, besouth, bywest, cross, dehors, despite, inside, left-hand, maugre, minus, onto, opposite, outside, per, plus, sans, spite, thorough, traverse, versus, via, withal, withinside.

OBS. 11.—Dr. Lowth says, “The particle a before participles, in the phrases a coming, a going, a walking, a shooting, &c. and before nouns, as a-bed, a-board, a-shore, a-foot, &c. seems to be a true and genuine preposition, a little disguised by familiar use and quick pronunciation. Dr. Wallis supposes it to be the preposition at. I rather think it is the preposition on.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 65; Churchill’s, 268. There is no need of supposing it to be either. It is not from on; for in Saxon it sometimes accompanied on: as in the phrase, “on á weoruld,” that is, “on to ages,” or, as Wickliffe rendered it, “into worldis,” or, as our version has it, “for ever.” See Luke, i, 55. This preposition was in use long before either a or an, as an article, appeared in its present form in the language; and, for ought I can discover, it may be as old as either on or at. An, too, is found to have had at times the sense and construction of in or on; and this usage is, beyond doubt, older than that which makes it an article. On, however, was an exceedingly common preposition in Saxon, being used almost always where we now put on, in, into, upon, or among, and sometimes, for with or by; so, sometimes, where a was afterwards used: thus, “What in the Saxon Gospel of John, is, ‘Ic wyllē gan on fixoth,’ is, in the English version, ‘I go a fishing.’ Chap, xxi, ver. 3.” See Lowth’s Gram., p. 65; Churchill’s, 269. And a is now sometimes equivalent to on; as, “He would have a learned University make Barbarisms a purpose.”—Bentley, Diss. on Phalaris, p. 223. That is,—“on purpose.” How absurdly then do some grammarians interpret the foregoing text!—“I go on a fishing.”—Alden’s Gram., p. 117. “I go on a fishing voyage or business.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 221; Merchant’s, 101. “It may not be improper,” says Churchill in another place, “to observe here, that the preposition on, is too frequently pronounced as if it were the vowel a, in ordinary conversation; and this corruption is [has] become so prevalent, that I have even met with ‘laid it a oneside’ in a periodical publication. It should have been ‘on one side,’ if the expression were meant to be particular; ‘aside,’ if general.”—New Gram., p. 345. By these writers, a is also supposed to be sometimes a corruption of of: as, “Much in the same manner, Thomas of Becket, by very frequent and familiar use, became Thomas à Becket; and one of the clock, or perhaps on the clock, is written one o’clock, but pronounced one a clock. The phrases with a before a participle are out of use in the solemn style; but still prevail in familiar discourse. They are established by long usage, and good authority; and there seems to be no reason, why they should be utterly rejected.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 66. “Much in the same manner, John of Nokes, and John of Styles, become John a Nokes, and John a Styles: and one of the clock, or rather on the clock, is written one o'clock, but pronounced one a clock. The phrases with a before participles, are out of use in the solemn style; but still prevail in familiar discourse.”—Churchill's New Gram., p. 269.

OBS. 12.—The following are examples of the less usual prepositions, a, and others that begin with a: “And he set—three thousand and six hundred overseers to set the people a work.”—2 Chron., ii, 18. “Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges?”—1 Cor., ix, 7. “And the mixed multitude that was among them fell a lusting.”—Num., xi, 4.

“And sweet Billy Dimond, a patting his hair up.”—Feast of the Poets, p. 17.

“The god fell a laughing to see his mistake.”—Ib., p. 18.

“You'd have thought 'twas the bishops or judges a coming.”—Ib., p. 22.

“A place on the lower deck, abaft the mainmast.”—Gregory's Dict. “A moment gazed adown the dale.”—Scott, L. L., p. 10. “Adown Strath-Gartney's valley broad.”—Ib., p. 84. “For  afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect,” &c.—Isaiah, xviii, 5. “Where the great luminary aloof the vulgar constellations thick,”—See Milton's Paradise Lost, B. iii, l. 576. “The great luminary aloft the vulgar constellations thick.”—Johnson's Dict., w. Aloft. “Captain Falconer having previously gone alongside, the Constitution.”—Newspaper. “Seventeen ships sailed for New England, and aboard these above fifteen hundred persons.”—Robertson's Amer., ii, 429. “There is a willow grows askant the brook.” Or, as in some editions: “There is a willow grows aslant the brook.”—SHAK., Hamlet, Act iv, 7. “Aslant the dew-bright earth.”—Thomson. “Swift as meteors glide aslope a summer eve.”—Fenton. “Aneath the heavy rain.”—James Hogg, “With his magic spectacles astride his nose.”—Merchant's Criticisms.

“Atween his downy wings be furnished, there.”—Wordsworth's Poems, p. 147.

“And there a season atween June and May.”—Castle of Indolence, C. i, st. 2.

OBS. 13.—The following are examples of rather unusual prepositions beginning with b, c, or d; “Or where wild-meeting oceans boil besouth Magellan.”—Burns. “Whereupon grew that by-word, used by the Irish, that they dwelt by-west the law, which dwelt beyond the river of the Barrow.”—DAVIES: in Joh. Dict. Here Johnson calls by-west a noun substantive, and Webster, as improperly, marks it for an adverb. No hyphen is needed in byword or bywest. The first syllable of the latter is pronounced be, and ought to be written so, if “besouth” is right.

“From Cephalonia cross the surgy main Philæti<sup>us</sup> late arrived, a faithful swain.”—Pope, Odys., B. xx, l. 234.

“And cross their limits cut a sloping way,
Which the twelve signs in beauteous order sway.”—Dryden's Virgil.

“A fox was taking a walk one night cross a village.”—L'Estrange. “The enemy had cut down great trees cross the ways.”—Knolles. “DEHORS, prep. [Fr.] Without: as, ‘dehors the land.’ Blackstone.”—Worcester's Dict., 8vo. “You have believed, despite too our physical conformation.”—Bulwer.

“And Roderick shall his welcome make,
Despite old spleen, for Douglas' sake.”—Scott, L. L., C. ii, st. 26.

OBS. 14.—The following quotations illustrate further the list of unusual prepositions: “And she would be often weeping inside the room while George was amusing himself without.”—Anna Ross, p. 81. “Several nuts grow closely together, inside this prickly covering.”—Jacob Abbot. “An other boy asked why the peachstone was not outside the peach.”—Id. “As if listening to the sounds withinside it.”—Gardiner’s Music of Nature, p. 214. “Sir Knight, you well might mark the mound, Left hand the town.”—Scott’s Marmion. “Thus Butler, maugre his wicked intention, sent them home again.”—Sewel’s Hist., p. 256. “And, maugre all that can be said in its favour.”—Stone, on Freemasonry, p. 121. “And, maugre the authority of Sterne, I even doubt its benevolence.”—West’s Letters, p. 29.

“I through the ample air in triumph high Shall lead Hell captive maugre Hell.”—Milton’s P. L., B. iii, l. 255.

“When Mr. Seaman arose in the morning, he found himself minus his coat, vest, pocket-handkerchief, and tobacco-box.”—Newspaper. “Throw some coals onto the fire.”—FORBY: Worcester’s Dict., w. Onto. “Flour, at $4 per barrel.”—Preston’s Book-Keeping. “Which amount, per invoice, to $4000.”—Ib. “To Smiths is the substantive Smiths, plus the preposition to.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., §33. “The Mayor of Lynn versus Turner.”—Cowper’s Reports, p. 86. “Slaves were imported from Africa, via Cuba.”—Society in America, i, 327. “Pending the discussion of this subject, a memorial was presented.”—Gov. Everett.

“Darts his experienced eye and soon traverse
The whole battalion views their order due.”—Milton.

“Because, when thorough deserts vast
And regions desolate they past.”—Hudibras.

OBS. 15.—Minus, less, plus, more, per, by, versus, towards, or against, and viâ, by the way of, are Latin words; and it is not very consistent with the purity of our tongue, to use them as above. Sans, without, is French, and not now heard with us. Afore for before, atween for between, traverse for across, thorough for through, and withal for with, are obsolete. Withal was never placed before its object, but was once very common at the end of a sentence. I think it not properly a preposition, but rather an adverb. It occurs in Shakspeare, and so does sans; as,

“I did laugh, sans intermission, an hour by his dial.”—As You Like It.

“I pr’ythee, whom doth he trot withal?”—Ib.

“Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.”—Ib.

OBS. 16.—Of the propriety and the nature of such expressions as the following, the reader may now judge for himself: “In consideration of what passes sometimes within-side of those vehicles.”—Spectator, No. 533. “Watch over yourself, and let nothing throw you off from your guard.”—District School, p. 54. “The windows broken, the door off from the hinges, the roof open and leaky.”—Ib., p. 71. “He was always a shrewd observer of men, in and out of power.”—Knapp’s Life of Burr, p. viii. “Who had never been broken in to the experience of sea voyages.”—Timothy Flint. “And there came a fire out from before the Lord.”—Leviticus, ix, 24. “Because eight readers out of ten, it is believed, forget it.”—Brown’s Estimate, ii, 32. “Fifty days after the Passover, and their coming out of Egypt.”—Watts’s Script. Hist., p. 57. “As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people.”—Psal., cxxv, 2. “Literally, I proceeded forth from out of God and am come.”—Gurney’s Essays, p. 161. “But he that came down from (or from out of) heaven.”—Ibid.

“Here none the last funereal rights receive;
To be cast forth the camp, is all their friends can give.”

—Rowe’s Lucan, vi, 166.

EXAMPLES FOR PARSING.

PRAXIS X.—ETYMOLOGICAL.

In the Tenth Praxis, it is required of the pupil—to distinguish and define the different parts of speech, and the classes and modifications of the ARTICLES, NOUNS, ADJECTIVES, PRONOUNS, VERBS, PARTICIPLES, ADVERBS, CONJUNCTIONS, and PREPOSITIONS.

The definitions to be given in the Tenth Praxis, are, two for an article, six for a noun, three for an adjective, six for a pronoun, seven for a verb finite, five for an infinitive, two for a participle, two (and sometimes three) for an adverb, two for a conjunction, one for a preposition, and one for an interjection. Thus:—

EXAMPLE PARSED.

“Never adventure on too near an approach to what is evil.”—Maxims.

Never is an adverb of time. 1. An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner. 2. Adverbs of time are those which answer to the question, When? How long? How soon? or, How often? including these which ask.

Adventure is a regular active-intransitive verb, from adventure, adventured, adventuring, adventured; found in the imperative mood, present tense, second person, singular (or it may be plural) number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act, or to be acted upon. 2. A regular verb is a verb that forms the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. An active-intransitive verb is a verb that expresses an action that has no person or thing for its object. 4. The imperative mood is that form of the verb which is used in commanding, exhorting, entreating, or permitting. 5. The present tense is that which expresses what now exists, or is taking place. 6. The second person is that which denotes the hearer, or the person addressed. 7. The singular number is that which denotes but one.

On is a preposition. 1. A preposition is a word used to express some relation of different things or thoughts to each other, and is generally placed before a noun or a pronoun.

Too is an adverb of degree. 1. An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner. 2. Adverbs of degree are those which answer to the question, How much? How little? or to the idea of more or less.

Near is a common adjective, of the positive degree; compared, near, nearer, nearest or next. 1. An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, and generally expresses quality. 2. A common adjective is any ordinary epithet, or adjective denoting quality or situation. 3. The positive degree is that which is expressed by the adjective in its simple form.

An is the indefinite article. 1. An article is the word the, an, or a, which we put before nouns to limit their signification. 2. The indefinite article is an or a, which denotes one thing of a kind, but not any particular one.

Approach is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle, or preposition.

To is a preposition. 1. A preposition is a word used to express some relation of different things or thoughts to each other, and is generally placed before a noun or a pronoun.

What is a relative pronoun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case. 1. A pronoun is a word used in stead of a noun. 2. A relative pronoun is a pronoun that represents an antecedent word or phrase, and connects different clauses of a sentence. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The nominative case is that form or stats of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the subject of a finite verb.

Is is an irregular neuter verb, from be, was, being, been; found in the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and singular number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act, or to be acted upon. 2. An irregular verb is a verb that does not form the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. A neuter verb is a verb that expresses neither action nor passion, but simply being, or a state of being. 4. The indicative mood is that form of a verb, which simply indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question. 5. The present tense is that which expresses what now exists, or is taking place. 6. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 7. The singular number is that which denotes but one.

Evil is a common adjective, of the positive degree; compared irregularly, bad, evil, or ill, worse, worst. 1. An adjective is a word added to a noun or pronoun, and generally expresses quality. 2. A common adjective is any ordinary epithet, or adjective denoting quality or situation. 3. The positive degree is that which is expressed by the adjective in its simple form.

LESSON I.—PARSING.

“My Lord, I do here, in the name of all the learned and polite persons of the nation, complain to your Lordship, as first minister, that our language is imperfect; that its daily improvements are by no means in proportion to its daily corruptions; that the pretenders to polish and refine it, have chiefly multiplied abuses and absurdities; and that, in many instances, it offends against every part of grammar.”—Dean Swift, to the Earl of Oxford.

“Swift must be allowed to have been a good judge of this matter; to which he was himself very attentive, both in his own writings, and in his remarks upon those of his friends: He is one of the most correct, and perhaps [he is] the best, of our prose writers.

Indeed the justness of this complaint, as far as I can find, hath never yet been questioned; and yet no effectual method hath hitherto been taken to redress the grievance which was the object of it.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. iv.

“The only proper use to be made of the blemishes which occur in the writings of such authors, [as Addison and Swift—authors whose ‘faults are overbalanced by high beauties’—] is, to point out to those who apply themselves to the study of composition, some of the rules which they ought to observe for avoiding such errors; and to render them sensible of the necessity of strict attention to language and style.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 233.

“Thee, therefore, and with thee myself I weep,
For thee and me I mourn in anguish deep.”—Pope’s Homer.

LESSON II.—PARSING.

“The southern corner of Europe, comprehended between the thirty-sixth and fortieth degrees of latitude, bordering on Epirus and Macedonia towards the north, and on other sides surrounded by the sea, was inhabited, above eighteen centuries before the Christian era, by many small tribes of hunters and shepherds, among whom the Pelasgi and Hellenes were the most numerous and powerful.”—Gillies, Gr., p. 12.

“In a vigorous exertion of memory, ideal presence is exceedingly distinct: thus, when a man, entirely occupied with some event that made a deep impression, forgets himself, he perceives every thing as passing before him, and has a consciousness of presence, similar to that of a spectator.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 88.

“Each planet revolves about its own axis in a given time; and each moves round the sun, in an orbit nearly circular, and in a time proportioned to its distance. Their velocities, directed by an established law, are perpetually changing by regular accelerations and retardations.”—Ib., i, 271.

“You may as well go about to turn the sun to ice by fanning in his face with a peacock’s feather.”—Shak.

“Ch. Justice. I sent for you, when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me. Falstaff. As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.”—Id., 2. Hen. IV, Act i, Sc. 2.

“It is surprising to see the images of the mind stamped upon the aspect; to see the cheeks take the die of the passions and appear in all the colors of thought.”—Collier.

—————“Even from out thy slime
The monsters of the deep are made.”—Byron.

LESSON III.—PARSING.

“With a mind weary of conjecture, fatigued by doubt, sick of disputation, eager for knowledge, anxious for certainty, and unable to attain it by the best use of my reason in matters of the utmost importance, I have long ago turned my thoughts to an impartial examination of the proofs on which revealed religion is grounded, and I am convinced of its truth.”—Bp. Watson’s Apology, p. 69.

“The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.”—Gen., xlix, 10.

“Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths. But I say unto you, Swear not at all: neither by heaven; for it is God’s throne: nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head; because thou canst not make one hair white or black.”—Matt., v, 33—36.

“Refined manners, and polite behaviour, must not be deemed altogether artificial: men who, inured to the sweets of society, cultivate humanity, find an elegant pleasure in preferring others, and making them happy, of which the proud, the selfish, scarcely have a conception.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 105.

“Bacchus, that first from out the purple grape
Crush’d the sweet poison of misused wine.”—Milton.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

ERRORS RESPECTING PREPOSITIONS.

“Nouns are often formed by participles.”—L. Murray’s Index, Octavo Gram., ii, 290.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the relation here intended, between are formed and participles, is not well signified by the preposition by. But, according to Observation 7th, on this part of speech, “The prepositions have, from their own nature, or from custom, such an adaptation to particular terms and relations, that they can seldom be used one for an other without manifest impropriety.” This relation would be better expressed by from; thus, “Nouns are often formed from participles.”]

“What tenses are formed on the perfect participle?”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 104. “Which tense is formed on the present?”—Ibid. “When a noun or pronoun is placed before a participle, independently on the rest of the sentence,” &c.—Ib., p. 150; Murray, 145; and others. “If the addition consists in two or more words.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 176; Ingersoll’s, 177. “The infinitive mood is often made absolute, or used independently on the rest of the sentence.”—Mur., p. 184; Ing., 244; and others. “For the great satisfaction of the reader, we shall present him with a variety of false constructions.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 189. “For your satisfaction, I shall present you with a variety of false constructions.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 258. “I shall here present you with a scale of derivation.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 81. “These two manners of representation in respect of number.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 15; Churchill’s, 57; “There are certain adjectives, which seem to be derived without any variation from verbs.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 89. “Or disqualify us for receiving instruction or reproof of others.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 253. “For being more studious than any other pupil of the school.”—Ib., p. 226. “From misunderstanding the directions, we lost our way.”—Ib., p. 201. “These people reduced the greater part of the island to their own power.”—Ib., p. 261.* “The principal accent distinguishes one syllable in a word from the rest.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 236. “Just numbers are in unison to the human mind.”—Ib., p. 298. “We must accept of sound instead of sense.”—Ib., p. 298. “Also, instead for consultation, he uses consult.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 143. “This ablative seems to be governed of a preposition understood.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 268. “That my father may not hear on’t by some means or other.”—Ib., p. 257. “And besides, my wife would hear on’t by some means.”—Ib., p. 81. “For insisting in a requisition is so odious to them.”—Robertson’s Amer., i, 206. “Based in the great self-evident truths of liberty and equality.”—Scholar’s Manual. “Very little knowledge of their nature is acquired by the spelling book.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 21. “They do not cut it off: except in a few words; as, due, duly, &c.”—Ib., p. 24. “Whether passing in such time, or then finished.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 31. “It hath disgusted hundreds of that confession.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 269. “But they have egregiously fallen in that inconveniency.”—Ib., iii, 73. “For is not this to set nature a work?”—Ib., i, 270. “And surely that which should set all its springs a-work, is God.”—ATTERBURY: in Blair’s Rhet., p. 298. “He could not end his treatise without a panegyric of modern learning.”—TEMPLE: ib., p. 110. “These are entirely independent on the modulation of the voice.”—Walker’s Elocution, p. 308. “It is dear of a penny. It is cheap of twenty pounds.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 274. “It will be despatched, in most occasions, without resting.”—Locke. “O, the pain the bliss in dying.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 129. “When [he is] presented with the objects or the facts.”—Smith’s Productive Gram., p. 5. “I will now present you with a synopsis.”—Ib., p. 25. “The conjunction disjunctive connects sentences, by expressing opposition of meaning in various degrees.”—Ib., p. 38. “I shall now present you with a few lines.”—Bucke’s Classical Gram, p. 13. “Common names of Substantives are those, which stand for things generally.”—Ib., p. 31. “Adjectives in the English language admit no variety in gender, number, or case whatever, except that of the degrees of comparison.”—Ib., p. 48. “Participles are adjectives formed of verbs.”—Ib., p. 63. “I do love to walk out of a fine summer’s evening.”—Ib., p. 97. “An Ellipsis, when applied to grammar, is the elegant omission of one or more words in a sentence.”—Merchant’s Gram., p. 99. “The prefix to is generally placed before verbs in the infinitive mood, but before the following verbs it is properly omitted; (viz.) bid, make, see, dare, need, hear, feel, and let; as, He bid me do it; He made me learn; &c.”—Ib., Stereotype Edition, p. 91; Old Edition, 85. “The infinitive sometimes follows than, after a comparison; as, I wish nothing more, than to know his fate.”—Ib., p. 92. See Murray’s Gram., 8vo, i, 184. “Or by prefixing the adverbs more or less, in the comparative, and most or least, in the superlative.”—Merchant’s Gram., p. 36. “A pronoun is a word used instead of a noun.”—Ib., p. 17; Comly, 15. “In monosyllables the Comparative is regularly formed by adding r or er.”—Perley’s Gram., p. 21. “He has particularly named these, in distinction to others.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. vi. “To revive the decaying taste of antient Literature.”—Ib., p. xv. “He found the greatest difficulty of writing.”—HUME: in Priestley’s Gram., p. 159.

* “Who consequently reduced the greatest part of the island TO their own power.”—Swift, on the English Tongue. “We can say, that one nation reduces another TO subjection. But when dominion or power is used, we always, as [so] far as I know, say, reduce UNDER their power” [or dominion].—Blair’s Rhet., p. 229.

“And the tear that is wip’d with a little address
May be followed perhaps with a smile.”

Webster’s American Spelling-Book, p. 78; and Murray’s E. Reader, p. 212.

CHAPTER XI—INTERJECTIONS.

An Interjection is a word that is uttered merely to indicate some strong or sudden emotion of the mind: as, Oh! alas! ah! poh! pshaw! avaunt! aha! hurrah!

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—Of pure interjections but few are admitted into books. Unimpassioned writings reject this part of speech altogether. As words or sounds of this kind serve rather to indicate feeling than to express thought, they seldom have any definable signification. Their use also is so variable, that there can be no very accurate classification of them. Some significant words, perhaps more properly belonging to other classes, are sometimes ranked with interjections, when uttered with emotion and in an unconnected manner; as, strange! prodigious! indeed! Wells says, “Other parts of speech, used by way of exclamation, are properly regarded as interjections; as, hark! surprising! mercy!”—School Gram., 1846, p. 110. This is an evident absurdity; because it directly confounds the classes which it speaks of as being different. Nor is it right to say, “Other parts of speech are frequently used to perform the office of interjections.”—Wells, 1850, p. 120.

OBS. 2.—The word interjection comes to us from the Latin name interjectio, the root of which is the verb interjicio, to throw between, to interject. Interjections are so called because they are usually thrown in between the parts of discourse, without any syntactical connexion with other words. Dr. Lowth, in his haste, happened to describe them as a kind of natural sounds “thrown in between the parts of a sentence,” and this strange blunder has been copied into almost every definition that has been given of the Interjection since. See Murray’s Grammar and others. Webster’s Dictionary defines it as, “A word thrown in between words connected in construction,” but of all the parts of speech none are less frequently found in this situation.

OBS. 3.—The following is a fair sample of “Smith’s New Grammar,”—i.e., of “English Grammar on the Productive System,”—a new effort of quackery to scarf up with cobwebs the eyes of common sense: “Q. When I exclaim, ‘Oh! I have ruined my friend,’ ‘Alas! I fear for life,’ which words here appear to be thrown in between the sentences, to express passion or feeling? Ans. Oh! Alas! Q. What does interjection mean? Ans. Thrown between. Q. What name, then, shall we give such words as oh! alas! &c.? Ans. INTERJECTIONS. Q. What, then, are interjections? Ans. Interjections are words thrown in between the parts of sentences, to express the passions or sudden feelings of the speaker. Q. How may an interjection generally be known? Ans. By its taking an exclamation point after it: [as,] ‘Oh! I have alienated my friend.’”—R. C. Smith’s New Gram., p. 39. Of the interjection, this author gives, in his examples for parsing, fifteen other instances; but nothing can be more obvious, than that not more than one of the whole fifteen stands either “between sentences” or between the parts of any sentence! (See New Gram., pp. 40 and 96.) Can he be a competent grammarian, who does not know the meaning of between; or who, knowing it, misapplies so very plain a word?

OBS. 4.—The Interjection, which is idly claimed by sundry writers to have been the first of words at the origin of language, is now very constantly set down, among the parts of speech, as the last of the series. But, for the name of this the last of the ten sorts of words, some of our grammarians have adopted the term exclamation. Of the old and usual term interjection, a recent writer justly says, “This name is preferable to that of exclamation, for some exclamations are not interjections, and some interjections are not exclamations.”—GIBBS: Fowler’s E. Gram., §333.

LIST OF THE INTERJECTIONS.

The following are the principal interjections, arranged according to the emotions which they are generally intended to indicate:—1. Of joy; eh! hey! io!—2. Of sorrow; oh! ah! hoo! alas! alack! lackaday! welladay! or welaway!—3. Of wonder; heigh! ha! strange! indeed!—4. Of wishing, earnestness, or vocative address; (often with a noun or pronoun in the nominative absolute;) O!—5. Of praise; well-done! good! bravo!—6. Of surprise with disapproval; whew! hoity-toity! hoida! zounds! what!—7. Of pain or fear; oh! ooh! ah! eh! O dear!—8. Of contempt; fudge! pugh! poh! pshaw! pish! tush! tut! humph!—9. Of aversion; foh! faugh! fie! fy! foy! *—10. Of expulsion; out! off! shoo! whew! begone! avaunt! aroynt!—11. Of calling aloud; ho! soho! what-ho! hollo! holla! hallo! halloo! hoy! ahoy!—12. Of exultation; ah! aha! huzza! hey! heyday! hurrah!—13. Of laughter; ha, ha, ha; he, he, he; te-hee, te-hee.—14. Of salutation; welcome! hail! all-hail!—15. Of calling to attention; ho! lo! la! law! † look! see! behold! hark!—16. Of calling to silence; hush! hist! whist! 'st! aw! mum!—17. Of dread or horror; oh! ha! hah! what!—18. Of languor or weariness; heigh-ho! heigh-ho-hum!—19. Of stopping; hold! soft! avast! whoh!—20. Of parting; farewell! adieu! good-by! good-day!—21. Of knowing or detecting; oho! ahah! ay-ay!—22. Of interrogating; eh? ha? hey? ‡

OBSERVATIONS.

OBS. 1.—With the interjections, may perhaps be reckoned hau and gee, the imperative words of teamsters driving cattle; and other similar sounds, useful under certain circumstances, but seldom found in books. Besides these, and all the foregoing, there are several others, too often heard, which are unworthy to be considered parts of a cultivated language. The frequent use of interjections savours more of thoughtlessness than of sensibility. Philosophical writing and dispassionate discourse exclude them altogether. Yet are there several words of this kind, which in earnest utterance, animated poetry, or impassioned declamation, are not only natural, but exceedingly expressive: as, “Lift up thy voice, O daughter of Gallim; cause it to be heard unto Laish, O poor Anathoth.”—Isaiah, x, 30. “Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgement come.”—Rev., xviii, 10.

“Ah me! forbear, returns the queen, forbear;

Oh! talk not, talk not of vain beauty’s care.”—Odyssey, B. xviii, l. 310.

OBS. 2.—Interjections, being in general little else than mere natural voices or cries, must of course be adapted to the sentiments which are uttered with them, and never * “O foy, don’t misapprehend me; I don’t say so.”—DOUBLE DEALER: Kames, El. of Crit., i, 305.

† According to Walker and Webster, la is pronounced law; and, if they are right in this, the latter is only a false mode of spelling. But I set down both, because both are found in books, and because I incline to think the former is from the French la, which is pronounced lah. Johnson and Webster make la and lo synonymous; deriving lo from the Saxon la, and la either from lo or from the French la. “Law, how you joke, cousin.”—Columbian Orator, p. 178. “Law me! the very ghosts are come now!”—Ibid. “Law, sister Betty! I am glad to see you!”—Ibid.

“La you! If you speak ill of the devil,

How he takes it at heart!”—SHAKESPEARE: Joh. Dict., w. La.

‡ The interjection of interrogating, being placed independently, either after a question, or after something which it converts into a question, is usually marked with its own separate erote; as, “But this is even so: eh?”—Newspaper. “Is’t not drown’d i’ the last rain? Ha?”—Shakespeare. “Does Bridget paint still, Pompey? Ha?”—Id. “Suits my complexion—hey, gal? so I think.”—Yankee Schoolmaster. Sometimes we see it divided only by a comma, from the preceding question; as, “What dost thou think of this doctrine, Friend Gurth, ha?”—SCOTT’S IVANHOE: Fowler’s E. Gram., §29.

carelessly confounded one with an other when we express them on paper. The adverb ay is sometimes improperly written for the interjection ah; as, ay me! for ah me! and still oftener we find oh, an interjection of sorrow, pain, or surprise,* written in stead of O, the proper sign of wishing, earnestness, or vocative address: as,

“Oh Happiness! our being’s end and aim!”—Pope, Ess. Ep. iv, l. 1.

“And peace, oh Virtue! peace is all thy own.”—Id., ib., Ep. iv, l. 82.

“Oh stay, O pride of Greece! Ulysses, stay!

O cease thy course, and listen to our lay!”—Odys., B. xii, l. 222.

OBS. 3.—The chief characteristics of the interjection are independence, exclamation, and the want of any definable signification. Yet not all the words or signs which we refer to this class, will be found to coincide in all these marks of an interjection. Indeed the last, (the want of a rational meaning,) would seem to exclude them from the language; for words must needs be significant of something. Hence many grammarians deny that mere sounds of the voice have any more claim to be reckoned among the parts of speech, than the neighing of a horse, or the lowing of a cow. There is some reason in this; but in fact the reference which these sounds have to the feelings of those who utter them, is to some extent instinctively understood; and does constitute a sort of significance, though we cannot really define it. And, as their use in language, or in connexion with language, makes it necessary to assign them a place in grammar, it is certainly more proper to treat them as above, than to follow the plan of the Greek grammarians, most of whom throw all the interjections into the class of adverbs.

OBS. 4.—Significant words uttered independently, after the manner of interjections, ought in general, perhaps, to be referred to their original classes; for all such expressions may be supposed elliptical: as, “Order! gentlemen, order!” i.e., “Come to order,”—or, “Keep order.” “Silence!” i.e., “Preserve silence.” “Out! out!” i.e., “Get out,”—or, “Clear out!” (See Obs. 5th and 6th, upon Adverbs.)

“Charge, Chester, charge! On, Stanley, on!

Were the last words of Marmion.”—Scott.

OBS. 5.—In some instances, interjections seem to be taken substantively and made nouns; as,

“I may sit in a corner, and cry hey-ho for a husband.”—Shak.

So, according to James White, in his Essay on the Verb, is the word fie, in the following example:

“If you deny me, fie upon your law.”—SHAK.: White’s Verb, p. 163.

---

* Though oh and ah are most commonly used as signs of these depressing passions, it must be confessed that they are sometimes employed by reputable writers, as marks of cheerfulness or exultation; as, “Ah, pleasant proof,” &c.—Couper’s Task, p. 179. “Merrily oh! merrily oh!”—Moore’s Tyrolese Song. “Cheerily oh! cheerily oh!”—Ib. But even if this usage be supposed to be right, there is still some difference between these words and the interjection O: if there were not, we might dispense with the latter, and substitute one of the former; but this would certainly change the import of many an invocation.

EXAMPLES FOR PARSING.

PRAXIS XI.—ETYMOLOGICAL.

In the Eleventh Praxis, it is required of the pupil—to distinguish and define the different parts of speech, and ALL their classes and modifications.

The definitions to be given in the Eleventh Praxis, are, two for an article, six for a noun, three for an adjective, six for a pronoun, seven for a verb finite, five for an infinitive, two for a participle, two (and sometimes three) for an adverb, two for a conjunction, one for a preposition, and two for an interjection. Thus:—

EXAMPLE PARSED.

“O! sooner shall the earth and stars fall into chaos!”—Brown’s Inst., p. 92.

O is an interjection, indicating earnestness. 1. An interjection is a word that is uttered merely to indicate some strong or sudden emotion of the mind. 2. The interjection of wishing, earnestness, or vocative address, is O.

Sooner is an adverb of time, of the comparative degree; compared, soon, sooner, soonest. 1. An adverb is a word added to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or an other adverb; and generally expresses time, place, degree, or manner. 2. Adverbs of time are those which answer to the question, When? How long? How soon? or, How often? including these which ask. 3. The comparative degree is that which is more or less than something contrasted with it.

Shall is an auxiliary to fall. 1. An auxiliary is a short verb prefixed to one of the principal parts of an other verb, to express some particular mode and time of the being, action, or passion.

The is the definite article. 1. An article is the word the, an, or a, which we put before nouns to limit their signification. 2. The definite article is the, which denotes some particular thing or things.

Earth is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The nominative case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the subject of a finite verb.

And is a copulative conjunction. 1. A conjunction is a word used to connect words or sentences in construction, and to show the dependence of the terms so connected. 2. A copulative conjunction is a conjunction that denotes an addition, a cause, a consequence, or a supposition.

Stars is a common noun, of the third person, plural number, neuter gender, and nominative case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The plural number is that which denotes more than one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The nominative case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun which usually denotes the subject of a finite verb.

Fall, or Shall fall, is an irregular active-intransitive verb, from fall, fell, falling, fallen; found in the indicative mood, first-future tense, third person, and plural number. 1. A verb is a word that signifies to be, to act, or to be acted upon. 2. An irregular verb is a verb that does not form the preterit and the perfect participle by assuming d or ed. 3. An active-intransitive verb is a verb that expresses an action which has no person or thing for its object. 4. The indicative mood is that form of the verb, which simply indicates or declares a thing, or asks a question. 5. The first-future tense is that which expresses what will take place hereafter. 6. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 7. The plural number is that which denotes more than one.

Into is a preposition. 1. A preposition is a word used to express some relation of different things or thoughts to each other, and is generally placed before a noun or a pronoun.

Chaos is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case. 1. A noun is the name of any person, place, or thing, that can be known or mentioned. 2. A common noun is the name of a sort, kind, or class, of beings or things. 3. The third person is that which denotes the person or thing merely spoken of. 4. The singular number is that which denotes but one. 5. The neuter gender is that which denotes things that are neither male nor female. 6. The objective case is that form or state of a noun or pronoun, which usually denotes the object of a verb, participle, or preposition.

LESSON I.—PARSING.

“Ah! St. Anthony preserve me!—Ah—ah—eh—eh!—Why—why—after all, your hand is not so co-o-o-old, neither. Of the two, it is rather warmer than my own. Can it be, though, that you are not dead?” “Not I.”—MOLIERE: in Burgh's Speaker, p. 232.

“I'll make you change your cuckoo note, you old philosophical humdrum, you—[Beats him]
[Beats him]. I'll make you say somewhat else than, ‘All things are doubtful; all things are uncertain;’—[Beats him]
[Beats him]. I will, you old fusty pedant.” “Ah!—oh!—eh!—What, beat a philosopher!—Ah!—oh!—eh!”—MOLIERE: ib., p. 247.

“What! will these hands never be clean?—No more of that, my lord; no more of that. You mar all with this starting.” * * * “Here is the smell of blood still.—All the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh! oh! oh!”—Shak., Macbeth, Act V, Sc. 1.

“Ha! at the gates what grisly forms appear!
What dismal shrieks of laughter wound the ear!”—Merry.

LESSON II.—PARSING.

“Yet this may be the situation of some now known to us.—O frightful thought! O horrible image! Forbid it, O Father of mercy! If it be possible, let no creature of thine ever be the object of that wrath, against which the strength of thy whole creation united, would stand but as the moth against the thunderbolt!”—Burgh's Speaker, p. 289.

“If it be so, our God, whom we serve, is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace; and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.”—Daniel, iii, 17 and 18.

“Grant me patience, just Heaven!—Of all the cants which are canted in this canting world—though the cant of hypocrites may be the worst—the cant of criticism is the most tormenting!”—Sterne.

“Ah, no! Achilles meets a shameful fate,
Oh! how unworthy of the brave and great.”—Pope.

LESSON III.—PARSING.

“O let not thy heart despise me! thou whom experience has not taught that it is misery to lose that which it is not happiness to possess.”—Dr. Johnson.

“Disguise thyself as thou wilt, still, Slavery! still thou art a bitter draught; and though thousands in all ages have been made to drink of thee, thou art no less bitter on that account.”—Sterne.

“Put it out of the power of truth to give you an ill character; and if any body reports you not to be an honest or a good man, let your practice give him the lie. This is all very feasible.”—Antoninus.

“Oh that men should put an enemy into their mouths to steal away their brains! that we should, with joy, pleasance, revel, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts!”—Shakspeare.

“All these afar off stood, crying, Alas!
Alas! and wept, and gnashed their teeth, and groaned;
And with the owl, that on her ruins sat,
Made dolorous concert in the ear of Night.”—Pollok.

“Snatch’d in thy prime! alas, the stroke were mild,
Had my frail form obey’d the fate’s decree!
Blest were my lot, O Cynthia! O my child!
Had Heaven so pleas’d, and I had died for thee!”—Shenstone.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

ERRORS RESPECTING INTERJECTIONS.

“Of chance or change, oh let not man complain.”—Bucke’s Classical Gram., p. 85.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the interjection oh, a sign of sorrow, pain, or surprise, is here used to indicate mere earnestness. But, according to the list of interjections, or OBS. 2d under it, the interjection of wishing, earnestness, or vocative address, is O, and not oh. Therefore, oh should here be O; thus, “Of chance or change, O let not man complain.”—Beattie’s Minstrel, B. ii, l. 1.]

“O thou persecutor! Oh ye hypocrites.”—Merchant’s Gram., p. 99; et al. “Oh! thou, who touchedst Isaiah’s hallowed lips with fire.”—Ib., (Key,) p. 197. “Oh! happy we, surrounded by so many blessings.”—Ib., (Exercises), p. 138. “Oh! thou, who art so unmindful of thy duty.”—Ib., (Key), p. 196. “If I am wrong, oh teach my heart To find that better way.”—Pope’s Works. “Heus! evocate hue Davum. Ter. Hoe! call Davus out hither.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 155. “It was represented by an analogy, (Oh, how inadequate!) which was borrowed from the religion of paganism.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 281. “Oh that Ishmael might live before thee!”—ALGER’S BIBLE: Gen., xvii, 18. “And he said unto him, Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Gen., xviii, 30. “And he said, Oh let not the Lord be angry.”—ID., and SCOTT’S: ib., ver. 32. “Oh, my lord, let thy servant, I pray thee, speak a word.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE, and ALGER’S: Gen., xlv, 18. “Oh, Virtue! how amiable thou art! I fear, alas! for my life.”—Fisk’s Gram., p. 89. “Ay me, they little know How dearly I abide that boast so vain.”—Milton’s P. L., B. iv, l. 86. “Oh! that I had digged myself a cave.”—FLETCHER: in Bucke’s Gram., p. 78. “O, my good lord! thy comfort comes too late.”—SHAK.: ib., p. 78. “The vocative takes no article; it is distinguished thus: O Pedro, Oh Peter! O Dios, Oh God!”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 43. “Oh, o! But, the relative is always the same.”—Cobbett’s Eng. Gram., 1st Ed., p. 127. “Oh, oh! But, the relative is always the same.”—Id., Edition of 1832, p. 116. “Ah hail, ye happy men!”—Jaudon’s Gram., p. 116. “Oh that I had wings like a dove!”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE, and ALGER’S: Ps., lv, 6. “Oh Glorious hope! O Blessed abode!”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 183. “Alas, Friends, how joyous is your presence.”—Rev. T. Smith’s Gram., p. 87. “Oh, blissful days! Ah me! how soon ye pass!”—Parker and Fox’s Gram., Part I, p. 16; Part III, p. 29.

“Oh golden days! oh bright unvalued hours!
 What bliss (did ye but know that bliss) were yours!”—Barbauld.
 “Ay me! what perils do environ
 The man that meddles with cold iron.”—Hudibras.

CHAPTER XII.—QUESTIONS.

ORDER OF REHEARSAL, AND METHOD OF EXAMINATION.

PART SECOND, ETYMOLOGY.

☞ [The following questions refer almost wholly to the main text of the Etymology of this work, and are such as every student should be able to answer with readiness and accuracy, before he proceeds to any subsequent part of the study or the exercises of English grammar.]

LESSON I.—PARTS OF SPEECH.

1. Of what does Etymology treat? 2. What is meant by the term, “Parts of Speech?” 3. What are Classes, under the parts of speech? 4. What are Modifications? 5. How many and what are the parts of speech? 6. What is an article? 7. What is a noun? 8. What is an adjective? 9. What is a pronoun? 10. What is a verb? 11. What is a participle? 12. What is an adverb? 13. What is a conjunction? 14. What is a preposition? 15. What is an interjection?

LESSON II.—PARSING.

1. What is Parsing? and what relation does it bear to grammar? 2. What is a Praxis? and what is said of the word? 3. What is required of the pupil in the FIRST PRAXIS? 4. How many definitions are here to be given for each part of speech? 5. How is the following example parsed? “The patient ox submits to the yoke, and meekly performs the labour required of him.”

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the First Chapter, or the First Praxis.]

LESSON III.—ARTICLES.

1. What is an ARTICLE? 2. Are an and a different articles, or the same? 3. When ought an to be used, and what are the examples? 4. When should a be used, and what are the examples? 5. What form of the article do the sounds of w and y require? 6. Can you repeat the alphabet, with an or a before the name of each letter? 7. Will you name the ten parts of speech, with an or a before each name? 8. When does a common noun not admit an article? 9. How is the sense of nouns commonly made indefinitely partitive? 10. Does the mere being of a thing demand the use of articles? 11. Can articles ever be used when we mean to speak of a whole species? 12. But how does an or a commonly limit the sense? 13. And how does the commonly limit the sense? 14. Which number does the limit, the singular or the plural? 15. When is the required before adjectives? 16. Why is an or a not applicable to plurals? 17. What is said of an or a before an adjective of number? 18. When, or how often, should articles be inserted? 19. What is said of needless articles? 20. What is the effect of putting one article for the other, and how shall we know which to choose? 21. How are the two articles distinguished in grammar? 22. Which is the definite article, and what does it denote? 23. Which is the indefinite article, and what does it denote? 24. What modifications have the articles?

LESSON IV.—PARSING.

1. What is required of the pupil in the SECOND PRAXIS? 2. How many definitions are here to be given for each part of speech? 3. How is the following example parsed? "The task of a schoolmaster laboriously prompting and urging an indolent class, is worse than his who drives lazy horses along a sandy road."

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the Second Chapter, or the Second Praxis; and then, if you please, you may correct orally the five lessons of bad English, with which the Second Chapter concludes.]

LESSON V.—NOUNS.

1. What is a NOUN, and what are the examples given? 2. Into what general classes are nouns divided? 3. What is a proper noun? 4. What is a common noun? 5. What particular classes are included among common nouns? 6. What is a collective noun? 7. What is an abstract noun? 8. What is a verbal or participial noun? 9. What modifications have nouns? 10. What are Persons, in grammar? 11. How many persons are there, and what are they called? 12. What is the first person? 13. What is the second person? 14. What is the third person? 15. What are Numbers, in grammar? 16. How many numbers are there, and what are they called? 17. What is the singular number? 18. What is the plural number? 19. How is the plural number of nouns regularly formed? 20. How is the regular plural formed without increase of syllables? 21. How is the regular plural formed when the word gains a syllable?

LESSON VI.—NOUNS.

1. What are Genders, in grammar? 2. How many genders are there, and what are they called? 3. What is the masculine gender? 4. What is the feminine gender? 5. What is the neuter gender? 6. What nouns, then, are masculine? what, feminine? and what, neuter? 7. What inflection of English nouns regularly changes their gender? 8. On what are the different genders founded, and to what parts of speech do they belong? 9. When the noun is such as may be applied to either sex, how is the gender usually determined? 10. What principle of universal grammar determines the gender when both sexes are taken together? 11. What is said of the gender of nouns of multitude? 12. Under what circumstances is it common to disregard the distinction of sex? 13. In how many ways are the sexes distinguished in grammar? 14. When the gender is figurative, how is it indicated? 15. What are Cases, in grammar? 16. How many cases are there, and what are they called? 17. What is the nominative case? 18. What is the subject of a verb? 19. What is the possessive case? 20. How is the possessive case of nouns formed? 21. What is the objective case? 22. What is the object of a verb, participle, or preposition? 23. What two cases of nouns are alike in form, and how are they distinguished? 24. What is the declension of a noun? 25. How do you decline the nouns, friend, man, fox, and fly?

LESSON VII—PARSING.

1. What is required of the pupil in the THIRD PRAXIS? 2. How many definitions are here to be given for each part of speech? 3. How is the following example to be parsed? “The writings of Hannah More appear to me more praise-worthy than Scott’s.”

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the Third Chapter, or the Third Praxis; and then, if you please, you may correct orally the three lessons of bad English, with which the Third Chapter concludes.]

LESSON VIII.—ADJECTIVES.

1. What is an ADJECTIVE, and what are the examples given? 2. Into what classes may adjectives be divided? 3. What is a common adjective? 4. What is a proper adjective? 5. What is a numeral adjective? 6. What is a pronominal adjective? 7. What is a participial adjective? 8. What is a compound adjective? 9. What modifications have adjectives? 10. What is comparison, in grammar? 11. How many and what are the degrees of comparison? 12. What is the positive degree? 13. What is the comparative degree? 14. What is the superlative degree? 15. What adjectives cannot be compared? 16. What adjectives are compared by means of adverbs? 17. How are adjectives regularly compared? 18. What principles of spelling must be observed in the comparing of adjectives? 19. To what adjectives is the regular method of comparison, by er and est, applicable? 20. Is there any other method of expressing the degrees of comparison? 21. How are the degrees of diminution, or inferiority, expressed? 22. Has the regular method of comparison any degrees of this kind? 23. Do we ever compare by adverbs those adjectives which can be compared by er and est? 24. How do you compare good? bad, evil, or ill? little? much? many? 25. How do you compare far? near? fore? hind? in? out? up? low? late? 26. What words want the positive? 27. What words want the comparative?

LESSON IX.—PARSING.

1. What is required of the pupil in the FOURTH PRAXIS? 2. How many definitions are here to be given for each part of speech? 3. How is the following example parsed? “The best and most effectual method of teaching grammar, is precisely that of which the careless are least fond: teach learnedly, rebuking whatsoever is false, blundering, or unmannerly.”

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the Fourth Chapter, or the Fourth Praxis; and then, if you please, you may correct orally the three lessons of bad English, with which the Fourth Chapter concludes.]

LESSON X.—PRONOUNS.

1. What is a PRONOUN, and what is the example given? 2. How many pronouns are there? 3. How are pronouns divided? 4. What is a personal pronoun? 5. How many and what are the simple personal pronouns? 6. How many and what are the compound personal pronouns? 7. What is a relative pronoun? 8. Which are the relative pronouns? 9. What peculiarity has the relative what? 10. What is an interrogative pronoun? 11. Which are the interrogative pronouns? 12. Do who, which, and what, all ask the same question? 13. What modifications have pronouns? 14. Why are not these things defined under the head of pronouns? 15. What is the declension of a pronoun? 16. How do you decline the pronoun I? Thou? He? She? It? 17. What is said of the compound personal pronouns? 18. How do you decline the pronoun Myself? Thyself? Himself? Herself? Itself? 19. Are the interrogative pronouns declined like the simple relatives? 20. How do you decline Who? Which? What? That? As? 21. Have the compound relative pronouns any declension? 22. How do you decline Whoever? Whosoever? Whichever? Whichsoever? Whatever? Whatsoever?

LESSON XI.—PARSING.

1. What is required of the pupil in the FIFTH PRAXIS? 2. How many definitions are here to be given for each part of speech? 3. How is the following example parsed? “Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?”

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the Fifth Chapter, or the Fifth Praxis; and then, if you please, you may correct orally the three lessons of bad English, with which the Fifth Chapter concludes.]

LESSON XII.—VERBS.

1. What is a VERB, and what are the examples given? 2. Why are verbs called by that name? 3. Respecting an English verb, what things are to be sought in the first place? 4. What is the Present? 5. What is the Preterit? 6. What is the Imperfect Participle? 7. What is the Perfect Participle? 8. How are verbs divided, with respect to their form? 9. What is a regular verb? 10. What is an irregular verb? 11. What is a redundant verb? 12. What is a defective verb? 13. How are verbs divided, with respect to their signification? 14. What is an active-transitive verb? 15. What is an active-intransitive verb? 16. What is a passive verb? 17. What is a neuter verb? 18. What modifications have verbs? 19. What are Moods, in grammar? 20. How many moods are there, and what are they called? 21. What is the infinitive mood? 22. What is the indicative mood? 23. What is the potential mood? 24. What is the subjunctive mood? 25. What is the imperative mood?

LESSON XIII.—VERBS.

1. What are Tenses, in grammar? 2. How many tenses are there, and what are they called? 3. What is the present tense? 4. What is the imperfect tense? 5. What is the perfect tense? 6. What is the pluperfect tense? 7. What is the first-future tense? 8. What is the second-future tense? 9. What are the Person and Number of a verb? 10. How many persons and numbers belong to verbs? 11. Why are not these things defined under the head of verbs? 12. How are the second and third persons singular distinctively formed? 13. How are the person and number of a verb ascertained, where no peculiar ending is employed to mark them? 14. What is the conjugation of a verb? 15. What are the PRINCIPAL PARTS in the conjugation of a verb? 16. What is a verb called which wants some of these parts? 17. What is an auxiliary, in grammar? 18. What verbs are used as auxiliaries? 19. What are the inflections of the verb do, in its simple tenses? 20. What are the inflections of the verb be, in its simple tenses? 21. What are the inflections of the verb have, in its simple tenses? 22. What are the inflections and uses of shall and will? 23. What are the inflections and uses of may? 24. What are the inflections and uses of can? 25. What are the uses of must, which is uninflected? 26. To what style is the inflecting of shall, will, may, can, should, would, might, and could, now restricted?

LESSON XIV.—VERBS.

1. What is the simplest form of an English conjugation? 2. What is the first example of conjugation? 3. What are the principal parts of the verb LOVE? 4. How many and what tenses has the infinitive mood?— the indicative?— the potential?— the subjunctive?— the imperative? 9. What is the verb LOVE in the Infinitive, present?— perfect?— Indicative, present?— imperfect?— perfect?— pluperfect?— first-future?— second-future?— Potential, present?— imperfect?— perfect?— pluperfect?— Subjunctive, present?—imperfect?— Imperative, present? 24. What are its participles?

LESSON XV.—VERBS.

1. What is the synopsis of the verb LOVE, in the first person singular?—second person singular, solemn style?—third person singular?—first person plural?—second person plural?—third person plural? 7. If the second person singular of this verb be used familiarly, how should it be formed?

LESSON XVI.—VERBS.

1. What is the second example of conjugation? 2. What are the principal parts? 3. How is the verb SEE conjugated throughout? 4. How do you form a synopsis of the verb see, with the pronoun I? thou? he? we? you? they?

LESSON XVII.—VERBS.

1. What is the third example of conjugation? 2. What are the principal parts? 3. How is the verb BE conjugated? 4. How do you form a synopsis of the verb be, with the nominative I? thou? he? we? you? they? the man? the men?

LESSON XVIII.—VERBS.

1. What is the compound form of conjugating active or neuter verbs? 2. What peculiar meaning does this form convey? 3. What is the fourth example of conjugation? 4. What are the principal parts of the simple verb READ? 5. How is the verb READ conjugated in the compound form? 6. How do you form a synopsis of the verb BE READING, with the nominative I? thou? he? we? you? they? the boy? the boys?

LESSON XIX.—VERBS.

1. How are passive verbs formed? 2. What is the fifth example of conjugation? 3. How is the passive verb BE LOVED conjugated throughout? 4. How do you form a synopsis of the verb BE LOVED, with the nominative I? thou? he? we? you? they? the child? the children?

LESSON XX.—VERBS.

1. How is a verb conjugated negatively? 2. How is the form of negation exemplified by the verb love in the first person singular? 3. What is the form of negation for the solemn style, second person singular? 4. What is the form for the familiar style? 5. What is the negative form of the verb love with the pronoun he? 6. How is the verb conjugated interrogatively? 7. What is the interrogative form of the verb love with the pronoun I? 8. What is the form of question in the solemn style, with this verb in the second person singular? 9. How are such questions asked in the familiar style? 10. What is the interrogative form of the verb love with the pronoun he? 11. How is a verb conjugated interrogatively and negatively? 12. How is the negative question exemplified in the first person plural? 13. How is the negative question exemplified in the second person plural? 14. How is the like synopsis formed in the third person plural?

LESSON XXI.—VERBS.

1. What is an irregular verb? 2. How many simple irregular verbs are there? 3. What are the principal parts of the following verbs: Arise, be, bear, beat, begin, behold, beset, bestead, bid, bind, bite, bleed, break, breed, bring, buy, cast, chide, choose, cleave, cling, come, cost, cut, do, draw, drink, drive, eat, fall, feed, feel, fight, find, flee, fling, fly, forbear, forsake, get, give, go, grow, have, hear, hide, hit, hold, hurt, keep, know, lead, leave, lend, let, lie, lose, make, meet, outdo, put, read, rend, rid, ride, ring, rise, run, say, see, seek, sell, send, set, shed, shoe, shoot, shut, shred, shrink, sing, sink, sit, slay, sling, slink, smite, speak, spend, spin, spit, spread, spring, stand, steal, stick, sting, stink, stride, strike, swear, swim, swing, take, teach, tear, tell, think, thrust, tread, wear, win, write?

LESSON XXII.—VERBS.

1. What is a redundant verb? 2. How many redundant verbs are there? 3. What are the principal parts of the following verbs: Abide, awake, belay, bend, bereave, beseech, bet, betide, blend, bless, blow, build, burn, burst, catch, clothe, creep, crow, curse, dare, deal, dig, dive, dream, dress, dwell, freeze, geld, gild, gird, grave, grind, hang, heave, hew, kneel, knit, lade, lay, lean, leap, learn, light, mean, mow, mulet, pass, pay, pen, plead, prove, quit, rap, reave, rive, roast, saw, seethe, shake, shape, shave, shear, shine, show, sleep, slide, slit, smell, sow, speed, spell, spill, split, spoil, stave, stay, string, strive, strow, sweat, sweep, swell, thrive, throw, wake, wax, weave, wed, weep, wet, whet, wind, wont, work, wring? 4. What is a defective verb? 5. What verbs are defective?

LESSON XXIII.—PARSING.

1. What is required of the pupil in the SIXTH PRAXIS? 2. How many definitions are here to be given for each part of speech? 3. How is the following example parsed? "The freedom of choice seems essential to happiness; because, properly speaking, that is not our own which is imposed upon us."

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the Sixth Chapter, or the Sixth Praxis; and then, if you please, you may correct orally the three lessons of bad English, with which the Sixth Chapter concludes.]

LESSON XXIV.—PARTICIPLES.

1. What is a PARTICIPLE, and how is it generally formed? 2. How many kinds of participles are there, and what are they called? 3. What is the imperfect participle? 4. What is the perfect participle? 5. What is the preperfect participle? 6. How is the first or imperfect participle formed? 7. How is the second or perfect participle formed? 8. How is the third or preperfect participle formed? 9. What are the participles of the following verbs, according to the simplest form of conjugation: Repeat, study, return, mourn, seem, rejoice, appear, approach, suppose, think, set, come, rain, stand, know, deceive?

LESSON XXV.—PARSING.

1. What is required of the pupil in the SEVENTH PRAXIS? 2. How many definitions are here to be given for each part of speech? 3. How is the following example parsed: “Religion, rightly understood and practised, has the purest of all joys attending it.”

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the Seventh Chapter, or the Seventh Praxis; and then, if you please, you may correct orally the three lessons of bad English, with which the Seventh Chapter concludes.]

LESSON XXVI.—ADVERBS.

1. What is an ADVERB, and what is the example given? 2. To what general classes may adverbs be reduced? 3. What are adverbs of time? 4. What are adverbs of place? 5. What are adverbs of degree? 6. What are adverbs of manner? 1. What are conjunctive adverbs? 8. Are all the conjunctive adverbs included in the first four classes? 9. How may the adverbs of time be subdivided? 10. How may the adverbs of place be subdivided? 11. How may the adverbs of degree be subdivided? 12. How may the adverbs of manner be subdivided? 13. What modifications have adverbs? 14. How do we compare well, badly or ill, little, much, far, and forth? 15. Of what degree is the adverb rather? 16. What is said of the comparison of adverbs by more and most, less and least?

LESSON XXVII.—PARSING.

1. What is required of the pupil in the EIGHTH PRAXIS? 2. How many definitions are here to be given for each part of speech? 3. How is the following example parsed? “When was it that Rome attracted most strongly the admiration of mankind?”

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the Eighth Chapter, or the Eighth Praxis; and then, if you please, you may correct orally the lesson of bad English, with which the Eighth Chapter concludes.]

LESSON XXVIII.—CONJUNCTIONS.

1. What is a CONJUNCTION, and what is the example given? 2. Have we any connective words besides the conjunctions? 3. How do relative pronouns differ from other connectives? 4. How do conjunctive adverbs differ from other connectives? 5. How do conjunctions differ from other connectives? 6. How do prepositions differ from other connectives? 7. How are the conjunctions divided? 8. What is a copulative conjunction? 9. What is a disjunctive conjunction? 10. What are corresponsive conjunctions? 11. Which are the copulative conjunctions? 12. Which are the disjunctive conjunctions? 13. Which are the corresponsive conjunctions?

LESSON XXIX.—PARSING.

1. What is required of the pupil in the NINTH PRAXIS? 2. How many definitions are here to be given for each part of speech? 3. How is the following example parsed? “If thou hast done a good deed, boast not of it.”

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the Ninth Chapter, or the Ninth Praxis; and then, if you please, you may correct orally the lesson of bad English, with which the Ninth Chapter concludes.]

LESSON XXX.—PREPOSITIONS.

1. What is a PREPOSITION, and what is the example given? 2. Are the prepositions divided into classes? 3. Have prepositions any grammatical modifications? 4. How are the prepositions arranged in the list? 5. What are the prepositions beginning with a?—with b?—with c?—with d?—with e?—with f?—with i?—with m?—with n?—with o?—with p?—with r?—with s?—with t?—with u?—with w? 21. Does this list contain all the words that are ever used in English as prepositions?

LESSON XXXI.—PARSING.

1. What is required of the pupil in the TENTH PRAXIS? 2. How many definitions are here to be given for each part of speech? 3. How is the following example parsed? “Never adventure on too near an approach to what is evil?”

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the Tenth Chapter, or the Tenth Praxis; and then, if you please, you may correct orally the lesson of bad English, with which the Tenth Chapter concludes.]

LESSON XXXII.—INTERJECTIONS.

1. What is an INTERJECTION, and what are the examples given? 2. Why are interjections so called? 3. How are the interjections arranged in the list? 4. What are the interjections of joy?—of praise?—of sorrow?—of wonder?—of wishing or earnestness?—of pain or fear?—of contempt?—of aversion?—of calling aloud?—of exultation?—of laughter?—of salutation?—of calling to attention?—of calling to silence?—of surprise or horror?—of languor?—of stopping?—of parting?—of knowing or detecting?—of interrogating?

LESSON XXXIII.—PARSING.

1. What is required of the pupil in the ELEVENTH PRAXIS? How many definitions are here given for each part of speech? 3. How is the following example parsed? “O! sooner shall the earth and stars fall into chaos!”

[Now parse, in like manner, the three lessons of the Eleventh Chapter, or the Eleventh Praxis; and then, if you please, you may correct orally the lesson of bad English, with which the Eleventh Chapter concludes.]

CHAPTER XIII.—FOR WRITING.

EXERCISES IN ETYMOLOGY.

[When the pupil has become familiar with the different parts of speech, and their classes and modifications, and has been sufficiently exercised in etymological parsing and correcting, he should write out the following exercises; for speech and writing afford us different modes of testing the proficiency of students, and exercises in both are necessary to a complete course of English Grammar.]

EXERCISE I.—ARTICLES.

1. Prefix the definite article to each of the following nouns: path, paths; loss, losses; name, names; page, pages; want, wants; doubt, doubts; votary, votaries.

2. Prefix the indefinite article to each of the following nouns: age, error, idea, omen, urn, arch, bird, cage, dream, empire, farm, grain, horse, idol, jay, king, lady, man, novice, opinion, pony, quail, raven, sample, trade, uncle, vessel, window, youth, zone, whirlwind, union, onion, unit, eagle, house, honour, hour, herald, habitation, hospital, harper, harpoon, ewer, eye, humour.

3. Insert the definite article rightly in the following phrases: George Second—fair appearance—part first—reasons most obvious—good man—wide circle—man of honour—man of world—old books—common people—same person—smaller piece—rich and poor—first and last—all time—great excess—nine muses—how rich reward—so small number—all ancient writers—in nature of things—much better course.

4. Insert the indefinite article rightly in each of the following phrases: new name—very quick motion—other sheep—such power—what instance—great weight—such worthy cause—to great difference—high honour—humble station—universal law—what strange event—so deep interest—as firm hope—so great wit—humorous story—such person—few dollars—little reflection.

EXERCISE II.—NOUNS.

1. Write the plurals of the following nouns: town, country, case, pin, needle, harp, pen, sex, rush, arch, marsh, monarch, blemish, distich, princess, gas, bias, stigma, wo, grotto, folio, punctilio, ally, duty, toy, money, entry, valley, volley, half, dwarf, strife, knife, roof, muff, staff, chief, sheaf, mouse, penny, ox, foot, erratum, axis, thesis, criterion, bolus, rebus, son-in-law, pailful, man-servant, fellow-citizen.

2. Write the feminines corresponding to the following nouns: earl, friar, stag, lord, duke, marquis, hero, executor, nephew, heir, actor, enchanter, hunter, prince, traitor, lion, arbiter, tutor, songster, abbot, master, uncle, widower, son, landgrave.

3. Write the possessive case singular, of the following nouns: table, leaf, boy, torch, park, porch, portico, lynx, calf, sheep, wolf, echo, folly, cavern, father-in-law, court-martial, precipice, countess, lordship.

4. Write the possessive case plural, of the following nouns: priest, tutor, scholar, mountain, city, courtier, judge, citizen, woman, servant, writer, grandmother.

5. Write the possessive case, both singular and plural, of the following nouns: body, fancy, lady, attorney, negro, nuncio, life, brother, deer, child, wife, goose, beau, envoy, distaff, hero, thief, wretch.

EXERCISE III.—ADJECTIVES.

1. Annex a suitable noun to each of the following adjectives, without repeating any word: good, great, tall, wise, strong, dark, dangerous, dismal, drowsy, twenty, true, difficult, pale, livid, ripe, delicious, stormy, rainy, convenient, heavy, disastrous, terrible, necessary. Thus—good manners, &c.

2. Place a suitable adjective before each of the following nouns, without repeating any word: man, son, merchant, work, fence, fear, poverty, picture, prince, delay, suspense, devices, follies, actions. Thus—wise man, &c.

3. Write the forms in which the following adjectives are compared by inflection, or change of form: black, bright, short, white, old, high, wet, big, few, lovely, dry, fat, good, bad, little, much, many, far, true, just, vast.

4. Write the forms in which the following adjectives are compared, using the adverbs of increase: delightful, comfortable, agreeable, pleasant, fortunate, valuable, wretched, vivid, timid, poignant, excellent, sincere, honest, correct.

5. Write the forms in which the following adjectives are compared, using the comparative adverbs of inferiority or diminution: objectionable, formidable, forcible, comely, pleasing, obvious, censurable, prudent, imprudent, imperfect, pleasant, unpleasant.

EXERCISE IV.—PRONOUNS.

1. Write the nominative plural of the following pronouns: I, thou, he, she, it, who, which, what, that, as.

2. Write the objective singular of the following pronouns: I, thou, he, she, it, who, which, what, that, as.

3. Write the following words in their customary and proper forms: he's, her's, it's, our's, your's, their's, who's, myself, hisself, theirselves.

4. Write together in declension the following pronouns, according to the agreement of each two: I myself, thou thyself, he himself, she herself, it itself.

5. Rewrite the following sentences, and make them good English: "Nor is the criminal binding any thing: but was, his self, being bound."—Wrights Gram., p. 193. "The writer surely did not mean, that the work was preparing its self."—Ib. "May, or can, in its self, denotes possibility."—Ib., p. 216. "Consequently those in connection with the remaining pronouns respectively, should be written,—he, his self;—she, her self;—ye or you, your selves; they, their selves."—Ib., p. 154. "Lest their beacons be lost to the view, and their selves wrecked on the shoals of destruction."—Ib., p. 155. "In the regal style, as generally in the second person, the singular noun is added to the plural pronoun, ourselves."—Churchill's Gram., p. 78. "Each has it's peculiar advantages."—Ib., p. 283. "Who his ownself bare our sins in his own body on the tree."—The Friend, iv, 302. "It is difficult to look inwardly on oneself."—Journal of N. Y. Lit. Convention. p. 287.

EXERCISE V.—VERBS.

1. Write the four principal parts of each of the following verbs: slip, thrill, caress, force, release, crop, try, die, obey, delay, destroy, deny, buy, come, do, feed, lie, say, huzza, pretend, deliver, arrest.
2. Write the following preterits, each in its appropriate form: exprest, stript, dropt, jumpt, prest, topt, whipt, linkt, propt, fixt, crost, stept, distrest, gusht, confest, snapt, skipt, kist, discust, tackt.
3. Write the following verbs in the indicative mood, present tense, second person singular: move, strive, please, reach, confess, fix, deny, survive, know, go, outdo, close, lose, pursue, defend, surpass, conquer, deliver, enlighten, protect, polish.
4. Write the following verbs in the indicative mood, present tense, third person singular: leave, seem, search, impeach, fear, redress, comply, bestow, do, woo, sue, view, allure, rely, beset, release, be, bias, compel, degrade, efface, garnish, handle, induce.
5. Write the following verbs in the subjunctive mood, present tense, in the three persons singular: serve, shun, turn, learn, find, wish, throw, dream, possess, detest, disarm, allow, pretend, expose, alarm, deprive, transgress.

EXERCISE VI.—VERBS.

1. Write a synopsis of the first person singular of the active verb amuse, conjugated affirmatively.
2. Write a synopsis of the second person singular of the neuter verb sit, conjugated affirmatively in the solemn style.
3. Write a synopsis of the third person singular of the active verb speak, conjugated affirmatively in the compound form.
4. Write a synopsis of the first person plural of the passive verb be reduced, conjugated affirmatively.
5. Write a synopsis of the second person plural of the active verb lose, conjugated negatively.
6. Write a synopsis of the third person plural of the neuter verb stand, conjugated interrogatively.
7. Write a synopsis of the first person singular of the active verb derive, conjugated interrogatively and negatively.

EXERCISE VII.—PARTICIPLES.

1. Write the simple imperfect participles of the following verbs: belong, provoke, degrade, impress, fly, do, survey, vie, coo, let, hit, put, defer, differ, remember.
2. Write the perfect participles of the following verbs: turn, burn, learn, deem, crowd, choose, draw, hear, lend, sweep, tear, thrust, steal, write, delay, imply, exist.

3. Write the preperfect participles of the following verbs: depend, dare, deny, value, forsake, bear, set, sit, lay, mix, speak, sleep, allot.

4. Write the following participles each in its appropriate form: dipt, deckt, markt, equipt, ingulft, embarrast, astonisht, tost, embost, absorpt, attackt, gasht, soakt, hackt.

5. Write the regular participles which are now generally preferred to the following irregular ones: blent, blest, clad, curst, diven, drest, graven, hoven, hewn, knelt, leant, leapt, learnt, lit, mown, mulct, past, pent, quit, riven, roast, sawn, sodden, shaven, shorn, sown, striven, strown, sweat, swollen, thriven, waxen.

6. Write the irregular participles which are commonly preferred to the following regular ones: abided, bended, builded, bursted, catched, creeped, dealed, digged, dwelled, freezed, grinded, knitted, layed, meant, payed, reaved, slided, speeded, splitted, stringed, swepted, throwed, weaved, weeped, winded.

EXERCISE VIII.—ADVERBS, &c.

1. Compare the following adverbs: soon, often, long, fast, near, early, well, badly or ill, little, much, far, forth.

2. Place the comparative adverbs of increase before each of the following adverbs: purely, fairly, sweetly, earnestly, patiently, completely, fortunately, profitably, easily.

3. Place the comparative adverbs of diminution before each of the following adverbs: secretly, slily, liberally, favourably, powerfully, solemnly.

4. Insert suitable conjunctions in place of the following dashes: Love—fidelity are inseparable. Be shy of parties—factions. Do well—boast not. Improve time—it flies. There would be few paupers—no time were lost. Be not proud—thou art human. I saw—it was necessary. Wisdom is better—wealth. Neither he—I can do it. Wisdom—folly governs us. Take care—thou fall. Though I should boast—am I nothing.

5. Insert suitable prepositions in place of the following dashes: Plead—the dumb. Qualify thyself—action—study. Think often—the worth—time. Live—peace—all men. Keep—compass. Jest not—serious subjects. Take no part—slander. Guilt starts—its own shadow. Grudge not—giving. Go not—sleep—malice. Debate not—temptation. Depend not—the stores—others. Contend not—trifles. Many fall—grasping—things—their reach. Be deaf—detraction.

6. Correct the following sentences, and adapt the interjections to the emotions expressed by the other words: Aha! aha! I am undone. Hey! io! I am tired. Ho! be still. Avaunt! this way. Ah! what nonsense. Heigh-ho! I am delighted. Hist! it is contemptible. Oh! for that sympathetic glow! Ah! what withering phantoms glare!

PART III. SYNTAX.

Syntax treats of the relation, agreement, government, and arrangement, of words in sentences. The relation of words is their reference to other words, or their dependence according to the sense.

The agreement of words is their similarity in person, number, gender, case, mood, tense, or form.

The government of words is that power which one word has over an other, to cause it to assume some particular modification.

The arrangement of words is their collocation, or relative position, in a sentence.

CHAPTER I.—SENTENCES.

A Sentence is an assemblage of words, making complete sense, and always containing a nominative and a verb; as, "Reward sweetens labour."

The principal parts of a sentence are usually three; namely, the SUBJECT, or nominative,—the attribute, or finite VERB,—and the case put after, or the OBJECT* governed by the verb: as, "Crimes deserve punishment."

The other or subordinate parts depend upon these, either as primary or as secondary adjuncts; as, "High crimes justly deserve very severe punishments."

Sentences are usually said to be of two kinds, simple and compound.†

---

* This position is denied by some grammarians. One recent author says, "The object cannot properly be called one of the principal parts of a sentence; as it belongs only to some sentences, and then is dependent on the verb, which it modifies or explains."—Goodenow's Gram., p. 87. This is consistent enough with the notion, that, "An infinitive, with or without a substantive, may be the object of a transitive verb; as, 'I wish to ride;' 'I wish you to ride.'"—Ib., p. 37. Or, with the contrary notion, that, "An infinitive may be the object of a preposition, expressed or understood; as, 'I wish for you to ride.'"—Ibid. But if the object governed by the verb, is always a mere qualifying adjunct, a mere "explanation of the attribute," (Ib., p. 28,) how differs it from an adverb? "Adverbs are words added to verbs, and sometimes to other words, to qualify their meaning."—Ib., p. 23. And if infinitives and other mere adjuncts may be the objects which make verbs transitive, how shall a transitive verb be known? The fact is, that the true object of the transitive verb is one of the principal parts of the sentence, and that the infinitive mood cannot properly be reckoned such an object.

† Some writers distinguish sentences as being of three kinds, simple, and complex, and compound; but, in this work, care has not in general been taken to discriminate between complex sentences and compound. A late author states the difference thus: "A sentence containing but one proposition is simple; a sentence containing two propositions, one of which modifies the other, is complex; a sentence containing two propositions which in no way modify each other, is compound."—Greene's Analysis, p. 3. The term compound, as applied to sentences, is not usually so restricted. An other, using the same terms for a very different division, explains them thus: "A Simple Sentence contains but one subject and one attribute; as, 'The sun shines.' A Complex Sentence contains two or more subjects of the same attribute, or two or more attributes of the same subject; as, 'The sun and the stars shine.' The sun rises and sets.' The sun and the stars rise and set.' A Compound Sentence is composed of two or more simple or complex sentences united;

A simple sentence is a sentence which consists of one single assertion, supposition, command, question, or exclamation; as, “David and Jonathan loved each other.”—“If thine enemy hunger.”—“Do violence to no man.”—“Am I not an apostle?”—1 Cor., ix, 1. “What immortal glory shall I have acquired!”—HOOKE: Mur. Seq., p. 71.

A compound sentence is a sentence which consists of two or more simple ones either expressly or tacitly connected; as, “Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter; who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.”—Acts, xi, 13. “The more the works of Cowper are read, the more his readers will find reason to admire the variety and the extent, the graces and the energy, of his literary talents.”—HAYLEY: Mur. Seq., p. 250.

A clause, or member, is a subdivision of a compound sentence; and is itself a sentence, either simple or compound: as, “If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; if he be thirsty, give him water to drink.”—Prov., xxv, 21.*

A phrase is two or more words which express some relation of different ideas, but no entire proposition; as, “By the means appointed.”—“To be plain with you.”—“Having loved his own.”

Words that are omitted by ellipsis, and that are necessarily understood in order to complete the construction, (and only such,) must be supplied in parsing.

The leading principles to be observed in the construction of sentences, are embraced in the following twenty-four rules, which are arranged, as nearly as possible, in the order of the parts of speech.

---

as, ‘The sun shines, and the stars twinkle.’ ‘The sun rises and sets, as the earth revolves.’”—Pinneo’s English Teacher, p. 10; Analytical Gram., pp. 128, 142, and 146. This notion of a complex sentence is not more common than Greene’s; nor is it yet apparent, that the usual division of sentences into two kinds ought to give place to any tripartite distribution.

* The terms clause and member, in grammar, appear to have been generally used as words synonymous; but some authors have thought it convenient to discriminate them, as having different senses. Hiley says, “Those parts of a sentence which are separated by commas, are called clauses; and those separated by semicolons, are called members.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 66. W. Allen too confines the former term to simple members: “A compound sentence is formed by uniting two or more simple sentences; as, Man is mortal, and life is uncertain. Each of these simple sentences is called a clause. When the members of a compound sentence are complex, they are subdivided into clauses; as, Virtue leads to honor, and insures true happiness; but vice degrades the understanding, and is succeeded by infamy.”—Allen’s Gram., p. 128. By some authors, the terms clause and phrase are often carelessly confounded, each being applied with no sort of regard to its proper import. Thus, where L. Murray and his copyists expound their text about “the pupil’s composing frequently,” even the minor phrase, “composing frequently,” is absurdly called a clause; “an entire clause of a sentence.”—See Murray’s Gram., p. 179; Alger’s, 61; Fisk’s, 108; Ingersoll’s, 180; Merchant’s, 84; R. C. Smith’s, 152; Weld’s, 2d Ed., 150. The term sentence also is sometimes grossly misapplied. Thus, by R. C. Smith, the phrases “James and William,” “Thomas and John,” and others similar, are called “sentences.”—Smith’s New Gram., pp. 9 and 10. So Weld absurdly writes as follows; “A whole sentence is frequently the object of a preposition; as, ‘The crime of being a young man.’ Being a young man, is the object of the preposition of.”—Weld’s E. Gram., 2d Edition, p. 42. The phrase, “being a young man,” here depends upon “of,” but this preposition governs nothing but the participle “being.” The construction of the word “man” is explained below, in Obs. 7th on Rule 6th, of Same Cases.

THE RULES OF SYNTAX.

RULE I.—ARTICLES.

Articles relate to the nouns which they limit.

RULE II.—NOMINATIVES.

A Noun or a Pronoun which is the subject of a finite verb, must be in the nominative case.

RULE III.—APPOSITION.

A Noun or a personal Pronoun used to explain a preceding noun or pronoun, is put, by apposition, in the same case.

RULE IV.—POSSESSIVES.

A Noun or a Pronoun in the possessive case, is governed by the name of the thing possessed.

RULE V.—OBJECTIVES.

A Noun or a Pronoun made the object of an active-transitive verb or participle, is governed by it in the objective case.

RULE VI.—SAME CASES.

A Noun or a Pronoun put after a verb or participle not transitive, agrees in case with a preceding noun or pronoun referring to the same thing.

RULE VII.—OBJECTIVES.

A Noun or a Pronoun made the object of a preposition, is governed by it in the objective case.

RULE VIII.—NOM. ABSOLUTE.

A Noun or a Pronoun is put absolute in the nominative, when its case depends on no other word.

RULE IX.—ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives relate to nouns or pronouns.

RULE X.—PRONOUNS.

A Pronoun must agree with its antecedent, or the noun or pronoun which it represents, in person, number, and gender.

RULE XI.—PRONOUNS.

When the antecedent is a collective noun conveying the idea of plurality, the Pronoun must agree with it in the plural number.

RULE XII.—PRONOUNS.

When a Pronoun has two or more antecedents connected by and, it must agree with them jointly in the plural, because they are taken together.

RULE XIII.—PRONOUNS.

When a Pronoun has two or more antecedents connected by or or nor, it must agree with them singly, and not as if taken together.

RULE XIV.—FINITE VERBS.

Every finite Verb must agree with its subject, or nominative, in person and number.

RULE XV.—FINITE VERBS.

When the nominative is a collective noun conveying the idea of plurality, the Verb must agree with it in the plural number.

RULE XVI.—FINITE VERBS.

When a Verb has two or more nominatives connected by and, it must agree with them jointly in the plural, because they are taken together.

RULE XVII.—FINITE VERBS.

When a Verb has two or more nominatives connected by or or nor, it must agree with them singly, and not as if taken together.

RULE XVIII.—INFINITIVES.

The Infinitive Mood is governed in general by the preposition TO, which commonly connects it to a finite verb.

RULE XIX.—INFINITIVES.

The active verbs, bid, dare, feel, hear, let, make, need, see, and their participles, usually take the Infinitive after them without the preposition TO.

RULE XX.—PARTICIPLES.

Participles relate to nouns or pronouns, or else are governed by prepositions.

RULE XXI.—ADVERBS.

Adverbs relate to verbs, participles, adjectives, or other adverbs.

RULE XXII.—CONJUNCTIONS.

Conjunctions connect words, sentences, or parts of sentences.

RULE XXIII.—PREPOSITIONS.

Prepositions show the relations of words, and of the things or thoughts expressed by them.

RULE XXIV.—INTERJECTIONS.

Interjections have no dependent construction; they are put absolute, either alone, or with other words.

GENERAL OR CRITICAL OBSERVATIONS ON SYNTAX.

OBS. 1.—An explanation of the relation, agreement, government, and arrangement, of words in sentences, constitutes that part of grammar which we call Syntax. But many grammarians, representing this branch of their subject as consisting of two parts only, “concord and government” say little or nothing of the relation and arrangement of words, except as these are involved in the others. The four things are essentially different in their nature, as may be seen by the definitions given above, yet not so distinct in practice that they can well be made the basis of any perfect division of the rules of syntax. I have therefore, on this occasion, preferred the order of the parts of speech; each of which will form a chapter in the Syntax of this work, as each forms a chapter in the Etymology.

OBS. 2.—Agreement and concord are one and the same thing. Relation and agreement, though different, may yet coincide, and be taken together. The latter is moreover naturally allied to the former. Seven of the ten parts of speech are, with a few exceptions, incapable of any agreement; of these the relation and use must be explained in parsing; and all requisite agreement between any of the rest, is confined to words that relate to each other. For one word may relate to an other and not agree with it; but there is never any necessary agreement between words that have not a relation one to the other, or a connexion according to the sense. Any similarity happening between unconnected words, is no syntactical concord, though it may rank the terms in the same class etymologically.

OBS. 3.—From these observations it may be seen, that the most important and most comprehensive principle of English syntax, is the simple Relation of words, according to the sense. To this head alone, ought to be referred all the rules of construction by which our articles, our nominatives, our adjectives, our participles, our adverbs, our conjunctions, our prepositions, and our interjections, are to be parsed. To the ordinary syntactical use of any of these, no rules of concord, government, or position, can at all apply. Yet so defective and erroneous are the schemes of syntax which are commonly found in our English grammars, that no rules of simple relation, none by which any of the above-named parts of speech can be consistently parsed, are in general to be found in them. If there are any exceptions to this censure, they are very few, and in treatises still marked with glaring defects in regard to the syntax of some of these parts of speech.

OBS. 4.—Grammarians, of course, do not utter falsehoods intentionally; but it is lamentable to see how often they pervert doctrine by untruths uttered ignorantly. It is the design of this pandect, to make every one who reads it, an intelligent judge of the perversions, as well as of the true doctrines, of English grammar. The following citations will show him the scope and parts which have commonly been assigned to our syntax: “The construction of sentences depends principally upon the concord or agreement, and the regimen or government, of words.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 68; Churchill’s, 120. “Words in sentences have a twofold relation to one another; namely, that of Concord or Agreement; and that of Government or Influence.”—Dr. Adam’s Latin and English Grammar, p. 151. “The third part of Grammar is SYNTAX, which treats of the agreement and construction of words in a sentence.”—E. G. Greene’s Grammatical Text-Book, p. 15. “Syntax principally consists of two parts, Concord and Government.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 142; Ingersoll’s, 170; Alger’s, 51; R. C. Smith’s, 119; and many others. “Syntax consists of two parts, Concord and Government.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 175; Wright’s, 124. “The Rules of Syntax may all be included under three heads, Concord, Government, and Position.”—Bullions’s E. Gram., p. 87. “Position means the place which a word occupies in a sentence.”—Ib. “These rules may be mostly ranked under the two heads of agreement and government; the remainder may be termed miscellaneous.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 92. “Syntax treats of the agreement, government and proper arrangement of words in a sentence.”—Frost’s El. of Gram., p. 43. This last-named author, in touching the text of my books, has often corrupted it, as he does here; but my definitions of the tenses he copied without marring them much. The borrowing occurred as early as 1828, and I add this notice now, lest any should suppose me the plagiarist.

OBS. 5.—Most of our English grammars have more rules of syntax than are needed, and yet are very deficient in such as are needed. To say, as some do, that articles, adjectives, and participles, agree with nouns, is to teach Greek or Latin syntax, and not English. To throw, as Nutting does, the whole syntax of adverbs into a remark on such a rule of agreement, is to choose disorder for its own sake. To say, with Frost, Hall, Smith, Perley, Kirkham, Sanborn, Rand, and others, “The nominative case governs the verb in number and person,” and again, “A verb must agree with its nominative case in number and person,” is to confound the meaning of government and agreement, to say the same thing in different words, and to leave the subject of a verb still without a rule: for rules of government are applicable only to the words governed, and nothing ever agrees with that which governs it.* To say, with Murray and others, “Participles have the same government as the verbs from which they are derived,” is to say nothing by which either verbs or participles may be parsed, or any of their errors corrected: those many grammarians, therefore, who make this their only rule for participles, leave them all without any syntax. To say, with Murray, Alger, and others, “Adverbs, though they have no government of case, tense, &c., require an appropriate situation in the sentence,” is to squander words at random, and leave the important question unanswered, “To what do adverbs relate?” To say again, with the same gentlemen, “Conjunctions connect the same moods and tenses of verbs, and cases of nouns and pronouns,” is to put an ungrammatical, obscure, and useless assertion, in the place of an important rule. To say merely, “Prepositions govern the objective case,” is to rest all the syntax of prepositions on a rule that never applies to them, but which is meant only for one of the constructions of the objective case. To say, as many do, “Interjections require the objective case of a pronoun of the first person after them, and the nominative case of the second,” is to tell what is utterly false as the words stand, and by no means true in the sense which the authors intend. Finally, to suppose, with Murray, that, “the Interjection does not require a distinct, appropriate rule,” is in admirable keeping with all the foregoing quotations, and especially with his notion of what

---

* In the very nature of things, all agreement consists in concurrence, correspondence, conformity, similarity, sameness, equality; but government is direction, control, regulation, restrain, influence, authoritative requisition, with the implication of inequality. That these properties ought to be so far distinguished in grammar, as never to be supposed to co-exist in the same terms and under the same circumstances, must be manifest to every reasoner. Some grammarians who seem to have been not always unaware of this, have nevertheless egregiously forgotten it at times. Thus Nutting, in the following remark, expresses a true doctrine, though he has written it with no great accuracy: “A word in parsing never governs the same word which it qualifies, or with which it agrees.”—Practical Gram., p. 108. Yet, in his syntax, in which he pretends to separate agreement from government, he frames his first rule under the better head thus: “The nominative case governs a verb.”—Ib. p. 96. Lindsey Murray recognizes no such government as this; but seems to suppose his rule for the agreement of a verb with its nominative to be sufficient for both verb and nominative. He appears, however, not to have known that a word does not agree syntactically with another that governs it; for, in his Exercises, he has given us, apparently from his own pen, the following untrue, but otherwise not very objectionable sentence: “On these occasions, the pronoun is governed by, an consequently agrees with, the preceding word.”—Exercises, 8vo, ii, 74. This he corrects thus: On these occasions, the pronoun is governed by the preceding word, and consequently agrees with it.”—Key, 8vo, ii, 204. The amendments most needed he overlooks; for the thought is not just, and the two verbs which are here connected with one and the same nominative, are different in form. See the same example, with the same variation of it, in Smith's New Gram., p. 167; and, without the change, in Ingersoll's, p. 233; and Fisk's, 141.

it does require; namely, “the objective case of the first person:” but who dares deny that the following exclamation is good English?

“O wretched we! why were we hurried down
This lubric and adulterate age!”—Dryden.

OBS. 6.—The truth of any doctrine in science, can be nothing else than its conformity to facts, or to the nature of things; and chiefly by what he knows of the things themselves, must any one judge of what others say concerning them. Erroneous or inadequate views, confused or inconsistent statements, are the peculiar property of those who advance them; they have, in reality, no relationship to science itself, because they originate in ignorance; but all science is knowledge—it is knowledge methodized. What general rules are requisite for the syntactical parsing of the several parts of speech in English, may be seen at once by any one who will consider for a moment the usual construction of each. The correction of false syntax, in its various forms, will require more—yes, five times as many; but such of these as answer only the latter purpose, are, I think, better reserved for notes under the principal rules. The doctrines which I conceive most worthy to form the leading canons of our syntax, are those which are expressed in the twenty-four rules above. If other authors prefer more, or fewer, or different principles for their chief rules, I must suppose, it is because they have studied the subject less. Biased, as we may be, both by our knowledge and by our ignorance, it is easy for men to differ respecting matters of expediency; but that clearness, order, and consistency, are both expedient, and requisite, in didactic compositions, is what none can doubt.

OBS. 7.—Those English grammarians who tell us, as above, that syntax is divided into parts, or included under a certain number of heads, have almost universally contradicted themselves by treating the subject without any regard to such a division; and, at the same time, not a few have somehow been led into the gross error of supposing broad principles of concord or government where no such things exist. For example, they have invented general RULES like these: “The adjective agrees with its noun in number, case, and gender.”—Bingham’s English Gram., p. 40. “Interjections govern the nominative case, and sometimes the objective: as, ‘O thou! alas me!’”—Ib., p. 43. “Adjectives agree with their nouns in number.”—Wilbur and Livingston’s Gram., p. 22. “Participles agree with their nouns in number.”—Ib., p. 23. “Every adjective agrees in number with some substantive expressed or understood.”—Hiley’s Gram., Rule 8th, p. 77. “The article THE agrees with nouns in either number: as, The wood, the woods.”—Bucke’s Classical Grammar of the English Language, p. 84. “O! oh! ah! require the accusative case of a pronoun in the first person after them: as ‘Ah me!’ But when the second person is used, it requires a nominative case: as, ‘O thou!’”—Ib., p. 87. “Two or more Nominatives in the singular number, connected by the Conjunction or, nor, EITHER, NEITHER, govern a singular Verb. But Pronouns singular, of different persons, joined by or, EITHER, nor, NEITHER, govern a plural Verb.”—Ib., p. 94. “One Nominative frequently governs many Verbs.”—Ib., p. 95. “Participles are sometimes governed by the article.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 192. “An adverb, an adjective, or a participle, may involve in itself the force of a preposition, and govern the objective case.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 99. “The nominative case governs the verb.” *—Greenleaf’s Gram., p. 32; Kirkham’s, 176; and others. “The nominative case

---

* It has been the notion of some grammarians, that the verb governs the nominative before it. This is an old rule, which seems to have been very much forgotten by modern authors; though doubtless it is as true, and as worthy to be perpetuated, as that which supposes the nominative to govern the verb: “Omne verbum comes before the verb.”—Bingham’s Gram., p. 38; Wilbur and Livingston’s, 23. “The Verb TO BE, always governs a Nominative, unless it be of the Infinitive Mood.”—Buchanan’s Syntax, p. 94. “A verb in the infinitive mood may be governed by a verb, noun, adjective, participle, or pronoun.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 187. Or, (as a substitute for the foregoing rule,) say, according to this author: “A verb in the infinitive mood, refers to some noun or pronoun, as its subject or actor.”—Ib., p. 188. Now what does he know of English grammar, who supposes any of these rules to be worthy of the place which they hold, or have held, in the halls of instruction?

OBS. 8.—It is a very common fault with the compilers of English grammars, to join together in the same rule the syntax of different parts of speech, uniting laws that must ever be applied separately in parsing. For example: “RULE XI. Articles and adjectives relate to nouns expressed or understood; and the adjectives this, that, one, two, must agree in number with the nouns to which they relate.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 87. Now, in parsing an article, why should the learner have to tell all this story about adjectives? Such a mode of expressing the rule, is certainly in bad taste; and, after all, the syntax of adjectives is not here comprised, for they often relate to pronouns. “RULE III. Every adjective and participle belongs to some noun or pronoun expressed or understood.”—Frost’s El. of Gram., p. 44. Here a compiler who in his etymology supposes participles to be verbs, allows them no other construction than that of adjectives. His rule implicitly denies that they can either be parts of their verbs in the formation of tenses, or be governed by prepositions in the character of gerunds. To suppose that a noun may govern the objective case, is both absurd in itself, and contrary to all authority; yet, among his forty-nine rules, this author has the following: “RULE XXV. A participial noun is sometimes governed by a preposition, and may govern an objective case; as, ‘George is too fond of wasting time in trifles.’”—Frost’s El. of Gram., p. 47. Here again is the fault of which I am speaking, two rules in one; and this fault is combined with an other still worse. Wasting is a participle, governed by of; and time is a noun, governed by wasting. The latter is a declinable word, and found in the objective case; the former is indeclinable, and found in no case. It is an error to suppose that cases are the only things which are susceptible of being governed; nor is the brief rule, “Prepositions govern the objective case,” so very clear a maxim as never to be misapprehended. If the learner infer from it, that all prepositions must necessarily govern the objective case, or that the objective case is always governed by a preposition, he will be led into a great mistake.

OBS. 9.—This error of crowding things together, is still more conspicuous in the following examples: “RULE IV. Every article, adjective, and participle, must qualify some noun, or pronoun, either expressed or understood.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 94. “RULE IX. The objective case is governed by a transitive verb or a preposition, usually coming before it.”—Ib., p. 98. Here an author who separates participles from verbs, has attempted first to compress the entire syntax of three different parts of speech into one short rule; and, secondly, to embrace all the forms of dependence, incident to objective nouns and personale finiti modi regit ante se expresse vel subaudite ejusdem numeri et personæ nominativum vel aliquid pro nominativo: ut, ego scribo, tu legis, ille auscultat.”—DESPAUTERII SYNT. fol. xvi. This Despauter was a laborious author, who, within fifty years after the introduction of printing, complains that he found his task heavy, on account of the immense number of books and opinions which he had to consult: “Necdum tamen huic operi ultimam manum aliter imposui, quam Apelles olim picturis: siquidem aptius exire, quum in multis tum in hac arte est difficillimum, propter librorum legendorum immensitatem, et opinionum innumeram diversitatem.”—Ibid., Epist. Apologetica, A.D. 1513. But if, for this reason, the task was heavy then, what is it now!

---

pronouns, in an other as short. This brevity is a poor exchange for the order and distribution which it prevents—especially as none of its objects are here reached. Articles do not relate to pronouns, unless the obsolete phrase the which is to be revived;* participles have other constructions than those which adjectives admit; there are exceptions to the rules which tie articles to nouns, and adjectives to nouns or pronouns; and the objective case may not only be governed by a participle, but may be put in apposition with an other objective. The objective case in English usually stands for the Latin genitive, dative, accusative, and ablative; hence any rule that shall embrace the whole construction of this one case, will be the sole counterpart to four fifths of all the rules in any code of Latin syntax. For I imagine the construction of these four oblique cases, will be found to occupy at least that proportion of the syntactical rules and notes in any Latin grammar that can be found. Such rules, however, are often placed under false or equivocal titles;† as if they contained the construction of the governing words, rather than that of the governed. And this latter error, again, has been transferred to most of our English grammars, to the exclusion of any rule for the proper construction of participles, of adverbs, of conjunctions, of prepositions, or of interjections. See the syntax of Murray and his copyists, whose treatment of these parts of speech is noticed in the fifth observation above.

OBS. 10.—It is doubtless most convenient, that, in all rules for the construction of cases, nouns and pronouns be taken together; because the very same doctrines apply equally well to both, and a case is as distinct a thing in the mind, as a part of speech. This method, therefore, I have myself pursued; and it has indeed the authority of all grammarians—not excepting those who violate its principles by adopting two special rules for the relative pronoun, which are not needed. These special rules, which I shall notice again hereafter, may be seen in Murray's Rule 6th, which is double, and contains them both. The most complex rule that I have admitted, is that which embraces the government of objectives by verbs and participles. The regimen by verbs, and the regimen by participles, may not improperly be reckoned distinct principles; but the near alliance of participles to their verbs, seems to be a sufficient reason for preferring one rule to two, in this instance.

---

* Nutting's rule certainly implies that articles may relate to pronouns, though he gives no example, nor can he give any that is now good English; but he may, if he pleases, quote some other modern grammarians, who teach the same false doctrine: as, "RULE II. The article refers to its noun (OR PRONOUN) to limit its signification."—R. G. Greene's Grammatical Text-Book, p. 18. Greene's two grammars are used extensively in the state of Maine, but they appear to be little known anywhere else. This author professes to inculcate "the principles established by Lindley Murray." If veracity, on this point, is worth any thing, it is a pity that in both books there are so many points which, like the foregoing parenthesis, belie this profession. He followed here Ingersoll's RULE IV, which is this: "The article refers to a noun OR PRONOUN, expressed or understood, to limit its signification."—Conversations on E. Gram., p. 185.

† It is truly a matter of surprise to find under what titles or heads, many of the rules of syntax have been set, by some of the best scholars that have ever written on grammar. In this respect, the Latin and Greek grammarians are particularly censurable; but it better suits my purpose to give an example or two from one of the ablest of the English. Thus that elegant scholar the Rev. W. Allen: "SYNTAX OF NOUNS. 325. A verb agrees with its nominative case in number and person."—Elements of E. Gram., p. 131. This is in no wise the syntax of Nouns, but rather that of the Verb. Again: "SYNTAX OF VERBS. 405. Active Verbs govern the accusative case; as, I love him. We saw them. God rules the world."—Ib., p. 161. This is not properly the syntax of Verbs, but rather that of Nouns or Pronouns in the accusative or objective case. Any one who has but the least sense of order, must see the propriety of referring the rule to that sort of words to which it is applied in parsing, and not some other. Verbs are never parsed or construed by the latter of these rules nor nouns by the former.

OBS. 11.—An other common fault in the treatment of this part of grammar, is the practice of making many of the rules double, or even triple, in their form. Of L. Murray's twenty-two rules, for instance, there are six which severally consist of two distinct paragraphs; and one is composed of three such parts, with examples under each. Five others, though simple in their form, are complex in their doctrine, and liable to the objections which have been urged above against this characteristic. These twelve, therefore, I either reject entirely from my catalogue, or divide and simplify to fit them for their purpose. In short, by comparing the twenty-two rules which were adopted by this popular grammarian, with the twenty-four which are given in this work, the reader may see, that twelve of the former have pleased me too little to have any place at all among the latter, and that none of the remaining ten have been thought worthy to be copied without considerable alteration. Nor are the rules which I adopt, more nearly coincident with those of any other writer. I do not proffer to the schools the second-hand instructions of a mere compiler. In his twenty-two rules, independently of their examples, Hurray has used six hundred and seventeen words, thus giving an average of twenty-eight to each rule; whereas in the twenty-four rules which are presented above, the words are but four hundred and thirty-six, making the average less than nineteen. And yet I have not only divided some of his propositions and extended others, but, by rejecting what was useless or erroneous, and filling up the deficiencies which mark his code, I have delivered twice the amount of doctrine in two thirds of the space, and furnished eleven important rules which are not contained in his grammar. Thus much, in this place, to those who so frequently ask, "Wherein does your book differ from Murray's?"

OBS. 12.—Of all the systems of syntax, or of grammar, which it has been my fortune to examine, a book which was first published by Robinson and Franklin of New York in 1839, a fair-looking duodecimo volume of 384 pages, under the brief but rather ostentatious title, "THE GRAMMAR of the English Language" is, I think, the most faulty,—the most remarkable for the magnitude, multitude, and variety, of its strange errors, inconsistencies, and defects. This singular performance is the work of Oliver B. Peirce, an itinerant lecturer on grammar, who dates his preface at "Rome, N. Y., December 29th, 1838." Its leading characteristic is boastful innovation; it being full of acknowledged "contempt for the works of other writers."—P. 379. It lays "claim to singularity" as a merit, and boasts of a new thing under the sun—"in a theory RADICALLY NEW, a Grammar of the English Language; something which I believe," says the author, "has NEVER BEFORE BEEN FOUND."—P. 9. The old scholastic notion, that because Custom is the arbitress of speech, novelty is excluded from grammar, this hopeful reformer thoroughly condemns; "repudiating this sentiment to the full extent of it," (ib.) and "writing his theory as though he had never seen a book, entitled an English Grammar."—Ib. And, for all the ends of good learning, it would have been as well or better, if he never had. His passion for novelty has led him not only to abandon or misapply, in an unprecedented degree, the usual terms of the art, but to disregard in many instances its most unquestionable principles, universal as well as particular. His parts of speech are the following ten: "Names, Substitutes, Asserters, Adnames, Modifiers, Relatives, Connectives, Interrogatives, Repliers, and Exclamations."—The Gram., p. 20. His names are nouns; his substitutes are pronouns, and any adjectives whose nouns are not expressed; his asserters are verbs and participles, though the latter assert nothing; his adnames are articles, adjectives whose nouns or pronouns are expressed, and adverbs that relate to adjectives; his modifiers are such adverbs as "modify the sense or sound of a whole sentence;" his relatives are prepositions, some of which govern no object; his connectives are conjunctions, with certain adverbs and phrases; his interrogatives and repliers are new parts of speech, very lately explained; his exclamations are interjections, and “phrases used independently; as, O hapless choice!”—The Gram., p. 22. In parsing, he finds a world of “accommodatives,” as, “John is more than five years older than William.”—Ib. p. 202. Here he calls the whole phrase “more than five years” “a secondary adname” i. e., adjective. But, in the phrase, “more than five years afterwards,” he would call the same words “a secondary modifier,” i. e., adverb.—Ib., p. 203. And, in the phrase, “more than five years before the war,” he would call them “a secondary relative,” i. e., preposition.—Ib., p. 204. And so of other phrases innumerable. His cases are five, two of which are new, “the Independent” and “the Twofold case.” His “independent case” is sometimes the nominative in form, as “thou” and “she,” (p. 62;) sometimes the objective, as, “me” and “him,” (p. 62 and p. 199;) sometimes erroneously supposed to be the subject of a finite verb; while his nominative is sometimes as erroneously said to have no verb. His code of syntax has two sorts of rules, Analytical and Synthetical. The former are professedly seventeen in number; but, many of them consisting of two, three, or four distinct parts, their real number is more properly thirty-four. The latter are reckoned forty-five; but if we count their separate parts, they are fifty-six: and these with the others make ninety. I shall not particularize their faults. All of them are whimsically conceived and badly written. In short, had the author artfully designed to turn English grammar into a subject of contempt and ridicule, by as ugly a caricature of it as he could possibly invent, he could never have hit the mark more exactly than he has done in this “new theory”—this rash production, on which he so sincerely prides himself. Alone as he is, in well-nigh all his opinions, behold how prettily he talks of “COMMON SENSE, the only sure foundation of any theory!” and says, “On this imperishable foundation—this rock of eternal endurance—I rear my superstructure, the edifice of scientific truth, the temple of Grammatical consistency!”—Peirce’s Preface, p. 7.

OBS. 13.—For the teaching of different languages, it has been thought very desirable to have “a Series of grammars, Greek, Latin, English, &c., all, so far as general principles are concerned, upon the same plan, and as nearly in the same words as the genius of the languages would permit.”—See Bullions’s Principles of E. Gram., 2d Ed., pp. iv and vi. This scheme necessarily demands a minute comparison not only of the several languages themselves, but also of the various grammars in which their principles, whether general or particular, are developed. For by no other means can it be ascertained to what extent uniformity of this kind will be either profitable to the learner, or consistent with truth. Some books have been published, which, it is pretended, are thus accommodated to one another, and to the languages of which they treat. But, in view of the fact, that the Latin or the Greek grammars now extant, (to say nothing of the French, Spanish, and others,) are almost as various and as faulty as the English, I am apprehensive that this is a desideratum not soon to be realized,—a design more plausible in the prospectus, than feasible in the attempt. At any rate, the grammars of different languages must needs differ as much as do the languages themselves, otherwise some of their principles will of course be false; and we have already seen that the nonobservance of this has been a fruitful source of error in respect to English syntax. The achievement, however, is not altogether impossible, if a man of competent learning will devote to it a sufficient degree of labour. But the mere revising or altering of some one grammar in each language, can scarcely amount to any thing more than a pretence of improvement. Waiving the pettiness of compiling upon the basis of an other man’s compilation, the foundation of a good grammar for any language, must be both deeper and broader than all the works which Professor Bullions has selected to build upon: for the Greek, than Dr. Moor’s “Elementa Linguæ, Græcæ,” for the Latin, than Dr. Adam’s “Rudiments of Latin and English Grammar,” for the English, than Murray’s “English Grammar,” or Lennie’s “Principles of English Grammar,” which last work, in fact, the learned gentleman preferred, though he pretends to have mended the code of Murray. But, certainly, Lennie never supposed himself a copyist of Murray; nor was he to much extent an imitator of him, either in method or in style.

OBS. 14.—We have, then, in this new American form of “The Principles of English Grammar,” Lennie’s very compact little book, altered, enlarged, and bearing on its title-page (which is otherwise in the very words of Lennie) an other author’s name, and, in its early editions, the false and self-accusing inscription, “(ON THE PLAN OF MURRAY’S GRAMMAR.)” And this work, claiming to have been approved “by the most competent judges,” now challenges the praise not only of being “better adapted to the use of academies and schools than any yet published” but of so presenting “the rules and principles of general grammar, as that they may apply to, and be in perfect harmony with, the grammars of the dead languages”—Recommendations, p. iv. These are admirable professions for a critical author to publish; especially, as every rule or principle of General Grammar, condemning as it must whoever violates it, cannot but “be in perfect harmony with” every thing that is true. In this model for all grammars, Latin, Greek, &c., the doctrines of punctuation, of abbreviations, and of capital letters, and also sections on the rhetorical divisions of a discourse, the different kinds of composition, the different kinds of prose composition, and the different kinds of poetry, are made parts of the Syntax; while his hints for correct and elegant writing, and his section on the composition of letters and themes, which other writers suppose to belong rather to syntax, are here subjoined as parts of Prosody. In the exercises for parsing appended to his Etymology, the Doctor furnishes twenty-five Rules of Syntax, which, he says, “are not intended to be committed to memory, but to be used as directions to the beginner in parsing the exercises under them.”—E. Gram., p. 75. Then, for his syntax proper, he copies from Lennie, with some alterations, thirty-four other rules, nine of which are double, and all are jumbled together by both authors, without any regard to the distinction of concord and government, so common in the grammars of the dead languages, and even, so far as I can discover, without any principle of arrangement whatever. They profess indeed to have placed those rules first, which are easiest to learn, and oftenest to be applied; but the syntax of articles, which even on this principle should have formed the first of the series, is placed by Lennie as the thirty-fourth rule, and by his amender as the thirty-second. To all this complexity the latter adds twenty-two Special Rules, with an abundance of “Notes” “Observations” and “Remarks” distinguished by these titles, on some principle which no one but the author can understand. Lastly, his method of syntactical parsing is not only mixed up with etymological questions and answers, but his directions for it, with their exemplification, are perplexingly at variance with his own specimen of the performance. See his book, pages 131 and 133. So much for this grand scheme.

OBS. 15.—Strictures like the foregoing, did they not involve the defence of grammar itself, so as to bear upon interests more important than the success or failure of an elementary book, might well be withheld through motives of charity, economy, and peace. There is many a grammar now extant, concerning which a truly critical reader may know more at first sight, than ever did he that made it. What such a reader will be inclined to rate beneath criticism, an other perhaps will confidently pronounce above it. If my remarks are just, let the one approve them for the other’s sake. For what becomes of the teaching of grammar, when that which is received as the most excellent method, must be exempted from censure by reason of its utter worthlessness? And what becomes of Universal Syntax, when the imperfect systems of the Latin and Greek grammars, in stead of being amended, are modelled to the grossest faults of what is worthless in our own?*

OBS. 16.—What arrangement of Latin or Greek syntax may be best in itself, I am not now concerned to show. Lily did not divide his, as others have divided the subject since; but first stated briefly his three concords, and then proceeded to what he called the construction of the several parts of speech, taking them in their order. The three concords of Lily are the following: (1.) Of the Nominative and Verb; to which the accusative before an infinitive, and the collective noun with a plural verb, are reckoned exceptions; while the agreement of a verb or pronoun with two or more nouns, is referred to the figure syllipsis. (2.) Of the Substantive and Adjective; under which the agreement of participles, and of some pronouns, is placed in the form of a note. (3.) Of the Relative and Antecedent; after which the two special rules for the cases of relatives are given as underparts. Dr. Adam divided his syntax into two parts; of Simple Sentences, and of Compound Sentences. His three concords are the following: (1.) Of one Substantive with an Other; which construction is placed by Lily and many others among the figures of syntax, and is called apposition. (2.) Of an Adjective with a Substantive; under which principle, we are told to take adjective pronouns and participles. (3.) Of a Verb with a Nominative; under which, the collective noun with a verb of either number, is noticed in an observation. The construction of relatives, of conjunctions, of comparatives, and of words put absolute, this author reserves for the second part of his syntax; and the agreement of plural verbs or pronouns with joint nominatives or antecedents, which Ruddiman places in an observation on his four concords, is here absurdly reckoned a part of the construction of conjunctions. Various divisions and subdivisions of the Latin syntax, with special dispositions of some particular principles of it, may be seen in the elaborate grammars of Despauter, Prat,

---

* What “the Series of Grammars, English, Latin, and Greek, ON THE SAME PLAN,” will ultimately be,—how many treatises for each or any of the languages it will probably contain,—what uniformity will be found in the distribution of their several sorts and sizes,—or what sameness they will have, except that which is bestowed by the binders,—cannot yet be stated with any certainty. It appears now, in 1850, that the scheme has thus far resulted in the production of three remarkably different grammars, for the English part of the series, and two more, a Latin grammar and a Greek, which resemble each other, or any of these, as little. In these works, abound changes and discrepancies, sometimes indicating a great unsettlement of “principles” or “plan,” and often exciting our wonder at the extraordinary variety of teaching, which has been claimed to be, “as nearly in the same words as the genius of the languages would permit!” In what should have been uniform, and easily might have been so, these grammars are rather remarkably diverse! Uniformity in the order, number, or phraseology of the Rules of Syntax, even for our own language, seems scarcely yet to have entered this “SAME PLAN” at all! The “onward progress of English grammar,” or, rather, of the author’s studies therein, has already, within “fifteen years,” greatly varied, from the first model of the “Series,” his own idea of a good grammar; and, though such changes bar consistency, a future progress, real or imaginary, may likewise, with as good reason, vary it yet as much more. In the preface to the work of 1840, it is said: “This, though not essentially different from the former, is yet in some respects a new work. It has been almost entirely rewritten.” And again: “The Syntax is much fuller than in the former work; and though the rules are not different, they are arranged in a different order.” So it is proved, that the model needed remodelling; and that the Syntax, especially, was defective, in matter as well as in order. The suggestions, that “the rules are not different,” and the works, “not essentially so,” will sound best to those who shall never compare them. The old code has thirty-four chief, and twenty-two “special rules;” the new has twenty chief, thirty-six “special,” and one “general rule.” Among all these, we shall scarcely find exact sameness preserved in so many as half a dozen instances. Of the old thirty-four, fourteen only were judged worthy to remain as principal rules; and two of these have no claim at all to such rank, one of them being quite useless. Of the twenty now made chief, five are new to “the Series of Grammars,” and three of these exceedingly resemble as many of mine; five are slightly altered, and five greatly, from their predecessors among the old: one is the first half of an old rule; one is an old subordinate rule, altered and elevated; and three are as they were before, their numbers and relative positions excepted!

Ruddiman, Grant, and other writers. And here it may be proper to observe, that, the mixing of syntax with etymology, after the manner of Ingersoll, Kirkham, R. W. Green, R. C. Smith, Sanborn, Felton, Hazen, Parkhurst, Parker and Fox, Weld, and others, is a modern innovation, pernicious to both; either topic being sufficiently comprehensive, and sufficiently difficult, when they are treated separately; and each having, in some instances, employed the pens of able writers almost to the exclusion of the other.

OBS. 17.—The syntax of any language must needs conform to the peculiarities of its etymology, and also be consistent with itself; for all will expect better things of a scholar, than to lay down positions in one part of his grammar, that are irreconcilable with what he has stated in an other. The English language, having few inflections, has also few concords or agreements, and still fewer governments. Articles, adjectives, and participles, which in many other languages agree with their nouns in gender, number, and case, have usually, in English, no modifications in which they can agree with their nouns. Yet Lowth says, “The adjective in English, having no variation of gender and number, cannot but agree with the substantive in these respects.”—Short Introd. to Gram., p. 86. What then is the agreement of words? Can it be anything else than their similarity in some common property or modification? And is it not obvious, that no two things in nature can at all agree, or be alike, except in some quality or accident which belongs to each of them? Yet how often have Murray and others, as well as Lowth, forgotten this! To give one instance out of many: “Gender has respect only to the third person singular of the pronouns, he, she, it.”—Murray, J. Peirce, Flint, Lyon, Bacon, Russell, Fisk, Maltby, Alger, Miller, Merchant, Kirkham, and other careless copyists. Yet, according to these same gentlemen, “Gender is the distinction of nouns, with regard to sex;” and, “Pronouns must always agree with their antecedents, and the nouns for which they stand, in gender.” Now, not one of these three careless assertions can possibly be reconciled with either of the others!

OBS. 18.—Government has respect only to nouns, pronouns, verbs, participles, and prepositions; the other five parts of speech neither govern nor are governed. The governing words may be either nouns, or verbs, or participles, or prepositions; the words governed are either nouns, or pronouns, or verbs, or participles. In parsing, the learner must remember that the rules of government are not to be applied to the governing words, but to those which are governed; and which, for the sake of brevity, are often technically named after the particular form or modification assumed; as, possessives, objectives, infinitives, gerundives. These are the only things in English, that can properly be said to be subject to government; and these are always so, in their own names; unless we except such infinitives as stand in the place of nominatives. Gerundives are participles governed by prepositions; but, there being little or no occasion to distinguish these from other participles, we seldom use this name. The Latin Gerund differs from a participle, and the English Gerundive differs from a participial noun. The participial noun may be the subject or the object of a verb, or may govern the possessive case before it, like any other noun; but the true English gerundive, being essentially a participle, and governing an object after it, like any other participle, is itself governed only by a preposition. At least, this is its usual and allowed construction, and no other is acknowledged to be indisputably right.

OBS. 19.—The simple Relations of words in English, (or those several uses of the parts of speech which we may refer to this head,) are the following nine: (1.) Of Articles to nouns, by Rule 1st; (2.) Of Nominatives to verbs, by Rule 2d; (3.) Of Nominatives absolute or independent, by Rule 8th; (4.) Of Adjectives to nouns or pronouns, by Rule 9th; (5.) Of Participles to nouns or pronouns, by Rule 20th; (6.) Of Adverbs to verbs, participles, &c., by Rule 21st; (7.) Of Conjunctions as connecting words, phrases, or sentences, by Rule 22nd; (8.) Of Prepositions as showing the relations of things, by Rule 23d; (9.) Of Interjections as being used independently, by Rule 24th.

OBS. 20.—The syntactical Agreements in English, though actually much fewer than those which occur in Latin, Greek, or French, may easily be so reckoned as to amount to double, or even triple, the number usually spoken of by the old grammarians. The twenty-four rules above, embrace the following ten heads, which may not improperly be taken for so many distinct concords: (1.) Of a Noun or Pronoun in direct apposition with another, by Rule 3d; (2.) Of a Noun or Pronoun after a verb or participle not transitive, by Rule 6th; (3.) Of a Pronoun with its antecedent, by Rule 10th; (4.) Of a Pronoun with a collective noun, by Rule 11th; (5.) Of a Pronoun with joint antecedents, by Rule 12th; (6.) Of a Pronoun with disjunct antecedents, by Rule 13th; (7.) Of a Verb with its nominative, by Rule 14th; (8.) Of a Verb with a collective noun, by Rule 15th; (9.) Of a Verb with joint nominatives, by Rule 16th; (10.) Of a Verb with disjunct nominatives, by Rule 17th. To these may be added two other special concords, less common and less important, which will be explained in notes under the rules: (11.) Of one Verb with an other, in mood, tense, and form, when two are connected so as to agree with the same nominative; (12.) Of Adjectives that imply unity or plurality, with their nouns, in number.

OBS. 21.—Again, by a different mode of reckoning them, the concords or the general principles of agreement, in our language, may be made to be only three or four; and some of these much less general, than they are in other languages: (1.) Words in apposition agree in case, according to Rule 3d; of which principle, Rule 6th may be considered a modification. (2.) Pronouns agree, with their nouns, in person, number, and gender, according to Rule 10th; of which principle, Rules 11th, 12th, and 13th, may be reckoned modifications. (3.) Verbs agree with their nominatives, in person and number, according to Rule 14th; of which principle Rules 15th, 16th, and 17th, and the occasional agreement of one verb with an other, may be esteemed mere modifications. (4.) Some adjectives agree with their nouns in number. These make up the twelve concords above enumerated.

OBS. 22.—The rules of Government in the best Latin grammars are about sixty; and these are usually distributed (though not very properly) under three heads; “1. Of Nouns. 2. Of Verbs. 3. Of Words indeclinable.”—Grant’s Lat. Gram., p. 170. “Regimen est triplex: 1. Nominum. 2. Verborum. 3. Vocum indeclinabilium.”—Ruddiman’s Gram., p. 138. This division of the subject brings all the titles of the rules wrong. For example, if the rule be, “Active verbs govern the accusative case,” this is not properly “the government of verbs” but rather the government of the accusative by verbs. At least, such titles are equivocal, and likely to mislead the learner. The governments in English are only seven, and these are expressed, perhaps with sufficient distinctness, in six of the foregoing rules: (1.) Of Possessives by nouns, in Rule 4th; (2.) Of Objectives by verbs, in Rule 5th; (3.) Of Objectives by participles, in Rule 5th; (4.) Of Objectives by prepositions, in Rule 7th; (5.) Of Infinitives by the preposition to, in Rule 18th; (6.) Of Infinitives by the verbs bid, dare, &c., in Rule 19th; (7.) Of Participles by prepositions, in Rule 20th.

OBS. 23.—The Arrangement of words, (which will be sufficiently treated of in the observations hereafter to be made on the several rules of construction,) is an important part of syntax, in which not only the beauty but the propriety of language is intimately concerned, and to which particular attention should therefore be paid in composition. But it is to be remembered, that the mere collocation of words in a sentence never affects the method of parsing them: on the contrary, the same words, however placed, are always to be parsed in precisely the same way, so long as they express precisely the same meaning. In order to show that we have parsed any part of an inverted or difficult sentence rightly, we are at liberty to declare the meaning by any arrangement which will make the construction more obvious, provided we retain both the sense and all the words unaltered; but to drop or alter any word, is to pervert the text under pretence of resolving it, and to make a mockery of parsing. Grammar rightly learned, enables one to understand both the sense and the construction of whatsoever is rightly written; and he who reads what he does not understand, reads to little purpose. With great indignity to the muses, several pretenders to grammar have foolishly taught, that, "In parsing poetry, in order to come at the meaning of the author, the learner will find it necessary to transpose his language."—Kirkham's Gram., p. 166. See also the books of Merchant, Wilcox, O. B. Peirce, Hull, Smith, Felton, and others, to the same effect. To what purpose can he transpose the words of a sentence, who does not first see what they mean, and how to explain or parse them as they stand?

OBS. 24.—Errors innumerable have been introduced into the common modes of parsing, through a false notion of what constitutes a simple sentence. Lowth, Adam, Murray, Gould, Smith, Ingersoll, Comly, Lennie, Hiley, Bullions, Wells, and many others, say, "A simple sentence has in it but one subject, and one finite verb: as, 'Life is short.'"—L. Murray's Gram., p. 141. In accordance with this assertion, some assume, that, "Every nominative has its own verb expressed or understood;" and that, "Every verb (except in the infinitive mood and participle) has its own nominative expressed or understood."—Bullions's E. Gram., p. 87. The adopters of these dogmas, of course think it right to supply a nominative whenever they do not find a separate one expressed for every finite verb, and a verb whenever they do not find a separate one expressed for every nominative. This mode of interpretation not only precludes the agreement of a verb with two or more nominatives, so as to render nugatory two of the most important rules of these very gentlemen's syntax; but, what is worse, it perverts many a plain, simple, and perfect sentence, to a form which its author did not choose, and a meaning which he never intended. Suppose, for example, the text to be, "A good constitution and good laws make good subjects."—Webster's Essays, p. 152. Does not the verb make agree with constitution and laws, taken conjointly? and is it not a perversion of the sentence to interpret it otherwise? Away then with all this needless subaudition! But while we thus deny that there can be a true ellipsis of what is not necessary to the construction, it is not to be denied that there are true ellipses, and in some men's style very many. The assumption of O. B. Peirce, that no correct sentence is elliptical, and his impracticable project of a grammar founded on this principle, are among the grossest of possible absurdities.

OBS. 25.—Dr. Wilson says, "There may be several subjects to the same verb, several verbs to the same subject, or several objects to the same verb, and the sentence be simple. But when the sentence remains simple, the same verb must be differently affected by its several adjuncts, or the sense liable to be altered by a separation. If the verb or the subject be affected in the same manner, or the sentence is resolvable into more, it is compounded. Thus, 'Violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange, and red, mixed in due proportion, produce white,' is a simple sentence, for the subject is indivisible. But, 'Violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange, and red, are refrangible rays of light,' is a compound sentence, and may be separated into seven."—Essay on Gram., p. 186. The propriety of the distinction here made, is at least questionable; and I incline to consider the second example a simple sentence, as well as the first; because what the writer calls a separation into seven, involves a change of are to is, and of rays to ray, as well as a sevenfold repetition of this altered predicate, “is a refrangible ray of light.” But the parser, in interpreting the words of others, and expounding the construction of what is written, has no right to alter anything in this manner. Nor do I admit that he has a right to insert or repeat anything needlessly; for the nature of a sentence, or the syntax of some of its words, may often be altered without change of the sense, or of any word for an other: as, “‘A wall seven feet high;’ that is, ‘A wall which is seven feet high.’”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 109. “‘He spoke and acted prudently;’ that is, ‘He spoke prudently, and he acted prudently.’”—Ibid. “‘He spoke and acted wisely;’ that is, ‘He spoke wisely, and he acted wisely.’”—Murray’s Gram., p. 219; Alger’s, 70; R. C. Smith’s, 183; Weld’s, 192; and others. By this notion of ellipsis, the connexion or joint relation of words is destroyed.

OBS. 26.—Dr. Adam, who thought the division of sentences into simple and compound, of sufficient importance to be made the basis of a general division of syntax into two parts, has defined a simple sentence to be, “that which has but one nominative, and one finite verb;” and a compound sentence, “that which has more than one nominative, or one finite verb.” And of the latter he gives the following erroneous and self-contradictory account: “A compound sentence is made up of two or more simple sentences or phrases, and is commonly called a Period. The parts of which a compound sentence consists, are called Members or Clauses. In every compound sentence there are either several subjects and one attribute, or several attributes and one subject, or both several subjects and several attributes; that is, there are either several nominatives applied to the same verb, or several verbs applied to the same nominative, or both. Every verb marks a judgment or attribute, and every attribute must have a subject. There must, therefore, be in every sentence or period, as many propositions as there are verbs of a finite mode. Sentences are compounded by means of relatives and conjunctions; as, Happy is the man who loveth religion, and practiseth virtue.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 202; Gould’s, 199; and others.

OBS. 27.—Now if every compound sentence consists of such parts, members, or clauses, as are in themselves sentences, either simple or compound, either elliptical or complete; it is plain, in the first place, that the term “phrases” is misapplied above, because a phrase is properly only a part of some simple sentence. And if “a simple sentence is that which has but one nominative and one finite verb,” and “a compound sentence is made up of two or more simple sentences,” it follows, since “all sentences are either simple or compound,” that, in no sentence, can there be “either several nominatives applied to the same verb, or several verbs applied to the same nominative.” What, therefore, this author regarded as the characteristic of all compound sentences, is, according to his own previous positions, utterly impossible to any sentence. Nor is it less repugnant to his subsequent doctrine, that, “Sentences are compounded by means of relatives and conjunctions,” for, according to his notion, “A conjunction is an indeclinable word, which serves to join sentences together.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 149. It is assumed, that, “In every sentence there must be a verb and a nominative expressed or understood.”—Ib., p. 151. Now if there happen to be two nominatives to one verb, as when it was said, “Even the winds and the sea obey him;” this cannot be anything more than a simple sentence; because one single verb is a thing indivisible, and how can we suppose it to form the most essential part of two different sentences at once?

OBS. 28.—The distinction, or real difference, between those simple sentences in which two or more nominatives or verbs are taken conjointly, and those compound sentences in which there is an ellipsis of some of the nominatives or verbs, is not always easy to be known or fixed; because in many instances, a supposed ellipsis, without at all affecting the sense, may obviously change the construction, and consequently the nature of the sentence. For example: "And they all forsook him, and [they all] fled."—Mark, xiv, 50. Some will say, that the words in brackets are here understood. I may deny it, because they are needless; and nothing needless can form a true ellipsis. To the supplying of useless words, if we admit the principle, there may be no end; and the notion that conjunctions join sentences only, opens a wide door for it. For example: "And that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil."—Job, i, 1. No additional words will make this clause any plainer, and none are really necessary to the construction; yet some grammarians will parse it with the following impletions, or more: "And that man was a perfect man, and he was an upright man, and he was one man that feared God, and that eschewed evil things." It is easy to see how this liberty of interpretation, or of interpolation, will change simple sentences to compound sentences, as well as alter the nature and relation of many particular words; and at the same time, it takes away totally those peculiarities of construction by which Dr. Adam and others would recognize a sentence as being compound. What then? are there not two kinds of sentences? Yes, truly; but these authors are wrong in their notions and definitions of both. Joint nominatives or joint verbs may occur in either; but they belong primarily to some simple sentences, and only for that reason are found in any that are compound. A sentence, too, may possibly be made compound, when a simple one would express the whole meaning as well or better; as, "And [David] smote the Philistines from Geba until thou come to Gazer."—2 Sam., v, 25. Here, if we omit the words in Italics, the sentence will become simple, not elliptical.

THE ANALYZING OF SENTENCES.

To analyze a sentence, is, to resolve it into some species of constituent parts, but most properly into words, its first significant elements, and to point out their several relations and powers in the given connexion.

The component parts of a sentence are members, clauses, phrases, or words. Some sentences, which are short and simple, can only be divided into their words; others, which are long and complex, may be resolved into parts again and again divisible.

Of analysis applicable to sentences, there are several different methods; and, so far as their difference may compatibly aid the application of different principles of the science of grammar, there may be an advantage in the occasional use of each.

FIRST METHOD OF ANALYSIS.

Sentences not simple may be reduced to their constituent members, clauses, or simple sentences; and the means by which these are united, may be shown. Thus:—

EXAMPLE ANALYZED.

"Even the Atheist, who tells us that the universe is self-existent and indestructible—even he, who, instead of seeing the traces of a manifold wisdom in its manifold varieties, sees nothing in them all but the exquisite structures and the lofty dimensions of materialism—even he, who would despoil creation of its God, cannot look upon its golden suns, and their accompanying systems, without the solemn impression of a magnificence that fixes and overpowers him."—DR. CHALMERS, Discourses on Revelation and Astronomy, p. 231.

ANALYSIS.—This is a compound sentence, consisting of three complex members, which are separated by the two dashes. The three members are united in one sentence, by a suspension of the sense at each dash, and by two virtual repetitions of the subject, “Atheist” through the pronoun “he,” put in the same case, and representing this noun. The sense mainly intended is not brought out till the period ends. Each of the three members is complex, because each has not only a relative clause, commencing with “who,” but also an antecedent word which makes sense with “cannot look,” &c. The first of these relative clauses involves also a subordinate, supplementary clause,—“the universe is self-existent and indestructible”—introduced after the verb “tells” by the conjunction “that.” The last phrase, “without the solemn impression,” &c., which is subjoined by “without” to “cannot look,” embraces likewise a subordinate, relative clause,—“that fixes and overpowers him,”—which has two verbs; the whole, antecedent and all, being but an adjunct of an adjunct, yet an essential element of the sentence.

SECOND METHOD OF ANALYSIS.

Simple sentences, or the simple members of compound sentences, may be resolved into their PRINCIPAL and their SUBORDINATE PARTS; the subject, the verb, and the case put after or governed by the verb, being first pointed out as THE PRINCIPAL PARTS; and the other words being then detailed as ADJUNCTS to these, according to THE SENSE, or as adjuncts to adjuncts. Thus:—

EXAMPLE ANALYZED.

“Fear naturally quickens the flight of guilt. Rasselas could not catch the fugitive, with his utmost efforts; but, resolving to weary, by perseverance, him whom he could not surpass in speed, he pressed on till the foot of the mountain stopped his course.”—DR. JOHNSON, Rasselas, p. 23.

ANALYSIS.—The first period here is a simple sentence. Its principal parts are—Fear, quickens, flight; Fear being the subject, quickens the verb, and flight the object. Fear has no adjunct; naturally is an adjunct of quickens; the and of guilt are adjuncts of flight. The second period is composed of several clauses, or simple members, united. The first of these is also a simple sentence, having, three principal parts—Rasselas, could catch, and fugitive; the subject, the verb, and its object, in their order. Not is added to could catch, reversing the meaning; the is an adjunct to fugitive; with joins its phrase to could not catch; but his and utmost are adjuncts of efforts. The word but connects the two chief members as parts of one sentence. “Resolving to weary” is an adjunct to the pronoun he, which stands before pressed. “By perseverance,” is an adjunct to weary. Him is governed by weary, and is the antecedent to whom. “Whom he could not surpass in speed,” is a relative clause, or subordinate simple member, having three principal parts—he, could surpass, and whom. Not and in speed are adjuncts to the verb could surpass. “He pressed on” is an other simple member, or sentence, and the chief clause here used, the others being subjoined to this. Its principal parts are two, he and pressed; the latter taking the particle on as an adjunct, and being intransitive. The words dependent on the nominative he, (to wit, resolving, &c.,) have already been mentioned. Till is a conjunctive adverb of time, connecting the concluding clause to pressed on. “The foot of the mountain stopped his course,” is a subordinate clause and simple member, whose principal parts are—the subject foot, the verb stopped, and the object course. The adjuncts of foot are the and of the mountain; the verb in this sentence has no adjunct but course, which is better reckoned a principal word; lastly, his is an adjunct to course, and governed by it.

THIRD METHOD OF ANALYSIS.

*Sentences may be partially analyzed by a resolution into their SUBJECTS and their PREDICATES, a method which some late grammarians have borrowed from the logicians; the grammatical subject with its adjuncts, being taken for the logical subject; and the finite verb, which some call the grammatical predicate* being, with its subsequent case and the adjuncts of both, denominated the predicate, or the logical predicate. Thus:—*

EXAMPLE ANALYZED.

“Such is the emptiness of human enjoyment, that we are always impatient of the present. Attainment is followed by neglect, and possession, by disgust. Few moments are more pleasing than those in which the mind is concerting measures for a new undertaking. From the first hint that wakens the fancy, to the hour of actual execution, all is improvement and progress, triumph and felicity.”—DR. JOHNSON, Rambler.

ANALYSIS.—Here the first period is a compound sentence, containing two clauses,—which are connected by that. In the first clause, emptiness is the grammatical subject, and “the emptiness of human enjoyment” is the logical. Is some would call the grammatical predicate, and “Such is,” or is such, the logical; but the latter consists, as the majority teach, of “the copula” is, and “the attribute,” or “predicate,” such. In the second clause, (which explains the import of “Such,”) the subject is we; which is unmodified, and in which therefore the logical form and the grammatical coincide and are the same. Are may here be called the grammatical predicate; and “are always impatient of the present,” the logical. The second period, too, is a compound sentence, having two clauses, which are connected by and. Attainment is the subject of the former; and, “is followed by neglect” is the predicate. In the latter, possession alone is the subject; and, “[is followed] by disgust,” is the predicate; the verb is followed being understood at the comma. The third period, likewise, is a compound, having three parts, with the two connectives than and which. Here we have moments for the first grammatical subject, and Few moments for the logical; then, are for the grammatical predicate, and are more pleasing for the logical: or, if we choose to say so, for “the copula and the attribute.” “Than those,” is an elliptical member, meaning, “than are those moments,” or, “than those moments are pleasing,” both subject and predicate are wholly suppressed, except that those is reckoned a part of the logical subject. In which is an adjunct of is concerting, and serves well to connect the members, because which represents those, i.e. those moments. Mind, or the mind, is the next subject of affirmation; and is concerting, or, “is concerting measures for a new undertaking,” is the predicate or matter affirmed. Lastly, the fourth period, like the rest, is compound. The phrases commencing with From and to, describe a period of time, and are adjuncts of the verb is. The former contains a subordinate relative clause, of which that (representing hint) is the subject, and wakens, or wakens the fancy, the predicate. Of the principal clause, the word all, taken as a noun, is the subject, whether grammatical or logical; and “the copula,” or “grammatical predicate,” is, becomes, with its adjuncts and the nominatives following, the logical predicate.

---

* “The grammatical predicate is a verb.”—Butler’s Pract. Gram., 1845, p. 135, “The grammatical predicate is a finite verb.”—Wells’s School Gram., 1850, p. 185. “The grammatical predicate is either a verb alone, or the copula sum [some part of the verb be] with a noun or adjective.”—Andrews and Stoddard’s Lat. Gram., p. 163. “The predicate consists of two parts,—the verb, or copula, and that which is asserted by it, called the attribute; as ‘Snow is white.’”—Greene’s Analysis, p. 15. “The grammatical predicate consists of the attribute and copula not modified by other word.”—Bullions, Analyt. and Pract. Gram., P. 129. “The logical predicate is the grammatical, with all the words or phrases that modify it.” Ib. p. 130. “The Grammatical predicate is the word or words containing the simple affirmation, made respecting the subject.”—Bullions, Latin Gram., p. 269. “Every proposition necessarily consists of these three parts: [the subject, the predicate, and the copula;) but then it is not alike needful, that they be all severally expressed in words; because the copula is often included in the term of the predicate; as when we say, he sits, which imports the same as, he is sitting.”—Duncan’s Logic, p. 105. In respect to this Third Method of Analysis. It is questionable, whether a noun or an adjective which follows the verb and forms part of the assertion, is to be included in “the grammatical predicate” or not. Wells says, No: “It would destroy at once all distinction between the grammatical and the logical predicate.”—School Gram., p. 185. An other question is, whether the copula (is, was or the like,) which the logicians discriminate, should be included as part of the logical predicate, when it occurs as a distinct word. The prevalent practice of the grammatical analyzers is, so to include it,—a practice which in itself is not very “logical.” The distinction of subjects and predicates as “grammatical and logical,” is but a recent one. In some grammars, the partition used in logic is copied without change, except perhaps of words: as “There are, in sentences, a subject, a predicate and a copula.” JOS. R. CHANDLER, Gram. of 1821, p. 105; Gram. of 1847, p. 116. The logicians, however, and those who copy them, may have been hitherto at fault in recognizing and specifying their “copula.” Mulligan forcibly argues that the verb of being is no more entitled to this name than is every other verb. (See his Exposition,” §46.) If he is right in this, the “copula” of the logicians (an in my opinion, his own also) is a mere figment of the brain, there being nothing that answers to the definition of the thing or to the true use of the word.

FOURTH METHOD OF ANALYSIS.

All syntax is founded on the RELATION of words one to another, and the CONNEXION of clauses and phrases, according to THE SENSE. Hence sentences may be, in some sort, analyzed, and perhaps profitably, by the tracing of such relation or connexion, from link to link, through a series of words, beginning and ending with such as are somewhat remote from each other, yet within the period. Thus:—

EXAMPLES ANALYZED.

1. “Swift would say, ‘The thing has not life enough in it to keep it sweet;’ Johnson, ‘The creature possesses not vitality sufficient to preserve it from putrefaction.’”—MATT. HARRISON, on the English Language, p. 102.

ANALYSIS.—What is the general sense of this passage? and what, the chain of connexion between the words Swift and putrefaction? The period is designed to show, that Swift preferred words of Saxon origin; and Johnson, of Latin. It has in contrast two coördinate members, tacitly connected: the verb would say being understood after Johnson, and perhaps also the particle but, after the semicolon. Swift is the subject of would say; and would say introduces the clause after it, as what would be said. The relates to thing; thing is the subject of has; has, which is qualified by not, governs life; life is qualified by the adjective enough, and by the phrase, in it; enough is the prior term of to; to governs keep; keep governs it, which stands for the thing; and it, in lieu of the thing, is qualified by sweet. The chief members are connected either by standing in contrast as members, or by but, understood before Johnson. Johnson is the subject of would say, understood: and this would say, again introduces a clause, as what would be said. The relates to creature; creature is the subject of possesses; possesses, which is qualified by not, governs vitality; vitality is qualified by sufficient; sufficient is the prior term of to; to governs preserve; preserve governs it, and is the prior term of from; and from governs putrefaction.

2. "There is one Being to whom we can look with a perfect conviction of finding that security, which nothing about us can give, and which nothing about us can take away."—GREENWOOD; Wells's School Gram., p. 192.*

ANALYSIS.—What is the general structure of this passage? and what, the chain of connexion "between the words away and is?" The period is a complex sentence, having four clauses, all connected together by relatives; the second, by whom, to the first and chief clause, "There is one Being;" the third and the fourth, to the second, by which and which; but the last two, having the same antecedent, security, and being coördinate, are also connected one to the other by and. As to "the chain of connexion," Away relates to can take; can take agrees with its nominative nothing, and governs which; which represents security; security is governed by finding; finding is governed by of; of refers back to conviction; conviction is governed by with; with refers back to can look; can look agrees with we, and is, in sense, the antecedent of to; to governs whom; whom represents Being; and Being is the subject of is.

FIFTH METHOD OF ANALYSIS.

The best and most thorough method of analysis is that of COMPLETE SYNTACTICAL PARSING; a method which, for the sake of order and brevity, should ever be kept free from all mixture of etymological definitions or reasons, but which may be preceded or followed by any of the foregoing schemes of resolution, if the teacher choose to require any such preliminary or subsidiary exposition. This method is fully illustrated in the Twelfth Praxis below.

OBSERVATIONS ON METHODS OF ANALYSIS.

OBS. 1.—The almost infinite variety in the forms of sentences, will sometimes throw difficulty in the way of the analyzer, be his scheme or his skill what it may. The last four or five observations of the preceding series have shown, that the distinction of sentences as simple or compound, which constitutes the chief point of the First Method of Analysis above, is not always plain, even to the learned. The definitions and examples which I have given, will make it generally so; and, where it is otherwise, the question or puzzle, it is presumed, cannot often be of much practical importance. If the difference be not obvious, it can hardly be a momentous error, to mistake a phrase for an elliptical clause, or to call such a clause a phrase.

OBS. 2.—The Second Method above is, I think, easier of application than any of the rest; and, if other analysis than the regular method of parsing seem desirable, this will probably be found as useful as any. There is, in many of our popular grammars, some * I cite this example from Wells, for the purpose of explaining it without the several errors which that gentleman's "Model" incidentally inculcates. He suggests that and connects, not the two relative clauses, as such, but the two verbs can give and can take; and that the connexion between away and is must be traced through the former, and its object which. These positions, I think, are wrong. He also uses here, as elsewhere, the expressions, "which relates it" and, "which is related by," each in a very unusual, and perhaps an unauthorized, sense. His formule reads thus: "Away modifies can take; can take is CONNECTED with can give by and; WHICH is governed by CAN GIVE, and relates to security; security is the object of finding, which is RELATED BY of to conviction; conviction is the object of with, which RELATES IT to can look; to expresses the relation between whom and can look, and whom relates to Being, which is the subject of is."—Wells's School Gram., 113th Ed., p. 192. Neither this nor the subsequent method has been often called "analysis;" for, in grammar, each user of this term has commonly applied it to some one method only,—the method preferred by himself.

---

recognition of the principles of this analysis—some mention of “the principal parts of a sentence,” in accordance with what are so called above,—and also, in a few, some succinct account of the parts called “adjuncts,” but there seems to have been no prevalent practice of applying these principles, in any stated or well-digested manner. Lowth, Murray, Alger, W. Allen, Hart, Hiley, Ingersoll, Wells, and others, tell of these “PRINCIPAL PARTS;”—Lowth calling them, “the agent, the attribute, and the object,” (Gram., p. 72;)—Murray, and his copyists, Alger, Ingersoll, and others, calling them, “the subject, the attribute, and the object,”—Hiley and Hart calling them, “the subject or nominative, the attribute or verb, and the object,”—Allen calling them, “the nominative, the verb, and (if the verb is active,) the accusative governed by the verb;” and also saying, “The nominative is sometimes called the subject; the verb, the attribute; and the accusative, the object,”—Wells calling them, “the subject or nominative, the verb, and the object,” and also recognizing the “adjuncts,” as a species which “embraces all the words of a simple sentence [,] except the principal parts,”—yet not more than two of them all appearing to have taken any thought, and they but little, about the formal application of their common doctrine. In Allen’s English Grammar, which is one of the best, and likewise in Wells’s, which is equally prized, this reduction of all connected words, or parts of speech, into “the principal parts” and “the adjuncts,” is fully recognized; the adjuncts, too, are discriminated by Allen, as “either primary or secondary,” nor are their more particular species or relations overlooked; but I find no method prescribed for the analysis intended, except what Wells adopted in his early editions but has since changed to an other or abandoned, and no other allusion to it by, Allen, than this Note, which, with some appearance of intrusion, is appended to his “Method of Parsing the Infinitive Mood:”—“The pupil may now begin to analyse [analyze] the sentences, by distinguishing the principal words and their adjuncts.”—W. Allen’s E. Gram., p. 258.

OBS. 3.—These authors in general, and many more, tell us, with some variation of words, that the agent, subject, or nominative, is that of which something is said, affirmed, or denied; that the attribute, verb, or predicate, is that which is said, affirmed, or denied, of the subject; and that the object, accusative, or case sequent, is that which is introduced by the finite verb, or affected by the action affirmed. Lowth says, “In English the nominative case, denoting the agent, usually goes before the verb, or attribution; and the objective case, denoting the object, follows the verb active.”—Short Introd., p. 72. Murray copies, but not literally, thus: “The nominative denotes the subject, and usually goes before the verb [,] or attribute; and the word or phrase, denoting the object, follows the verb: as, ‘A wise man governs his passions.’ Here, a wise man is the subject; governs, the attribute, or thing affirmed; and his passions, the object.”—Murray’s Octavo, p. 142; Duodecimo, 116. To include thus the adjuncts with their principals, as the logicians do, is here manifestly improper; because it unites what the grammatical analyzer is chiefly concerned to separate, and tends to defeat the main purpose for which “THE PRINCIPAL PARTS” are so named and distinguished.

OBS. 4.—The Third Method of Analysis, described above, is an attempt very briefly to epitomize the chief elements of a great scheme,—to give, in a nutshell, the substance of what our grammarians have borrowed from the logicians, then mixed with something of their own, next amplified with small details, and, in some instances, branched out and extended to enormous bulk and length. Of course, they have not failed to set forth the comparative merits of this scheme in a sufficiently favourable light. The two ingenious gentlemen who seem to have been chiefly instrumental in making it popular, say in their preface, “The rules of syntax contained in this work result directly from the analysis of propositions, and of compound sentences; and for this reason the student should make himself perfectly familiar with the sections relating to subject and predicate, and should be able readily to analyze sentences, whether simple or compound, and to explain their structure and connection. * * * This exercise should always precede the more minute and subsidiary labor of parsing. If the latter be conducted, as it often is, independently of previous analysis, the principal advantage to be derived from the study of language, as an intellectual exercise, will inevitably be lost.”—Latin Grammar of Andrews and Stoddard, p. vi. N. Butler, who bestows upon this subject about a dozen duodecimo pages, says in his preface, “The rules for the analysis of sentences, which is a very useful and interesting exercise, have been taken from Andrews’ and Stoddard’s Latin Grammar, some changes and additions being made.”—Butler’s Practical Gram., p. iv.*

OBS. 5.—Wells, in the early copies of his School Grammar, as has been hinted, adopted a method of analysis similar to the Second one prescribed above; yet referred, even from the first, to “Andrews and Stoddard’s Latin Grammar,” and to “De Sacy’s General Grammar,” as if these were authorities for what he then inculcated. Subsequently, he changed his scheme, from that of Parts Principal and Adjuncts, to one of Subjects and Predicates, “either grammatical or logical,” also “either simple or compound;”—to one resembling Andrews and Stoddard’s, yet differing from it, often, as to what constitutes a “grammatical predicate;”—to one resembling the Third Method above, yet differing from it, (as does Andrews and Stoddard’s,) in taking the logical subject and predicate before the grammatical. “The chapter on Analysis,” said he then, “has been Revised and enlarged with great care, and will be found to embody all the most important principles on this subject [.] which are contained in the works of De Sacy, Andrews and Stoddard, Kühner, Crosby, and Crane. It is gratifying to observe that the attention of teachers is now so generally directed to this important mode of investigating the structure of our language, in connection with the ordinary exercises of etymological and syntactical parsing.”—Wells’s School Gram., New Ed., 1850, p. iv.

OBS. 6.—In view of the fact, that Wells’s chief mode of sentential analysis had just undergone an almost total metamorphosis, a change plausible perhaps, but of doubtful utility,—that, up to the date of the words just cited, and afterwards, so far and so long as any copies of his early “Thousands” remain in use, the author himself has earnestly directed attention to a method which he now means henceforth to abandon,—in this view, the praise and gratulation expressed above seem singular. If it has been found practicable, to slide “the attention of teachers,” and their approbation too, adroitly over from one “important mode of investigating the structure of our language,” to an other;—if “it is gratifying to observe,” that the direction thus given to public opinion sustains itself so well, and “is so generally” acquiesced in;—if it is proved, that the stereotyped praise of one system of analysis may, without alteration, be so transferred to an other, as to answer the double purpose of commending and superseding;—it is not improbable that the author’s

---

* The possessive phrase here should be, “Andrews and Stoddard’s,” as Wells and others write it. The adding of the apostrophe to the former name is wrong, even by the better half of Butler’s own absurd and self-contradictory Rule: to wit, “When two or more nouns in the possessive case are connected by and, the possessive termination should be added to each of them; as, ‘These are John’s and Eliza’s books.’ But, if objects are possessed in common by two or more, and the nouns are closely connected without any intervening words, the possessive termination is added to the last noun only; as, ‘These are John and Eliza’s books.’”—Butler’s Practical Gram., p. 163. The sign twice used implies two governing nouns: “John’s and Eliza’s books.” = “John’s books and Eliza’s;” “Andrews’ and Stoddard’s Latin Grammar,” = “Andrews’ (or Andrews’s) Latin Grammar and Stoddard’s” next new plates will bear the stamp of yet other “most important principles” of analysis. This process is here recommended to be used “in connection with the ordinary exercises of etymological and syntactical parsing,”—exercises, which, in Wells’s Grammar, are generally, and very improperly, commingled; and if, to these, may be profitably conjoined either his present or his former scheme of analysis, it were well, had he somewhere put them together and shown how.

OBS. 7.—But there are other passages of the School Grammar, so little suited to this notion of “connection” that one can hardly believe the word ought to be taken in what seems its only sense. “Advanced classes should attend less to the common Order of Parsing, and more to the Analysis of language.”—Wells’s Grammar, “3d Thousand,” p. 125; “113th Thousand,” p. 132. This implies, what is probably true of the etymological exercise, that parsing is more rudimental than the other forms of analysis. It also intimates, what is not so clear, that pupils rightly instructed must advance from the former to the latter, as to something more worthy of their intellectual powers. The passage is used with reference to either form of analysis adopted by the author. So the following comparison, in which Parsing is plainly disparaged, stands permanently at the head of “the chapter on Analysis,” to commend first one mode, and then an other: “It is particularly desirable that pupils should pass as early as practicable from the formalities of common PARSING, to the more important exercise of ANALYZING critically the structure of language. The mechanical routine of technical parsing is peculiarly liable to become monotonous and dull, while the practice of explaining the various relations and offices of words in a sentence, is adapted to call the mind of the learner into constant and vigorous action, and can hardly fail of exciting the deepest interest,”—Wells’s Gram., 3d Th., p. 181; 113th Th., p. 184.

OBS. 8.—An ill scheme of parsing, or an ill use of a good one, is almost as unlucky in grammar, as an ill method of ciphering, or an ill use of a good one, would be in arithmetic. From the strong contrast cited above, one might suspect that, in selecting, devising, or using, a technical process for the exercising of learners in the principles of etymology and syntax, this author had been less fortunate than the generality of his fellows. Not only is it implied, that parsing is no critical analysis, but even what is set in opposition to the “mechanical routine,” may very well serve for a definition of Syntactical Parsing—“the practice of explaining the various relations and offices of words in a sentence!” If this “practice,” well ordered, can be at once interesting and profitable to the learner, so may parsing. Nor, after all, is even this author’s mode of parsing, defective though it is in several respects, less “important” to the users of his book, or less valued by teachers, than the analysis which he sets above it.

OBS. 9.—S. S. Greene, a public teacher in Boston, who, in answer to a supposed “demand for a more philosophical plan of teaching the English language,” has entered in earnest upon the “Analysis of Sentences,” having devoted to one method of it more than the space of two hundred duodecimo pages, speaks of analysis and of parsing, thus: “The resolving of a sentence into its elements, or of any complex element into the parts which compose it, is called analysis.”—Greene’s Analysis, p. 14. “Parsing consists in naming a part of speech, giving its modifications, relation, agreement or dependence, and the rule for its construction. Analysis consists in pointing out the words or groups of words which constitute the elements of a sentence. Analysis should precede parsing.”—Ib., p. 26. “A large proportion of the elements of sentences are not single words, but combinations or groups of words. These groups perform the office of the substantive, the adjective, or the adverb, and, in some one of these relations, enter in as the component parts of a sentence. The pupil who learns to determine the elements of a sentence, must, therefore, learn the force of these combinations before he separates them into the single words which compose them. This advantage is wholly lost in the ordinary methods of parsing.”—Ib., p. 3.

OBS. 10.—On these passages, it may be remarked in the first place, that the distinction attempted between analysis and parsing is by no means clear, or well drawn. Nor indeed could it be; because parsing is a species of analysis. The first assertion would be just as true as it is now, were the former word substituted for the latter: thus, “The resolving of a sentence into its elements, or of any complex element into the parts which compose it, is called parsing.” Next, the “Parsing” spoken of in the second sentence, is Syntactical Parsing only; and, without a limitation of the species, neither this assertion nor the one concerning precedence is sufficiently true. Again, the suggestion, that, “Analysis consists in pointing out the words or groups of words which constitute the elements of a sentence,” has nothing distinctive in it; and, without some idea of the author’s peculiar system of “elements,” previously impressed upon the mind, is scarcely, if at all, intelligible. Lastly, that a pupil must understand a sentence,—or, what is the same thing, “learn the force of the words combined,”—before he can be sure of parsing each word rightly, is a very plain and certain truth; but what “advantage” over parsing this truth gives to the lesser analysis, which deals with “groups,” it is not easy to discover. If the author had any clear idea of “this advantage,” he has conveyed no such conception to his readers.

OBS. 11.—Greene’s Analysis is the most expanded form of the Third Method above.* Its nucleus, or germinating kernel, was the old partition of subject and predicate, derived from the art of logic. Its chief principles may be briefly stated thus: Sentences, which are simple, or complex, or compound, are made up of words, phrases, and clauses—three grand classes of elements, called the first, the second, and the third class. From these, each sentence must have two elements; the Subject, or Substantive element, and the Predicate, or Predicative element, which are principal; and a sentence may have five, the subordinates being the Adjective element, the Objective element, and the Adverbial element. The five elements have sundry modifications and subdivisions. Each of the five may, like a sentence, be simple, or complex, or compound; and each may be of any of the three grand classes. The development of this scheme forms a volume, not small. The system is plausible, ingenious, methodical, mostly true, and somewhat elaborate; but it is neither very useful nor very accurate. It seems too much like a great tree, beautiful, symmetrical, and full of leaves, but raised or desired only for fruit, yet bearing little, and some of that little not of good quality, but knurly or bitter. The chief end of a grammar, designed for our tongue, is, to show what is, and what is not, good English. To this end, the system in question does not appear to be well adapted.

OBS. 12.—Dr. Bullions, the projector of the “Series of Grammars, English, Latin, and Greek, all on the same plan,” inserted in his Latin Grammar, of 1841, a short sketch of the new analysis by “subjects and predicates,” “grammatical and logical,” the scheme used by Andrews and Stoddard; but his English Grammar, which appeared in 1834, was too early for this “new and improved method of investigating” language. In his later English Grammar, of 1849, however, paying little regard to sameness of “plan” or conformity of definitions, he carefully devoted to this matter the space of fifteen pages, placing the topic, not injudiciously, in the first part of his syntax, and referring to it thus in his Preface: “The subject of ANALYSIS, wholly omitted in the former work, is here introduced in its proper place; and to an extent in accordance with its importance.”—Bullions, Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 3.

---

* In Mulligan’s recent “Exposition of the Grammatical Structure of the English Language,”—the work of an able hand,—this kind of “Analysis,” being most improperly pronounced “the chief business of the grammarian,” is swelled by copious explanation under minute heads, to a volume containing more than three times as much matter as Greene’s; but, since school-boys have little relish for long arguments, and prolixity had here already reached to satiety and disgust, it is very doubtful whether the practical utility of this “Improved Method of Teaching Grammar,” will be greater in proportion to this increase of bulk.—G. B., 1853.

OBS. 13.—In applying any of the different methods of analysis, as a school exercise, it will in general perhaps be best to use each separately; the teacher directing which one is to be applied, and to what examples. The selections prepared for the stated praxes of this work, will be found as suitable as any. Analysis of sentences is a central and essential matter in the teaching or the study of grammar; but the truest and the most important of the sentential analyses is parsing; which, because it is a method distinguished by a technical name of its own, is not commonly denominated analysis. The relation which other methods should bear to parsing, is, as we have seen, variously stated by different authors. Etymological parsing and Syntactical are, or ought to be, distinct exercises. The former, being the most simple, the most elementary, and also requisite to be used before the pupil is prepared for the latter, should, without doubt, take precedence of all the rest, and be made familiar in the first place. Those who say, “Analysis should precede parsing,” will scarcely find the application of other analysis practicable, till this is somewhat known. But Syntactical Parsing being, when complete in form, the most thorough process of grammatical resolution, it seems proper to have introduced the other methods before it, as above. It can hardly be said that any of these are necessary to this exercise, or to one another; yet in a full course of grammatical instruction, each may at times be usefully employed.

OBS. 14.—Dr. Bullions suggests, that, “Analysis should precede Syntactical parsing, because, till we know the parts and elements of a sentence, we can not understand their relations, nor intelligently combine them into one consistent whole.”—Analytical and Pract. Gram., p. 114. This reason is entirely fictitious and truthless; for the words of a sentence are intuitively known to be its “parts and elements;” and, to “understand their relations,” is as necessary to one form of analysis as to another; but, “intelligently to combine them,” is no part of the parser’s duty: this belongs to the writer; and where he has not done it, he must be criticised and censured, as one that knows not well what he says. In W. Allen’s Grammar, as in Wells’s, Syntactical parsing and Etymological are not divided. Wells intersperses his “Exercises in Parsing,” at seven points of his Syntax, and places “the chapter on Analysis,” at the end of it. Allen treats first of the several parts of grammar, didactically; then presents a series of exercises adapted to the various heads of the whole. At the beginning of these, are fourteen “Methods of Parsing,” which show, successively, the properties and construction of his nine parts of speech; and, at the ninth method, which resolves infinitives, it is proposed that the pupil begin to apply a method of analysis similar to the Second one above.

EXAMPLES FOR PARSING.

PRAXIS XII.—SYNTACTICAL.

The grand clew to all syntactical parsing is THE SENSE; and as any composition is faulty which does not rightly deliver the authors meaning, so every solution of a word or sentence is necessarily erroneous, in which that meaning is not carefully noticed and literally preserved.

In all complete syntactical parsing, it is required of the pupil—to distinguish the different parts of speech and their classes; to mention their modifications in order; to point out their relation, agreement, or government; and to apply the Rules of Syntax. Thus:—

EXAMPLE PARSED.

“A young man studious to know his duty, and honestly bent on doing it, will find himself led away from the sin or folly in which the multitude thoughtlessly indulge themselves; but, ah! poor fallen human nature! what conflicts are thy portion, when inclination and habit—a rebel and a traitor—exert their sway against our only saving principle!”—G. Brown.

A is the indefinite article: and relates to man, or young man; according to Rule 1st, which says, “Articles relate to the nouns which they limit.” Because the meaning is—a man—a young man.

Young is a common adjective, of the positive degree, compared regularly, young, younger, youngest: and relates to man; according to Rule 9th, which says, “Adjectives relate to nouns or pronouns.” Because the meaning is—young man.

Man is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, masculine gender, and nominative case: and is the subject of will find; according to Rule 2d, which says, “A noun or a pronoun which is the subject of a finite verb, must be in the nominative case.” Because the meaning is—man will find.

Studious is a common adjective, compared by means of the adverbs; studious, more studious, most studious; or, studious, less studious, least studious: and relates to man; according to Rule 9th, which says, “Adjectives relate to nouns or pronouns.” Because the meaning is—man studious.

To is a preposition: and shows the relation between studious and know; according to Rule 23d, which says, “Prepositions show the relations of words, and of the things or thoughts expressed by them.” Because the meaning is—studious to know.

Know is an irregular active-transitive verb, from know, knew, knowing, known; found in the infinitive mood, present tense—no person, or number: and is governed by to; according to Rule 18th, which says, “The infinitive mood is governed in general by the preposition TO, which commonly connects it to a finite verb.” Because the meaning is—to know.

His is a personal pronoun, representing man, in the third person, singular number, and masculine gender; according to Rule 10th, which says, “A pronoun must agree with its antecedent, or the noun or pronoun which it represents, in person, number, and gender:” and is in the possessive case, being governed by duty; according to Rule 4th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun in the possessive case, is governed by the name of the thing possessed.” Because the meaning is—his duty;—i. e., the young man’s duty.

Duty is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case: and is governed by know; according to Rule 5th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun made the object of an active-transitive verb or participle, is governed by it in the objective case.” Because the meaning is—to know his duty.

And is a copulative conjunction: and connects the phrase which follows it, to that which precedes; according to Rule 22d, which says, “Conjunctions connect words, sentences, or parts of sentences.” Because the meaning is—studious to know his duty, and honestly bent, &c.

Honestly is an adverb of manner: and relates to bent; according to Rule 21st, which says, “Adverbs relate to verbs, participles, adjectives, or other adverbs.” Because the meaning is—honestly bent.

Bent is a perfect participle, from the redundant active-transitive verb, bend, bent or bended, bending, bent or bended: and relates to man; according to Rule 20th, which says, “Participles relate to nouns or pronouns, or else are governed by prepositions.” Because the meaning is—man bent. On is a preposition: and shows the relation between bent and doing; according to Rule 23d, which says, “Prepositions show the relations of words, and of the things or thoughts expressed by them.” Because the meaning is—bent on doing.

Doing is an imperfect participle, from the irregular active-transitive verb, do, did, doing, done: and is governed by on; according to Rule 20th, which says, “Participles relate to nouns or pronouns, or else are governed by prepositions.” Because the meaning is—on doing.

It is a personal pronoun, representing duty, in the third person, singular number, and neuter gender; according to Rule 10th, which says, “A pronoun must agree with its antecedent, or the noun or pronoun which it represents, in person, number, and gender:” and is in the objective case, being governed by doing; according to Rule 5th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun made the object of an active-transitive verb or participle, is governed by it in the objective case.” Because the meaning is—doing it;—i. e., doing his duty.

Will find is an irregular active-transitive verb, from find, found, finding, found; found in the indicative mood, first-future tense, third person, and singular number: and agrees with its nominative man; according to Rule 14th, which says, “Every finite verb must agree with its subject, or nominative, in person and number.” Because the meaning is—man will find.

Himself is a compound personal pronoun, representing man, in the third person, singular number, and masculine gender; according to Rule 10th, which says, “A pronoun must agree with its antecedent, or the noun or pronoun which it represents, in person, number, and gender:” and is in the objective case, being governed by will find; according to Rule 5th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun made the object of an active-transitive verb or participle, is governed by it in the objective case.” Because the meaning is—will find himself;—i. e., his own mind or person.

Led is a perfect participle, from the irregular active-transitive verb, lead, led, leading, led: and relates to himself; according to Rule 20th, which says, “Participles relate to nouns or pronouns, or else are governed by prepositions.” Because the meaning is—himself led.

Away is an adverb of place: and relates to led; according to Rule 21st, which says, “Adverbs relate to verbs, participles, adjectives, or other adverbs.” Because the meaning is—led away.

From is a preposition: and shows the relation between led and sin or folly; according to Rule 23d, which says, “Prepositions show the relations of words, and of the things or thoughts expressed by them.” Because the meaning is—led from sin or folly.

The is the definite article: and relates to sin and folly; according to Rule 1st, which says, “Articles relate to the nouns which they limit.” Because the meaning is—the sin or folly.

Sin is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case: and is governed by from; according to Rule 7th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun made the object of a preposition, is governed by it in the objective case.” Because the meaning is—from sin.

Or is a disjunctive conjunction: and connects sin and folly; according to Rule 22d, which says, “Conjunctions connect words, sentences, or parts of sentences.” Because the meaning is—sin or folly.

Folly is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case; and is connected by or to sin, and governed by the same preposition from; according to Rule 7th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun made the object of a preposition, is governed by it in the objective case.” Because the meaning is—from sin or folly.

In is a preposition: and shows the relation between indulge and which; according to Rule 23d, which says, “Prepositions show the relations of words, and of the things or thoughts expressed by them.” Because the meaning is—indulge in which—or, which they indulge in.

Which is a relative pronoun, representing sin or folly, in the third person, singular number, and neuter gender; according to Rule 13th, which says, “When a pronoun has two or more antecedents connected by or or nor, it must agree with them singly, and not as if taken together:” and is in the objective case, being governed by in; according to Rule 7th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun made the object of a preposition, is governed by it in the objective case.” Because the meaning is—in which;—i. e., in which sin or folly.

The is the definite article: and relates to multitude; according to Rule 1st, which says, “Articles relate to the nouns which they limit.” Because the meaning is—the multitude.

Multitude is a common noun, collective, of the third person, conveying the idea of plurality, masculine gender, and nominative case: and is the subject of indulge; according to Rule 2d, which says, “A noun or a pronoun which is the subject of a finite verb, must be in the nominative case.” Because the meaning is—multitude indulge.

Thoughtlessly is an adverb of manner: and relates to indulge; according to Rule 21st, which says, “Adverbs relate to verbs, participles, adjectives, or other adverbs.” Because the meaning is—thoughtlessly indulge.

Indulge is a regular active-transitive verb, from indulge, indulged, indulging, indulged; found in the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and plural number: and agrees with its nominative multitude; according to Rule 15th, which says, “When the nominative is a collective noun conveying the idea of plurality, the verb must agree with it in the plural number.” Because the meaning is—multitude indulge.

Themselves is a compound personal pronoun, representing multitude, in the third person, plural number, and masculine gender; according to Rule 11th, which says, “When the antecedent is a collective noun conveying the idea of plurality, the pronoun must agree with it in the plural number:" and is in the objective case, being governed by indulge; according to Rule 5th, which says, "A noun or a pronoun made the object of an active-transitive verb or participle, is governed by it in the objective case." Because the meaning is—indulge themselves;—i. e., the individuals of the multitude indulge themselves.

But is a disjunctive conjunction: and connects what precedes and what follows; according to Rule 22d, which says, "Conjunctions connect words, sentences, or parts of sentences." Because the meaning is—A young man, &c., but, ah! &c.

Ah is an interjection, indicating sorrow: and is used independently; according to Rule 24th, which says, "Interjections have no dependent construction; they are put absolute, either alone, or with other words." Because the meaning is—ah!—unconnected with the rest of the sentence.

Poor is a common adjective, of the positive degree, compared regularly, poor, poorer, poorest: and relates to nature; according to Rule 9th, which says, "Adjectives relate to nouns or pronouns." Because the meaning is—poor human nature.

Fallen is a participial adjective, compared (perhaps) by adverbs: and relates to nature; according to Rule 9th, which says, "Adjectives relate to nouns or pronouns." Because the meaning is—fallen nature.

Human is a common adjective, not compared: and relates to nature; according to Rule 9th, which says, "Adjectives relate to nouns or pronouns." Because the meaning is—human nature.

Nature is a common noun, of the second person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case: and is put absolute by direct address; according to Rule 8th, which says, "A noun or a pronoun is put absolute in the nominative, when its case depends on no other word." Because the meaning is—poor fallen human nature!—the noun being unconnected with any verb.

What is a pronominal adjective, not compared: and relates to conflicts; according to Rule 9th, which says, "Adjectives relate to nouns or pronouns." Because the meaning is—what conflicts.

Conflicts is a common noun, of the third person, plural number, neuter gender, and nominative case: and is the subject of are; according to Rule 2d, which says, "A noun or a pronoun which is the subject of a finite verb, must be in the nominative case." Because the meaning is—conflicts are.

Are is an irregular neuter verb, from be, was, being, been; found in the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and plural number: and agrees with its nominative conflicts; according to Rule 14th, which says, "Every finite verb must agree with its subject, or nominative, in person and number." Because the meaning is—conflicts are.

Thy is a personal pronoun, representing nature, in the second person, singular number, and neuter gender; according to Rule 10th, which says, "A pronoun must agree with its antecedent, or the noun or pronoun which it represents, in person, number, and gender:" and is in the possessive case, being governed by portion; according to Rule 4th, which says, "A noun or a pronoun in the possessive case, is governed by the name of the thing possessed." Because the meaning is—thy portion.

Portion is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case: and is put after are, in agreement with conflicts; according to Rule 6th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun put after a verb or participle not transitive, agrees in case with a preceding noun or pronoun referring to the same thing.” Because the meaning is—conflicts are thy portion.

When is a conjunctive adverb of time: and relates to the two verbs, are and exert; according to Rule 21st, which says, “Adverbs relate to verbs, participles, adjectives, or other adverbs.” Because the meaning is—what conflicts are thy portion, when inclination and habit exert, &c.

Inclination is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case: and is one of the subjects of exert; according to Rule 2d, which says, “A noun or a pronoun which is the subject of a finite verb, must be in the nominative case.” Because the meaning is—inclination and habit exert.

And is a copulative conjunction: and connects inclination and habit; according to Rule 22d, which says, “Conjunctions connect words, sentences, or parts of sentences.” Because the meaning is—inclination and habit.

Habit is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and nominative case: and is one of the subjects of exert; according to Rule 2d, which says, “A noun or a pronoun which is the subject of a finite verb, must be in the nominative case.” Because the meaning is—inclination and habit exert.

A is the indefinite article: and relates to rebel; according to Rule 1st, which says, “Articles relate to the nouns which they limit.” Because the meaning is—a rebel.

Rebel is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, masculine gender, and nominative case: and is put in apposition with inclination; according to Rule 3d, which says, “A noun or a personal pronoun used to explain a preceding noun or pronoun, is put, by apposition, in the same case.” Because the meaning is—inclination, a rebel.

And is a copulative conjunction: and connects rebel and traitor; according to Rule 22d, which says, “Conjunctions connect words, sentences, or parts of sentences.” Because the meaning is—a rebel and a traitor.

A is the indefinite article: and relates to traitor; according to Rule 1st, which says, “Articles relate to the nouns which they limit.” Because the meaning is—a traitor.

Traitor is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, masculine gender, and nominative case: and is put in apposition with habit; according to Rule 3d, which says, “A noun or a personal pronoun used to explain a preceding noun or pronoun, is put, by apposition, in the same case.” Because the meaning is—habit, a traitor.

Exert is a regular active-transitive verb, from exert, exerted, exerting, exerted; found in the indicative mood, present tense, third person, and plural number: and agrees with its two nominatives inclination and habit; according to Rule 16th, which says, “When a verb has two or more nominatives connected by and, it must agree with them jointly in the plural, because they are taken together.” Because the meaning is—inclination and habit exert.

Their is a personal pronoun, representing inclination and habit, in the third person, plural number, and neuter gender; according to Rule 12th, which says, “When a pronoun has two or more antecedents connected by and, it must agree with them jointly in the plural, because they are taken together:” and is in the possessive case, being governed by sway; according to Rule 4th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun in the possessive case, is governed by the name of the thing possessed.” Because the meaning is—their sway;—i. e., the sway of inclination and habit.

Sway is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case; and is governed by exert; according to Rule 5th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun made the object of an active-transitive verb or participle, is governed by it in the objective case.” Because the meaning is—exert sway.

Against is a preposition: and shows the relation between exert and principle; according to Rule 23d, which says, “Prepositions show the relations of words, and of the things or thoughts expressed by them.” Because the meaning is—exert against principle.

Our is a personal pronoun, representing the speakers, in the first person, plural number, and masculine gender; according to Rule 10th, which says, “A pronoun must agree with its antecedent, or the noun or pronoun which it represents, in person, number, and gender:” and is in the possessive case, being governed by principle; according to Rule 4th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun in the possessive case, is governed by the name of the thing possessed.” Because the meaning is—our principle;—i. e., the speakers’ principle.

Only is a pronominal adjective, not compared: and relates to principle; according to Rule 9th, which says, “Adjectives relate to nouns or pronouns.” Because the meaning is—only principle.

Saving is a participial adjective, compared by adverbs when it means frugal, but not compared in the sense here intended: and relates to principle; according to Rule 9th, which says, “Adjectives relate to nouns or pronouns.” Because the meaning is—saving principle.

Principle is a common noun, of the third person, singular number, neuter gender, and objective case: and is governed by against; according to Rule 7th, which says, “A noun or a pronoun made the object of a preposition, is governed by it in the objective case.” Because the meaning is—against principle.

LESSON I.—ARTICLES.

“In English heroic verse, the capital pause of every line, is determined by the sense to be after the fourth, the fifth, the sixth or the seventh syllable.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 105.

“When, in considering the structure of a tree or a plant, we observe how all the parts, the roots, the stem, the bark, and the leaves, are suited to the growth and nutriment of the whole; when we survey all the parts and members of a living animal; or when we examine any of the curious works of art—such as a clock, a ship, or any nice machine; the pleasure which we have in the survey, is wholly founded on this sense of beauty.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 49.

“It never can proceed from a good taste, to make a teaspoon resemble the leaf of a tree; for such a form is inconsistent with the destination of a teaspoon.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 351.

“In an epic poem, a history, an oration, or any work of genius, we always require a fitness, or an adjustment of means to the end which the author is supposed to have in view.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 50.

“Rhetoric, Logic, and Grammar, are three arts that should always walk hand in hand. The first is the art of speaking eloquently; the second, that of thinking well; and the third, that of speaking with propriety.”—Formey's Belles-Lettres, p. 114.

“Spring hangs her infant blossoms on the trees, Rock'd in the cradle of the western breeze.”—Cowper.

LESSON II.—NOUNS.

“There goes a rumour that I am to be banished. And let the sentence come, if God so will. The other side of the sea is my Father's ground, as well as this side.”—Rutherford.

“Gentlemen, there is something on earth greater than arbitrary or despotic power. The lightning has its power, and the whirlwind has its power, and the earthquake has its power. But there is something among men more capable of shaking despotic power than lightning, whirlwind, or earthquake; that is—the threatened indignation of the whole civilized world.”—Daniel Webster.

“And Isaac sent away Jacob; and he went to Padan Aram, unto Laban, son of Bethuel the Syrian, and brother of Rebecca, Jacob's and Esau's mother.”—See Gen., xxviii, 5.

“The purpose you undertake is dangerous.” “Why that is certain: it is dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my Lord fool, out of this nettle danger, we pluck this flower safety.”—Shakespeare.

“And towards the Jews alone, one of the noblest charters of liberty on earth—Magna Charta, the Briton's boast—legalized an act of injustice.”—Keith's Evidences, p. 74.

“Were Demosthenes's Philippics spoken in a British assembly, in a similar conjuncture of affairs, they would convince and persuade at this day. The rapid style, the vehement reasoning, the disdain, anger, boldness, freedom, which perpetually animate them, would render their success infallible over any modern assembly. I question whether the same can be said of Cicero's orations; whose eloquence, however beautiful, and however well suited to the Roman taste, yet borders oftener on declamation, and is more remote from the manner in which we now expect to hear real business and causes of importance treated.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 248.

“In fact, every attempt to present on paper the splendid effects of impassioned eloquence, is like gathering up dewdrops, which appear jewels and pearls on the grass, but run to water in the hand; the essence and the elements remain, but the grace, the sparkle, and the form, are gone.”—Montgomery's Life of Spencer.

“As in life true dignity must be founded on character, not on dress and appearance; so in language the dignity of composition must arise from sentiment and thought, not from ornament.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 144.

“And man, whose heaven-erected face the smiles of love adorn, Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn.”—Burns.

“Ah wretched man! unmindful of thy end!
A moment's glory! and what fates attend.”—Pope, Iliad, B. xvii, l. 231.

LESSON III.—ADJECTIVES.

“Embarrassed, obscure, and feeble sentences, are generally, if not always, the result of embarrassed, obscure, and feeble thought.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 120.

“Upon this ground, we prefer a simple and natural, to an artificial and affected style; a regular and well-connected story, to loose and scattered narratives; a catastrophe which is tender and pathetic, to one which leaves us unmoved.”—Ib., p. 23.

“A thorough good taste may well be considered as a power compounded of natural sensibility to beauty, and of improved understanding.”—Ib., p. 18.

“Of all writings, ancient or modern, the sacred Scriptures afford us the highest instances of the sublime. The descriptions of the Deity, in them, are wonderfully noble; both from the grandeur of the object, and the manner of representing it.”—Ib., p. 36.

“It is not the authority of any one person, or of a few, be they ever so eminent, that can establish one form of speech in preference to another. Nothing but the general practice of good writers and good speakers can do it.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 107.

“What other means are there to attract love and esteem so effectual as a virtuous course of life? If a man be just and beneficent, if he be temperate, modest, and prudent, he will infallibly gain the esteem and love of all who know him.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 167.

“But there are likewise, it must be owned, people in the world, whom it is easy to make worse by rough usage, and not easy to make better by any other.”—Abp. Seeker.

“The great comprehensive truth written in letters of living light on every page of our history—the language addressed by every past age of New England to all future ages, is this: Human happiness has no perfect security but freedom;—freedom, none but virtue;—virtue, none but knowledge: and neither freedom, nor virtue, nor knowledge, has any vigour or immortal hope, except in the principles of the Christian faith, and in the sanctions of the Christian religion.”—President Quincy.

“For bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss;
Tedious, unshared with thee, and odious soon.”—P. Lost, B. ix, l. 880.

LESSON IV.—PRONOUNS.

“There is but one governor whose sight we cannot escape, whose power we cannot resist: a sense of His presence and of duty to Him, will accomplish more than all the laws and penalties which can be devised without it.”—Woodbridge, Lit. C., p. 154.

“Every voluntary society must judge who shall be members of their body, and enjoy fellowship with them in their peculiar privileges.”—Watts.

“Poetry and impassioned eloquence are the only sources from which the living growth of a language springs; and even if in their vehemence they bring down some mountain rubbish along with them, this sinks to the bottom, and the pure stream flows along over it.”—Philological Museum, i, 645.

“This use is bounded by the province, county, or district, which gives name to the dialect, and beyond which its peculiarities are sometimes unintelligible, and always ridiculous.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 163.

“Every thing that happens, is both a cause and an effect; being the effect of what goes before, and the cause of what follows.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 297.

“Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it.”—Prov., iii, 27.

“Yet there is no difficulty at all in ascertaining the idea. * * * By reflecting upon that which is myself now, and that which was myself twenty years ago, I discern they are not two, but one and the same self.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 271.

“If you will replace what has been long expunged from the language, and extirpate what is firmly rooted, undoubtedly you yourself become an innovator.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 167; Murray’s Gram., 364.

“To speak as others speak, is one of those tacit obligations, annexed to the condition of living in society, which we are bound in conscience to fulfill, though we have never ratified them by any express promise; because, if they were disregarded, society would be impossible, and human happiness at an end.”—See Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 139.

“In England thou was in current use until, perhaps, near the commencement of the seventeenth century, though it was getting to be regarded as somewhat disrespectful. At Walter Raleigh’s trial, Coke, when argument and evidence failed him, insulted the defendant by applying to him the term thou. ‘All that Lord Cobham did,’ he cried, ‘was at thy instigation, thou viper! for I thou thee, thou traitor!’”—Fowler’s E. Gram., §220.

“Th’ Egyptian crown I to your hands remit;
And with it take his heart who offers it.”—Shakspeare.

LESSON V.—VERBS.

“Sensuality contaminates the body, depresses the understanding, deadens the moral feelings of the heart, and degrades man from his rank in the creation.”—Murray’s Key, ii, p. 231.

“When a writer reasons, we look only for perspicuity; when he describes, we expect embellishment; when he divides, or relates, we desire plainness and simplicity.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 144.

“Livy and Herodotus are diffuse; Thucydides and Sallust are succinct; yet all of them are agreeable.”—Ib., p. 178.

“Whenever petulant ignorance, pride, malice, malignity, or envy, interposes to cloud or sully his fame, I will take upon me to pronounce that the eclipse will not last long.”—Dr. Delany.

“She said she had nothing to say, for she was resigned, and I knew all she knew that concerned us in this world; but she desired to be alone, that in the presence of God only, she might without interruption do her last duty to me.”—Spect., No. 520.

“Wisdom and truth, the offspring of the sky, are immortal; while cunning and deception, the meteors of the earth, after glittering for a moment, must pass away.”—Robert Hall.

“See, I have this day set thee over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.”—Jeremiah, i, 10.

“God might command the stones to be made bread, or the clouds to rain it; but he chooses rather to leave mankind to till, to sow, to reap, to gather into barns, to grind, to knead, to bake, and then to eat.”—London Quarterly Review.

“Eloquence is no invention of the schools. Nature teaches every man to be eloquent, when he is much in earnest. Place him in some critical situation, let him have some great interest at stake, and you will see him lay hold of the most effectual means of persuasion.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 235.

“It is difficult to possess great fame and great ease at the same time. Fame, like fire, is with difficulty kindled, is easily increased, but dies away if not continually fed. To preserve fame alive, every enterprise ought to be a pledge of others, so as to keep mankind in constant expectation.”—Art of Thinking, p. 50.

“Pope, finding little advantage from external help, resolved thenceforward to direct himself, and at twelve formed a plan of study which he completed with little other incitement than the desire of excellence.”—Johnson’s Lives of Poets, p. 498.

“Loose, then, from earth the grasp of fond desire, Weigh anchor, and some happier clime explore.”—Young.

LESSON VI.—PARTICIPLES.

“The child, affrighted with the view of his father’s helmet and crest, and clinging to the nurse; Hector, putting off his helmet, taking the child into his arms, and offering up a prayer for him; Andromache, receiving back the child with a smile of pleasure, and at the same instant bursting into tears; form the most natural and affecting picture that can possibly be imagined.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 435.

“The truth of being, and the truth of knowing are one; differing no more than the direct beam and the beam reflected.”—Ld. Bacon.

“Verbs denote states of being, considered as beginning, continuing, ending, being renewed, destroyed, and again repeated, so as to suit any occasion.”—William Ward’s Gram., p. 41.

“We take it for granted, that we have a competent knowledge and skill, and that we are able to acquit ourselves properly, in our own native tongue; a faculty, solely acquired by use, conducted by habit, and tried by the ear, carries us on without reflection.”—Lowth's Gram., p. vi.

“I mean the teacher himself; who, stunned with the hum, and suffocated with the closeness of his school-room, has spent the whole day in controlling petulance, exciting indifference to action, striving to enlighten stupidity, and labouring to soften obstinacy.”—Sir W. Scott.

“The inquisitive mind, beginning with criticism, the most agreeable of all amusements, and finding no obstruction in its progress, advances far into the sensitive part of our nature; and gains imperceptibly a thorough knowledge of the human heart, of its desires, and of every motive to action.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 42.

“They please, are pleased; they give to get esteem;
Till, seeming blest, they grow to what they seem.”—Goldsmith.

LESSON VII.—ADVERBS.

“How cheerfully, how freely, how regularly, how constantly, how unweariedly, how powerfully, how extensively, he communicateth his convincing, his enlightening, his heart-penetrating, warming, and melting; his soul-quickenings, healing, refreshing, directing, and fructifying influence!”—Brown's Metaphors, p. 96.

“The passage, I grant, requires to be well and naturally read, in order to be promptly comprehended; but surely there are very few passages worth comprehending, either of verse or prose, that can be promptly understood, when they are read unnaturally and ill.”—Thelwall's Lect.

“They waste life in what are called good resolutions—partial efforts at reformation, feebly commenced, heartlessly conducted, and hopelessly concluded.”—Maturin's Sermons, p. 262.

“A man may, in respect of grammatical purity, speak unexceptionably, and yet speak obscurely and ambiguously; and though we cannot say, that a man may speak properly, and at the same time speak unintelligibly, yet this last case falls more naturally to be considered as an offence against perspicuity, than as a violation of propriety.”—Jamieson's Rhet., p. 104.

“Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and justly and unblamably we behaved ourselves among you that believe.”—1 Thes., ii, 10.

“The question is not, whether they know what is said of Christ in the Scriptures; but whether they know it savingly, truly, livingly, powerfully.”—Penington's Works, iii, 28.

“How gladly would the man recall to life The boy's neglected sire! a mother too, That softer friend, perhaps more gladly still, Might he demand them at the gates of death!”—Cowper.

LESSON VIII.—CONJUNCTIONS.

“Every person’s safety requires that he should submit to be governed; for if one man may do harm without suffering punishment, every man has the same right, and no person can be safe.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 38.

“When it becomes a practice to collect debts by law, it is a proof of corruption and degeneracy among the people. Laws and courts are necessary, to settle controverted points between man and man; but a man should pay an acknowledged debt, not because there is a law to oblige him, but because it is just and honest, and because he has promised to pay it.”—Ib., p. 42.

“The liar, and only the liar, is invariably and universally despised, abandoned, and disowned. It is therefore natural to expect, that a crime thus generally detested, should be generally avoided.”—Hawkesworth.

“When a man swears to the truth of his tale, he tacitly acknowledges that his bare word does not deserve credit. A swearer will lie, and a liar is not to be believed even upon his oath; nor is he believed, when he happens to speak the truth.”—Red Book, p. 108.

“John Adams replied, ‘I know Great Britain has determined on her system, and that very determination determines me on mine. You know I have been constant and uniform in opposition to her measures. The die is now cast. I have passed the Rubicon. Sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish with my country, is my unalterable determination.’”—SEWARD’S Life of John Quincy Adams, p. 26.

“I returned, and saw under the sun that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happen to them all.”—Ecclesiastes, ix, 11.

“Little, alas! is all the good I can;
A man oppress’d, dependent, yet a man.”—Pope, Odys., B. xiv, p. 70.

LESSON IX.—PREPOSITIONS.

“He who legislates only for a party, is engraving his name on the adamantine pillar of his country’s history, to be gazed on forever as an object of universal detestation.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 401.

“The Greek language, in the hands of the orator, the poet, and the historian, must be allowed to bear away the palm from every other known in the world; but to that only, in my opinion, need our own yield the precedence.”—Barrow’s Essays, p. 91.

“For my part, I am convinced that the method of teaching which approaches most nearly to the method of investigation, is incomparably the best; since, not content with serving up a few barren and lifeless truths, it leads to the stock on which they grew.”—Burke, on Taste, p. 37. Better—“on which truths grow.”

“All that I have done in this difficult part of grammar, concerning the proper use of prepositions, has been to make a few general remarks upon the subject; and then to give a collection of instances, that have occurred to me, of the improper use of some of them.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 155.

“This is not an age of encouragement for works of elaborate research and real utility. The genius of the trade of literature is necessarily unfriendly to such productions.”—Thelwall’s Lect., p. 102.

“At length, at the end of a range of trees, I saw three figures seated on a bank of moss, with a silent brook creeping at their feet.”—Steele.

“Thou rather, with thy sharp and sulph’rous bolt, Splitst the unwedgeable and gnarled oak.”—Shakspeare.

LESSON X.—INTERJECTIONS.

“Hear the word of the Lord, O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David; thou, and thy servants, and thy people, that enter in by these gates: thus saith the Lord, Execute ye judgement and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor.”—Jeremiah, xxii, 2, 3.

“Therefore, thus saith the Lord concerning Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother! or, Ah sister! they shall not lament for him, saying, Ah lord! or, Ah his glory! He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.”—Jer., xxii, 18, 19.

“O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.”—Isaiah, liv, 11.

“O prince! O friend! lo! here thy Medon stands;
Ah! stop the hero’s unresisted hands.”—Pope, Odys., B. xxii, l. 417.

“When, lo! descending to our hero’s aid,
Jove’s daughter Pallas, war’s triumphant maid!”—Ib., B. xxii, l. 222.

“O friends! oh ever exercised in care!
Hear Heaven’s commands, and reverence what ye hear!”—Ib., B. xii, l. 324.

“Too daring prince! ah, whither dost thou run?
Ah, too forgetful of thy wife and you!”—Pope’s Iliad, B. vi, l. 510.

CHAPTER II.—ARTICLES.

In this chapter, and those which follow it, the Rules of Syntax are again exhibited, in the order of the parts of speech, with Examples, Exceptions, Observations, Notes, and False Syntax. The Notes are all of them, in form and character, subordinate rules of syntax, designed for the detection of errors. The correction of the False Syntax placed under the rules and notes, will form an oral exercise, similar to that of parsing, and perhaps more useful.*

---

* “I will not take upon me to say, whether we have any Grammar that sufficiently instructs us by rule and example; but I am sure we have none, that in the manner here attempted, teaches us what is right, by

RULE I.—ARTICLES.

Articles relate to the nouns which they limit:* as, “At a little distance from the ruins of the abbey, stands an aged elm.”

“See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatic a king.”—Pope’s Essay, Ep. ii, l. 268.

EXCEPTION FIRST.

The definite article used intensively, may relate to an adjective or adverb of the comparative or the superlative degree; as, “A land which was the mightiest.”—Byron. “The farther they proceeded, the greater appeared their alacrity.”—Dr. Johnson. “He chooses it the rather”—Couper. See Obs. 10th, below.

EXCEPTION SECOND.

The indefinite article is sometimes used to give a collective meaning to what seems a plural adjective of number; as, “Thou hast a few names even in Sardis.”—Rev., iii, 4. “There are a thousand things which crowd into my memory.”—Spectator, No. 468. “The centurion commanded a hundred men.”—Webster. See Etymology, Articles, Obs. 26.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE I.

OBS. 1.—The article is a kind of index, usually pointing to some noun; and it is a general, if not a universal, principle, that no one noun admits of more than one article. Hence, two or more articles in a sentence are signs of two or more nouns; and hence too, by a very convenient ellipsis, an article before an adjective is often made to relate to a noun understood; as, “The grave [people] rebuke the gay [people], and the gay [people] mock the grave” [people].—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 103. “The wise [persons] shall inherit glory.”—Prov., iii, 35. “The vile [person] will talk villainy.”—Coleridge’s Lay Sermons, p. 105: see Isaiah, xxxii, 6. “The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple” [ones].—Psal., xix, 7. “The Old [Testament] and the New Testament are alike authentic.”—“The animal [world] and the vegetable world are adapted to each other.”—“An epic [poem] and a dramatic poem are the same in substance.”—Ld. Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 274. “The neuter verb is conjugated like the active” [verb].—Murray’s Gram., p. 99. “Each section is showing what is wrong; though this perhaps may prove the more useful and effectual method of Instruction.”—Lowth’s Gram., Pref., p. viii.

---

* With the possessive case and its governing noun, we use but one article; and sometimes it seems questionable, to which of the two that article properly relates: as, “This is one of the Hebrews’ children.”—Exodus, ii, 6. The sentence is plainly equivalent to the following, which has two articles: “This is one of the children of the Hebrews.” Not because the one article is equivalent to the two, or because it relates to both of the nouns; but because the possessive relation itself makes one of the nouns sufficiently definite. Now, if we change the latter construction back into the former, it is the noun children that drops its article; it is therefore the other to which the remaining article relates. But we sometimes find examples in which the same analogy does not hold. Thus, “a summer’s day” means, “a day of summer,” and we should hardly pronounce it equivalent to “the day of a summer.” So the questionable phrase, “a three days’ journey,” means, “a journey of three days,” and, whether the construction be right or wrong, the article a cannot be said to relate to the plural noun. Possibly such a phrase as, “the three years’ war,” might mean, “the war of three years,” so that the article must relate to the latter noun. But in general it is the latter noun that is rendered definite by the possessive relation: thus the phrase, “man’s works” is equivalent to “the works of man,” not to “works of the man,” so, “the man’s works,” is equivalent, not to “the works of man,” but to “the works of the man.”

supposed to contain a heavy [portion] and a light portion; the heavy [portion] being the accented syllable, and the light [portion] the unaccented” [syllable].—Rush, on the Voice, p. 364.

OBS. 2.—Our language does not, like the French, require a repetition of the article before every noun in a series; because the same article may serve to limit the signification of several nouns, provided they all stand in the same construction. Hence the following sentence is bad English: “The understanding and language have a strict connexion.”—Murray’s Gram., i, p. 356. The sense of the former noun only was meant to be limited. The expression therefore should have been, “Language and the understanding have a strict connexion,” or, “The understanding has a strict connexion with language.” In some instances, one article seems to limit the sense of several nouns that are not all in the same construction, thus: “As it proves a greater or smaller obstruction to the speaker’s or writer’s aim.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 200. That is—“to the aim of the speaker or the writer.” It is, in fact, the possessive, that limits the other nouns; for, “a man’s foes” means, “the foes of a man;” and, “man’s wisdom,” means, “the wisdom of man.” The governing noun cannot have an article immediately before it. Yet the omission of articles, when it occurs, is not properly by ellipsis, as some grammarians declare it to be; for there never can be a proper ellipsis of an article, when there is not also an ellipsis of its noun. Ellipsis supposes the omitted words to be necessary to the construction, when they are not so to the sense; and this, it would seem, cannot be the case with a mere article. If such a sign be in any wise necessary, it ought to be used; and if not needed in any respect, it cannot be said to be understood. The definite article being generally required before adjectives that are used by ellipsis as nouns, we in this case repeat it before every term in a series; as, “They are singled out from among their fellows, as the kind, the amiable, the sweet-tempered, the upright.”—Dr. Chalmers.

“The great, the gay, shall they partake
The heav’n that thou alone canst make?”—Cowper.

OBS. 3.—The article precedes its noun, and is never, by itself, placed after it; as, “Passion is the drunkenness of the mind.”—Southey. When an adjective likewise precedes the noun, the article is usually placed before the adjective, that its power of limitation may extend over that also; as, “A concise writer compresses his thoughts into the fewest possible words.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 176.

“The private path, the secret acts of men,
If noble, far the noblest of their lives.”—Young.

OBS. 4.—The relative position of the article and the adjective is seldom a matter of indifference. Thus, it is good English to say, “both the men,” or, “the two men,” but we can by no means say, “the both men” or, “two the men.” Again, the two phrases, “half a dollar,” and “a half dollar,” though both good, are by no means equivalent. Of the pronominal adjectives, some exclude the article; some precede it; and some follow it, like other adjectives. The word same is seldom, if ever used without the definite article or some stronger definitive before it; as, “On the same day,”—“in that same hour,”—“These same gentlemen.” After the adjective both, the definite article may be used, but it is generally unnecessary, and this is a sufficient reason for omitting it: as, “The following sentences will fully exemplify, to the young grammarian, both the parts of this rule.”—Murray’s Gram., i, p. 192. Say, “both parts.” The adjective few may be used either with or without an article, but not with the same import: as, “The few who were present, were in the secret;” i. e., All then present knew the thing. “Few that were present, were in the secret;” i.e., Not many then present knew the thing. “When I say, ‘There were few men with him,’ I speak diminutively, and mean to represent them as inconsiderable; whereas, when I say, ‘There were a few men with him,’ I evidently intend to make the most of them.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 171. See Etymology, Articles, Obs. 28.

OBS. 5.—The pronominal adjectives which exclude the article, are any, each, either, every, much, neither, no, or none, some, this, that, these, those. The pronominal adjectives which precede the article, are all, both, many, such, and what; as, “All the world,”—“Both the judges,”—“Many a * mile,”—“Such a chasm,”—“What a freak.” In like manner, any adjective of quality, when its meaning is limited by the adverb too, so, as, or how, is put before the article; as, “Too great a study of strength, is found to betray writers into a harsh manner.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 179. “Like many an other poor wretch, I now suffer all the ill consequences of so foolish an indulgence.” “Such a gift is too small a reward for so great a labour.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. 95. “Here flows as clear a stream as any in Greece. How beautiful a prospect is here!”—Bicknell’s Gram., Part ii, p. 52. The pronominal adjectives which follow the article, are few, former, first, latter, last, little, one, other, and same; as, “An author might lean either to the one [style] or to the other, and yet be beautiful.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 179. Many, like few, sometimes follows the article; as, “The many favours which we have received.”—“In conversation, for many a man, they say, a many men.”—Johnson’s Dict. In this order of the words, a seems awkward and needless; as, “Told of a many thousand warlike French.”—Shak.

OBS. 6.—When the adjective is preceded by any other adverb than too, so, as, or how, the article is almost always placed before the adverb: as, “One of the most complete models;”—“An equally important question;”—“An exceedingly rough passage;”—“A very important difference.” The adverb quite, however, may be placed either before or after the article, though perhaps with a difference of construction: as, “This is quite a different thing;”—or, “This is a quite different thing.” “Finding it quite an other thing;”—or, “Finding it a quite other thing.”—Locke, on Ed., p. 153. Sometimes two adverbs intervene between the article and the adjective; as, “We had a rather more explicit account of the Novii.”—Philol. Museum, i, 458. But when an other adverb follows too, so, as, or how, the three words should be placed either before the article or after the noun; as, “Who stands there in so purely poetical a light.”—Ib., i, 449. Better, perhaps: “In a light so purely poetical.”

OBS. 7.—The definitives this, that, and some others, though they supersede the article an or a, may be followed by the adjective one; for we say, “this one thing,” but not, “this a thing.” Yet, in the following sentence, this and a being separated by other words, appear to relate to the same noun: “For who is able to judge this thy so great a people?”—1 Kings, iii, 9. But we may suppose the noun people to be understood after this. Again, the following example, if it is not wrong, has an ellipsis of the word use after the first a:

“For highest cordials all their virtue lose,
By a too frequent and too bold a use.”—Pomfret.

* Horne Tooke says, “The use of A after the word MANY is a corruption for of; and has no connection whatever with the article A, i. e. one.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii, p. 324. With this conjecture of the learned etymologist, I do not concur: it is hardly worth while to state here, what may be urged pro and con.

OBS. 8.—When the adjective is placed after the noun, the article generally retains its place before the noun, and is not repeated before the adjective: as, “A man ignorant of astronomy;”—“The primrose pale.” In Greek, when an adjective is placed after its noun, if the article is applied to the noun, it is repeated before the adjective; as, “Ἡ πόλις ἡ μεγάλη,”—“The city the great;” i.e., “The great city.” *

OBS. 9.—Articles, according to their own definition and nature, come before their nouns; but the definite article and an adjective seem sometimes to be placed after the noun to which they both relate: as, “Section the Fourth,”—“Henry the Eighth.” Such examples, however, may possibly be supposed elliptical; as, “Section, the fourth division of the chapter;”—“Henry, the eighth king of that name:” and, if they are so, the article, in English, can never be placed after its noun, nor can two articles ever properly relate to one noun, in any particular construction of it. Priestley observes, “Some writers affect to transpose these words, and place the numeral adjective first; [as,] ‘The first Henry.’ Hume’s History, Vol. i, p. 497. This construction is common with this writer, but there seems to be a want of dignity in it.”—Rudiments of E. Gram., p. 150. Dr. Webster cites the word Great, in “Alexander the Great” as a name, or part of a name; that is, he gives it as an instance of “cognomination.” See his American Dict., 8vo. And if this is right, the article may be said to relate to the epithet only, as it appears to do. For, if the word is taken substantively, there is certainly no ellipsis; neither is there any transposition in putting it last, but rather, as Priestley suggests, in putting it first.

OBS. 10.—The definite article is often prefixed to comparatives and superlatives; and its effect is, as Murray observes, (in the words of Lowth,) “to mark the degree the more strongly, and to define it the more precisely: as, ‘The more I examine it, the better I like it.’ ‘I like this the least of any.’”—Murray’s Gram., p. 33; Lowth’s, 14. “For neither if we eat, are we the better; neither if we eat not, are we the worse.”—1 Cor., viii, 8. “One is not the more agreeable to me for loving beef, as I do; nor the less agreeable for preferring mutton.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. ii, p. 365. “They are not the men in the nation, the most difficult to be replaced.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 148. In these instances, the article seems to be used adverbially, and to relate only to the adjective or adverb following it. (See observation fourth, on the Etymology of Adverbs.) Yet none of our grammarians have actually reckoned the an adverb. After the adjective, the noun might perhaps be supplied; but when the word the is added to an adverb, we must either call it an adverb, or make an exception to Rule 1st above: and if an exception is to be made, the brief form which I have given, cannot well be improved. For even if a noun be understood, it may not appear that the article relates to it, rather than to the degree of the quality. Thus: “The deeper the well, the clearer the water.” This Dr. Ash supposes to mean, “The deeper well the well is, the clearer water the water is.”—Ash’s Gram., p. 107. But does the text specify a particular “deeper well” or “clearer water?” I think not. To what then does the refer, but to the proportionate degree of deeper and clearer?

OBS. 11.—The article the is sometimes elegantly used, after an idiom common in the French language, in lieu of a possessive pronoun; as, “He looked him full in the face; i. e.

---

* “Nothing can be more certain than that [in Greek syntax] all words used for the purpose of definition, either stand between the article and the noun, or have their own article prefixed. Yet it may sometimes happen that an apposition [with an article] is parenthetically inserted instead of being affixed.”—J. W. DONALDSON: Journal of Philology, No. 2, p. 223.

in his face.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 150. “Men who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.”—Rom., xi, 4. That is, their knees.

OBS. 12.—The article an or a, because it implies unity, is applicable to nouns of the singular number only; yet a collective noun, being singular in form, is sometimes preceded by this article even when it conveys the idea of plurality and takes a plural verb: as, “There are a very great number [of adverbs] ending in ly.”—Buchanan’s Syntax, p. 63. “A plurality of them are sometimes felt at the same instant.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 114. In support of this construction, it would be easy to adduce a great multitude of examples from the most reputable writers; but still, as it seems not very consistent, to take any word plurally after restricting it to the singular, we ought rather to avoid this if we can, and prefer words that literally agree in number: as, “Of adverbs there are very many ending in ly”—“More than one of them are sometimes felt at the same instant.” The word plurality, like other collective nouns, is literally singular: as, “To produce the latter, a plurality of objects is necessary.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 224.

OBS. 13.—Respecting the form of the indefinite article, present practice differs a little from that of our ancient writers. An was formerly used before all words beginning with h, and before several other words which are now pronounced in such a manner as to require a: thus, we read in the Bible, “An help,”—“an house,”—“an hundred,”—“an one,”—“an ewer,”—“an usurer;” whereas we now say, “A help,”—“a house,”—“a hundred,”—“a one,”—“a ewer,”—“a usurer.”

OBS. 14.—Before the word humble, with its compounds and derivatives, some use an, and others, a; according to their practice, in this instance, of sounding or suppressing the aspiration. Webster and Jameson sound the h, and consequently prefer a; as, “But a humbling image is not always necessary to produce that effect.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 205. “O what a blessing is a humble mind!”—Christian Experience, p. 342. But Sheridan, Walker, Perry, Jones, and perhaps a majority of fashionable speakers, leave the h silent, and would consequently say, “An humbling image,”—“an humble mind,”—&c.

OBS. 15.—An observance of the principles on which the article is to be repeated or not repeated in a sentence, is of very great moment in respect to accuracy of composition. These principles are briefly stated in the notes below, but it is proper that the learner should know the reasons of the distinctions which are there made. By a repetition of the article before several adjectives in the same construction, a repetition of the noun is implied; but without a repetition of the article, the adjectives, in all fairness of interpretation, are confined to one and the same noun: as, “No figures will render a cold or an empty composition interesting.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 134. Here the author speaks of a cold composition and an empty composition as different things. “The metaphorical and the literal meaning are improperly mixed.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 339. Here the verb are has two nominatives, one of which is expressed, and the other understood. “But the third and the last of these [forms] are seldom used.”—Adam’s Lat. Gram., p. 186. Here the verb “are used” has two nominatives, both of which are understood; namely, “the third form,” and “the last form.” Again: “The original and present signification is always retained.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of Lang., Vol. ii, p. 149. Here one signification is characterized as being both original and present. “A loose and verbose manner never fails to create disgust.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 261. That is, one manner, loose and verbose. “To give a short and yet clear and plain answer to this proposition.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. i, p. 533. That is, one answer, short, clear, and plain; for the conjunctions in the text connect nothing but the adjectives.

OBS. 16.—To avoid repetition, even of the little word the, we sometimes, with one article, join inconsistent qualities to a plural noun;—that is, when the adjectives so differ as to individualize the things, we sometimes make the noun plural, in stead of repeating the article: as, “The north and south poles,” in stead of, “The north and the south pole.”—“The indicative and potential moods,” in stead of “The indicative and the potential mood.”—“The Old and New Testaments,” in stead of, “The Old and the New Testament.” But, in any such case, to repeat the article when the noun is made plural, is a huge blunder; because it implies a repetition of the plural noun. And again, not to repeat the article when the noun is singular, is also wrong; because it forces the adjectives to coalesce in describing one and the same thing. Thus, to say, “The north and south pole” is certainly wrong, unless we mean by it, one pole, or slender stick of wood, pointing north and south; and again, to say, “The north and the south poles,” is also wrong, unless we mean by it, several poles at the north and others at the south. So the phrase, “The Old and New Testament” is wrong, because we have not one Testament that is both Old and New; and again, “The Old and the New Testaments,” is wrong, because we have not several Old Testaments and several New ones: at least we have them not in the Bible.

OBS. 17.—Sometimes a noun that admits no article, is preceded by adjectives that do not describe the same thing; as, “Never to jumble metaphorical and plain language together.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 146. This means, “metaphorical language and plain language,” and, for the sake of perfect clearness, it would perhaps be better to express it so. “For as intrinsic and relative beauty must often be blended in the same building, it becomes a difficult task to attain both in any perfection.”—Karnes, El. of Crit., Vol. ii, p. 330. That is, “intrinsic beauty and relative beauty” must often be blended; and this phraseology would be better. “In correspondence to that distinction of male and female sex.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 74. This may be expressed as well or better, in half a dozen other ways; for the article may be added, or the noun may be made plural, with or without the article, and before or after the adjectives. “They make no distinction between causes of civil and criminal jurisdiction.”—Adams’s Rhet., Vol. i, p. 302. This means—“between causes of civil and causes of criminal jurisdiction;” and, for the sake of perspicuity, it ought to have been so written,—or, still better, thus: “They make no distinction between civil causes and criminal.”

NOTES TO RULE I.

NOTE I.—When the indefinite article is required, a should always be used before the sound of a consonant, and an, before that of a vowel; as, “With the talents of an angel, a man may be a fool.”—Young.

NOTE II.—The article an or a must never be so used as to relate, or even seem to relate, to a plural noun. The following sentence is therefore faulty: “I invited her to spend a day in viewing a seat and gardens.”—Rambler, No. 34. Say, “a seat and its gardens.”

NOTE III.—When nouns are joined in construction, with different adjuncts, different dependence, or positive contrast, the article, if it belong at all to the latter, must be repeated. The following sentence is therefore inaccurate: “She never considered the quality, but merit of her visitors.”—Wm. Penn. Say, “the merit.” So the article in brackets is absolutely necessary to the sense and propriety of the following phrase, though not inserted by the learned author: “The Latin introduced between the Conquest and [the] reign of Henry the Eighth.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, p. 42.

NOTE IV.—When adjectives are connected, and the qualities belong to things individually different, though of the same name, the article should be repeated: as, “A black and a white horse;”—i. e., two horses, one black and the other white. “The north and the south line;”—i. e., two lines, running east and west.

NOTE V.—When adjectives are connected, and the qualities all belong to the same thing or things, the article should not be repeated: as, “A black and white horse;”—i. e., one horse, piebald. “The north and south line;”—i. e., one line, running north and south, like a meridian.

NOTE VI.—When two or more individual things of the same name are distinguished by adjectives that cannot unite to describe the same thing, the article must be added to each if the noun be singular, and to the first only if the noun follow them in the plural: as, “The nominative and the objective case,” or, “The nominative and objective cases.”—“The third, the fifth, the seventh, and the eighth chapter,” or, “The third, fifth, seventh, and eighth chapters.” *

NOTE VII.—When two phrases of the same sentence have any special correspondence with each other, the article, if used in the former, is in general required also in the latter: as, “For ye know neither the day nor the hour.”—Matt., xxv, 13. “Neither the cold nor the fervid are formed for friendship.”—Murray’s Key, p. 209. “The vail of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom.”—Matt., xxvii, 51.

NOTE VIII.—When a special correspondence is formed between individual epithets, the noun which follows must not be made plural; because the article, in such a case, cannot be repeated as the construction of correspondents requires. Thus, it is improper to say, “Both the first and second editions” or, “Both the first and the second editions” for the accurate phrase, “Both the first and the second edition,” and still worse to say, “Neither the Old nor New Testaments” or, “Neither the Old nor the New Testaments” for the just * Churchill rashly condemns this construction, and still more rashly proposes to make the noun singular without repeating the article. See his New Gram., p. 311. But he sometimes happily forgets his own doctrine; as, “In fact, the second and fourth lines here stamp the character of the measure.”—Ib., p. 391. O. B. Peirce says, “Joram’s second and third daughters,” must mean, if it means any thing, his second daughters and third daughters; and, ‘the first and second verses,’ if it means any thing, must represent the first verses and the second verses.”—Peirce’s English Gram., p. 263. According to my notion, this interpretation is as false and hypercritical, as is the rule by which the author professes to show what is right. He might have been better employed in explaining some of his own phraseology, such as, “the indefinite-past and present of the declarative mode.”—Ib., p. 100. The critic who writes such stuff as this, may well be a misinterpreter of good common English. It is plain, that the two examples which he thus distorts, are neither obscure nor inelegant. But, in an alternative of single things, the article must be repeated, and a plural noun is improper; as, “But they do not receive the Nicene or the Athanasian creeds.”—Adam’s Religious World, Vol. ii, p. 105. Say, “creed.” So in an enumeration; as, “There are three participles: the present, the perfect, and the compound perfect participles”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 42. Expunge this last word, “participles.” Sometimes a sentence is wrong, not as being in itself a solecism, but as being unadapted to the author’s thought. Example: “Other tendencies will be noticed in the Etymological and Syntactical part.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., N. Y., 1850, p. 75. This implies, what appears not to be true, that the author meant to treat Etymology and Syntax together in a single part of his work. Had he put an s to the noun “part,” he might have been understood in either of two other ways, but not in this. To make sure of his meaning, therefore, he should have said—“in the Etymological Part and the Syntactical.”

---

expression, “Neither the Old nor the New Testament.” Yet we may say, “Neither the old nor the new statutes” or, “Both the early and the late editions,” for here the epithets severally apply to more than one thing.

NOTE IX.—In a series of three or more terms, if the article is used with any, it should in general be added either to every one, or else to the first only. The following phrase is therefore inaccurate: “Through their attention to the helm, the sails, or rigging.”—Brown’s Estimate, Vol. i, p. 11. Say, “the rigging.”

NOTE X.—As the article an or a denotes “one thing of a kind,” it should not be used as we use the, to denote emphatically a whole kind; and again, when the species is said to be of the genus, no article should be used to limit the latter. Thus some will say, “A jay is a sort of a bird,” whereas they ought to say, “The jay is a sort of bird.” Because it is absurd to suggest, that one jay is a sort of one bird. Yet we may say, “The jay is a bird,” or, “A jay is a bird,” because, as every species is one under the genus, so every individual is one under both.

NOTE XI.—The article should not be used before the names of virtues, vices, passions, arts, or sciences, in their general sense; before terms that are strictly limited by other definitives; or before any noun whose signification is sufficiently definite without it: as, “Falsehood is odious.”—“Iron is useful.”—“Beauty is vain.”—“Admiration is useless, when it is not supported by domestic worth”—Webster’s Essays, p. 30.

NOTE XII.—When titles are mentioned merely as titles; or names of things, merely as names or words; the article should not be used before them: as, “He is styled Marquis,” not, “the Marquis,” or, “a Marquis,”—“Ought a teacher to call his pupil Master?”—“Thames is derived from the Latin name Tamēsis.”

NOTE XIII.—When a comparison or an alternative is made with two nouns, if both of them refer to the same subject, the article should not be inserted before the latter; if to different subjects, it should not be omitted: thus, if we say, “He is a better teacher than poet,” we compare different qualifications of the same man; but if we say, “He is a better teacher than a poet,” we speak of different men, in regard to the same qualification.

NOTE XIV.—The definite article, or some other definitive, (as this, that, these, those,) is generally required before the antecedent to the pronoun who or which in a restrictive clause; as, “All the men who were present, agreed to it.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 145. “The thoughts which passion suggests are always plain and obvious ones.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 468. “The things which are impossible with men, are possible with God.”—Luke, xviii, 27. See Etymology, Chap. V, Obs. 26th, &c., on Classes of Pronouns.

NOTE XV.—The article is generally required in that construction which converts a participle into a verbal or participial noun; as, “The completing of this, by the working-out of sin inherent, must be by the power and spirit of Christ in the heart.”—Wm. Penn. “They shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.”—Isaiah, lxvi, 24. “For the dedicating of the altar.”—Numb., vii, 11.

NOTE XVI.—The article should not be added to any participle that is not taken in all other respects as a noun; as, “For the dedicating the altar.”—“He made a mistake in the giving out the text.” Expunge the, and let dedicating and giving here stand as participles only; for in the construction of nouns, they must have not only a definitive before them, but the preposition of after them.

NOTE XVII.—The false syntax of articles properly includes every passage in which there is any faulty insertion, omission, choice, or position, of this part of speech. For example: “When the verb is a passive, the agent and object change places.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 73. Better: “When the verb is passive, the agent and the object change places.” “Comparisons used by the sacred poets, are generally short.”—Russell’s Gram., p. 87. Better: “The comparisons,” &c. “Pronoun means for noun, and is used to avoid the too frequent repetition of the noun.”—Infant School Gram., p. 89. Say rather: “The pronoun is put for a noun, and is used to prevent too frequent a repetition of the noun.” Or: “The word PRONOUN means for noun; and a pronoun is used to prevent too frequent a repetition of some noun.”

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE I.

☞ [The examples of False Syntax placed under the rules and notes, are to be corrected orally by the pupil, according to the formulæ given, or according to others framed in like manner, and adapted to the several notes.]

EXAMPLES UNDER NOTE I.—AN OR A.

“I have seen an horrible thing in the house of Israel.”—Hosea, vi, 10.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the article an is used before horrible, which begins with the sound of the consonant h. But, according to Note 1st, under Rule 1st, “When the indefinite article is required, a should always be used before the sound of a consonant, and an, before that of a vowel.” Therefore, an should be a; thus, “I have seen a horrible thing in the house of Israel.”]

“There is an harshness in the following sentences.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 188. “Indeed, such an one is not to be looked for.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 27. “If each of you will be disposed to approve himself an useful citizen.”—Ib., p. 263. “Land with them had acquired almost an European value.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 325. “He endeavoured to find out an wholesome remedy.”—Neef’s Method of Ed., p. 3. “At no time have we attended an Yearly Meeting more to our own satisfaction.”—The Friend, v, 224. “Addison was not an humourist in character.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 303. “Ah me! what an one was he?”—Lily’s Gram., p. 49. “He was such an one as I never saw.”—Ib. “No man can be a good preacher, who is not an useful one.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 283. “An usage which is too frequent with Mr. Addison.”—Ib., p. 200. “Nobody joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of an horse.”—Locke’s Essay, p. 298. “An universality seems to be aimed at by the omission of the article.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 154. “Architecture is an useful as well as a fine art.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 335. “Because the same individual conjunctions do not preserve an uniform signification.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 78. “Such a work required the patience and assiduity of an hermit.”—Johnson’s Life of Morin. “Resentment is an union of sorrow with malignity.”—Rambler, No. 185. “His bravery, we know, was an high courage of blasphemy.”—Pope. “Hyssop; a herb of bitter taste.”—Pike’s Heb. Lex., p. 3.

“On each enervate string they taught the note
To pant, or tremble through an Eunuch’s throat.”—Pope.

UNDER NOTE II.—AN OR A WITH PLURALS.

“At a sessions of the court in March, it was moved,” &c.—Hutchinson’s Hist. of Mass., i, 61. “I shall relate my conversations, of which I kept a memoranda.”—Duchess D’Abrantes, p. 26. “I took another dictionary, and with a scissors cut out, for instance, the word ABACUS.”—A. B. Johnson’s Plan of a Dict., p. 12. “A person very meet seemed he for the purpose, of a forty-five years old.”—Gardiner’s Music of Nature, p. 338. “And it came to pass about an eight days after these sayings.”—Luke, ix, 28. “There were slain of them upon a three thousand men.”—1 Mac., iv, 15. “Until I had gained the top of these white mountains, which seemed another Alps of snow.”—Addison, Tat., No. 161. “To make them a satisfactory amends for all the losses they had sustained.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, p. 187. “As a first fruits of many more that shall be gathered.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 506. “It makes indeed a little amends, by inciting us to oblige people.”—Sheffield’s Works, ii, 229. “A large and lightsome backstairs leads up to an entry above.”—Ib., p. 260. “Peace of mind is an honourable amends for the sacrifices of interest.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 162; Smith’s, 138. “With such a spirit and sentiments were hostilities carried on.”—Robertson’s America, i, 166. “In the midst of a thick woods, he had long lived a voluntary recluse.”—G. B. “The flats look almost like a young woods.”—Morning Chronicle. “As we went on, the country for a little ways improved, but scantily.”—Essex County Freeman, Vol. ii, No. 11. “Whereby the Jews were permitted to return into their own country, after a seventy years captivity at Babylon.”—Rollin’s An. Hist., Vol. ii, p. 20. “He did riot go a great ways into the country.”—Gilbert’s Gram., p. 85.

“A large amends by fortune’s hand is made,
And the lost Punic blood is well repay’d.”—Rowe’s Lucan, iv, 1241.

UNDER NOTE III.—NOUNS CONNECTED.

“As where a landscape is conjoined with the music of birds and odour of flowers.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 117. “The last order resembles the second in the mildness of its accent, and softness of its pause.”—Ib., ii, 113. “Before the use of the loadstone or knowledge of the compass.”—Dryden. “The perfect participle and imperfect tense ought not to be confounded.”—Murray’s Gram., ii, 292. “In proportion as the taste of a poet, or orator, becomes more refined.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 27. “A situation can never be intricate, as long as there is an angel, devil, or musician, to lend a helping hand.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 285. “Avoid rude sports: an eye is soon lost, or bone broken.”—“Not a word was uttered, nor sign given.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 125. “I despise not the doer, but deed.”—Ibid. “For the sake of an easier pronunciation and more agreeable sound.”—Lowth. “The levity as well as loquacity of the Greeks made them incapable of keeping up the true standard of history.”—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 115.

UNDER NOTE IV.—ADJECTIVES CONNECTED.

“It is proper that the vowels be a long and short one.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 327. “Whether the person mentioned was seen by the speaker a long or short time before.”—Ib., p. 70; Fisk’s, 72. “There are three genders, Masculine, Feminine, and Neuter.”—Adam’s Lat. Gram., p. 8. “The numbers are two; Singular and Plural.”—Ib., p. 80; Gould’s, 77. “The persons are three; First, Second, [and] Third.”—Adam, et al. “Nouns and pronouns have three cases; the nominative, possessive, and objective.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 19; Ingersoll’s, 21. “Verbs have five moods; namely, the Indicative, Potential, Subjunctive, Imperative, and Infinitive.”—Bullions’s E. Gram., p. 35; Lennie’s, 20. “How many numbers have pronouns? Two, the singular and plural.”—Bradley’s Gram., p. 82. “To distinguish between an interrogative and exclamatory sentence.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 280; Comly’s, 163; Ingersoll’s, 292. “The first and last of which are compounded members.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 123. “In the last lecture, I treated of the concise and diffuse, the nervous and feeble manner.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 183. “The passive and neuter verbs, I shall reserve for some future conversation.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 69. “There are two voices; the Active and Passive.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 59; Gould’s, 87. “Whose is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which.”—Dr. Johnson’s Gram., p. 7. “To feel the force of a compound, or derivative word.”—Town’s Analysis, p. 4. “To preserve the distinctive uses of the copulative and disjunctive conjunctions.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 150; Ingersoll’s, 233. “E has a long and short sound in most languages.”—Bicknell’s Gram., Part ii, p. 13. “When the figurative and literal sense are mixed and jumbled together.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 151. “The Hebrew, with which the Canaanitish and Phœnician stand in connection.”—CONANT: Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, p. 28. “The languages of Scandinavia proper, the Norwegian and Swedish.”—Fowler, ib., p. 31.

UNDER NOTE V.—ADJECTIVES CONNECTED.

“The path of truth is a plain and a safe path”—Murray’s Key, p. 236. “Directions for acquiring a just and a happy elocution.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 144. “Its leading object is to adopt a correct and an easy method.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 9. “How can it choose but wither in a long and a sharp winter.”—Cowley’s Pref., p. vi. “Into a dark and a distant unknown.”—Chalmers, on Astronomy, p. 230. “When the bold and the strong enslaved his fellow man.”—Chazotte’s Essay, p. 21. “We now proceed to consider the things most essential to an accurate and a perfect sentence.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 306. “And hence arises a second and a very considerable source of the improvement of taste.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 18. “Novelty produces in the mind a vivid and an agreeable emotion.”—Ib., p. 50. “The deepest and the bitterest feeling still is, the separation.”—Dr. M’Rie. “A great and a good man looks beyond time.”—Brown’s Institutes, p. 125. “They made but a weak and an ineffectual resistance.”—Ib. “The light and the worthless kernels will float.”—Ib. “I rejoice that there is an other and a better world.”—Ib. “For he is determined to revise his work, and present to the publick another and a better edition.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 7. “He hoped that this title would secure him an ample and an independent authority.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 172: see Priestley’s, 147. “There is however another and a more limited sense.”—Adams’s Rhet., Vol. ii, p. 232.

UNDER NOTE VI.—ARTICLES OR PLURALS.

“This distinction forms, what are called the diffuse and the concise styles.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 176. “Two different modes of speaking, distinguished at first by the denominations of the Attic and the Asiatic manners.”—Adams’s Rhet., Vol. i, p. 83. “But the great design of uniting the Spanish and the French monarchies under the former was laid.”—Bolingbroke, on History, p. 180. “In the solemn and the poetic styles, it [do or did] is often rejected.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 68. “They cannot be at the same time in the objective and the nominative cases.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 151; Ingersoll’s, 239; R. G. Smith’s, 127. “They are named the POSITIVE, the COMPARATIVE, and the SUPERLATIVE degrees.”—Smart’s Accidence, p. 27. “Certain Adverbs are capable of taking an Inflection, namely, that of the comparative and the superlative degrees.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, §321. “In the subjunctive mood, the present and the imperfect tenses often carry with them a future sense.”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 187; Fisk’s, 131. “The imperfect, the perfect, the pluperfect, and the first future tenses of this mood, are conjugated like the same tenses of the indicative.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 145. “What rules apply in parsing personal pronouns of the second and third person?"—Ib., p. 116. "Nouns are sometimes in the nominative or objective case after the neuter verb to be, or after an active-intransitive or passive verb."—Ib., p. 55. "The verb varies its endings in the singular in order to agree in form with the first, second, and third person of its nominative."—Ib., p. 47. "They are identical in effect, with the radical and the vanishing stresses."—Rush, on the Voice, p. 339. "In a sonnet the first, fourth, fifth, and eighth line rhyme to each other: so do the second, third, sixth, and seventh line; the ninth, eleventh, and thirteenth line; and the tenth, twelfth, and fourteenth line."—Churchill's Gram., p. 311. "The iron and the golden ages are run; youth and manhood are departed."—Wright's Athens, p. 74. "If, as you say, the iron and the golden ages are past, the youth and the manhood of the world."—Ib. "An Exposition of the Old and New Testament."—Matthew Henry's Title-page. "The names and order of the books of the Old and New Testament."—Friends' Bible, p. 2; Bruce's, p. 2; et al. "In the second and third person of that tense."—L. Murray's Gram., p. 81. "And who still unites in himself the human and the divine natures."—Gurney's Evidences, p. 59. "Among whom arose the Italian, the Spanish, the French, and the English languages."—L. Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 111. "Whence arise these two, the singular and the plural Numbers."—Burn's Gram., p. 32.

UNDER NOTE VII.—CORRESPONDENT TERMS.

"Neither the definitions, nor examples, are entirely the same with his."—Ward's Pref. to Lily's Gram., p. vi. "Because it makes a discordance between the thought and expression."—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 24. "Between the adjective and following substantive."—Ib. ii, 104. "Thus, Athens became both the repository and nursery of learning."—Chazotte's Essay, p. 28. "But the French pilfered from both the Greek and Latin."—Ib., p. 102. "He shows that Christ is both the power and wisdom of God."—The Friend, x, 414. "That he might be Lord both of the dead and living."—Rom., xiv, 9. "This is neither the obvious nor grammatical meaning of his words."—Blair's Rhet., p. 209. "Sometimes both the accusative and infinitive are understood."—Adam's Gram., p. 155; Gould's, 158. "In some cases we can use either the nominative or accusative promiscuously."—Adam, p. 156; Gould, 159. "Both the former and latter substantive are sometimes to be understood."—Adam, p. 157; Gould, 160. "Many whereof have escaped both the commentator and poet himself."—Pope. "The verbs must and ought have both a present and past signification."—Murray's Gram., p. 108. "How shall we distinguish between the friends and enemies of the government?"—Webster's Essays, p. 352. "Both the ecclesiastical and secular powers concurred in those measures."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 260. "As the period has a beginning and end within itself it implies an inflexion."—Adams's Rhet., ii, 245. "Such as ought to subsist between a principal and accessory."—Kames, on Crit., ii, 39.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—CORRESPONDENCE PECULIAR.

"When both the upward and the downward slides occur in pronouncing a syllable, they are called a Circumflex or Wave."—Kirkham's Elocution, pp. 75 and 104. "The word that is used both in the nominative and objective cases."—Sanborn's Gram., p. 69. "But all the other moods and tenses of the verbs, both in the active and passive voices, are conjugated at large."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 81. "Some writers on Grammar object to the propriety of admitting the second future, in both the indicative and subjunctive moods."—Ib., p. 82. "The same conjunction governing both the indicative and the subjunctive moods, in the same sentence, and in the same circumstances, seems to be a great impropriety."—Ib., p. 207. "The true distinction between the subjunctive and the indicative moods in this tense.”—Ib., p. 208. “I doubt of his capacity to teach either the French or English languages.”—Chazotte’s Essay, p. 7. “It is as necessary to make a distinction between the active transitive and the active intransitive forms of the verb, as between the active and passive forms.”—Nixon’s Parser, p. 13.

UNDER NOTE IX.—A SERIES OF TERMS.

“As comprehending the terms uttered by the artist, the mechanic, and husbandman.”—Chazotte’s Essay, p. 24. “They may be divided into four classes—the Humanists, Philanthropists, Pestalozzian and the Productive Schools.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. iii. “Verbs have six tenses, the Present, the Imperfect, the Perfect, the Pluperfect, and the First and Second Future tenses.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 138; L. Murray’s, 68; R. C. Smith’s, 27; Alger’s, 28. “Is is an irregular verb neuter, indicative mood, present tense, and the third person singular.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. ii, p. 2. “Should give is an irregular verb active, in the potential mood, the imperfect tense, and the first person plural.”—Ibid. “Us is a personal pronoun, first person plural, and in the objective case.”—Ibid. “Them is a personal pronoun, of the third person, the plural number, and in the objective case.”—Ibid. “It is surprising that the Jewish critics, with all their skill in dots, points, and accents, never had the ingenuity to invent a point of interrogation, of admiration, or a parenthesis.”—Wilson’s Hebrew Gram., p. 47. “The fifth, sixth, seventh, and the eighth verse.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 263. “Substitutes have three persons; the First, Second, and the Third.”—Ib., p. 34. “John’s is a proper noun, of the masculine gender, the third person, singular number, possessive case, and governed by wife, by Rule I.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 48. “Nouns in the English language have three cases; the nominative, the possessive, and objective.”—Barrett’s Gram., p. 13; Alexander’s, 11. “The Potential [mood] has four [tenses], viz. the Present, the Imperfect, the Perfect, and Pluperfect.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 96.

“Where Science, Law, and Liberty depend,
And own the patron, patriot, and the friend.”—Savage, to Walpole.

UNDER NOTE X.—SPECIES AND GENUS.

“A pronoun is a part of speech put for a noun.”—Paul’s Accidence, p. 11. “A verb is a part of speech declined with mood and tense.”—Ib., p. 15. “A participle is a part of speech derived of a verb.”—Ib., p. 38. “An adverb is a part of speech joined to verbs to declare their signification.”—Ib., p. 40. “A conjunction is a part of speech that joineth sentences together.”—Ib., p. 41. “A preposition is a part of speech most commonly set before other parts.”—Ib., p. 42. “An interjection is a part of speech which betokeneth a sudden motion or passion of the mind.”—Ib., p. 44. “An enigma or riddle is also a species of allegory.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 151; Murray’s Gram., 343. “We may take from the Scriptures a very fine example of an allegory.”—Ib.: Blair, 151; Mur., 341. “And thus have you exhibited a sort of a sketch of art.”—HARRIS: in Priestley’s Gram., p. 176. “We may ‘imagine a subtle kind of a reasoning,’ as Mr. Harris acutely observes.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 71. “But, before entering on these, I shall give one instance of a very beautiful metaphor, that I may show the figure to full advantage.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 143. “Aristotle, in his Poetics, uses metaphor in this extended sense, for any figurative meaning imposed upon a word; as a whole put for the part, or a part for a whole; the species for the genus, or a genus for the species.”—Ib., p. 142. “It shows what kind of an apple it is of which we are speaking.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 69. “Cleon was another sort of a man.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, Vol. i, p. 124. “To keep off his right wing, as a kind of a reserved body.”—Ib., ii, 12. “This part of speech is called a verb.”—Mack’s Gram., p. 70. “What sort of a thing is it?”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 20. “What sort of a charm do they possess?”—Bullions’s Principles of E. Gram., p. 73.

“Dear Welsted, mark, in dirty hole,
That painful animal, a Mole.”—Note to Dunciad, B. ii, l. 207.

UNDER NOTE XI.—ARTICLES NOT REQUISITE.

“Either thou or the boys were in the fault.”—Comly’s Key, in Gram., p. 174. “It may, at the first view, appear to be too general.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 222; Ingersoll’s, 275. “When the verb has a reference to future time.”—Ib.: M., p. 207; Ing., 264. “No; they are the language of imagination rather than of a passion.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 165. “The dislike of the English Grammar, which has so generally prevailed, can only be attributed to the intricacy of syntax.”—Russell’s Gram., p. iv. “Is that ornament in a good taste?”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 326. “There are not many fountains in a good taste.”—Ib., ii, 329. “And I persecuted this way unto the death.”—Acts, xxii, 4. “The sense of the feeling can, indeed, give us the idea of extension.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 196. “The distributive adjective pronouns, each, every, either, agree with the nouns, pronouns, and verbs, of the singular number only.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 165; Lowth’s, 89. “Expressing by one word, what might, by a circumlocution, be resolved into two or more words belonging to the other parts of speech.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 84. “By the certain muscles which operate all at the same time.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 19. “It is sufficient here to have observed thus much in the general concerning them.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 112. “Nothing disgusts us sooner than the empty pomp of language.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 319.

UNDER NOTE XII.—TITLES AND NAMES.

“He is entitled to the appellation of a gentleman.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 126. “Cromwell assumed the title of a Protector.”—Ib. “Her father is honoured with the title of an Earl.”—Ib. “The chief magistrate is styled a President.”—Ib. “The highest title in the state is that of the Governor.”—Ib. “That boy is known by the name of the Idler.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 205. “The one styled the Mufti, is the head of the ministers of law and religion.”—Balbi’s Geog., p. 360. “Banging all that possessed them under one class, he called that whole class a tree.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 73. “For the oak, the pine, and the ash, were names of whole classes of objects.”—Ib., p. 73. “It is of little importance whether we give to some particular mode of expression the name of a trope, or of a figure.”—Ib., p. 133. “The collision of a vowel with itself is the most ungracious of all combinations, and has been doomed to peculiar reprobation under the name of an hiatus.”—J. Q. Adams’s Rhet., Vol. ii, p. 217. “We hesitate to determine, whether the Tyrant alone, is the nominative, or whether the nominative includes the spy.”—Cobbett’s E. Gram., ¶ 246. “Hence originated the customary abbreviation of twelve months into a twelve-month; seven nights into se’night; fourteen nights into a fortnight.”—Webster’s Improved Gram., p. 105.

UNDER NOTE XIII.—COMPARISONS AND ALTERNATIVES.

“He is a better writer than a reader.”—W. Allen’s False Syntax, Gram., p. 332. “He was an abler mathematician than a linguist.”—Ib. “I should rather have an orange than apple.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 126. “He was no less able a negotiator, than a courageous warrior.”—Smollett’s Voltaire, Vol. i, p. 181. “In an epic poem we pardon many negligences that would not be permitted in a sonnet or epigram.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 186. “That figure is a sphere, or a globe, or a ball.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 258.

UNDER NOTE XIV.—ANTECEDENTS TO WHO OR WHICH.

“Carriages which were formerly in use, were very clumsy.”—Inst., p. 126. “The place is not mentioned by geographers who wrote at that time.”—Ib. “Questions which a person asks himself in contemplation, ought to be terminated by points of interrogation.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 279; Comly’s, 162; Ingersoll’s, 291. “The work is designed for the use of persons, who may think it merits a place in their Libraries.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo., p. iii. “That persons who think confusedly, should express themselves obscurely, is not to be wondered at.”—Ib., p. 298. “Grammarians who limit the number to two, or at most to three, do not reflect.”—Ib., p. 75. “Substantives which end in ian, are those that signify profession.”—Ib., p. 132. “To these may be added verbs, which chiefly among the poets govern the dative.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 170; Gould’s, 171. “Consonants are letters, which cannot be sounded without the aid of a vowel.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 9. “To employ the curiosity of persons who are skilled in grammar.”—Murray’s Gram., Pref., p. iii. “This rule refers only to nouns and pronouns, which have the same bearing or relation.”—Ib., i, p. 204. “So that things which are seen, were not made of things which do appear.”—Heb., xi, 3. “Man is an imitative creature; he may utter sounds, which he has heard.”—Wilson’s Essay on Gram., p. 21. “But men, whose business is wholly domestic, have little or no use for any language but their own.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 5.

UNDER NOTE XV.—PARTICIPIAL NOUNS.

“Great benefit may be reaped from reading of histories.”—Sewel’s Hist., p. iii. “And some attempts were made towards writing of history.”—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 110. “It is Invading of the Priest’s Office for any other to Offer it.”—Right of Tythes, p. 200. “And thus far of forming of verbs.”—Walker’s Art of Teaching, p. 35. “And without shedding of blood is no remission.”—Heb., ix, 22. “For making of measures we have the best method here in England.”—Printer’s Gram. “This is really both admitting and denying, at once.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 72. “And hence the origin of making of parliaments.”—Brown’s Estimate, Vol. i, p. 71. “Next thou objectest, that having of saving light and grace presupposes conversion. But that I deny: for, on the contrary, conversion presupposeth having light and grace.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. i, p. 143. “They cried down wearing of rings and other superfluities as we do.”—Ib., i, 236. “Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel.”—1 Peter, iii, 3. “In spelling of derivative Words, the Primitive must be kept whole.”—British Gram., p. 50; Buchanan’s Syntax, 9. “And the princes offered for dedicating of the altar.”—Numbers, vii, 10. “Boasting is not only telling of lies, but also many unseemly truths.”—Sheffield’s Works, ii, 244. “We freely confess that forbearing of prayer in the wicked is sinful.”—Barclay, i, 316. “For revealing of a secret, there is no remedy.”—Inst. E. Gram., p. 126. “He turned all his thoughts to composing of laws for the good of the state.”—Rollin’s Ancient Hist., Vol. ii, p. 38.

UNDER NOTE XVI.—PARTICIPLES, NOT NOUNS.

“It is salvation to be kept from falling into a pit, as truly as to be taken out of it after the falling in.”—Barclay, i, 210. “For in the receiving and embracing the testimony of truth, they felt eased.”—Ib., i, 469. “True regularity does not consist in the having but a single rule, and forcing every thing to conform to it.”—Philol. Museum, i, 664. “To the man of the world, this sound of glad tidings appears only an idle tale, and not worth the attending to.”—Life of Tho. Say, p. 144. “To be the deliverer of the captive Jews, by the ordering their temple to be re-built,” &c.—Rollin, ii, 124. “And for the preserving them from being defiled.”—N. E. Discipline, p. 133. “A wise man will avoid the showing any excellence in trifles.”—Art of Thinking, p. 80. “Hirsutus had no other reason for the valuing a book.”—Rambler, No. 177; Wright’s Gram., p. 190. “To the being heard with satisfaction, it is necessary that the speaker should deliver himself with ease.”—Sheridan’s Elocution, p. 114. “And to the being well heard, and clearly understood, a good and distinct articulation contributes more, than power of voice.”—Ib., p. 117.

“Potential means the having power or will;

As, If you would improve, you should be still.”—Tobitt’s Gram., p. 31.

UNDER NOTE XVII.—VARIOUS ERRORS.

“For the same reason, a neuter verb cannot become a passive.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 74. “The period is the whole sentence complete in itself.”—Ib., p. 115. “The colon or member is a chief constructive part, or greater division of a sentence.”—Ib. “The semicolon or half member, is a less constructive part or subdivision, of a sentence or member.”—Ib. “A sentence or member is again subdivided into commas or segments.”—Ib., p. 116. “The first error that I would mention, is, a too general attention to the dead languages, with a neglect of our own.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 3. “One third of the importations would supply the demands of people.”—Ib., p. 119. “And especially in grave stile.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 72. “By too eager pursuit, he ran a great risk of being disappointed.”—Murray’s Key, Octavo Gram., Vol. ii, p. 201. “Letters are divided into vowels and consonants.”—Murray’s Gram., i, p. 7; and others. “Consonants are divided into mutes and semi-vowels.”—Ib., i, 8; and others. “The first of these forms is most agreeable to the English idiom.”—Ib., i, 176. “If they gain, it is a too dear rate.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 504. “A pronoun is a word used instead of a noun, to prevent a too frequent repetition of it.”—Maunders’s Gram., p. 1. “This vulgar error might perhaps arise from a too partial fondness for the Latin.”—Dr. Ash’s Gram., Pref., p. iv. “The groans which a too heavy load extorts from her.”—Hitchcock, on Dyspepsy, p. 50. “The numbers [of a verb] are, of course, singular and plural.”—Bucke’s Gram. p. 58. “To brook no meanness, and to stoop to no dissimulation, are the indications of a great mind.”—Murray’s Key, ii, 236. “This mode of expression rather suits familiar than grave style.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 198. “This use of the word rather suits familiar and low style.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 134. “According to the nature of the composition the one or other may be predominant.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 102. “Yet the commonness of such sentences prevents in a great measure a too early expectation of the end.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 411. “An eulogy or a philippic may be pronounced by an individual of one nation upon the subject of another.”—Adams’s Rhet., i, 298. “A French sermon, is for most part, a warm animated exhortation.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 288. “I do not envy those who think slavery no very pitiable a lot.”—Channing, on Emancipation, p. 52. “The auxiliary and principal united, constitute a tense.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 75. “There are some verbs which are defective with respect to persons.”—Ib., i, 109. “In youth, the habits of industry are most easily acquired.”—Murray’s Key, ii, 235. “Apostrophe (’) is used in place of a letter left out.”—Bullions’s Eng. Gram., p. 156.

CHAPTER III.—CASES, OR NOUNS.

The rules for the construction of Nouns, or Cases, are seven; hence this chapter, according to the order adopted above, reviews the series of rules from the second rule to the eighth, inclusively. Though Nouns are here the topic, all these seven rules apply alike to Nouns and to Pronouns; that is, to all the words of our language which are susceptible of Cases.

RULE II.—NOMINATIVES.

A Noun or a Pronoun which is the subject of a finite verb, must be in the nominative case: as, “The Pharisees also, who were covetous, heard all these things; and they derided him.”—Luke, xvi, 14. “But where the meekness of self-knowledge veileth the front of self-respect, there look thou for the man whom none can know but they will honour.”—Book of Thoughts, p. 66.

“Dost thou mourn Philander’s fate?

I know thou sayst it: says thy life the same?”—Young, N. ii, l. 22.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE II.

OBS. 1.—To this rule, there are no exceptions; and nearly all nominatives, or far the greater part, are to be parsed by it. There are however four different ways of disposing of the nominative case. First, it is generally the subject of a verb, according to Rule 2d. Secondly, it may be put in apposition with an other nominative, according to Rule 3d. Thirdly, it may be put after a verb or a participle not transitive, according to Rule 6th. Fourthly, it may be put absolute, or may help to form a phrase that is independent of the rest of the sentence, according to Rule 8th.

OBS. 2.—The subject, or nominative, is generally placed before the verb; as, “Peace dawned upon his mind.”—Johnson. “What is written in the law?”—Bible. But, in the following nine cases, the subject of the verb is usually placed after it, or after the first auxiliary:

1. When a question is asked without an interrogative pronoun in the nominative case; as, “Shall mortals be implacable?”—Hooke. “What art thou doing?”—Id. “How many loaves have ye?”—Bible. “Are they Israelites? so am I.”—Ib.
2. When the verb is in the imperative mood; as, “Go thou”—“Come ye” But, with this mood, the pronoun is very often omitted and understood; as, “Philip saith unto him, Come and see”—John, i, 46. “And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted.”—Mark, xvi, 5.
3. When an earnest wish, or other strong feeling, is expressed; as, “May she be happy!”—“How were we struck!”—Young. “Not as the world giveth, give I unto you.”—Bible.
4. When a supposition is made without the conjunction if; as, “Had they known it,” for, “If they had known it.”—“Were it true,” for, “If it were true.”—“Could we draw by the covering of the grave,” for, “If we could draw,” &c.
5. When neither or nor, signifying and not, precedes the verb; as, “This was his fear; nor was his apprehension groundless.”—“Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it.”—Gen., iii, 3.
6. When, for the sake of emphasis, some word or words are placed before the verb, which more naturally come after it; as, “Here am I.”—“Narrow is the way.”—“Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have, give I thee.”—Bible.
7. When the verb has no regimen, and is itself emphatical; as, “Echo the mountains round.”—Thomson. “After the Light Infantry marched the Grenadiers, then followed the Horse.”—Buchanan’s Syntax, p. 71.
8. When the verbs, say, answer, reply, and the like, introduce the parts of a dialogue; as, “‘Son of affliction,’ said Omar, ‘who art thou?’ ‘My name,’ replied the stranger, ‘is Hassan.’”—Dr. Johnson.
9. When the adverb there precedes the verb; as, “There lived a man.”—Montgomery. “In all worldly joys, there is a secret wound.”—Owen. This use of there, the general introductory adverb of place, is idiomatic, and somewhat different from the use of the same word in reference to a particular locality; as, “Because there was not much water there.”—John, iii, 23.

OBS. 3.—In exclamations, and some other forms of expression, a few verbs are liable to be suppressed, the ellipsis being obvious; as, “How different [is] this from the philosophy of Greece and Rome!”—DR. BEATTIE: Murray’s Sequel, p. 127. “What a lively picture [is here] of the most disinterested and active benevolence!”—HERVEY: ib., p. 94. “When Adam [spake] thus to Eve.”—MILTON: Paradise Lost, B. iv, l. 610.

OBS. 4.—Though we often use nouns in the nominative case to show whom we address, yet the imperative verb takes no other nominative of the second person, than the simple personal pronoun, thou, ye, or you, expressed or understood. It would seem that some, who ought to know better, are liable to mistake for the subject of such a verb, the noun which we put absolute in the nominative by direct address. Of this gross error, the following is an example: “Study boys. In this sentence,” (says its author,) “study is a verb of the second person, plural number, and agrees with its nominative case, boys—according to the rule: A verb must agree with its nominative case in number and person. Boys is a noun of the second person, plural number, masculine gender, in the nominative case to the verb study.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 17.* Now the fact is, that this laconic address, of three syllables, is written wrong; being made bad English for want of a comma between the two words. Without this mark, boys must be an objective, governed by study; and with it, a nominative, put absolute by direct address. But, in either case, study agrees with ye or you understood, and has not the noun for its subject, or nominative.

OBS. 5.—Some authors say, and if the first person be no exception, say truly: “The nominative case to a verb, unless it be a pronoun, is always of the third person.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 141. But W. B. Fowle will have all pronouns to be adjectives. Consequently all his verbs, of every sort, agree with nouns “expressed or understood.” This, and every other absurd theory of language, can easily be made out, by means of a few perversions, which may be called corrections, and a sufficient number of interpolations, made under pretence of filling up ellipses. Thus, according to this author, “They fear,” means, “They things spoken of fear.”—True Eng. Gram., p. 33. And, “John, open the door,” or, “Boys, stop your noise,” admits no comma. And, “Be grateful, ye children,” and, “Be ye grateful children,” are, in his view, every way equivalent: the comma in the former being, in his opinion, needless. See ib., p. 39.

OBS. 6.—Though the nominative and objective cases of nouns do not differ in form, it is nevertheless, in the opinion of many of our grammarians, improper to place any noun

---

* Oliver B. Peirce, in his new theory of grammar, not only adopts Ingersoll’s error, but adds others to it. He supposes no ellipsis, and declares it grossly improper ever to insert the pronoun. According to him, the following text is wrong: “My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord.”—Heb., xii, 5. See Peirce’s Gram., p. 255. Of this gentleman’s book I shall say the less, because its faults are so many and so obvious. Yet this is “The Grammar of the English Language,” and claims to be the only work which is worthy to be called an English Grammar. “The first and only Grammar of the English Language!”—ib., p. 10. In punctuation, it is a very chaos, as one might guess from the following Rule: “A word of the second person, and in the subjective case, must have a semicolon after it; as, John; hear me.”—Id., p. 282. Behold his practice! “John, beware.”—P. 84. “Children, study.”—P. 80. “Henry; study.”—P. 249. “Pupil: parse.”—P. 211; and many other places. “Be thou, or do thou be writing? Be ye or you, or do ye or you be writing?”—P. 110. According to his Rule, this tense requires six semicolons; but the author points it with two commas and two notes of interrogation!

in both relations at once, because this produces a confusion in the syntax of the word. Examples: "He then goes on to declare that there are, and distinguish of, four manners of saying Per se."—Walker's Treatise of Particles, p. xii. Better: "He then proceeds to show, that per se is susceptible of four different senses." "In just allegory and similitude there is always a propriety, or, if you choose to call it, congruity, in the literal sense, as well as a distinct meaning or sentiment suggested, which is called the figurative sense."—Campbell's Philosophy of Rhetoric, p. 291. Better: "In just allegory or similitude, there is always a propriety—or, if you choose to call it so, a congruity—in the literal sense," &c. "It must then be meant of his sins who makes, not of his who becomes, the convert."—Atterbury's Sermons, i, 2. Better: "It must then be meant of his sins who makes the convert, not of his who becomes converted." "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."—1 Cor., ii, 9. A more regular construction would be: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." The following example, from Pope, may perhaps be conceded to the poet, as an allowable ellipsis of the words "a friend," after is:

"In who obtain defence, or who defend;
In him who is, or him who finds, a friend."—Essay on Man, Ep. iv, l. 60.

Dr. Lowth cites the last three examples, without suggesting any forms of correction; and says of them, "There seems to be an impropriety in these sentences, in which the same noun stands in a double capacity, performing at the same time the offices both of the nominative and objective case."—Lowth's Gram., p. 73. He should have said—"of both the nominative and the objective case." Dr. Webster, citing the line, "In him who is, and him who finds, a friend," adds, "Lowth condemns this use of the noun in the nominative and objective at the same time; but without reason, as the cases are not distinguished in English."—Improved Gram., p. 175.

OBS. 7.—In Latin and Greek, the accusative before the infinitive, is often reckoned the subject of the latter verb; and is accordingly parsed by a sort of exception to the foregoing rule—or rather, to that general rule of concord which the grammarians apply to the verb and its nominative. This construction is translated into English, and other modern tongues, sometimes literally, or nearly so, but much oftener, by a nominative and a finite verb. Example: "Εἶπεν αὐτὸν φωνηθῆναι."—Mark, x, 49. "Ait illum vocari."—Leusden. "Jussit eum vocari."—Beza. "Præcepit illum vocari."—Vulgate. "He commanded him to be called."—English Bible. "He commanded that he should be called."—Milnes's Gr. Gram., p. 143. "Il dit qu'on l'appelât."—French Bible. "He bid that somebody should call him." "Il commanda qu'on le fit venir."—Nouveau Test., Paris, 1812. "He commanded that they should make him come;" that is, "lead him, or bring him." "Il commanda qu'on l'appelât."—De Sacy's N. Test.

OBS. 8.—In English, the objective case before the infinitive mood, although it may truly denote the agent of the infinitive action, or the subject of the infinitive passion, is nevertheless taken as the object of the preceding verb, participle, or preposition. Accordingly our language does not admit a literal translation of the above-mentioned construction, except the preceding verb be such as can be interpreted transitively. "Gaudeo te valere," "I am glad that thou art well," cannot be translated more literally; because, "I am glad thee to be well," would not be good English. "Aiunt regem adventare,"

“They say the king is coming,” may be otherwise rendered “They declare the king to be coming;” but neither version is entirely literal; the objective being retained only by a change of aiunt, say, into such a verb as will govern the noun.

OBS. 9.—The following sentence is a literal imitation of the Latin accusative before the infinitive, and for that reason it is not good English: “But experience teacheth us, both these opinions to be alike ridiculous.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. i, p. 262. It should be, “But experience teaches us, that both these opinions are alike ridiculous.” The verbs believe, think, imagine, and others expressing mental action, I suppose to be capable of governing nouns or pronouns in the objective case, and consequently of being interpreted transitively. Hence I deny the correctness of the following explanation: “RULE XXIV. The objective case precedes the infinitive mode; [as,] ‘I believe your brother to be a good man.’ Here believe does not govern brother, in the objective case, because it is not the object after it. Brother, in the objective case, third person singular, precedes the neuter verb to be, in the infinitive mode, present time, third person singular.”—S. Barrett’s Gram., p. 135. This author teaches that, “The infinitive mode agrees with the objective case in number and person.”—Ibid. Which doctrine is denied; because the infinitive has no number or person, in any language. Nor do I see why the noun brother, in the foregoing example, may not be both the object of the active verb believe, and the subject of the neuter infinitive to be, at the same time; for the subject of the infinitive, if the infinitive can be said to have a subject, is not necessarily in the nominative case, or necessarily independent of what precedes.

OBS. 10.—There are many teachers of English grammar, who still adhere to the principle of the Latin and Greek grammarians, which refers the accusative or objective to the latter verb, and supposes the former to be intransitive, or to govern only the infinitive. Thus Nixon: “The objective case is frequently put before the infinitive mood, as its subject; as, ‘Suffer me to depart.’” *—English Parser, p. 34. “When an objective case stands before an infinitive mood, as ‘I understood it to be him,’ ‘Suffer me to depart,’ such objective should be parsed, not as governed by the preceding verb, but as the objective case before the infinitive; that is, the subject of it. The reason of this is—the former verb can govern one object only, and that is (in such sentences) the infinitive mood; the intervening objective being the subject of the infinitive following, and not governed by the former verb; as, in that instance, it would be governing two objects.”—Ib., Note.†

* In Butler’s Practical Grammar, first published in 1845, this doctrine is taught as a novelty. His publishers, in their circular letter, speak of it as one of “the peculiar advantages of this grammar over preceding works,” and as an important matter, “heretofore altogether omitted by grammarians!” Wells cites Butler in support of his false principle: “A verb in the infinitive is often preceded by a noun or pronoun in the objective, which has no direct dependence on any other word. Examples:—‘Columbus ordered a strong fortress of wood and plaster to be erected.’—Irving. ‘Its favors here should make us tremble.’—Young.” See Wells’s School Gram., p. 147.

† “Sometimes indeed the verb hath two regimens, and then the preposition is necessary to one of them; as, ‘I address myself to my judges.’”—Campbell’s Philosophy of Rhetoric, p. 178. Here the verb address governs the pronoun myself, and is also the antecedent to the preposition to; and the construction would be similar, if the preposition governed the infinitive or a participle: as, “I prepared myself to swim;” or, “I prepared myself for swimming.” But, in any of these cases, it is not very accurate to say, “the verb has two regimens,” for the latter term is properly the regimen of the preposition. Cardell, by robbing the prepositions, and supposing ellipses, found two regimens for every verb. W. Allen, on the contrary, (from whom Nixon gathered his doctrine above,) by giving the “accusative” to the infinitive, makes a multitude of our active-transitive verbs “neuter.” See Allen’s Gram., p. 166. But Nixon absurdly calls the verb “active-transitive,” because it governs the infinitive; i. e. as he supposes—and, except when to is not used, erroneously supposes.

OBS. 11.—The notion that one verb governs another in the infinitive, just as a transitive verb governs a noun, and so that it cannot also govern an objective case, is not only contradictory to my scheme of parsing the infinitive mood, but is also false in itself, and repugnant to the principles of General Grammar. In Greek and Latin, it is certainly no uncommon thing for a verb to govern two cases at once; and even the accusative before the infinitive is sometimes governed by the preceding verb, as the objective before the infinitive naturally is in English. But, in regard to construction, every language differs more or less from every other; hence each must have its own syntax, and abide by its own rules. In regard to the point here in question, the reader may compare the following examples: “Ἐὼ ἀνάγκην ἐξελεῖν.”—Luke, xiv, 18. “Habeo necesse exire.”—Leusden. English: “I have occasion to go away.” Again: “Ὁ ἔχων ὦτα ἀκούειν, ἀκοῦτω.”—Luke, xiv, 35. “Habens aures audiendi, audiat.”—Leusden. “Qui habet aures ad audiendum, audiat.”—Beza. English: “He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.” But our most frequent use of the infinitive after the objective, is in sentences that must not be similarly constructed in Latin or Greek;* as, “And he commanded the porter to watch.”—Mark, xiii, 34. “And he delivered Jesus to be crucified.”—Mark, xv, 15. “And they led him out to crucify him.”—Mark, xv, 20. “We heard him say.”—Mark, xiv, 58. “That I might make thee know.”—Prov., xxii, 21.

OBS. 12.—If our language does really admit any thing like the accusative before the infinitive, in the sense of a positive subject at the head of a clause, it is only in some prospective descriptions like the following: “Let certain studies be prescribed to be pursued during the freshman year; some of these to be attended to by the whole class; with regard to others, a choice to be allowed; which, when made by the student, (the parent or guardian sanctioning it,) to be binding during the freshman year: the same plan to be adopted with regard to the studies of the succeeding years.”—GALLAUDET: Journal of the N. Y. Literary Convention, p. 118. Here the four words, some, choice, which, and plan, may appear to a Latinist to be so many objectives, or accusatives, placed before infinitives, and used to describe that state of things which the author would promote. If objectives they are, we may still suppose them to be governed by let, would have, or something of the kind, understood: as, “Let some of these be attended to;” or, “Some of these I would have to be attended to,” &c. The relative which might with more propriety be made nominative, by changing “to be binding” to “shall be binding,” and as to the rest, it is very doubtful whether they are not now nominatives, rather than objectives. The infinitive, as used above, is a mere substitute for the Latin future participle; and any English noun or pronoun put absolute with a participle, is in the nominative case. English relatives are

---

* A certain new theorist, who very innocently fogs himself and his credulous readers with a deal of impertinent pedantry, after denouncing my doctrine that to before the infinitive is a preposition, appeals to me thus: “Let me ask you, G. B.—is not the infinitive in Latin the same as in the English? Thus, I desire to teach Latin—Ego Cupio docere. I saw Abel come—Ego videbam Abelem venire. The same principle is recognized by the Greek grammars and those of most of the modern languages.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 358. Of this gentleman I know nothing but from what appears in his book—a work of immeasurable and ill-founded vanity—a whimsical, dogmatical, blundering performance. This short sample of his Latin, (with six puerile errors in seven words), is proof positive that he knows nothing of that language, whatever may be his attainments in Greek, or the other tongues of which he tells. To his question I answer emphatically, NO. In Latin, “One verb governs another in the infinitive; as, Cupio discere, I desire to learn.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 181. This government never admits the intervention of a preposition. “I saw Abel come,” has no preposition; but the Latin of it is, “Vidi Abelem venientem,” and not what is given above; or, according to St. Jerome and others, who wrote, “Abel,” without declension, we ought rather to say, “Vidi Abel venientem.” If they are right, “Ego videbam Abelem venire,” is every word of it wrong!

rarely, if ever, put absolute in this manner: and this may be the reason why the construction of which, in the sentence above, seems awkward. Besides, it is certain that the other pronouns are sometimes put absolute with the infinitive; and that, in the nominative case, not the objective: as,

“And I to be a corporal in his field,
And wear his colours like a tumbler’s hoop!
What? ! I love! I sue! I seek a wife!”—Shak., Love’s Labour Lost.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE II.

THE SUBJECT OF A FINITE VERB.

“The whole need not a physician, but them that are sick.”—Bunyan’s Law and Gr., p. iv.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the objective pronoun them is here made the subject of the verb need, understood. But, according to Rule 2d, “A noun or a pronoun which is the subject of a finite verb, must be in the nominative case.” Therefore, them should be they; thus, “The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.”]

“He will in no wise cast out whomsoever cometh unto him.”—Robert Hall. “He feared the enemy might fall upon his men, whom he saw were off their guard.”—Hutchinson’s Massachusetts, ii, 133. “Whomsoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.”—Dymond’s Essays, p. 48. “The idea’s of the author have been conversant with the faults of other writers.”—Swift’s T. T., p. 55. “You are a much greater loser than me by his death.”—Swift to Pope, l. 63. “Such peccadillo’s pass with him for pious frauds.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. iii, p. 279. “In whom I am nearly concerned, and whom I know would be very apt to justify my whole procedure.”—Ib., i, 560. “Do not think such a man as me contemptible for my garb.”—Addison. “His wealth and him bid adieu to each other.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 107. “So that, ‘He is greater than me,’ will be more grammatical than, ‘He is greater than I.’”—Ib., p. 106. “The Jesuits had more interests at court than him.”—SMOLLETT: in Pr. Gram., p. 106.* “Tell the Cardinal that I understand poetry better than him.”—Id., ib. “An inhabitant of Crim Tartary was far more happy than him.”—Id., ib. “My father and him have been very intimate since.”—Fair American, ii, 53. “Who was the agent, and whom the object struck or kissed?”—Infant School Gram., p. 32. “To find the person whom he imagined was concealed there.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 225. “He offered a great recompense to whomsoever would help him.”—HUME: in Pr. Gram., p. 104. “They would be under the dominion, absolute and unlimited, of whomsoever might exercise the right of judgement.”—Gov. Haynes’s Speech, in 1832. “They had promised to accept whomsoever should be born in Wales.”—Stories by Croker. “We sorrow not as them that have no hope.”—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 27. “If he suffers, he suffers as them that have no hope.”—Ib., p. 32. “We acknowledge that he, and him only, hath been our peacemaker.”—Gratton. “And what can be better than him that made it?”—Jenks’s Prayers, p. 329. “None of his school-fellows is more beloved than him.”—Cooper’s Gram., p. 42. “Solomon, who was wiser than them all.”—Watson’s Apology, p. 76. “Those whom the Jews thought were the last to be saved, first entered the kingdom of God.”—Eleventh * Priestley cites these examples as authorities, not as false syntax. The errors which I thus quote at secondhand from other grammarians, and mark with double references, are in general such as the first quoters have allowed, and made themselves responsible for; but this is not the case in every instance. Such credit has sometimes, though rarely, been given, where the expression was disapproved.—G. BROWN.

Hour, Tract, No. 4. "A stone is heavy, and the sand weighty; but a fool's wrath is heavier than them both."—Prov., xxvii, 3. "A man of business, in good company, is hardly more insupportable than her they call a notable woman."—Steele, Sped. "The king of the Sarmatians, whom we may imagine was no small prince, restored him a hundred thousand Roman prisoners."—Life of Antoninus, p. 83. "Such notions would be avowed at this time by none but rosicrucians, and fanatics as mad as them."—Bolingbroke's Ph. Tr., p. 24. "Unless, as I said, Messieurs, you are the masters, and not me."—BASIL HALL: Harrison's E. Lang., p. 173. "We had drawn up against peaceable travellers, who must have been as glad as us to escape."—BURNES'S TRAVELS: ibid. "Stimulated, in turn, by their approbation, and that of better judges than them, she turned to their literature with redoubled energy."—QUARTERLY REVIEW: Life of H. More: ibid. "I know not whom else are expected."—SCOTT'S PIRATE: ibid. "He is great, but truth is greater than us all."—Horace Mann, in Congress, 1850. "Him I accuse has entered."—Fowler's E. Gram., §482: see Shakspeare's Coriolanus, Act V, sc. 5.

"Scotland and thee did each in other live."—Dryden's Po., Vol. ii, p. 220.

"We are alone; here's none but thee and I."—Shak., 2 Hen. VI.

"Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy."—Idem: Joh. Dict.

"Tell me, in sadness, whom is she you love?"—Id., Romeo and Juliet, A. I, sc. 1.

"Better leave undone, than by our deeds acquire Too high a fame, when him we serve's away."—Shak., Ant. and Cleop.

RULE III.—APPOSITION.

A Noun or a personal Pronoun used to explain a preceding noun or pronoun, is put, by apposition, in the same case: as, "But it is really I, your old friend and neighbour," Piso, late a dweller upon the Coelian hill, who am now basking in the warm skies of Palmyra."—Zenobia.

"But he, our gracious Master, kind as just, Knowing our frame, remembers we are dust."—Barbauld.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE III.

OBS. 1—Apposition is that peculiar relation which one noun or pronoun bears to another, when two or more are placed together in the same case, and used to designate the same person or thing: as, "Cicero the orator;"—"The prophet Joel;"—"He of Gath, Goliath;"—"Which ye yourselves do know;"—"To make him king;"—"To give his life a ransom for many;"—"I made the ground my bed;"—"I, thy schoolmaster;"—"We the People of the United States." This placing-together of nouns and pronouns in the same case, was reckoned by the old grammarians a figure of syntax; and from them it received, in their elaborate detail of the grammatical and rhetorical figures, its present name of apposition. They reckoned it a species of ellipsis, and supplied between the words, the participle being, the infinitive to be, or some other part of their "substantive verb:" as, "Cicero being the orator;"—"To make him to be king;"—"I who am thy schoolmaster." But the later Latin grammarians have usually placed it among their regular concords; some calling it the first concord, while others make it the last, in the series; and some, with no great regard to consistency, treating it both as a figure and as a regular concord, at the same time.

OBS. 2.—Some English grammarians teach, “that the words in the cases preceding and following the verb to be, may be said to be in apposition to each other.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 181; R. C. Smith’s, 155; Fisk’s, 126; Ingersoll’s, 146; Merchant’s, 91. But this is entirely repugnant to the doctrine, that apposition is a figure; nor is it at all consistent with the original meaning of the word apposition; because it assumes that the literal reading, when the supposed ellipsis is supplied, is apposition still. The old distinction, however, between apposition and same cases, is generally preserved in our grammars, and is worthy ever to be so. The rule for same cases applies to all nouns or pronouns that are put after verbs or participles not transitive, and that are made to agree in case with other nouns or pronouns going before, and meaning the same thing. But some teachers who observe this distinction with reference to the neuter verb be, and to certain passive verbs of naming, appointing, and the like, absurdly break it down in relation to other verbs, neuter or active-intransitive. Thus Nixon: “Nouns in apposition are in the same case; as, ‘Hortensius died a martyr,’ ‘Sydney lived the shepherd’s friend.”—English Parser, p. 55. It is remarkable that all this author’s examples of “nominatives in apposition,” (and he gives eighteen in the exercise,) are precisely of this sort, in which there is really no apposition at all.

OBS. 3.—In the exercise of parsing, rule third should be applied only to the explanatory term; because the case of the principal term depends on its relation to the rest of the sentence, and comes under some other rule. In certain instances, too, it is better to waive the analysis which might be made under rule third, and to take both or all the terms together, under the rule for the main relation. Thus, the several proper names which distinguish an individual, are always in apposition, and should be taken together in parsing; as, William Pitt—Marcus Tullius Cicero. It may, I think, be proper to include with the personal names, some titles also; as, Lord Bacon—Sir Isaac Newton. William E. Russell and Jonathan Ware, (two American authors of no great note,) in parsing the name of “George Washington,” absurdly take the former word as an adjective belonging to the latter. See Russell’s Gram., p. 100; and Ware’s, 17. R. C. Smith does the same, both with honorary titles, and with baptismal or Christian names. See his New Gram., p. 97. And one English writer, in explaining the phrases, “John Wickliffe’s influence,” “Robert Bruce’s exertions,” and the like, will have the first nouns to be governed by the last, and the intermediate ones to be distinct possessives in apposition with the former. See Nixon’s English Parser, p. 59. Wm. B. Fowle, in his “True English Grammar,” takes all titles, all given names, all possessives, and all pronouns, to be adjectives. According to him, this class embraces more than half the words in the language. A later writer than any of these says, “The proper noun is philosophically an adjective. Nouns common or proper, of similar or dissimilar import, may be parsed as adjectives, when they become qualifying or distinguishing words; as, President Madison,—Doctor Johnson,—Mr. Webster,—Esq. Carleton,—Miss Gould,—Professor Ware,—lake Erie,—the Pacific ocean,—Franklin House,—Union street.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 134. I dissent from all these views, at least so far as not to divide a man’s name in parsing it. A person will sometimes have such a multitude of names, that it would be a flagrant waste of time, to parse them all separately: for example, that wonderful doctor, Paracelsus, who called himself, “Aureolus Philippus Theophrastus Bombastus Paracelsus de Hoenheim.”—Univ. Biog. Dict.

OBS. 4.—A very common rule for apposition in Latin, is this: “Substantives signifying the same thing, agree in case.”—Adam’s Latin Gram., p. 156. The same has also been applied to our language: “Substantives denoting the same person or thing, agree in case.”—Bullions’s E. Gram., p. 102. This rule is, for two reasons, very faulty: first, because the apposition of pronouns seems not to be included it; secondly, because two nouns that are not in the same case, do sometimes “signify” or “denote” the same thing. Thus, “the city of London,” means only the city London; “the land of Egypt,” is only Egypt; and “the person of Richard” is Richard himself. Dr. Webster defines apposition to be, “The placing of two nouns in the same case, without a connecting word between them.”—Octavo Dict. This, too, excludes the pronouns, and has exceptions, both various and numerous. In the first place, the apposition may be of more than two nouns, without any connective; as, “Ezra the priest, the scribe of the law.”—Ezra, vii, 21. Secondly, two nouns connected by a conjunction, may both be put in apposition with a preceding noun or pronoun; as, “God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ.”—Acts, ii, 36. “Who made me a judge or a divider over you.”—Luke, xii, 14. Thirdly, the apposition may be of two nouns immediately connected by and, provided the two words denote but one person or thing; as, “This great philosopher and statesman was bred a printer.” Fourthly, it may be of two words connected by as, expressing the idea of a partial or assumed identity; as, “Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother.”—2 Thess., iii, 15. “So that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God.”—Ib., ii, 4. Fifthly, it may perhaps be of two words connected by than; as, “He left them no more than dead men.”—Law and Grace, p. 28. Lastly, there is a near resemblance to apposition, when two equivalent nouns are connected by or; as, “The back of the hedgehog is covered with prickles, or spines.”—Webster’s Dict.

OBS. 5.—To the rule for apposition, as I have expressed it, there are properly no exceptions. But there are many puzzling examples of construction under it, some of which are but little short of exceptions; and upon such of these as are most likely to embarrass the learner, some further observations shall be made. The rule supposes the first word to be the principal term, with which the other word, or subsequent noun or pronoun, is in apposition; and it generally is so: but the explanatory word is sometimes placed first, especially among the poets; as,

“From bright’ning fields of ether fair disclos’d,
Child of the sun, refulgent Summer comes.”—Thomson.

OBS. 6.—The pronouns of the first and second persons are often placed before nouns merely to distinguish their person; as, “I John saw these things.”—Bible. “But what is this to you receivers?”—Clarkson’s Essay on Slavery, p. 108. “His praise, ye brooks, attune.”—Thomson. In this case of apposition, the words are in general closely united, and either of them may be taken as the explanatory term. The learner will find it easier to parse the noun by rule third; or both nouns, if there be two: as, “I thy father-in-law Jethro am come unto thee.”—Exod., xviii, 6. There are many other examples, in which it is of no moment, which of the terms we take for the principal; and to all such the rule may be applied literally: as, “Thy son Benhadad king of Syria hath sent me to thee.”—2 Kings, viii, 9.

OBS. 7.—When two or more nouns of the possessive case are put in apposition, the possessive termination added to one, denotes the case of both or all; as, “For Herodias’ sake, his brother Philip’s wife”—Matt., xiv, 3; Mark, vi, 17. Here wife is in apposition with Herodias’, and brother with Philip’s; consequently all these words are reckoned to be in the possessive case. The Greek text, which is better, stands essentially thus: “For the sake of Herodias, the wife of Philip his brother.” “For Jacob my servant’s sake, and Israel mine elect.”—Isaiah, xlv, 4. Here, as Jacob and Israel are only different names for the same person or nation, the four nouns in Italics are, according to the rule, all made possessives by the one sign used; but the construction is not to be commended: it would be better to say, "For the sake of Jacob my servant, and Israel mine elect." "With Hyrcanus the high priest's consent."—Wood's Dict., u. Herod. "I called at Smith's, the bookseller; or, at Smith the bookseller's."—Bullions's E. Gram., p. 105. Two words, each having the possessive sign, can never be in apposition one with the other; because that sign has immediate reference to the governing noun expressed or understood after it; and if it be repeated, separate governing nouns will be implied, and the apposition will be destroyed.*

OBS. 8.—If the foregoing remark is just, the apposition of two nouns in the possessive case, requires the possessive sign to be added to that noun which immediately precedes the governing word, whether expressed or understood, and positively excludes it from the other. The sign of the case is added, sometimes to the former, and sometimes to the latter noun, but never to both: or, if added to both, the two words are no longer in apposition. Example: "And for that reason they ascribe to him a great part of his father Nimrod's, or Belus's actions."—Rollin's An. Hist., Vol. ii, p. 6. Here father and Nimrod's are in strict apposition; but if actions governs Belus's, the same word is implied to govern Nimrod's, and the two names are not in apposition, though they are in the same case and mean the same person.

OBS. 9.—Dr. Priestley says, "Some would say, 'I left the parcel at Mr. Smith's, the bookseller;' others, 'at Mr. Smith the bookseller's;' and perhaps others, at 'Mr. Smith's the bookseller's.' The last of these forms is most agreeable to the Latin idiom, but the first seems to be more natural in ours; and if the addition consist [consists, says Murray,] of two or more words, the case seems to be very clear; as, 'I left the parcel at Mr. Smith's the bookseller and stationer;' i. e. at Mr. Smith's, who is a bookseller and stationer."—Priestley's Gram., p. 70. Here the examples, if rightly pointed, would all be right; but the ellipsis supposed, not only destroys the apposition, but converts the explanatory noun into a nominative. And in the phrase, "at Mr. Smiths, the bookseller's," there is no apposition, except that of Mr. with Smith's; for the governing noun house or store is * Lindley Murray thought it not impracticable to put two or more nouns in apposition and add the possessive sign to each; nor did he imagine there would often be any positive impropriety in so doing. His words, on this point, are these: "On the other hand, the application of the genitive sign to both or all of the nouns in apposition, would be generally harsh and displeasing, and perhaps in some cases incorrect: as, 'The Emperor's Leopold's; King George's; Charles's the Second's; The parcel was left at Smith's, the bookseller's and stationer's.'"—Octavo Gram., p. 177. Whether he imagined any of these to be "incorrect" or not, does not appear! Under the next rule, I shall give a short note which will show them all to be so. The author, however, after presenting these uncouth fictions, which show nothing but his own deficiency in grammar, has done the world the favour not to pronounce them very convenient phrases; for he continues the paragraph as follows: "The rules which we have endeavoured to elucidate, will prevent the inconveniences of both these modes of expression; and they appear to be simple, perspicuous, and consistent with the idiom of the language."—Ib. This undeserved praise of his own rules, he might as well have left to some other hand. They have had the fortune, however, to please sundry critics, and to become the prey of many thieves; but are certainly very deficient in the three qualities here named; and, taken together with their illustrations, they form little else than a tissue of errors, partly his own, and partly copied from Lowth and Priestley.

---

Dr. Latham, too, and Prof. Child, whose erroneous teaching on this point is still more marvellous, not only inculcate the idea that possessives in form may be in apposition, but seem to suppose that two possessive endings are essential to the relation. Forgetting all such English as we have in the phrases, "John the Baptist's head,"—"For Jacob my servant's sake,"—"Julius Cæsar's Commentaries,"—they invent sham expressions, too awkward ever to have come to their knowledge from any actual use,—such as, "John's the farmer's wife,"—"Oliver's the spy's evidence,"—and then end their section with the general truth, "For words to be in apposition with each other, they must be in the same case."—Elementary Grammar, Revised Edition, p. 152. What sort of scholarship is that in which fictitious examples mislead even their inventors?

understood as clearly after the one possessive sign as after the other. Churchill imagines that in Murray's example, "I reside at Lord Stormont's, my old patron and benefactor," the last two nouns are in the nominative after "who was" understood; and also erroneously suggests, that their joint apposition with Stormont's might be secured, by saying, less elegantly, "I reside at Lord Stormont's, my old patron and benefactor's."—Churchill's New Gram., p. 285. Lindley Murray, who tacitly takes from Priestley all that is quoted above, except the term "Mr.," and the notion of an ellipsis of "who is," assumes each of the three forms as an instance of apposition, but pronounces the first only to be "correct and proper." If, then, the first is elliptical, as Priestley suggests, and the others are ungrammatical, as Murray pretends to prove, we cannot have in reality any such construction as the apposition of two possessives; for the sign of the case cannot possibly be added in more than these three ways. But Murray does not adhere at all to his own decision, as may be seen by his subsequent remarks and examples, on the same page; as, "The emperor Leopold's;"—"Dionysius the tyrant's;"—"For David my servant's sake;"—"Give me here John the Baptist's head;"—"Paul the apostle's advice." See Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 176; Smith's New Gram., p. 150; and others.

OBS. 10.—An explanatory noun without the possessive sign, seems sometimes to be put in apposition with a pronoun of the possessive case; and, if introduced by the conjunction as, it may either precede or follow the pronoun: thus, "I rejoice in your success as an instructor."—Sanborn's Gram., p. 244. "As an author, his 'Adventurer' is his capital work."—Murray's Sequel, p. 329.

"Thus shall mankind his guardian care engage,
The promised father of a future age."—Pope.

But possibly such examples may be otherwise explained on the principle of ellipsis; as, [He being] "the promised father," &c. "As [he was] an author," &c. "As [you are] an instructor."

OBS. 11.—When a noun or pronoun is repeated for the sake of emphasis, or for the adding of an epithet, the word which is repeated may properly be said to be in apposition with that which is first introduced; or, if not, the repetition itself implies sameness of case: as, "They have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water."—Jer., ii, 13.

"I find the total of their hopes and fears Dreams, empty dreams."—Cowper's Task, p. 71.

OBS. 12.—A noun is sometimes put, as it were, in apposition to a sentence; being used (perhaps elliptically) to sum up the whole idea in one emphatic word, or short phrase. But, in such instances, the noun can seldom be said to have any positive relation that may determine its case; and, if alone, it will of course be in the nominative, by reason of its independence. Examples: "He permitted me to consult his library—a kindness which I shall not forget."—W. Allen's Gram., p. 148. "I have offended reputation—a most un noble swerving."—Shakspeare. "I want a hero,—an uncommon want."—Byron. "Lopez took up the sonnet, and after reading it several times, frankly acknowledged that he did not understand it himself; a discovery which the poet probably never made before."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 280.

“In Christian hearts O for a pagan zeal!
 A needful, but opprobrious prayer!”—Young, N. ix, l. 995.

“Great standing miracle, that Heav’n assign’d
 Its only thinking thing this turn of mind.”—Pope.

OBS. 13.—A distributive term in the singular number, is frequently construed in apposition with a comprehensive plural; as, “They reap vanity, every one with his neighbour.”—Bible. “Go ye every man unto his city.”—Ibid. So likewise with two or more singular nouns which are taken conjointly; as, “The Son and Spirit have each his proper office.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 163. And sometimes a plural word is emphatically put after a series of particulars comprehended under it; as, “Ambition, interest, glory, all concurred.”—Letters on Chivalry, p. 11. “Royalists, republicans, churchmen, sectaries, courtiers, patriots, all parties concurred in the illusion.”—Hume’s History, Vol. viii, p. 73. The foregoing examples are plain, but similar expressions sometimes require care, lest the distributive or collective term be so placed that its construction and meaning may be misapprehended. Examples: “We have turned every one to his own way.”—Isaiah, liii, 6. Better: “We have every one turned to his own way.” “For in many things we offend all.”—James, iii, 2. Better: “For in many things we all offend.” The latter readings doubtless convey the true sense of these texts. To the relation of apposition, it may be proper also to refer the construction of a singular noun taken in a distributive sense and repeated after by to denote order; as, “They went out one by one.”—Bible. “Our whole company, man by man, ventured in.”—Goldsmith. “To examine a book, page by page; to search a place, house by house.”—Ward’s Gram., p. 106. So too, perhaps, when the parts of a thing explain the whole; as,

“But those that sleep, and think not on their sins, Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins.”—Shak.

OBS. 14.—To express a reciprocal action or relation, the pronominal adjectives each other and one an other are employed: as, “They love each other,”—“They love one an other.” The words, separately considered, are singular; but, taken together, they imply plurality; and they can be properly construed only after plurals, or singulars taken conjointly. Each other is usually applied to two persons or things; and one an other, to more than two. The impropriety of applying them otherwise, is noticed elsewhere; (see, in Part II, Obs. 15th, on the Classes of Adjectives;) so that we have here to examine only their relations of case. The terms, though reciprocal and closely united, are seldom or never in the same construction. If such expressions be analyzed, each and one will generally appear to be in the nominative case, and other in the objective; as, “They love each other,” i. e. each loves the other. “They love one an other,” i. e. any or every one loves any or every other. Each and one (—if the words be taken as cases, and not adjectively—) are properly in agreement or apposition with they, and other is governed by the verb. The terms, however, admit of other constructions; as, “Be ye helpers one of an other.”—Bible. Here one is in apposition with ye, and other is governed by of. “Ye are one an other’s joy.”—Ib. Here one is in apposition with ye, and other’s is in the possessive case, being governed by joy. “Love will make you one an other’s joy.” Here one is in the objective case, being in apposition with you, and other’s is governed as before. “Men’s confidence in one an other,”—“Their dependence one upon an other.” Here the word one appears to be in apposition with the possessive going before; for it has already been shown, that words standing in that relation never take the possessive sign. But if its location after the preposition must make it objective, the whole object is the complex term, “one an other.” “Grudge not one against an other.”—James, v, 9. “Ne vous plaignez point les uns des autres.”—French Bible. “Ne suspirate alius adversus alium.”—Beza. “Ne ingemiscite adversus alii alios.”—Leusden. “Μὴ στενάζετε κατ’ ἀλλήλων.”—Greek New Testament.

OBS. 15.—The construction of the Latin terms alius alium, alii alios, &c., with that of the French l’un l’autre, l’un de l’autre, &c., appears, at first view, sufficiently to confirm the doctrine of the preceding observation; but, besides the frequent use, in Latin and Greek, of a reciprocal adverb to express the meaning of one an other or each other, there are, from each of these languages, some analogical arguments for taking the English terms together as compounds. The most common term in Greek for one an other, (Ἀλλήλων, dat. ἀλλήλοις, αις, οἰς, acc. ἀλλήλους: ab ἄλλος, alius;) is a single derivative word, the case of which is known by its termination; and each other is sometimes expressed in Latin by a compound: as, “Et osculantes se alterutrum, flevērunt pariter.”—Vulgate. That is: “And kissing each other, they wept together.” As this text speaks of but two persons, our translators have not expressed it well in the common version: “And they kissed one an other, and wept one with an other”—1 Sam., xx, 41. Alter-utrum is composed of a nominative and an accusative, like each-other; and, in the nature of things, there is no reason why the former should be compounded, and the latter not. Ordinarily, there seems to be no need of compounding either of them. But some examples occur, in which it is not easy to parse each other and one an other otherwise than as compounds: as, “He only recommended this, and not the washing of one another’s feet.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. iii, p. 143.

“The Temple late two brother sergeants saw,
Who deem’d each other oracles of law.”—Pope, B. ii, Ep. 2.*

---

* In Professor Fowler’s recent and copious work, “The English Language in its Elements and Forms,” our present Reciprocals are called, not Pronominal Adjectives, but “Pronouns,” and are spoken of, in the first instance, thus: “§248. A RECIPROCAL PRONOUN is one that implies the mutual action of different agents. EACH OTHER, and ONE ANOTHER, are our reciprocal forms, which are treated exactly as if they were compound pronouns, taking for their genitives, each other’s, one another’s. Each other is properly used of two, and one another of more.” The definition here given takes for granted what is at least disputable, that “each other,” or “one another,” is not a phrase, but is merely “one pronoun.” But, to none of his three important positions here taken, does the author himself at all adhere. In §451, at Note 3, he teaches thus: “They love each other.’ Here each is in the nominative case in apposition with they, and other is in the objective case. They helped one another.’ Here one is in apposition with they, and another is in the objective case.” Now, by this mode of parsing, the reciprocal terms “are treated,” not as “compound pronouns,” but as phrases consisting of distinct or separable words: and, as being separate or separable words, whether they be Adjectives or Pronouns, they conform not to his definition above. Out of the sundry instances in which, according to his own showing, he has misapplied one or the other of these phrases, I cite the following: (1.) “The two ideas of Science and Art differ from one another as the understanding differs from the will.”—Fowler’s Gram., 1850, §180. Say,—“from each other,” or,—“one from the other.” (2.) “THOU, THY, THEE, are etymologically related to each other.”—Ib., §216. Say,—“to one an other,” because there are “more” than “two.” (3.) “Till within some centuries, the Germans, like the French and the English, addressed each other in familiar conversation by the Second Person Singular.”—Ib., §221. Say,—“addressed one an other.” (4.) “Two sentences are, on the other hand, connected in the way of co-ordination [,] when they are not thus dependent one upon another.”—Ib., §332. Say,—“upon each other,” or,—“one upon the other,” because there are but two. (5.) “These two rivers are at a great distance from one another.”—Ib., §617. Say,—“from each other,” or,—“one from the other.” (6.) “The trees [in the Forest of Bombast] are close, spreading, and twined into each other.”—Ib., §617. Say,—“into one an other.”

OBS. 16.—The common and the proper name of an object are very often associated, and put in apposition; as, “The river Thames,”—“The ship Albion,”—“The poet Cowper”—“Lake Erie,”—“Cape May”—“Mount Atlas.” But, in English, the proper name of a place, when accompanied by the common name, is generally put in the objective case, and preceded by of; as, “The city of New York,”—“The land of Canaan,”—“The island of Cuba,”—“The peninsula of Yucatan.” Yet in some instances, even of this kind, the immediate apposition is preferred; as, “That the city Sepphoris should be subordinate to the city Tiberias.”—Life of Josephus, p. 142. In the following sentence, the preposition of is at least needless: “The law delighteth herself in the number of twelve; and the number of twelve is much respected in holy writ.”—Coke, on Juries. Two or three late grammarians, supposing of always to indicate a possessive relation between one thing and an other, contend that it is no less improper, to say, “The city of London, the city of New Haven, the month of March, the islands of Cuba and Hispaniola, the towns of Exeter and Dover,” than to say, “King of Solomon, Titus of the Roman Emperor, Paul of the apostle, or, Cicero of the orator.”—See Barrett’s Gram., p. 101; Emmons’s, 16. I cannot but think there is some mistake in their mode of finding out what is proper or improper in grammar. Emmons scarcely achieved two pages more, before he forgot his criticism, and adopted the phrase, “in the city of New Haven.”—Gram., p. 19.

OBS. 17.—When an object acquires a new name or character from the action of a verb, the new appellation is put in apposition with the object of the active verb, and in the nominative after the passive: as, “They named the child John,”—“The child was named John.”—“They elected him president,”—“He was elected president.” After the active verb, the acquired name must be parsed by Rule 3d; after the passive, by Rule 6th. In the following example, the pronominal adjective some, or the noun men understood after it, is the direct object of the verb gave, and the nouns expressed are in apposition with it: “And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers”—Ephesians, iv, 11. That is, “He bestowed some [men] as apostles; and some as prophets; and some as evangelists; and some as pastors and teachers.” The common reader might easily mistake the meaning and construction of this text in two different ways; for he might take some to be either a dative case, meaning to some persons, or an adjective to the nouns which are here expressed. The punctuation, however, is calculated to show that the nouns are in apposition with some, or some men, in what the Latins call the accusative case. But the version ought to be amended by the insertion of as, which would here be an express sign of the apposition intended.

OBS. 18.—Some authors teach that words in apposition must agree in person, number, and gender, as well as in case; but such agreement the following examples show not to be always necessary: “The Franks, a people of Germany.”—W. Allen’s Gram. “The Kenite tribe, the descendants of Hobab.”—Milman’s Hist. of the Jews. “But how can you a soul, still either hunger or thirst?”—Lucian’s Dialogues, p. 14. “Who seized the wife of me his host, and fled.”—Ib., p. 16.

“Thy gloomy grandeurs (Nature’s most august.
Inspiring aspect!) claim a grateful verse.”—Young, N. ix, l. 566.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE III.

ERRORS OF WORDS IN APPPOSITION.

“Now, therefore, come thou, let us make a covenant, I and thou.”—Gen., xxxi, 44.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pronouns I and thou, of the nominative case, are here put in apposition with the preceding pronoun us, which is objective. But, according to Rule 3d, “A noun or a personal pronoun, used to explain a preceding noun or pronoun, is put, by apposition, in the same case.” Therefore, I and thou should be thee and me; (the first person, in our idiom, being usually put last;) thus, “Now, therefore, come thou, let us make a covenant, thee and me.”]

“Now, therefore, come thou, we will make a covenant, thee and me.”—Variation of Gen.
 “The word came not to Esau, the hunter, that stayed not at home; but to Jacob, the plain man, he that dwelt in tents.”—Wm. Penn. “Not to every man, but to the man of God, (i. e.) he that is led by the spirit of God.”—Barclays Works, i, 266. “For, admitting God to be a creditor, or he to whom the debt should be paid, and Christ he that satisfies or pays it on behalf of man the debtor, this question will arise, whether he paid that debt as God, or man, or both?”—Wm. Penn. “This Lord Jesus Christ, the heavenly Man, the Emmanuel, God with us, we own and believe in: he whom the high priests raged against,” &c.—George Fox. “Christ, and Him crucified, was the Alpha and Omega of all his addresses, the fountain and foundation of his hope and trust.”—Experience of Paul, p. 399. “‘Christ and Him crucified’ is the head, and only head, of the church.”—Denison’s Sermon. “But if ‘Christ and Him crucified’ are the burden of the ministry, such disastrous results are all avoided.”—Ib. “He never let fall the least intimation, that himself, or any other person, whomsoever, was the object of worship.”—Hannah Adams’s View, p. 250. “Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine.”—1 Tim., v, 17. “Our Shepherd, him who is styled King of saints, will assuredly give his saints the victory.”—Sermon. “It may seem odd to talk of we subscribers”—Fowlers True Eng. Gram., p. 20. “And they shall have none to bury them, them, their wives, nor their sons, nor their daughters; for I will pour their wickedness upon them.”—Jeremiah, xiv, 16. “Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you Epaphroditus, my brother, and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier, but your messenger, and he that ministered to my wants.”—Philippians, ii, 25.

“Amidst the tumult of the routed train,
 The sons of false Antimachus were slain;
 He, who for bribes his faithless counsels sold,
 And voted Helen’s stay for Paris’ gold.”—Pope, Iliad, B. xi. l. 161.

“See the vile King his iron sceptre bear—
 His only praise attends the pious Heir;
 He, in whose soul the virtues all conspire,
 The best good son, from the worst wicked sire.”

—DR. LOWTH: Union Poems, p. 19.

“Then from thy lips poured forth a joyful song
 To thy Redeemer!—yea, it poured along
 In most melodious energy of praise,
 To God, the Saviour, he of ancient days.”—Arm Chair, p. 15.

RULE IV.—POSSESSIVES.

A Noun or a Pronoun in the possessive case, is governed by the name of the thing possessed: as, “God’s mercy prolongs man’s life.”—Allen.

“Theirs is the vanity, the learning thine;
Touched by thy hand, again Rome’s glories shine.”—Pope.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE IV.

OBS. 1.—Though the ordinary syntax of the possessive case is sufficiently plain and easy, there is perhaps, among all the puzzling and disputable points of grammar, nothing more difficult of decision, than are some questions that occur respecting the right management of this case. That its usual construction is both clearly and properly stated in the foregoing rule, is what none will doubt or deny. But how many and what exceptions to this rule ought to be allowed, or whether any are justly demanded or not, are matters about which there may be much diversity of opinion. Having heretofore published the rule without any express exceptions, I am not now convinced that it is best to add any; yet are there three different modes of expression which might be plausibly exhibited in that character. Two of these would concern only the parser; and, for that reason, they seem not to be very important. The other involves the approval or reprehension of a great multitude of very common expressions, concerning which our ablest grammarians differ in opinion, and our most popular digest plainly contradicts itself. These points are; first, the apposition of possessives, and the supposed ellipses which may affect that construction; secondly, the government of the possessive case after is, was, &c., when the ownership of a thing is simply affirmed or denied; thirdly, the government of the possessive by a participle, as such—that is, while it retains the government and adjuncts of a participle.

OBS. 2.—The apposition of one possessive with an other, (as, “For David my servant’s sake,”) might doubtless be consistently made a formal exception to the direct government of the possessive by its controlling noun. But this apposition is only a sameness of construction, so that what governs the one, virtually governs the other. And if the case of any noun or pronoun is known and determined by the rule or relation of apposition, there can be no need of an exception to the foregoing rule for the purpose of parsing it, since that purpose is already answered by rule third. If the reader, by supposing an ellipsis which I should not, will resolve any given instance of this kind into something else than apposition, I have already shown him that some great grammarians have differed in the same way before. Useless ellipses, however, should never be supposed; and such perhaps is the following: “At Mr. Smith’s [who is] the bookseller.”—See Dr. Priestley’s Gram., p. 71.

OBS. 3.—In all our Latin grammars, the verb sum, fui, esse, to be, is said (though not with strict propriety) sometimes to signify possession, property, or duty, and in that sense to govern the genitive case: as, “Est regis,”—“It is the king’s.”—“Hominis est errare,”—“It is man’s to err.”—“Pecus est Melibœi,”—“The flock is Meliboeus’s.” And sometimes, with like import, this verb, expressed or understood, may govern the dative; as, “Ego [sum] dilecto meo, et dilectus meus [est] mihi.”—Vulgate. “I am my beloved’s, and my beloved is mine.”—Solomon’s Song, vi, 3. Here, as both the genitive and the dative are expressed in English by the possessive, if the former are governed by the verb, there seems to be precisely the same reason from the nature of the expression, and an additional one from analogy, for considering the latter to be so too. But all the annotators upon the Latin syntax suggest, that the genitive thus put after sum or est, is really governed, not by the verb, but by some noun understood; and with this idea, of an ellipsis in the construction, all our English grammarians appear to unite. They might not, however, find it very easy to tell by what noun the word beloved's or mine is governed, in the last example above; and so of many others, which are used in the same way: as, "There shall nothing die of all that is the children's of Israel."—Exod., ix, 4. The Latin here is, "Ut nihil omnino pereat ex his quæ pertinent ad filios Israel."—Vulgate. That is,—“of all those which belong to the children of Israel.”

“For thou art Freedom's now—and Fame's,
One of the few, the immortal names,
That were not born to die.”—HALLECK: Marco Bozzaris.

OBS. 4.—Although the possessive case is always intrinsically an adjunct and therefore incapable of being used or comprehended in any sense that is positively abstract; yet we see that there are instances in which it is used with a certain degree of abstraction,—that is, with an actual separation from the name of the thing possessed; and that accordingly there are, in the simple personal pronouns, (where such a distinction is most needed,) two different forms of the case; the one adapted to the concrete, and the other to the abstract construction. That form of the pronoun, however, which is equivalent in sense to the concrete and the noun, is still the possessive case, and nothing more; as, “All mine are thine, and thine are mine.”—John, xvii, 10. For if we suppose this equivalence to prove such a pronoun to be something more than the possessive case, as do some grammarians, we must suppose the same thing respecting the possessive case of a noun, whenever the relation of ownership or possession is simply affirmed or denied with such a noun put last: as, “For all things are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's.”—1 Cor., iii, 21. By the second example placed under the rule, I meant to suggest, that the possessive case, when placed before or after this verb, (be,) might be parsed as being governed by the nominative; as we may suppose “theirs” to be governed by “vanity,” and “thine” by “learning,” these nouns being the names of the things possessed. But then we encounter a difficulty, whenever a pronoun happens to be the nominative; as, “Therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's”—1 Cor., vi, 20. Here the common resort would be to some ellipsis; and yet it must be confessed, that this mode of interpretation cannot but make some difference in the sense: as, “If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed.”—Gal., iii, 29. Here some may think the meaning to be, “If ye be Christ's seed, or children.” But a truer version of the text would be, “If ye are of Christ, then are ye Abraham's seed.”—“Que si vous êtes à Christ, vous êtes donc la postérité d'Abraham.”—French Bible.

OBS. 5.—Possession is the having of something, and if the possessive case is always an adjunct, referring either directly or indirectly to that which constitutes it a possessive, it would seem but reasonable, to limit the government of this case to that part of speech which is understood substantively—that is, to “the name of the thing possessed.” Yet, in violation of this restriction, many grammarians admit, that a participle, with the regimen and adjuncts of a participle, may govern the possessive case; and some of them, at the same time, with astonishing inconsistency, aver, that the possessive case before a participle converts the latter into a noun, and necessarily deprives it of its regimen. Whether participles are worthy to form an exception to my rule or not, this palpable contradiction is one of the gravest faults of L. Murray's code of syntax. After copying from Lowth the doctrine that a participle with an article before it becomes a noun, and must drop the government and adjuncts of a participle, this author informs us, that the same principles are applicable to the pronoun and participle: as, “Much depends on their observing of the rule, and error will be the consequence of their neglecting of it;” in stead of, “their observing the rule,” and “their neglecting it.” And this doctrine he applies, with yet more positiveness, to the noun and participle; as if the error were still more glaring, to make an active participle govern a possessive noun; saying, “We shall perceive this more clearly, if we substitute a noun for the pronoun: as, ‘Much depends upon Tyro’s observing of the rule,’ &c.; which is the same as, ‘Much depends on Tyro’s observance of the rule.’ But, as this construction sounds rather harshly, it would, in general, be better to express the sentiment in the following, or some other form: ‘Much depends on the rule’s being observed; and error will be the consequence of its being neglected? or—‘on observing the rule; and—of neglecting it.’”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 193; Ingersoll’s, 199; and others.

OBS. 6.—Here it is assumed, that “their observing the rule,” or “Tyro’s observing the rule,” is an ungrammatical phrase; and, several different methods being suggested for its correction, a preference is at length given to what is perhaps not less objectionable than the original phrase itself. The last form offered, “on observing the rule,” &c., is indeed correct enough in itself; but, as a substitute for the other, it is both inaccurate and insufficient. It merely omits the possessive case, and leaves the action of the participle undetermined in respect to the agent. For the possessive case before a real participle, denotes not the possessor of something, as in other instances, but the agent of the action, or the subject of the being or passion; and the simple question here is, whether this extraordinary use of the possessive case is, or is not, such an idiom of our language as ought to be justified. Participles may become nouns, if we choose to use them substantively; but can they govern the possessive case before them, while they govern also the objective after them, or while they have a participial meaning which is qualified by adverbs? If they can, Lowth, Murray, and others, are wrong in supposing the foregoing phrases to be ungrammatical, and in teaching that the possessive case before a participle converts it into a noun; and if they cannot, Priestley, Murray, Hiley, Wells, Weld, and others, are wrong in supposing that a participle, or a phrase beginning with a participle, may properly govern the possessive case. Compare Murray’s seventh note under his Rule 10th, with the second under his Rule 14th. The same contradiction is taught by many other compilers. See Smith’s New Grammar, pp. 152 and 162; Comly’s Gram., 91 and 108; Ingersoll’s, 180 and 199.

OBS. 7.—Concerning one of the forms of expression which Murray approves and prefers, among his corrections above, the learned doctors Lowth and Campbell appear to have formed very different opinions. The latter, in the chapter which, in his Philosophy of Rhetoric, he devotes to disputed points in syntax, says: “There is only one other observation of Dr. Lowth, on which, before I conclude this article, I must beg leave to offer some remarks. ‘Phrases like the following, though very common, are improper: Much depends upon the rule’s being observed; and error will be the consequence of its being neglected. For here is a noun and a pronoun representing it, each in the possessive case, that is, under the government of another noun, but without other noun to govern it: for being observed, and being neglected, are not nouns: nor can you supply the place of the possessive case by the preposition of before the noun or pronoun.” For my part,” continues Campbell, “notwithstanding what is here very speciously urged, I am not satisfied that there is any fault in the phrases censured. They appear to me to be perfectly in the idiom of our tongue, and such as on some occasions could not easily be avoided, unless by recurring to circumlocution, an expedient which invariably tends to enervate the expression.”—Philosophy of Rhetoric, B. ii, Ch. iv, p. 234.

---

* For this quotation, Dr. Campbell gives, in his margin, the following reference: “Introduction, &c., Sentences, Note on the 6th Phrase.” But in my edition of Dr. Lowth’s Introduction to English Grammar, (a Philadelphia edition of 1799,) I do not find the passage. Perhaps it has been omitted in consequence of Campbell’s criticism, of which I here cite but a part.—G. BROWN.

OBS. 8.—Dr. Campbell, if I understand his argument, defends the foregoing expressions against the objections of Dr. Lowth, not on the ground that participles as such may govern the possessive case, but on the supposition that as the simple active participle may become a noun, and in that character govern the possessive case, so may the passive participle, and with equal propriety, notwithstanding it consists of two or more words, which must in this construction be considered as forming “one compound noun.” I am not sure that he means to confine himself strictly to this latter ground, but if he does, his position cannot be said in any respect to contravene my rule for the possessive case. I do not, however, agree with him, either in the opinion which he offers, or in the negative which he attempts to prove. In view of the two examples, “Much depends upon the rule’s being observed,” and, “Much depends upon their observing of the rule,” he says: “Now, although I allow both the modes of expression to be good, I think the first simpler and better than the second.” Then, denying all faults, he proceeds: “Let us consider whether the former be liable to any objections, which do not equally affect the latter.” But in his argument, he considers only the objections offered by Lowth, which indeed he sufficiently refutes. Now to me there appear to be other objections, which are better founded. In the first place, the two sentences are not equivalent in meaning; hence the preference suggested by this critic and others, is absurd. Secondly, a compound noun formed of two or three words without any hyphen, is at best such an anomaly, as we ought rather to avoid than to prefer. If these considerations do not positively condemn the former construction, they ought at least to prevent it from displacing the latter; and seldom is either to be preferred to the regular noun, which we can limit by the article or the possessive at pleasure: as, “Much depends on an observance of the rule.”—“Much depends on their observance of the rule.” Now these two sentences are equivalent to the two former, but not to each other; and, vice versa: that is, the two former are equivalent to these, but not to each other.*

OBS. 9.—From Dr. Campbell’s commendation of Lowth, as having “given some excellent directions for preserving a proper distinction between the noun and the gerund,”—that is, between the participial noun and the participle,—it is fair to infer that he meant to preserve it himself; and yet, in the argument above mentioned, he appears to have carelessly framed one ambiguous or very erroneous sentence, from which, as I

---

* By some grammarians it is presumed to be consistent with the nature of participles to govern the possessive case; and Hiley, if he is to be understood literally, assumes it as an “established principle,” that they all do so! “Participles govern nouns and pronouns in the possessive case, and at the same time, if derived from transitive verbs, require the noun or pronoun following to be in the objective case, without the intervention of the preposition of; as ‘Much depends on William’s observing the rule, and error will be the consequence of his neglecting it,’ or, ‘Much will depend on the rule’s being observed by William, and error will be the consequence of its being neglected.’”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 94. These sentences, without doubt, are nearly equivalent to each other in meaning. To make them exactly so, “depends” or “will depend” must be changed in tense, and “its being neglected” must be “its being neglected by him.” But who that has looked at the facts in the case, or informed himself on the points here in dispute, will maintain that either the awkward phraseology of the latter example, or the mixed and questionable construction of the former, or the extensive rule under which they are here presented, is among “the established principles and best usages of the English language?”—Ib., p. 1.

imagine, his views of this matter have been misconceived, and by which Murray and all his modifiers have been furnished with an example wherewith to confound this distinction, and also to contradict themselves. The sentence is this: “Much will depend on your pupil’s composing, but more on his reading frequently.”—Philos. of Rhet., p. 235. Volumes innumerable have gone abroad, into our schools and elsewhere, which pronounce this sentence to be “correct and proper.” But after all, what does it mean? Does the adverb “frequently” qualify the verb “will depend” expressed in the sentence? or “will depend” understood after more? or both? or neither? Or does this adverb qualify the action of “reading?” or the action of “composing?” or both? or neither? But composing and reading, if they are mere nouns, cannot properly be qualified by any adverb; and, if they are called participles, the question recurs respecting the possessives. Besides, composing, as a participle, is commonly transitive; nor is it very fit for a noun, without some adjunct. And, when participles become nouns, their government (it is said) falls upon of, and their adverbs are usually converted into adjectives; as, “Much will depend on your pupil’s composing of themes; but more, on his frequent reading.” This may not be the author’s meaning, for the example was originally composed as a mere mock sentence, or by way of “experiment,” and one may doubt whether its meaning was ever at all thought of by the philosopher. But, to make it a respectable example, some correction there must be; for, surely, no man can have any clear idea to communicate, which he cannot better express, than by imitating this loose phraseology. It is scarcely more correct, than to say, “Much will depend on an author’s using, but more on his learning frequently.” Yet is it commended as a model, either entire or in part, by Murray, Ingersoll, Fisk, R. C. Smith, Cooper, Lennie, Hiley, Bullions, C. Adams, A. H. Weld, and I know not how many other school critics.

OBS. 10.—That singular notion, so common in our grammars, that a participle and its adjuncts may form “one name” or “substantive phrase,” and so govern the possessive case, where it is presumed the participle itself could not, is an invention worthy to have been always ascribed to its true author. For this doctrine, as I suppose, our grammarians are indebted to Dr. Priestley. In his grammar it stands thus: “When an entire clause of a sentence, beginning with a participle of the present tense, is used as one name, or to express one idea, or circumstance, the noun on which it depends may be put in the genitive case. Thus, instead of saying, What is the meaning of this lady holding up her train, i. e. what is the meaning of the lady in holding up her train, we may say, What is the meaning of this lady’s holding up her train; just as we say, What is the meaning of this lady’s dress, &c. So we may either say, I remember it being reckoned a great exploit; or, perhaps more elegantly, I remember its being reckoned, &c.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 69. Now, to say nothing of errors in punctuation, capitals, &c., there is scarcely any thing in all this passage, that is either conceived or worded properly. Yet, coining from a Doctor of Laws, and Fellow of the Royal Society, it is readily adopted by Murray, and for his sake by others; and so, with all its blunders, the vain gloss passes uncensured into the schools, as a rule and model for elegant composition. Dr. Priestley pretends to appreciate the difference between participles and participial nouns, but he rather contrives a fanciful distinction in the sense, than a real one in the construction. His only note on this point,—a note about the “horse running to-day,” and the “horse’s running to-day,”—I shall leave till we come to the syntax of participles.

OBS. 11.—Having prepared the reader to understand the origin of what is to follow, I now cite from L. Murray’s code a paragraph which appears to be contradictory to his own doctrine, as suggested in the fifth observation above; and not only so, it is irreconcilable with any proper distinction between the participle and the participial noun. “When an entire clause of a sentence, beginning with a participle of the present tense, is used as one name, or to express one idea or circumstance, the noun on which it depends may be put in the genitive case; thus, instead of saying, ‘What is the reason of this person dismissing his servant so hastily?’ that is, ‘What is the reason of this person, in dismissing his servant so hastily?’ we may say, and perhaps ought to say, ‘What is the reason of this person’s dismissing of his servant so hastily?’ Just as we say, ‘What is the reason of this person’s hasty dismissal of his servant?’ So also, we say, ‘I remember it being reckoned a great exploit;’ or more properly, ‘I remember its being reckoned,’ &c. The following sentence is correct and proper: ‘Much will depend on the pupil’s composing, but more on his reading frequently.’ It would not be accurate to say, ‘Much will depend on the pupil composing.’ &c. We also properly say; ‘This will be the effect of the pupil’s composing frequently;’ instead of, ‘Of the pupil composing frequently.’ The participle, in such constructions, does the office of a substantive; and it should therefore have a CORRESPONDENT REGIMEN.”—Murray’s Gram., Rule 10th, Note 7; Ingersoll’s, p. 180; Fisk’s, 108; R. C. Smith’s, 152; Alger’s, 61; Merchant’s, 84. See also Weld’s Gram., 2d Ed., p. 150; “Abridged Ed.,” 117.*

OBS. 12.—Now, if it were as easy to prove that a participle, as such, or (what amounts to the same thing) a phrase beginning with a participle, ought never to govern the possessive case, as it is to show that every part and parcel of the foregoing citations from Priestley, Murray, and others, is both weakly conceived and badly written, I should neither have detained the reader so long on this topic, nor ever have placed it among the most

---

* What, in Weld’s “Abridged Edition,” is improperly called a “participial noun,” was, in his “original work,” still more erroneously termed “a participial clause.” This gentleman, who has lately amended his general rule for possessives by wrongfully copying or imitating mine, has also as widely varied his conception of the participial—“object possessed,” but, in my judgement, a change still greater might not be amiss. “The possessive is often governed by a participial clause; as, much will depend on the pupil’s composing frequently. Pupil’s is governed by the clause, ‘composing frequently.’ NOTE.—The sign (‘s) should be annexed to the word governed by the participial clause following it.”—Weld’s Gram., 2d Edition, p. 150. Again: “The possessive is often governed by a participial noun; as, Much will depend on the pupil’s composing frequently. Pupil’s is governed by the participial noun composing. NOTE.—The sign (‘s) should be annexed to the word governed by the participial noun following it.”—Weld’s Gram., Abridged, p. 117. Choosing the possessive case, where, both by analogy and by authority, the objective would be quite as grammatical, if not more so; destroying, as far as possible, all syntactical distinction between the participle and the participial noun, by confounding them purposely, even in name; this author, like Wells, whom he too often imitates, takes no notice of the question here discussed, and seems quite unconscious that participles partly made nouns can produce false syntax. To the foregoing instructions, he subjoins the following comment, as a marginal note: “The participle used as a noun, still retains its verbal properties, and may govern the objective case, or be modified by an adverb or adjunct, like the verb from which it is derived.”—Ibid. When one part of speech is said to be used as an other, the learner may be greatly puzzled to understand to which class the given word belongs. If “the participle used as a noun, still retains its verbal properties,” it is, manifestly, not a noun, but a participle still; not a participial noun, but a nounal participle, whether the thing be allowable or not. Hence the teachings just cited are inconsistent. Wells says, “Participles are often used in the sense of nouns; as, ‘There was again the smacking of whips, the clattering of hoofs, and the glittering of harness.’—IRVING.”—School Gram., p. 154. This is not well stated; because these are participial nouns, and not “participles.” What Wells calls “participial nouns,” differ from these, and are all spurious, all mongrels, all participles rather than nouns. In regard to possessives before participles, no instructions appear to be more defective than those of this gentleman. His sole rule supposes the pupil always to know when and why the possessive is proper, and only instructs him not to form it without the sign! It is this: “When a noun or a pronoun, preceding a participle used as a noun, is properly in the possessive case, the sign of possession should not be omitted.”—School Gram., p. 121. All the examples put under this rule, are inappropriate: each will mislead the learner. Those which are called “Correct,” are, I think erroneous; and those which are called “False Syntax,” the adding of the possessive sign will not amend.

puzzling points of grammar. Let it be observed, that what these writers absurdly call “an entire CLAUSE of a sentence,” is found on examination to be some short PHRASE, the participle with its adjuncts, or even the participle alone, or with a single adverb only; as, “holding up her train,”—“dismissing his servant so hastily,”—“composing,”—“reading frequently,”—“composing frequently.” And each of these, with an opposite error as great, they will have to be “one name,” and to convey but “one idea,” supposing that by virtue of this imaginary oneness, it may govern the possessive case, and signify something which a “lady,” or a “person,” or a “pupil,” may consistently possess. And then, to be wrong in every thing, they suggest that any noun on which such a participle, with its adjuncts, “depends, may be put in the genitive case,” whereas, such a change is seldom, if ever, admissible, and in our language, no participle ever can depend on any other than the nominative or the objective case. Every participle so depending is an adjunct to the noun; and every possessive, in its turn, is an adjunct to the word which governs it. In respect to construction, no terms differ more than a participle which governs the possessive case, and a participle which does not. These different constructions the contrivers of the foregoing rule, here take to be equivalent in meaning; whereas they elsewhere pretend to find in them quite different significations. The meaning is sometimes very different, and sometimes very similar; but seldom, if ever, are the terms convertible. And even if they were so, and the difference were nothing, would it not be better to adhere, where we can, to the analogy of General Grammar? In Greek and Latin, a participle may agree with a noun in the genitive case; but, if we regard analogy, that genitive must be Englished, not by the possessive case, but by of and the objective; as, “Ἐπεὶ δοκιμὴν ζητεῖτε τῷ ἐν ἐμοὶ λαλοῦντος Χριστοῦ.”—“Quandoquidem experimentum quæritis in me loquentis Christi.”—Beza. “Since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me.”—2 Cor., xiii, 3. We might here, perhaps, say, “of Christ’s speaking in me,” but is not the other form better? The French version is, “Puisque vous cherchez une preuve que Christ parle par moi;” and this, too, might be imitated in English: “Since ye seek a proof that Christ speaks by me.”

OBS. 13.—As prepositions very naturally govern any of our participles except the simple perfect, it undoubtedly seems agreeable to our idiom not to disturb this government, when we would express the subject or agent of the being, action, or passion, between the preposition and the participle. Hence we find that the doer or the sufferer of the action is usually made its possessor, whenever the sense does not positively demand a different reading. Against this construction there is seldom any objection, if the participle be taken entirely as a noun, so that it may be called a participial noun; as, “Much depends on their observing of the rule.”—Lowth, Campbell, and L. Murray. On the other hand, the participle after the objective is unobjectionable, if the noun or pronoun be the leading word in sense; as, “It would be idle to profess an apprehension of serious evil resulting in any respect from the utmost publicity being given to its contents.”—London Eclectic Review, 1816. “The following is a beautiful instance of the sound of words corresponding to motion.”—Murray’s Gram., i, p. 333. “We shall discover many things partaking of both those characters.”—West’s Letters, p. 182. “To a person following the vulgar mode of omitting the comma.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 365. But, in comparing the different constructions above noticed, writers are frequently puzzled to determine, and frequently too do they err in determining, which word shall be made the adjunct, and which the leading term. Now, wherever there is much doubt which of the two forms ought to be preferred, I think we may well conclude that both are wrong; especially, if there can easily be found for the idea an other expression that is undoubtedly clear and correct. Examples: “These appear to be instances of the present participle being used passively.”—

Murray's Gram., p. 64. "These are examples of the past participle being applied in an active sense."—Ib., 64. "We have some examples of adverbs being used for substantives."—Priestley's Gram., p. 134; Murray's, 198; Ingersoll's, 206; Fisk's, 140; Smith's, 165. "By a noun, pronoun, or adjective, being prefixed to the substantive."—Murray's Gram., p. 39; also Ingersoll's, Fisk's, Alger's, Maltby's, Merchant's, Bacon's, and others. Here, if their own rule is good for any thing, these authors ought rather to have preferred the possessive case; but strike out the word being, which is not necessary to the sense, and all question about the construction vanishes. Or if any body will justify these examples as they stand, let him observe that there are others, without number, to be justified on the same principle; as, "Much depends on the rule being observed."—"Much will depend on the pupil composing frequently." Again: "Cyrus did not wait for the Babylonians coming to attack him."—Rollin, ii, 86. "Cyrus did not wait for the Babylonians' coming to attack him." That is—"for their coming," and not, "for them coming," but much better than either: "Cyrus did not wait for the Babylonians to come and attack him." Again: "To prevent his army's being enclosed and hemmed in."—Rollin, ii, 89. "To prevent his army being enclosed and hemmed in." Both are wrong. Say, "To prevent his army from being enclosed and hemmed in." Again: "As a sign of God's fulfilling the promise."—Rollin, ii, 23. "As a sign of God fulfilling the promise." Both are objectionable. Say, "As a sign that God would fulfill the promise." Again: "There is affirmative evidence for Moses's being the author of these books."—Bp. Watson's Apology, p. 28. "The first argument you produce against Moses being the author of these books."—Ib., p. 29. Both are bad. Say,—“for Moses as being the author,”—“against Moses as being the author,” &c.

OBS. 14.—Now, although thousands of sentences might easily be quoted, in which the possessive case is actually governed by a participle, and that participle not taken in every respect as a noun; yet I imagine, there are, of this kind, few examples, if any, the meaning of which might not be better expressed in some other way. There are surely none among all the examples which are presented by Priestley, Murray, and others, under their rule above. Nor would a thousand such as are there given, amount to any proof of the rule. They are all of them unreal or feigned sentences, made up for the occasion, and, like most others that are produced in the same way, made up badly—made up after some ungrammatical model. If a gentleman could possibly demand a lady's meaning in such an act as the holding-up of her train, he certainly would use none of Priestley's three questions, which, with such ridiculous and uninformative pedantry, are repeated and expounded by Latham, in his Hand-Book, §481; but would probably say, "Madam, what do you mean by holding up your train?" It was folly for the doctor to ask an other person, as if an other could guess her meaning better than he. The text with the possessive is therefore not to be corrected by inserting a hyphen and an of, after Murray's doctrine before cited; as, "What is the meaning of this lady's holding-up of her train?" Murray did well to reject this example, but as a specimen of English, his own is no better. The question which he asks, ought to have been, "Why did this person dismiss his servant so hastily?" Fisk has it in the following form: "What is the reason of this person's dismissing his servant so hastily?"—English Grammar Simplified, p. 108. This amendment of grammars omits the of which Murray and others scrupulously insert to govern the noun servant, and boldly avows at once, what their rule implies, that, "Participles are sometimes used both as verbs and as nouns at the same time; as, 'By the mind's changing the object,' &c."—Ib., p. 134; so Emmons's Gram., p. 64. But he errs as much as they, and contradicts both himself and them. For one ought rather to say, "By the mind's changing of the object;" else changing, which "does the office of a noun," has not truly "a correspondent regimen." Yet of is useless after dismissing, unless we take away the adverb by which the participle is prevented from becoming a noun. “Dismissing of his servant so hastily,” is in itself an ungrammatical phrase; and nothing but to omit either the preposition, or the two adverbs, can possibly make it right. Without the latter, it may follow the possessive; but without the former, our most approved grammars say it cannot. Some critics, however, object to the of, because the dismissing is not the servant’s act; but this, as I shall hereafter show, is no valid objection: they stickle for a false rule.

OBS. 15.—Thus these authors, differing from one another as they do, and each contradicting himself and some of the rest, are, as it would seem, all wrong in respect to the whole matter at issue. For whether the phrase in question be like Priestley’s, or like Murray’s, or like Fisk’s, it is still, according to the best authorities, unfit to govern the possessive case; because, in stead of being a substantive, it is something more than a participle, and yet they take it substantively. They form this phrase in many different fashions, and yet each man of them pretends that what he approves, is just like the construction of a regular noun: “Just as we say, ‘What is the reason of this person’s hasty dismissal of his servant.’”—Murray, Fisk, and others. “Just as we say, ‘What is the meaning of this lady’s dress,’ &c.”—Priestley. The meaning of a lady’s dress, forsooth! The illustration is worthy of the doctrine taught. “An entire clause of a sentence” substantively possessed, is sufficiently like “the meaning of a lady’s dress, &c.” Cobbett despised andsoforths, for their lack of meaning; and I find none in this one, unless it be, “of tinsel and of fustian.” This gloss therefore I wholly disapprove, judging the position more tenable, to deny, if we consequently must, that either a phrase or a participle, as such, can consistently govern the possessive case. For whatever word or term gives rise to the direct relation of property, and is rightly made to govern the possessive case, ought in reason to be a noun—ought to be the name of some substance, quality, state, action, passion, being, or thing. When therefore other parts of speech assume this relation, they naturally become nouns; as, “Against the day of my burying.”—John, xii, 7. “Till the day of his showing unto Israel.”—Luke, i, 80. “By my own showing.”—Cowper, Life, p. 22. “By a fortune of my own getting.”—Ib. “Let your yea be yea, and your nay nay.”—James, v, 12. “Prate of my whereabouts.”—Shah.

OBS. 16.—The government of possessives by “entire clauses” or “substantive phrases,” as they are sometimes called, I am persuaded, may best be disposed of, in almost every instance, by charging the construction with impropriety or awkwardness, and substituting for it some better phraseology. For example, our grammars abound with sentences like the following, and call them good English: (1.) “So we may either say, ‘I remember it being reckoned a great exploit;’ or perhaps more elegantly, ‘I remember its being reckoned a great exploit.’”—Priestley, Murray, and others. Here both modes are wrong; the latter, especially; because it violates a general rule of syntax, in regard to the case of the noun exploit. Say, “I remember it was reckoned a great exploit.” Again: (2.) “We also properly say, ‘This will be the effect of the pupil’s composing frequently.’”—Murray’s Gram., p. 179; and others. Better, “This will be the effect, if the pupil compose frequently.” But this sentence is fictitious, and one may doubt whether good authors can be found who use compose or composing as being intransitive. (3.) “What can be the reason of the committee’s having delayed this business?”—Murray’s Key, p. 223. Say, “Why have the committee delayed this business?” (4.) “What can be the cause of the parliament’s neglecting so important a business?”—Ib., p. 195. Say, “Why does the parliament neglect so important a business?” (5.) “The time of William’s making the experiment, at length arrived.”—Ib., p. 195. Say, “The time for William to make the experiment, at length arrived.” (6.) “I hope this is the last time of my acting so imprudently.”—Ib., p. 263. Say, “I hope I shall never again act so imprudently.” (7.) “If I were to give a reason for their looking so well, it would be, that they rise early.”—Ib., p. 263. Say, “I should attribute their healthful appearance to their early rising.” (8.) “The tutor said, that diligence and application to study were necessary to our becoming good scholars.”—Cooper’s Gram., p. 145. Here is an anomaly in the construction of the noun scholars. Say, “The tutor said, that diligent application to study was necessary to our success in learning.” (9.) “The reason of his having acted in the manner he did, was not fully explained.”—Murray’s Key, p. 263. This author has a very singular mode of giving “STRENGTH” to weak sentences. The faulty text here was. “The reason why he acted in the manner he did, was not fully explained.”—Murray’s Exercises, p. 131. This is much better than the other, but I should choose to say. “The reason of his conduct was not fully explained.” For, surely, the “one idea or circumstance” of his “having acted in the manner in which he did act,” may be quite as forcibly named by the one word conduct, as by all this verbiage, this “substantive phrase,” or “entire clause,” of such cumbrous length.

OBS. 17.—The foregoing observations tend to show, that the government of possessives by participles, is in general a construction little to be commended, if at all allowed. I thus narrow down the application of the principle, but do not hereby determine it to be altogether wrong. There are other arguments, both for and against the doctrine, which must be taken into the account, before we can fully decide the question. The double construction which may be given to infinitive verbs; the Greek idiom which allows to such verbs an article before them and an objective after them; the mixed character of the Latin gerund, part noun, part verb; the use or substitution of the participle in English for the gerund in Latin;—all these afford so many reasons by analogy, for allowing that our participle—except it be the perfect—since it participates the properties of a verb and a noun, as well as those of a verb and an adjective, may unite in itself a double construction, and be taken substantively in one relation, and participially in an other. Accordingly some grammarians so define it; and many writers so use it; both parties disregarding the distinction between the participle and the participial noun, and justifying the construction of the former, not only as a proper participle after its noun, and as a gerundive after its preposition; not only as a participial adjective before its noun, and as a participial noun, in the regular syntax of a noun; but also as a mixed term, in the double character of noun and participle at once. Nor are these its only uses; for, after an auxiliary, it is the main verb; and in a few instances, it passes into a preposition, an adverb, or something else. Thus have we from the verb a single derivative, which fairly ranks with about half the different parts of speech, and takes distinct constructions even more numerous; and yet these authors scruple not to make of it a hybridous thing, neither participle nor noun, but constructively both. “But this,” says Lowth, “is inconsistent; let it be either the one or the other, and abide by its proper construction.”—Gram., p. 82. And so say I—as asserting the general principle, and leaving the reader to judge of its exceptions. Because, without this mongrel character, the participle in our language has a multiplicity of uses unparalleled in any other; and because it seldom happens that the idea intended by this double construction may not be otherwise expressed more elegantly. But if it sometimes seem proper that the gerundive participle should be allowed to govern the possessive case, no exception to my rule is needed for the parsing of such possessive; because whatever is invested with such government, whether rightly or wrongly, is assumed as “the name of something possessed.”

OBS. 18.—The reader may have observed, that in the use of participial nouns, the distinction of voice in the participle is sometimes disregarded. Thus, “Against the day of my burying,” means, “Against the day of my being buried.” But in this instance the usual noun burial or funeral would have been better than either: “Against the day of my burial.” I. e., “In diem funerationis meæ.”—Beza. “In diem sepulturæ meæ.”—Leusden. “Εἰς τὴν ἡμέραν τοῦ ἐνταφιασμοῦ μου.”—John, xii, 7. In an other text, this noun is very properly used for the Greek infinitive, and the Latin gerund; as, “For my burial.”—Matt., xxvi, 12. “Ad funerandum me.”—Beza. “Ad sepeliendum me.”—Leusden. Literally: “For burying me.” “Πρὸς τὸ ἐνταφιάσαι με.” Nearly: “For to have me buried.” Not all that is allowable, is commendable; and if either of the uncompounded terms be found a fit substitute for the compound participial noun, it is better to dispense with the latter, on account of its dissimilarity to other nouns: as, “Which only proceed upon the question’s being begged.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. iii, p. 361. Better, “Which only proceed upon a begging of the question.” “The king’s having conquered in the battle, established his throne.”—Nixon’s Parser, p. 128. Better, “The king’s conquering in the battle;” for, in the participial noun, the distinction of tense, or of previous completion, is as needless as that of voice. “The fleet’s having sailed prevented mutiny.”—Ib., p. 78. Better, “The sailing of the fleet,”—or, “The fleet’s sailing” &c. “The prince’s being murdered excited their pity.”—Ibid. Better, “The prince’s murder excited their indignation.”

OBS. 19.—In some instances, as it appears, not a little difficulty is experienced by our grammarians, respecting the addition or the omission of the possessive sign, the terminational apostrophic s, which in nouns is the ordinary index of the possessive case. Let it be remembered that every possessive is governed, or ought to be governed, by some noun expressed or understood, except such as (without the possessive sign) are put in apposition with others so governed; and for every possessive termination there must be a separate governing word, which, if it is not expressed, is shown by the possessive sign to be understood. The possessive sign itself may and must be omitted in certain cases; but, because it can never be inserted or discarded without suggesting or discarding a governing noun, it is never omitted by ellipsis, as Buchanan, Murray, Nixon, and many others, erroneously teach. The four lines of Note 2d below, are sufficient to show, in every instance, when it must be used, and when omitted; but Murray, after as many octavo pages on the point, still leaves it perplexed and undetermined. If a person knows what he means to say, let him express it according to the Note, and he will not fail to use just as many apostrophes and Esses as he ought. How absurd then is that common doctrine of ignorance, which Nixon has gathered from Allen and Murray, his chief oracles! “If several nouns in the genitive case, are immediately connected by a conjunction, the apostrophic s is annexed to the last, but understood to the rest; as, Neither John (i. e. John’s) nor Eliza’s books.”—English Parser, p. 115. The author gives fifteen other examples like this, all of them bad English, or at any rate, not adapted to the sense which he intends!

OBS. 20.—The possessive case generally comes immediately before the governing noun, expressed or understood; as, “All nature’s difference keeps all nature’s peace.”—Pope. “Lady! be thine (i. e., thy walk) the Christian’s walk.”—Chr. Observer. “Some of Æschylus’s [plays] and Euripides’s plays are opened in this manner.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 459. And in this order one possessive sometimes governs another: as, “Peter’s wife’s mother,”—“Paul’s sister’s son.”—Bible. But, to this general principle of arrangement, there are some exceptions: as,

1. When the governing noun has an adjective, this may intervene; as, “Flora’s earliest smells.”—Milton. “Of man’s first disobedience.”—Id. In the following phrase from the Spectator, “Of Will’s last night’s lecture,” it is not very clear, whether Will’s is governed

- by night's or by lecture; yet it violates a general principle of our grammar, to suppose the latter; because, on this supposition, two possessives, each having the sign, will be governed by one noun.
2. When the possessive is affirmed or denied; as, "The book is mine, and not John's." But here the governing noun may be supplied in its proper place; and, in some such instances, it must be, else a pronoun or the verb will be the only governing word: as, "Ye are Christ's [disciples, or people]; and Christ is God's" [son].—St. Paul. Whether this phraseology is thus elliptical or not, is questionable. See Obs. 4th, in this series.
  3. When the case occurs without the sign, either by apposition or by connexion; as, "In her brother Absalom's house."—Bible. "David and Jonathan's friendship."—Allen. "Adam and Eve's morning hymn."—Dr. Ash. "Behold the heaven, and the heaven of heavens, is the Lord's thy God."—Deut., x, 14. "For peace and quiet's sake."—Cowper. "To the beginning of King James the First's reign."—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 32.

OBS. 21.—The possessive case is in general (though not always) equivalent to the preposition of and the objective; as, "Of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son."—John, xiii, 2. "To Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon."—Ib., xiii, 26. On account of this one-sided equivalence, many grammarians erroneously reckon the latter to be a "genitive case" as well as the former. But they ought to remember, that the preposition is used more frequently than the possessive, and in a variety of senses that cannot be interpreted by this case; as, "Of some of the books of each of these classes of literature, a catalogue will be given at the end of the work."—L. Murray's Gram., p. 178. Murray calls this a "laborious mode of expression," and doubtless it might be a little improved by substituting in for the third of; but my argument is, that the meaning conveyed cannot be expressed by possessives. The notion that of forms a genitive case, led Priestley to suggest, that our language admits a "double genitive;" as, "This book of my friend's."—Priestley's Gram., p. 71. "It is a discovery of Sir Isaac Newton's."—Ib., p. 72. "This exactness of his."—STERNE: ib. The doctrine has since passed into nearly all our grammars; yet is there no double case here, as I shall presently show.

OBS. 22.—Where the governing noun cannot be easily mistaken, it is often omitted by ellipsis: as, "At the alderman's" [house];—"St. Paul's" [church];—"A book of my brother's" [books];—"A subject of the emperor's" [subjects];—"A friend of mine;" i. e., one of my friends. "Shall we say that Sacrificing was a pure invention of Adam's, or of Cain or Abel's?"—Leslie, on Tythes, p. 93. That is—of Adam's inventions, or of Cain or Abel's inventions. The Rev. David Blair, unable to resolve this phraseology to his own satisfaction, absurdly sets it down among what he calls "ERRONEOUS OR VULGAR PHRASES." His examples are these: "A poem of Pope's;"—"A soldier of the king's;"—"That is a horse of my father's."—Blair's Practical Gram., p. 110, 111. He ought to have supplied the plural nouns, poems, soldiers, horses. This is the true explanation of all the "double genitives" which our grammarians discover; for when the first noun is partitive, it naturally suggests more or other things of the same kind, belonging to this possessor; and when such is not the meaning, this construction is improper. In the following example, the noun eyes is understood after his:

"Ev'n his, the warrior's eyes, were forced to yield,
That saw, without a tear, Pharsalia's field."—Rowe's Lucan, B. viii, l. 144.

OBS. 23.—When two or more nouns of the possessive form are in any way connected, they usually refer to things individually different but of the same name; and when such is the meaning, the governing noun, which we always suppress somewhere to avoid tautology, is understood wherever the sign is added without it; as, “A father’s or mother’s sister is an aunt.”—Dr. Webster. That is, “A father’s sister or a mother’s sister is an aunt.” “In the same commemorative acts of the senate, were thy name, thy father’s, thy brother’s, and the emperor’s.”—Zenobia, Vol. i, p. 231.

“From Stiles’s pocket into Nokes’s” [pocket].—Hudibras, B. iii, C. iii, l. 715.

“Add Nature’s, Custom’s, Reason’s, Passion’s strife.”—Pope, Brit. Poets, Vol. vi, p. 383.

It will be observed that in all these examples the governing noun is singular; and, certainly, it must be so, if, with more than one possessive sign, we mean to represent each possessor as having or possessing but one object. If the noun be made plural where it is expressed, it will also be plural where it is implied. It is good English to say, “A father’s or mother’s sisters are aunts;” but the meaning is, “A father’s sisters or a mother’s sisters are aunts.” But a recent school critic teaches differently, thus: “When different things of the same name belong to different possessors, the sign should be annexed to each; as, Adams’s, Davies’s, and Perkins’ Arithmetics; i. e., three different books.”—Spencer’s Gram., p. 47. Here the example is fictitious, and has almost as many errors as words. It would be much better English to say, “Adams’s, Davies’s, and Perkins’s Arithmetic,” though the objective form with of would, perhaps, be still more agreeable for these peculiar names. Spencer, whose Grammar abounds with useless repetitions, repeats his note elsewhere, with the following illustrations: “E. g. Olmstead’s and Comstock’s Philosophies. Gould’s Adam’s Latin Grammar.”—Ib., p. 106. The latter example is no better suited to his text, than “Peter’s wife’s mother,” and the former is fit only to mean, “Olmstead’s Philosophies and Comstock’s Philosophies.” To speak of the two books only, say, “Olmstead’s Philosophy and Comstock’s.”

OBS. 24.—The possessive sign is sometimes annexed to that part of a compound name, which is, of itself, in the objective case; as, “At his father-in-law’s residence.” Here, “At the residence of his father-in-law,” would be quite as agreeable; and, as for the plural, one would hardly think of saying, “Men’s wedding parties are usually held at their fathers-in-law’s houses.” When the compound is formed with of, to prevent a repetition of this particle, the possessive sign is sometimes added as above; and yet the hyphen is not commonly inserted in the phrase, as I think it ought to be. Examples: “The duke of Bridgewater’s canal;”—“The bishop of Landaff’s excellent book;”—“The Lord mayor of London’s authority;”—“The captain of the guard’s house.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 176. “The Bishop of Cambray’s writings on eloquence.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 345. “The bard of Lomond’s lay is done.”—Queen’s Wake, p. 99. “For the kingdom of God’s sake.”—Luke, xviii, 29. “Of the children of Israel’s half.”—Numbers, xxxi, 30. From these examples it would seem, that the possessive sign has a less intimate alliance with the possessive case, than with the governing noun; or, at any rate, a dependence less close than that of the objective noun which here assumes it. And since the two nouns here so intimately joined by of, cannot be explained separately as forming two cases, but must be parsed together as one name governed in the usual way, I should either adopt some other phraseology, or write the compound terms with hyphens, thus: “The Duke-of-Bridgewater’s canal;”—“The Bishop-of-Landaff’s excellent book;”—“The Bard-of-Lomond’s lay is done.” But there is commonly some better mode of correcting such phrases. With deference to Murray and others, “The King of Great Britain's prerogative," * is but an untoward way of saying, "The prerogative of the British King;" and, "The Lord mayor of London's authority," may quite as well be written, "The authority of London's Lord Mayor." Blair, who for brevity robs the Archbishop of half his title, might as well have said, "Fenelon's writings on eloquence." "Propter regnum Dei," might have been rendered, "For the kingdom of God;"—"For the sake of the kingdom of God;"—or, "For the sake of God's kingdom." And in lieu of the other text, we might say, "Of the Israelites' half."

OBS. 25.—"Little explanatory circumstances," says Priestley, "are particularly awkward between the genitive case, and the word which usually follows it; as, 'She began to extol the farmer's, as she called him, excellent understanding.' Harriet Watson, Vol. i, p. 27."—Priestley's Gram., p 174. Murray assumes this remark, and adds respecting the example, "It ought to be, 'the excellent understanding of the farmer, as she called him.'"—Murray's Gram., p. 175. Intersertions of this kind are as uncommon as they are uncouth. Murray, it seems, found none for his Exercises, but made up a couple to suit his purpose. The following might have answered as well for an other: "Monsieur D'acier observes, that Zeno's (the Founder of the Sect,) opinion was Fair and Defensible in these Points."—Colliers Antoninus, p. ii.

OBS. 26.—It is so usual a practice in our language, to put the possessive sign always and only where the two terms of the possessive relation meet, that this ending is liable to be added to any adjunct which can be taken as a part of the former noun or name; as, (1.) "The court-martial's violent proceedings." Here the plural would be courts-martial; but the possessive sign must be at the end. (2.) "In Henry the Eighth's time."—Walker's Key, Introd., p. 11. This phrase can be justified only by supposing the adjective a part of the name. Better, "In the time of Henry the Eighth." (3.) "And strengthened with a year or two's age."—Locke, on Education, p. 6. Here two's is put for two years; and, I think, improperly; because the sign is such as suits the former noun, and not the plural. Better, "And strengthened with a year's age or more." The word two however is declinable as a noun, and possibly it may be so taken in Locke's phrase. (4.) "This rule is often infringed, by the case absolute's not being properly distinguished from certain forms of expression apparently similar to it."—Murray's Gram., p. 155; Fisk's, 113; Ingersoll's, 210. Here the possessive sign, being appended to a distinct adjective, and followed by nothing that can be called a noun, is employed as absurdly as it well can be. Say, "This rule is often infringed by an improper use of the nominative absolute;" for this is precisely what these authors mean. (5.) "The participle is distinguished from the adjective by the former's expressing the idea of time, and the latter's denoting only a quality"—Murray's Gram., p. 65; Fisk's, 82; Ingersoll's, 45; Emmons's, 64; Alger's, 28. This is liable to nearly the same objections. Say, "The participle differs from an adjective by expressing the idea of time,

---

* It is remarkable, that Lindley Murray, with all his care in revising his work, did not see the inconsistency of his instructions in relation to phrases of this kind. First he copies Lowth's doctrine, literally and anonymously, from the Doctor's 17th page, thus: "When the thing to which another is said to belong, is expressed by a circumlocution, or by many terms, the sign of the possessive case is commonly added to the last term: as, 'The king of Great Britain's dominions.'"—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 45. Afterwards he condemns this: "The word in the genitive case is frequently PLACED IMPROPERLY: as, 'This fact appears from Dr. Pearson of Birmingham's experiments.' It should be, 'from the experiments of Dr. Pearson of Birmingham.'"—Ib., p. 175. And again he makes it necessary: "A phrase in which the words are so connected and dependent, as to admit of no pause before the conclusion, necessarily requires the genitive sign at or near the end of the phrase: as, 'Whose prerogative is it? It is the king of Great Britain's;' 'That is the duke of Bridgewater's canal;' '&c.—Ib., p. 276. Is there not contradiction in these instructions?

whereas the adjective denotes only a quality.” (6.) “The relatives that and as differ from who and which in the former’s not being immediately joined to the governing word.”—Nixon’s Parser, p. 140. This is still worse, because former’s, which is like a singular noun, has here a plural meaning; namely, “in the former terms’ not being,” &c. Say—“in that the former never follow the governing word.”

OBS. 27.—The possessive termination is so far from being liable to suppression by ellipsis, agreeably to the nonsense of those interpreters who will have it to be “understood” wherever the case occurs without it, that on the contrary it is sometimes retained where there is an actual suppression of the noun to which it belongs. This appears to be the case whenever the pronominal adjectives former and latter are inflected, as above. The inflection of these, however, seems to be needless, and may well be reckoned improper. But, in the following line, the adjective elegantly takes the sign; because there is an ellipsis of both nouns; poor’s being put for poor man’s, and the governing noun joys being understood after it: “The rich man’s joys increase, the poor’s decay.”—Goldsmith. So, in the following example, guilty’s is put for guilty person’s:

“Yet, wise and righteous ever, scorns to hear
The fool’s fond wishes, or the guilty’s prayer.”—Rowe’s Lucan, B. v, l. 155.

This is a poetical license; and others of a like nature are sometimes met with. Our poets use the possessive case much more frequently than prose writers, and occasionally inflect words that are altogether invariable in prose; as,

“Eager that last great chance of war he waits,
Where either’s fall determines both their fates.”—Ibid., B. vi, l. 13.

OBS. 28.—To avoid a concurrence of hissing sounds, the s of the possessive singular is sometimes omitted, and the apostrophe alone retained to mark the case: as, “For conscience’ sake.”—Bible. “Moses’ minister.”—Ib. “Felix’ room.”—Ib. “Achilles’ wrath.”—Pope. “Shiraz’ walls.”—Collins. “Epicurus’ sty.”—Beattie. “Douglas’ daughter.”—Scott. “For Douglas’ sake.”—Ib. “To his mistress’ eyebrow.”—Shak. This is a sort of poetic license, as is suggested in the 16th Observation upon the Cases of Nouns, in the Etymology. But in prose the elision should be very sparingly indulged; it is in general less agreeable, as well as less proper, than the regular form. Where is the propriety of saying, Hicks’ Sermons, Barnes’ Notes, Kames’ Elements, Adams’ Lectures, Josephus’ Works, while we so uniformly say, in Charles’s reign, St. James’s Palace, and the like? The following examples are right: “At Westminster and Hicks’s Hall.”—Hudibras. “Lord Kames’s Elements of Criticism.”—Murray’s Sequel, p. 331. “Of Rubens’s allegorical pictures.”—Hazlitt. “With respect to Burns’s early education.”—Dugald Stewart. “Isocrates’s pomp;”—“Demosthenes’s life.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 242. “The repose of Epicurus’s gods.”—Wilson’s Heb. Gram., p. 93.

“To Douglas’s obscure abode.”—Scott, L. L., C. iii, st. 28.
“Such was the Douglas’s command.”—Id., ib., C. ii, st. 36.

OBS. 29.—Some of our grammarians, drawing broad conclusions from a few particular examples, falsely teach as follows: “When a singular noun ends in ss, the apostrophe only is added; as, ‘For goodness’ sake:’ except the word witness; as, ‘The witness’s testimony.’ When a noun in the possessive case ends in ence, the s is omitted, but the apostrophe is retained; as, ‘For conscience’ sake.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 49; Hamlin’s, 16; Smith’s New

Gram., 47.* Of principles or inferences very much like these, is the whole system of “Inductive Grammar” essentially made up. But is it not plain that heiress’s, abbess’s, peeress’s, countess’s, and many other words of the same form, are as good English as witness’s? Did not Jane West write justly, “She made an attempt to look in at the dear dutchess’s?”—Letters to a Lady, p. 95. Does not the Bible speak correctly of “an ass’s head,” sold at a great price?—2 Kings, vi, 25. Is Burns also wrong, about “miss’s fine lunardi,” and “miss’s bonnet?”—Poems, p. 44. Or did Scott write inaccurately, whose guide “Led slowly through the pass’s jaws?”—Lady of the Lake, p. 121. So much for the ss; nor is the rule for the termination ence, or (as Smith has it) nce, more true. Prince’s and dunce’s are as good possessives as any; and so are the following:

“That vice should triumph, virtue vice obey;
This sprung some doubt of Providence’s sway.”—Parnell.

“And sweet Benevolence’s mild command.”—Lord Lyttleton.

“I heard the lance’s shivering crash,
As when the whirlwind rends the ash.”—Sir Walter Scott.

OBS. 30.—The most common rule now in use for the construction of the possessive case, is a shred from the old code of Latin grammar: “One substantive governs another, signifying a different thing, in the possessive or genitive case.”—L. Murray’s Rule X. This canon not only leaves occasion for an additional one respecting pronouns of the possessive case, but it is also obscure in its phraseology, and too negligent of the various modes in which nouns may come together in English. All nouns used adjectively, and many that are compounded together, seem to form exceptions to it. But who can limit or enumerate these exceptions? Different combinations of nouns have so often little or no difference of meaning, or of relation to each other, and so frequently is the very same vocal expression written variously by our best scholars, and ablest lexicographers, that in many ordinary instances it seems scarcely possible to determine who or what is right. Thus, on the authority of Johnson, one might write, a stone’s cast, or stone’s throw; but Webster has it, stones-cast, or stones-throw; Maunder, stonecast, stonethrow; Chalmers, stonescast; Worcester, stone’s-cast. So Johnson and Chalmers write stonesmickle, a bird; Webster has it, stone’s-mickle; yet, all three refer to Ainsworth as their authority, and his word is stone-smickle: Littleton has it stone-smich. Johnson and Chalmers write, popeseye and sheep’s eye; Walker, Maunder, and Worcester, popeseye and sheep’s-eye; Scott has pope’s-eye and sheepseye; Webster, pope’s-eye and sheep’s-eye, bird-eye, and birds-eye. Ainsworth has goats beard, for the name of a plant; Johnson, goatbeard; Webster, goat-beard and goats-beard. Ainsworth has prince’s feather, for the amaranth; Johnson, Chalmers, Walker, and Maunder, write it princes-feather; Webster and Worcester, princes’-feather; Bolles has it princesfeather: and here they are all wrong, for the word should be prince’s-feather. There are hundreds more of such terms; all as uncertain in their orthography as these.

OBS. 31.—While discrepancies like the foregoing abound in our best dictionaries, none of our grammars supply any hints tending to show which of these various forms we ought to prefer. Perhaps the following suggestions, together with the six Rules for the Figure of Words, in Part First, may enable the reader to decide these questions with sufficient accuracy. (1.) Two short radical nouns are apt to unite in a permanent compound, when the former, taking the sole accent, expresses the main purpose or chief characteristic of the thing named by the latter; as, teacup, sunbeam, daystar, horseman, sheepfold, houndfish, hourglass. (2.) Temporary compounds of a like nature may be formed with the hyphen, when there remain two accented syllables; as, castle-wall, bosom-friend, fellow-servant, horse-chestnut, goat-marjoram, marsh-marigold. (3.) The former of two nouns, if it be not plural, may be taken adjectively, in any relation that differs from apposition and from possession; as, “The silver cup,”—“The parent birds,”—“My pilgrim feet,”—“Thy hermit cell,”—“Two brother sergeants.” (4.) The possessive case and its governing noun, combining to form a literal name, may be joined together without either hyphen or apostrophe: as, tradesman, ratsbane, doomsday, kinswoman, craftsman. (5.) The possessive case and its governing noun, combining to form a metaphorical name, should be written with both apostrophe and hyphen; as, Job’s-tears, Jew’s-ear, bear’s-foot, colts-tooth, sheep’s-head, crane’s-bill, crab’s-eyes, hound’s-tongue, king’s-spear, lady’s-slipper, lady’s-bedstraw, &c. (6.) The possessive case and its governing noun, combining to form an adjective, whether literal or metaphorical, should generally be written with both apostrophe and hyphen; as, “Neats-foot oil,”—“Calfs-foot jelly,”—“A carp’s-tongue drill,”—“A bird’s-eye view,”—“The states’-rights party,”—“A camel’s-hair shawl.” But a triple compound noun may be formed with one hyphen only: as, “In doomsday-book;” (—Joh. Dict.;) “An armsend-lift.” Cardell, who will have all possessives to be adjectives, writes an example thus: “John’s camel’s hair girdle.”—Elements of Eng. Gram., p. 39. That is as if John’s camel had a hair girdle! (7.) When the possessive case and its governing noun merely help to form a regular phrase, the compounding of them in any fashion may be reckoned improper; thus the phrases, a day’s work, at death’s door, on New Year’s Day, a new year’s gift, All Souls’ Day, All Saints’ Day, All Fools’ Day, the saints’ bell, the heart’s blood, for dog’s meat, though often written otherwise, may best stand as they do here.

* A late grammarian tells us: “In nouns ending in es and ss, the other s is not added; as, Charles’ hat, Goodness’ sake.”—Wilcox’s Gram., p. 11. He should rather have said, “To nouns ending in es or ss, the other s is not added.” But his doctrine is worse than his syntax; and, what is remarkable, he himself forgets it in the course of a few minutes, thus: “Decline Charles. Nom. Charles, Poss. Charles’s, Obj. Charles.”—Ib., p. 12. See the like doctrine in Mulligan’s recent work on the “Structure of Language,” p. 182.

OBS. 32.—The existence of a permanent compound of any two words, does not necessarily preclude the use of the possessive relation between the same words. Thus, we may speak of a horse’s shoe or a goat’s skin, notwithstanding there are such words as horseshoe and goatskin. E.g., “That preach ye upon the housetops.”—ALGER’S BIBLE: Matt., x, 27. “Unpeg the basket on the house’s top.”—Beauties of Shak., p. 238. Webster defines frostnail, (which, under the word cork, he erroneously writes frost nail,) “A nail driven into a horse-shoe, to prevent the horse from slipping on ice.” Worcester has it, “A nail driven into a horse’s shoe, to prevent his slipping on the ice.” Johnson, “A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse’s shoes, that it may pierce the ice.” Maunder, “A nail with a sharp head driven into the horses’ shoes in frosty weather.” None of these descriptions is very well written. Say rather, “A spur-headed nail driven into a horse’s shoe to prevent him from slipping.” There is commonly some difference, and sometimes a very great one, between the compound noun and the possessive relation, and also between the radical compound and that of the possessive. Thus a harelip is not a hare’s lip, nor is a headman a headsman, or heart-ease heart’s-ease. So, according to the books, a cat-head, a cat’s-head, and a cat’s head, are three very different things; yet what Webster writes, cat-tail, Johnson, cats-tail, Walker and others, cats-tail, means but the same thing, though not a cat’s tail. Johnson’s “kingspear, Jews-ear, lady-mantle, and lady-bedstraw,” are no more proper, than Webster’s “bear’s-wort, lion’s foot, lady’s mantle, and lady’s bed-straw.” All these are wrong.

OBS. 33.—Particular examples, both of proper distinction, and of blind irregularity, under all the heads above suggested, may be quoted and multiplied indefinitely, even from our highest literary authorities; but, since nothing can be settled but by the force of principles, he who would be accurate, must resort to rules,—must consider what is analogical, and, in all doubtful cases, give this the preference. But, in grammar, particular analogies are to be respected, as well as those which are more general. For example, the noun side, in that relation which should seem to require the preceding noun to be in the possessive case, is usually compounded with it, the hyphen being used where the compound has more than two syllables, but not with two only; as, bedside, hillside, roadside, wayside, seaside, river-side, water-side, mountain-side. Some instances of the separate construction occur, but they are rare: as, “And her maidens walked along by the river’s side.”—Exodus, ii, 5. After this noun also, the possessive preposition of is sometimes omitted; as, “On this side the river;” (—Bible;) “On this side Trent.”—Cowell. Better, “On this side of the river,” &c. “Blind Bartimeus sat by the highway side, begging.”—Mark, x, 46. Here Alger more properly writes “highway-side.” In Rev., xiv, 20th, we have the unusual compound, “horse-bridles.” The text ought to have been rendered, “even unto the horses’ bridles.” Latin, “usque ad frænos equorum.” Greek, “ἄχρι τῶν χαλινῶν τῶν ἵππων.”

OBS. 34.—Correlatives, as father and son, husband and wife, naturally possess each other; hence such combinations as father’s son, and son’s father, though correct enough in thought, are redundant in expression. The whole and a part are a sort of correlatives, but the whole seems to possess its parts, more properly than any of the parts, the whole. Yet we seldom put the whole in the possessive case before its part, or parts, but rather express the relation by of; as, “a quarter of a dollar,” rather than, “a dollar’s quarter.” After the noun half, we usually suppress this preposition, if an article intervene; as, “half a dollar,” rather than, “half of a dollar,” or “a dollar’s half.” So we may say, “half the way,” for “half of the way;” but we cannot say, “half us” for “half of us.” In the phrase, “a half dollar,” the word half is an adjective, and a very different meaning is conveyed. Yet the compounds half-pint and half-penny are sometimes used to signify, the quantity of half a pint, the value of half a penny. In weight, measure, or time, the part is sometimes made possessive of the whole; as, “a pound’s weight, a yard’s length, an hour’s time.” On the contrary, we do not say, “weight’s pound, length’s yard, or time’s hour;” nor yet, “a pound of weight, a yard of length;” and rarely do we say, “an hour of time.” Pound and yard having other uses, we sometimes say, “a pound in weight, a yard in length;” though scarcely, “an hour in time.”

OBS. 35.—Between a portion of time and its correlative action, passion, or being, the possessive relation is interchangeable; so that either term may be the principal, and either, the adjunct: as, “Three years’ hard work,” or, “Three years of hard work.” Sometimes we may even put either term in either form; as, “During the ten years’ war,”—“During the ten years of war,”—“During the war of ten years,”—“During the war’s ten years.” Hence some writers, not perceiving why either word should make the other its governed adjunct, place both upon a par, as if they were in apposition; as, “Three days time.”—Brown’s Estimate, Vol. ii, p. 156. “By a few years preparation.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 341. “Of forty years planting.”—Wm. Penn. “An account, of five years standing.” If these phrases were correct, it would also be correct to say, “one day time,”—“one year preparation,”—“one year planting,”—“of one year standing;” but all these are manifestly bad English; and, by analogy, so are the others.

OBS. 36.—Any noun of weight, measure, or time, put immediately before an other, if it be not in the possessive case, will naturally be understood adjectively; as, “No person can, by words only, give to an other an adequate idea of a pound weight, or [a] foot rule.”—Gregory’s Dict. This phraseology can, with propriety, refer only to the weight or the rule with which we weigh or measure; it cannot signify a pound in weight, or a foot in length, though it is very probable that the author intended the latter. When the noun times is used before an other noun by way of multiplication, there may be supposed an ellipsis of the preposition of between the two, just as when we divide by the word half; as, “An hour is sixty times the length of a minute.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 48. “Thirty seconds are half the length of a minute.” That is,—“half of the length,”—“sixty times of the length.”

NOTES TO RULE IV.

NOTE I.—In the syntax of the possessive case, its appropriate form, singular or plural, should be observed, agreeably to the sense and declension of the word. Thus, write John’s, men’s, hers, its, ours, yours, theirs; and not, Johns, mens’, her’s, it’s, our’s, your’s, their’s.

NOTE II.—When nouns of the possessive case are connected by conjunctions or put in apposition, the sign of possession must always be annexed to such, and such only, as immediately precede the governing noun, expressed or understood; as, “John and Eliza’s teacher is a man of more learning than James’s or Andrew’s”—“For David my servant’s sake.”—Bible. “For my sake and the gospel’s.”—Ib. “Lost in love’s and friendship’s smile.”—Scott.

NOTE III.—The relation of property may also be expressed by the preposition of and the objective; as, “The will of man,” for “man’s will.” Of these forms, we should adopt that which will render the sentence the most perspicuous and agreeable; and, by the use of both, avoid an unpleasant repetition of either.

NOTE IV.—A noun governing the possessive plural, should not, by a forced agreement, be made plural, when its own sense does not require it; as, “For our parts,”—“Were I in your places,” for we may with propriety say, “Our part, your place, or your condition,” as well as, “Our desire, your intention, their resignation.”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 169. A noun taken figuratively may also be singular, when the literal meaning would require the plural: such expressions as, “their face,”—“their neck,”—“their hand,”—“their head,”—“their heart,”—“our mouth,”—“our life,”—are frequent in the Scriptures, and not improper.

NOTE V.—The possessive case should not be needlessly used before a participle that is not taken in other respects as a noun. The following phrase is therefore wrong: “Adopted by the Goths in their pronouncing the Greek.”—Walker’s Key, p. 17. Expunge their. Again: “Here we speak of their becoming both in form and signification passive.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 226. Say rather, “Here we speak of them as becoming passive, both in form and signification.”

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE IV.

EXAMPLES UNDER NOTE I.—THE POSSESSIVE FORM.

“Mans chief good is an upright mind.” See Brown’s Institutes of E. Gram., p. 179.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the noun mans, which is intended for the possessive singular of man, has not the appropriate form of that case and number. But, according to Note 1st under Rule 4th, “In the syntax of the possessive case, its appropriate form, singular or plural, should be observed, agreeably to the sense and declension of the word.” Therefore, mans should be man's, with the apostrophe before the s; thus, “Man's chief good is an upright mind.”]

“The translator of Mallets History has the following note,”—Webster's Essays, p. 263. “The act, while it gave five years full pay to the officers, allowed but one year's pay to the privates.”—Ib., p. 184. “For the study of English is preceded by several years attention to Latin and Greek.”—Ib., p. 7. “The first, the Court Baron, is the freeholders or freemens court.”—Coke, Litt., p. 74. “I affirm, that Vaugelas' definition labours under an essential defect.”—Campbell's Rhet., p. 163. “I affirm, that Vangelas's definition labours under an essential defect.”—Murray's Octavo Gram., Fourth Amer. Ed., Vol. ii, p. 360.* “There is a chorus in Aristophane's plays.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 480. “It denotes the same perception in my mind as in their's.”—Duncan's Logic, p. 65. “This afterwards enabled him to read Hicke's Saxon Grammar.”—Life of Dr. Murray, p. 76. “I will not do it for tens sake.”—Dr. Ash's Gram., p. 56. “I arose, and asked if those charming infants were her's.”—Werter, p. 21. “They divide their time between milliners shops and taverns.”—Brown's Estimate, Vol. i, p. 65. “The angels adoring of Adam is also mentioned in the Talmud.”—Sale's Koran, p. 6. “Quarrels arose from the winners insulting of those who lost.”—Ib., p. 171. “The vacancy, occasioned by Mr. Adams' resignation.”—Adams's Rhet., Vol. i, p. vii. “Read for instance Junius' address, commonly called his letter to the king.”—Ib., i, 225. “A perpetual struggle against the tide of Hortensius' influence.”—Ib., ii, 23. “Which, for distinction sake, I shall put down severally.”—Johnson's Gram. Com., p. 302. “The fifth case is in a clause signifying the matter of ones fear.”—Ib., p. 312. “And they took counsel, and bought with them the potters' field.”—ALGER'S BIBLE: Matt., xxvii, 7. “Arise for thy servant's help, and redeem them for thy mercy's sake.”—Jenks's Prayers, p. 265. “Shall not their cattle, and their substance, and every beast of their's be ours?”—SCOTT'S BIBLE: Gen., xxxiv, 23. “And every beast of their's, be our's?”—FRIENDS' BIBLE: ib. “It's regular plural, bullaces, is used by Bacon.”—Churchill's Gram., p. 213. “Mordecai walked every day before the court of the womens house.”—SCOTT'S BIBLE: Esther, ii, 11. “Behold, they that wear soft clothing are in king's houses.”—IB. and FRIENDS' BIBLE: Matt., xi, 8: also Webster's Imp. Gram., p. 173. “Then Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, took Zipporah, Moses' wife, and her two sons; and Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, came, with his sons and his wife, unto Moses.”—ALGER'S BIBLE, and THE FRIENDS': Exod., xviii, 2—6. “King James' translators merely revised former translations.”—Rev. B. Frazee's Gram., p. 137. “May they be like corn on houses tops.”—White, on the English Verb., p. 160.

“And for his Maker's image sake exempt.”—Par. Lost, B. xi, l. 514.

“By all the fame acquir'd in ten years war.”—Rowe's Lucan, B. i, l. 674.

“Nor glad vile poets with true critics gore.”—Pope's Dunicad, p. 175.

“Man only of a softer mold is made,

Not for his fellow's ruin, but their aid.”—Dryden's Poems, p. 92.

---

* VAUGELAS was a noted French critic, who died in 1650. In Murray's Grammar, the name is more than once mistaken. On page 359th, of the edition above cited, it is printed “Vangelas”—G. BROWN.

UNDER NOTE II.—POSSESSIVES CONNECTED.

“It was necessary to have both the physician, and the surgeon’s advice.”—Cooper’s Pl. and Pr. Gram., p. 140. “This out-side fashionableness of the Taylor on Tire-woman’s making.”—Locke, on Education, p. 49. “Some pretending to be of Paul’s party, others of Apollos, others of Cephas, and others, pretending yet higher, to be of Christ’s.”—Woods Dict., w. Apollos. “Nor is it less certain that Spenser’s and Milton’s spelling agrees better with our pronunciation.”—Philol. Museum, i, 661. “Law’s, Edwards’, and Watts’ surveys of the Divine Dispensations.”—Burgh’s Dignity, Vol. i, p. 193. “And who was Enoch’s Saviour, and the Prophets?”—Bayly’s Works, p. 600. “Without any impediment but his own, or his parents or guardians will.”—Literary Convention, p. 145. “James relieves neither the boy* nor the girl’s distress.”—Nixon’s Parser, p. 116. “John regards neither the master nor the pupil’s advantage.”—Ib., p. 117. “You reward neither the man nor the woman’s labours.”—Ib. “She examines neither James nor John’s conduct.”—Ib. “Thou pitiest neither the servant nor the master’s injuries.”—Ib. “We promote England or Ireland’s happiness.”—Ib. “Were Cain and Abel’s occupation the same?”—Brown’s Inst., p. 179. “Were Cain’s and Abel’s occupations the same?”—Ib. “What was Simon’s and Andrew’s employment?”—Author. “Till he can read himself Sanctii Minerva with Scioppius and Perizonius’s Notes.”—Locke, on Education, p. 295.

“And love’s and friendship’s finely—pointed dart Falls blunted from each indurated heart.”—Goldsmith.

UNDER NOTE III.—CHOICE OF FORMS.

“But some degree of trouble is all men’s portion.”—Murray’s Key, p. 218; Merchant’s, 197. “With his father’s and mother’s names upon the blank leaf.”—Corner-Stone, p. 144. “The general, in the army’s name, published a declaration.”—HUME: in Priestley’s Gram., p. 69. “The Commons’ vote.”—Id., ib. “The Lords’ house.”—Id., ib. “A collection of writers faults.”—SWIFT: ib., p. 68. “After ten years wars.”—Id., ib. “Professing his detestation of such practices as his predecessors.”—Notes to the Dunciad. “By that time I shall have ended my years office.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 104. “For Herodias’ sake, his brother Philip’s wife.”—Mark, vi, 17. “For Herodias’s sake, his brother Philip’s wife.”—Murray’s Key, p. 194. “I endure all things for the elect’s sakes, that they may also obtain salvation.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: 2 Tim., ii, 10. “For the elects’ sakes.”—Scott’s Bible. “For the elect’s sake.”—Alger’s Bible, and BRUCE’S. “He was Louis the Sixteenth’s son’s heir.”—W. Allen’s Exercises, Gram., p. 329. “The throne we honour is the choice of the people.”—“An account of the proceedings of the court of Alexander.”—“An excellent tutor of a person of fashion’s child!”—Gil Bias, Vol. 1, p. 20. “It is curious enough, that this sentence of the Bishop is, itself, ungrammatical!”—Cobbett’s E. Gram., ¶ 201. “The troops broke into Leopold the emperor’s palace.”—Nixon’s Parser, p. 59. “The meeting was called by Eldon the judge’s desire.”—Ibid. “Peter’s, John’s, and Andrew’s occupation was that of fishermen.”—Brace’s Gram., p. 79. “The venerable president of the Royal Academy’s debility has lately increased.”—Maunder’s Gram., p. 12.

UNDER NOTE IV.—NOUNS WITH POSSESSIVES PLURAL.

“God hath not given us our reasons to no purpose.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. i, p. 496. “For our sakes, no doubt, this is written.”—1 Cor., ix, 10. “Are not health and strength of * Nixon parses boy, as being “in the possessive case, governed by distress understood;” and girl’s, as being “coupled by nor to boy,” according to the Rule, “Conjunctions connect the same cases.” Thus one word is written wrong; the other, parsed wrong; and so of all his examples above.—G. BROWN.

body desirable for their own sakes?”—Hermes, p. 296; Murray's Gram., 289. “Some sailors who were boiling their dinners upon the shore.”—Day's Sandford and Merton, p. 99. “And they in their turns were subdued by others.”—Pinnock's Geography, p. 12. “Industry on our parts is not superseded by God's grace.”—Arrowsmith. “Their Healths perhaps may be pretty well secur'd.”—Locke, on Education, p. 51. “Though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor.”—Murray's Gram., p. 211. “It were to be wished, his correctors had been as wise on their parbs.”—Harris's Hermes, p. 60. “The Arabs are commended by the ancients for being most exact to their words, and respectful to their kindred.”—Sale's Koran. “That is, as a reward of some exertion on our parts.”—Gurney's Evidences, p. 86. “So that it went ill with Moses for their sakes.”—Psalms, cvi, 32. “All liars shall have their parts in the burning lake.”—Watts, p. 33. “For our own sakes as well as for thine.”—Pref. to Waller's Poems, p. 3. “By discover- ing their abilities to detect and amend errors.”—Murray's Gram., Vol. 11, p. iv.

“This world I do renounce; and, in your sights, Shake patiently my great affliction off.”—Beauties of Shak., p. 286

“If your relenting angers yield to treat,
Pompey and thou, in safety, here may meet.”—Rowe's Lucan, B. iii, l. 500.

UNDER NOTE Y.—POSSESSIVES WITH PARTICIPLES.

“This will encourage him to proceed without his acquiring the prejudice.”—Smith's Gram., p. 5. “And the notice which they give of an action's being completed or not completed.”—L. Murray's Gram., p. 72; Alger's, 30. “Some obstacle or impediment that prevents its taking place.”—Priestley's Gram., p. 38; Alex. Murray's, 37. “They have apostolical authority for their so frequently urging the seeking of the Spirit.”—The Friend, Vol. xii, p. 54. “Here then is a wide field for reason's exerting its powers in relation to the objects of taste.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 18. “Now this they derive altogether from their having a greater capacity of imitation and description.”—Ib., p. 51. “This is one clear reason of their paying a greater attention to that construction.”—Ib., p. 123. “The dialogue part had also a modulation of its own, which was capable of its being set to notes.”—Ib., p. 471. “What is the reason of our being often so frigid and unpersuasive in public discourse?”—Ib., p. 334. “Which is only a preparation for his leading his forces directly upon us.”—Ib., p. 264. “The nonsense about which's relating to things only, and having no declension, needs no refutation.”—Fowle's True E. Gram., p. 18. “Who, upon his breaking it open, found nothing but the following inscription.”—Rollin, Vol. ii, p. 33. “A prince will quickly have reason to repent his having exalted one person so high.”—Id., ii, 116. “Notwithstanding it's being the immediate subject of his discourse.”—Churchill's Gram., p. 294. “With our definition of its being synonymous with time.”—Booth's Introd., p. 29. “It will considerably increase the danger of our being deceived.”—Campbell's Rhet., p. 293. “His beauties can never be mentioned without their suggesting his blemishes also.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 442. “No example has ever been adduced of a man's conscientiously approving of an action, because of its badness.”—Gurney's Evidences, p. 90. “The last episode of the angel's shewing Adam the fate of his posterity, is happily imagined.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 452. “And the news came to my son, of his and the bride being in Dublin.”—Castle Rackrent, p. 44. “There is no room for the mind's exerting any great effort.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 32. “One would imagine, that these criticks never so much as heard of Homer's having written first.”—Pope's Preface to Homer. “Condemn the book, for its not being a geography.”—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 317. “There will be in many words a transition from their being the figurative to their being the proper signs of certain ideas.”—Campbell's Rhet., p. 322. “The doctrine of the Pope's being the only source of ecclesiastical power."—Religious World, ii, 290. "This has been the more expedient from the work's being designed for the benefit of private learners."—Murray's Exercises, Introd., p. v. "This was occasioned by the Grammar's having been set up, and not admitting of enlargement."—Ib., Advertisement, p. ix.

RULE V.—OBJECTIVES.

A Noun or a Pronoun made the object of an active-transitive verb or participle, is governed by it in the objective case: as, "I found her assisting him"—"Having finished the work, I submit it."

"Preventing fame, misfortune lends him wings,
And Pompey's self his own sad story brings."—Rowe's Lucan, B. viii, l. 66.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE V.

OBS. 1.—To this rule there are no exceptions; but to the old one adopted by Murray and others, "Active verbs govern the objective case," there are more than any writer will ever think it worth his while to enumerate. In point of brevity, the latter has the advantage, but in nothing else; for, as a general rule for NOUNS AND PRONOUNS, this old brief assertion is very defective; and, as a rule for "THE SYNTAX OF VERBS," under which head it has been oftener ranked, it is entirely useless and inapplicable. As there are four different constructions to which the nominative case is liable, so there are four in which the objective may be found; and two of these are common to both; namely, apposition, and sameness of case. Every objective is governed by some verb or participle, according to Rule 5th, or by some preposition, according to Rule 7th; except such as are put in apposition with others, according to Rule 3d, or after an infinitive or a participle not transitive, according to Rule 6th: as, "Mistaking one for the other, they took him, a sturdy fellow, called Red Billy, to be me." Here is every construction which the objective case can have; except, perhaps, that in which, as an expression of time, place, measure, or manner, it is taken after the fashion of an adverb, the governing preposition being suppressed, or, as some say, no governing word being needed. Of this exception, the following quotations may serve for examples: "It holds on by a single button round my neck, cloak-fashion"—EDGEWORTH'S Castle Rackrent. p. 17. A man quite at leisure to parse all his words, would have said, "in the fashion of a cloak." Again: "He does not care the rind of a lemon for her all the while."—Ib., p. 108. "We turn our eyes this way or that way."—Webster's Philos. Gram., p. 172; Frazee's Gram., 157. Among his instances of "the objective case restrictive," or of the noun "used in the objective, without a governing word," Dr. Bullions gives this: "Let us go home" But, according to the better opinion of Worcester, home is here an adverb, and not a noun. See Obs. 6th on Rule 7th.

OBS. 2.—The objective case generally follows the governing word: as, "And Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him"—Gen., xlii, 8. But when it is emphatic, it often precedes the nominative; as, "Me he restored to mine office, and him he hanged."—Gen., xli, 13. "John have I beheaded."—Luke, ix, 9. "But me ye have not always."—Matt., xxvi, 11. "Him walking on a sunny hill he found."—Milton. In poetry, the objective is sometimes placed between the nominative and the verb; as,

"His daring foe securely him defied."—Milton.

"Much he the place admired, the person more."—Id.

“The broom its yellow leaf shed.”—Langhorne.

If the nominative be a pronoun which cannot be mistaken for an objective, the words may possibly change places; as, “Silver and gold have I none.”—Acts, iii, 6. “Created thing nought valued he nor shunn’d.”—Milton, B. ii, l. 679. But such a transposition of two nouns can scarcely fail to render the meaning doubtful or obscure; as,

“This pow’r has praise, that virtue scarce can warm, Till fame supplies the universal charm.”—Dr. Johnson.

A relative or an interrogative pronoun is commonly placed at the head of its clause, and of course it precedes the verb which governs it; as, “I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest.”—Acts, ix, 5. “Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted?”—Ib., vii, 52.

“Before their Clauses plac’d, by settled use,
The Relatives these Clauses introduce.”—Ward’s Gram., p. 86.

OBS. 3.—Every active-transitive verb or participle has some noun or pronoun for its object, or some pronominal adjective which assumes the relation of the objective case. Though verbs are often followed by the infinitive mood, or a dependent clause, forming a part of the logical predicate; yet these terms, being commonly introduced by a connecting particle, do not form such an object as is contemplated in our definition of a transitive verb. Its government of the objective, is the only proper criterion of this sort of verb. If, in the sentence, “Boys love to play,” the former verb is transitive, as several respectable grammarians affirm; why not also in a thousand others; as, “Boys like to play;”—“Boys delight to play;”—“Boys long to play;”—“The boys seem to play;”—“The boys cease to play;”—“The boys ought to play;”—“The boys go out to play;”—“The boys are gone out to play;”—“The boys are allowed to play;” and the like? The construction in all is precisely the same, and the infinitive may follow one kind of verb just as well as an other. How then can the mere addition of this mood make any verb transitive? or where, on such a principle, can the line of distinction for transitive verbs be drawn? The infinitive, in fact, is governed by the preposition to; and the preceding verb, if it has no other object, is intransitive. It must, however, be confessed that some verbs which thus take the infinitive after them, cannot otherwise be intransitive; as, “A great mind disdains to hold any thing by courtesy.”—Johnson’s Life of Swift. “They require to be distinguished by a comma.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 272.

OBS. 4.—A transitive verb, as I have elsewhere shown, may both govern the objective case, and be followed by an infinitive also; as, “What have I to do with thee?”—John, ii, 4. This question, as one would naturally take it, implies, “I have nothing to do with thee;” and, by analogy, what is governed by have, and not by do; so that the latter verb, though not commonly intransitive, appears to be so here. Indeed the infinitive mood is often used without an objective, when every other part of the same verb would require one. Maunder’s rule is, “Transitive verbs and participles govern either the objective case or the infinitive mood.”—Comprehensive Gram., p. 14. Murray teaches, not only that, “The infinitive mood does the office of a substantive in the objective case; as, ‘Boys love to play;’” but that, “The participle with its adjuncts, may be considered as a substantive phrase in the objective case, governed by the preposition or verb; as, ‘He studied to avoid expressing himself too severely.’”—See his Octavo Gram., pp. 184 and 194. And again: “Part of a sentence, as well as a noun or pronoun, may be said to be in the objective case, or to be put objectively, governed by the active verb; as, ‘We sometimes see virtue in distress, but we should consider how great will be her ultimate reward.' Sentences or phrases under this circumstance, may be termed objective sentences or phrases."—Ib., p. 180.

OBS. 5.—If we admit that sentences, parts of sentences, infinitives, participles with their adjuncts, and other phrases, as well as nouns and pronouns, may be "in the objective case;" it will be no easy matter, either to define this case, or to determine what words do, or do not, govern it.* The construction of infinitives and participles will be * Wells, whose Grammar, in its first edition, divides verbs into "transitive, intransitive, and passive;" but whose late edition absurdly make all passives transitive; says, in his third edition, "A transitive verb is a verb that has some noun or pronoun for its object;" (p. 78;) adopts, in his syntax, the old dogma, "Transitive verbs govern the objective case;" (3d Ed., p. 154;) and to this rule subjoins a series of remarks, so singularly fit to puzzle or mislead the learner, and withal so successful in winning the approbation of committees and teachers, that it may be worth while to notice most of them here.

"REM. 1.—A sentence or phrase often supplies the place of a noun or pronoun in the objective case; as, 'You see how few of these men have returned.'"—Wells' s School Gram., "Third Thousand," p. 154; late Ed. §215. According to this, must we not suppose verbs to be often transitive, when not made so by the author's definition? And if "see" is here transitive, would not other forms, such as are told, have been told, or are aware, be just as much so, if put in its place?

"REM. 2.—An intransitive verb may be used to govern an objective, when the verb and the noun depending upon it are of kindred signification; as, 'To live a blameless life;'—'To run a race.'"—Ib. Here verbs are absurdly called "intransitive," when, both in fact and by the foregoing definition, they are clearly transitive; or, at least, are, by many teachers, supposed to be so.

"REM. 3.—Idiomatic expressions sometimes occur in which intransitive verbs are followed by objectives depending upon them; as, 'To look the subject fully in the face.'"—Channing. 'They laughed him to scorn.'"—Matt. 9:24. 'And talked the night away.'"—Goldsmith."—Ib. Here again, verbs evidently made transitive by the construction, are, with strange inconsistency, called "intransitive." By these three remarks together, the distinction between transitives and intransitives must needs be extensively obscured in the mind of the learner.

"REM. 4.—Transitive verbs of asking, giving, teaching, and some others, are often employed to govern two objectives; as, 'Ask him his opinion;'—'This experience taught me a valuable lesson.'"—'Spare me yet this bitter cup.'"—Hemans. 'I thrice presented him a kingly crown.'"—Shakspeare."—Ib. This rule not only jumbles together several different constructions, such as would require different cases in Latin or Greek, but is evidently repugnant to the sense of many of the passages to which it is meant to be applied. Wells thinks, the practice of supplying a preposition, "is, in many cases, arbitrary, and does violence to an important and well established idiom of the language."—Ib. But how can any idiom be violated by a mode of parsing, which merely expounds its true meaning? If the dative case has the meaning of to, and the ablative has the meaning of from, how can they be expounded, in English, but by suggesting the particle, where it is omitted? For example: "Spare me yet [from] this bitter cup."—"Spare [to] me yet this joyous cup." This author says, "The rule for the government of two objectives by a verb, without the aid of a preposition, is adopted by Webster, Murray, Alexander, Frazee, Nutting, Perley, Goldsby, J. M. Putnam, Hamlin, Flower, Crane, Brace, and many others."—Ib. Yet, if I mistake not, the weight of authority is vastly against it. Such a rule as this, is not extensively approved; and even some of the names here given, are improperly cited. Lindley Murray's remark, "Some of our verbs appear to govern two words in the objective case," is applied only to words in apposition, and wrong even there; Perley's rule is only of "Some verbs of asking and teaching;" and Nutting's note, "It sometimes happens that one transitive verb governs two objective cases," is so very loose, that one can neither deny it, nor tell how much it means.

"REM. 5.—Verbs of asking, giving, teaching, and some others, are often employed in the passive voice to govern a noun or pronoun; as, 'He was asked his opinion.'"—Johnson. 'He had been refused shelter.'"—Irving."—Ib., p. 155, §215. Passive governing is not far from absurdity. Here, by way of illustration, we have examples of two sorts; the one elliptical, the other solecistical. The former text appears to mean, "He was asked for, his opinion;"—or, "He was asked to give his opinion: the latter should have been, "Shelter had been refused him;"—i.e., "to him." Of the seven instances cited by the author, five at least are of the latter kind, and therefore to be condemned; and it is to be observed, that when they are corrected, and the right word is made nominative, the passive government, by Wells's own showing, becomes nothing but the ellipsis of a preposition. Having just given a rule, by which all his various examples are assumed to be regular and right, he very inconsistently adds this not: "This form of expression is anomalous, and might, in many cases, be improved. Thus, instead of saying, 'He was offered a seat on the council,' it would be preferable to say 'A noticed hereafter. But on one of Murray's examples, I would here observe, that the direct use of the infinitive for an objective noun is a manifest Grecism; as, "For to will is present with me; but to perform that which is good, I find not."—Octavo Gram., p. 184. That is, "the performance of that which is good, I find not." Or perhaps we may supply a noun after the verb, and take this text to mean, "But to perform that which is good, I find not the ability." Our Bible has it, "But how to perform that which is good. I find not;" as if the manner in which he might do good, was what the apostle found not: but Murray cites it differently, omitting the word how, as we see above. All active verbs to which something is subjoined by when, where, whence, how, or why, must be accounted intransitive, unless we suppose them to govern such nouns of time, place, degree, manner, or cause, as correspond to these connectives; as, "I know why she blushed." Here we might supply the noun reason, as, "I know the reason why she blushed;" but the word is needless, and I should rather parse know as being intransitive. As for "virtue in distress," if this is an "objective phrase," and not to be analyzed, we have millions of the same sort; but, if one should say, "Virtue in distress excites pity," the same phrase would demonstrate the absurdity of Murray's doctrine, because the two nouns here take two different cases.

OBS. 6.—The word that, which is often employed to introduce a dependent clause, is, by some grammarians, considered as a pronoun, representing the clause which follows it; as, "I know that Messiah cometh."—John, iv, 25. This text they would explain to mean, seat in the council was offered [to] him."—Ib., p. 155, Sec. 215. By admitting here the ellipsis of the preposition to, he evidently refutes the doctrine of his own text, so far as it relates to passive government, and, by implication, the doctrine of his fourth remark also. For the ellipsis of to, before "him," is just as evident in the active expression, "I thrice presented him a kingly crown," as in the passive, "A kingly crown was thrice presented him." It is absurd to deny it in either. Having offset himself, Wells as ingeniously balances his authorities, pro and con; but, the elliptical examples being allowable, he should not have said that I and others "condemn this usage altogether."

---

REM. 6.—The passive voice of a verb is sometimes used in connection with a preposition, forming a compound passive verb; as 'He was listened to.'—Nor is this to be scoffed at.'—This is a tendency to be guarded against.'—'A bitter persecution was carried on.'—Hallam.—Ib., p. 155, Sec. 215. The words here called "prepositions," are adverbs. Prepositions they cannot be; because they have no subsequent term. Nor is it either necessary or proper, to call them parts of the verb: "was carried on," is no more a "compound verb," than "was carried off," or "was carried forward," and the like.

REM. 7.—Idiomatic expressions sometimes occur in which a noun in the objective is preceded by a passive verb, and followed by a preposition used adverbially. EXAMPLES: 'Vocal and instrumental music were made use of.'—Addison. 'The third, fourth, and fifth, were taken possession of at half past eight.'—Southey. 'The Pinta was soon lost sight of in the darkness of the night.'—Irving.—Ib., p. 155, Sec. 215. As it is by the manner of their use, that we distinguish prepositions and adverbs, it seems no more proper to speak of "a preposition used adverbially," than of "an adverb used prepositionally." But even if the former phrase is right and the thing conceivable, here is no instance of it; for "of" here modifies no verb, adjective, or adverb. The construction is an unparsable synchysis, a vile snarl, which no grammarian should hesitate to condemn. These examples may each be corrected in several ways: 1. Say—"were used;"—"were taken into possession;"—"was soon lost from sight." 2. Say—"They made use of music, both vocal and instrumental."—"Of the third, the fourth, and the fifth, they took possession at half past eight."—"Of the Pinta they soon lost sight," &c. 3. Say—"Use was also made of both vocal and instrumental music."—"Possession of the third, the fourth, and the fifth, was taken at half past eight."—"The Pinta soon disappeared in the darkness of the night." Here again, Wells puzzles his pupil, with a note which half justifies and half condemns the awkward usage in question. See School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 147; 3d Ed., 156; late Ed., Sec. 215.

REM. 8.—There are some verbs which may be used either transitively or intransitively; as, 'He will return in a week,' 'He will return the book.'—Ib., p. 147; 156; &c. According to Dr. Johnson, this is true of "most verbs," and Lindley Murray asserts it of "many." There are, I think, but few which may not, in some phraseology or other, be used both ways. Hence the rule, "Transitive verbs govern the objective case," or, as Wells now has it, "Transitive verbs, in the active voice, govern the objective case," (Sec. 215,) rests only upon a distinction which itself creates, between transitives and intransitives; and therefore it amounts to little.

“Messias cometh, I know that,” and their opinion seems to be warranted both by the origin and by the usual import of the particle. But, in conformity to general custom, and to his own views of the practical purposes of grammatical analysis, the author has ranked it with the conjunctions. And he thinks it better, to call those verbs intransitive, which are followed by that and a dependent clause, than to supply the very frequent ellipses which the other explanation supposes. To explain it as a conjunction, connecting an active-transitive verb and its object, as several respectable grammarians do, appears to involve some inconsistency. If that is a conjunction, it connects what precedes and what follows; but a transitive verb should exercise a direct government, without the intervention of a conjunction. On the other hand, the word that has not, in any such sentence, the inherent nature of a pronoun. The transposition above, makes it only a pronominal adjective; as, “Messias cometh, I know that fact.” And in many instances such a solution is impracticable; as, “The people sought him, and came unto him, and stayed him, that he should not depart from them.”—Luke, iv, 42. Here, to prove that to be a pronoun, the disciples of Tooke and Webster must resort to more than one imaginary ellipsis, and to such inversion as will scarcely leave the sense in sight.

OBS. 7.—In some instances the action of a transitive verb gives to its direct object an additional name, which is also in the objective case, the two words being in apposition; as, “Thy saints proclaim thee king.”—Cowper. “And God called the firmament Heaven.”—Bible. “Ordering them to make themselves masters of a certain steep eminence.”—Rollin, ii, 67. And, in such a construction, the direct object is sometimes placed before the verb; though the name which results from the action, cannot be so placed: as, “And Simon he surnamed Peter.”—Mark, iii, 15. “Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God.”—Rev., iii, 12. Some grammarians seem not to have considered this phraseology as coming within the rule of apposition. Thus Webster: “We have some verbs which govern two words in the objective case; as,

‘Did I request thee, maker, from my clay
To mold me man?’—Milton, 10, 744.

‘God seems to have made him what he was.’—Life of Cowper.”—Philosophical Gram., p. 170. Improved Gram., p. 120. See also Weld’s Gram., 2d Ed., p. 154; “Abridged Ed.,” p. 119; and Fowler’s E. Gram., §450. So Murray: “Some of our verbs appear to govern two words in the objective case; as, ‘The Author of my being formed me man.’—‘They desired me to call them brethren.’—‘He seems to have made him what he was.’ “—Octavo Gram., p. 183. Yet this latter writer says, that in the sentence, “They appointed me executor,” and others like it,” the verb to be is understood.”—Ib., p. 182. These then, according to his own showing, are instances of apposition; but I pronounce then such, without either confounding same cases with apposition, or making the latter a species of ellipsis. See Obs. 1st and 2d, under Rule 3d.

---

* To these examples, Webster adds two others, of a different sort, with a comment, thus: “Ask him his opinion?’ ‘You have asked me the news.’ Will it be said that the latter phrases are elliptical, for ‘ask of him his opinion?’ I apprehend this to be a mistake. According to the true idea of the government of a transitive verb, him must be the object in the phrase under consideration, as much as in this, ‘Ask him for a guinea;’ or in this, ‘ask him to go.’”—Ibid., ut supra; Frazee’s Gram., p. 152; Fowler’s, p. 480. If, for the reason here stated, it is a “mistake” to supply of in the foregoing instances, it does not follow that they are not elliptical. On the contrary, if they are analogous to, “Ask him for a guinea;” or, “Ask him to go,” it is manifest that the construction must be this: “Ask him [for] his opinion;” or, “Ask him [to tell] his opinion.” So that the question resolves itself into this: What is the best way of supplying the ellipsis, when two objectives thus occur after ask?—G. BROWN.

OBS. 8.—In general, if not always, when a verb is followed by two objectives which are neither in apposition nor connected by a conjunction, one of them is governed by a preposition understood; as, “I paid [to] him the money”—“They offered [to] me a seat”—“He asked [of] them the question”—“I yielded, and unlock’d [to] her all my heart.”—Milton. In expressing such sentences passively, the object of the preposition is sometimes erroneously assumed for the nominative; as, “He was paid the money,” in stead of, “The money was paid [to] him.”—“I was offered a seat,” in stead of, “A seat was offered [to] me.” This kind of error is censured by Murray more than once, and yet he himself has, in very many instances, fallen into it. His first criticism on it, is in the following words: “We sometimes meet with such expressions as these: ‘They were asked a question;’ ‘They were offered a pardon;’ ‘He hath been left a great estate by his father.’ In these phrases, verbs passive are made to govern the objective case. This license is not to be approved. The expressions should be: ‘A question was put to them;’ ‘A pardon was offered to them;’ ‘His father left him a great estate.’”—L. Murray’s Octavo Gram., p. 183. See Obs. 12, below.

OBS. 9.—In the Latin syntax, verbs of asking and teaching are said to govern two accusatives; as, “Posce Deum veniam, Beg pardon of God.”—Grant’s Latin Gram., p. 207. “Docuit me grammaticam, He taught me grammar.”—Grant, Adam, and others. And again: “When a verb in the active voice governs two cases, in the passive it retains the latter case; as, Doceor grammaticam, I am taught grammar.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 177. These writers however suggest, that in reality the latter accusative is governed, not by the verb, but by a preposition understood. “Poscere deos veniam is ‘to ask the gods for pardon.’”—Barnes’s Philological Gram., p. 116. In general the English idiom does not coincide with what occurs in Latin under these rules. We commonly insert a preposition to govern one or the other of the terms. But we sometimes leave to the verb the objective of the person, and sometimes that of the thing; and after the two verbs ask and teach, we sometimes seem to leave both: as, “When thou dost ask me blessing, I’ll kneel down, and ask of thee forgiveness.”—Shakspeare. “In long journeys, ask your master leave to give ale to the horses.”—Swift. “And he asked them of their welfare.”—Gen., xliii, 27. “They asked of him the parable.”—Mark, iv, 10. (“Interrogârunt eum de parabolâ.”—Beza.) “And asking them questions”—Luke, ii, 46. “But teach them thy sons.”—Deut., iv, 9. “Teach them diligently unto thy children”—Ib., vi, 7. “Ye shall teach them your children.”—Ib., xi, 19. “Shall any teach God knowledge?”—Job, xxi, 22. “I will teach you the fear of the Lord.”—Psal, xxxiv, 11. “He will teach us of his ways.”—Isaiah, ii, 3; Micah, iv, 2. “Let him that is taught in the word, communicate.”—Gal., vi, 6.

OBS. 10.—After a careful review of the various instances in which more than one noun or pronoun may possibly be supposed to be under the government of a single active verb in English, I incline to the opinion that none of our verbs ought to be parsed as actually governing two cases, except such as are followed by two objectives connected by a conjunction. Consequently I do not admit, that any passive verb can properly govern an objective noun or pronoun. Of the ancient Saxon dative case, and of what was once considered the government of two cases, there yet appear some evident remains in our language; as, “Give him bread to eat.”—“Bread shall be given him”—Bible. But here, by almost universal consent, the indirect object is referred to the government of a “preposition understood;” and in many instances this sort of ellipsis is certainly no elegance: as, “Give [to] truth and virtue the same arms which you give [to] vice and falsehood, and the former are likely to prevail.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 235. The questionable expression, “Ask me blessing,” if interpreted analogically, must mean, “Ask for me a blessing,” which is more correct and explicit; or, if me be not supposed a dative, (and it does not appear to be so, above,) the sentence is still wrong, and the correction must be, “Ask of me a blessing,” or, “Ask my blessing.” So, “Ask your master leave,” ought rather to be, “Ask of your master leave,” “Ask your master for leave,” or, “Ask your master’s leave.” The example from Mark ought to be, “They asked him about the parable.” Again, the elliptical sentence, “Teach them thy sons,” is less perspicuous, and therefore less accurate, than the full expression, “Teach them to thy sons.” To teach is to tell things to persons, or to instruct persons in things; to ask is to request or demand things of or from persons, or to interrogate or solicit persons about or for things. These verbs cannot be proved to govern two cases in English, because it is more analogical and more reasonable to supply a preposition, (if the author omits it,) to govern one or the other of the objects.

OBS. 11.—Some writers erroneously allow passive verbs to govern the objective in English, not only where they imagine our idiom to coincide with the Latin, but even where they know that it does not. Thus Dr. Crombie: “Whatever is put in the accusative case after the verb, must be the nominative to it in the passive voice, while the other case is retained under the government of the verb, and cannot become its nominative. Thus, ‘I persuade you to this or of this,’ Persuadeo hoc tibi. Here, the person persuaded is expressed in the dative case, and cannot, therefore, be the nominative to the passive verb. We must, therefore, say, Hoc tibi persuadetur, ‘You are persuaded of this;’ not, Tu persuaderis. ‘He trusted me with this affair,’ or ‘He believed me in this,’ Hoc mihi credidit.—Passively, Hoc mihi creditum est. ‘I told you this,’ Hoc tibi dixi. ‘YOU WERE TOLD THIS,’ Hoc tibi dictum est; not, Tu dictus es.” [No, surely: for, ‘Tu dictus es,’ means, ‘You were called,’ or, ‘Thou art reputed;’—and, if followed by any case, it must be the nominative.] “It is the more necessary to attend to this rule, and to these distinctions, as the idioms of the two languages do not always concur. Thus, Hoc tibi dictum est, means not only ‘This was told to you,’ but ‘YOU WERE TOLD THIS.’ Liber mihi apatre promissus est, means both ‘A book was promised (to) me by my father,’ and ‘I WAS PROMISED A BOOK.’ Is primum rogatus est sententiam, ‘He was first asked for his opinion,’ and ‘An opinion was first asked of him;’ in which last the accusative of the person becomes, in Latin, the nominative in the passive voice.” See Grants Latin Gram., p. 210.

OBS. 12.—Murray’s second censure upon passive government, is this: “The following sentences, which give [to] the passive voice the regimen of an active verb, are very irregular, and by no means to be imitated. ‘The bishops and abbots were allowed their seats in the house of lords.’ ‘Thrasea was forbidden the presence of the emperor.’ ‘He was shown that very story in one of his own books.’* These sentences should have been: ‘The bishops and abbots were allowed to have (or to take) their seats in the house of lords;’ or, ‘Seats in the house of lords were allowed to the bishops and abbots;’ ‘Thrasea was forbidden to approach the presence of the emperor;’ or, ‘The presence of the emperor was forbidden to Thrasea;’ ‘That very story was shown to him in one of his own books.’—Octavo Gram., p. 223. See Obs. 8, above. One late grammarian, whose style is on the whole highly commendable for its purity and accuracy, forbears to condemn the phraseology here spoken of; and, though he does not expressly defend and justify it, he seems disposed to let it pass, with the license of the following canon. “For convenience, it may be well to state it as a rule, that—Passive verbs govern an objective, when the nominative to the passive verb is not the proper object of the active voice.—Barnard's Analytic Gram., p. 134. An other asserts the government of two cases by very many of our active verbs, and the government of one by almost any passive verb, according to the following rules: “Verbs of teaching, giving, and some others of a similar nature, govern two objectives, the one of a person and the other of a thing; as, He taught me grammar: His tutor gave him a lesson: He promised me a reward. A passive verb may govern an objective, when the words immediately preceding and following it, do not refer to the same thing; as, Henry was offered a dollar by his father to induce him to remain.”—J. M. Putnam's Gram., pp. 110 and 112.

---

* These examples Murray borrowed from Webster, who published them, with references, under his 34th Rule. With too little faith in the corrective power of grammar, the Doctor remarks upon the constructions as follows: “This idiom is outrageously anomalous, but perhaps incorrigible.”—Webster’s Philos. Gram., p. 180; Imp. G., 128.

OBS. 13.—The common dogmas, that an active verb must govern an object, and that a neuter or intransitive verb must not, amount to nothing as directions to the composer; because the classification of verbs depends upon this very matter, whether they have, or have not, an object after them; and no general principle has been, or can be, furnished beforehand, by which their fitness or unfitness for taking such government can be determined. This must depend upon usage, and usage must conform to the sense intended. Very many verbs—probably a vast majority—govern an object sometimes, but not always: many that are commonly intransitive or neuter, are not in all their uses so; and many that are commonly transitive, have sometimes no apparent regimen. The distinction, then, in our dictionaries, of verbs active and neuter, or transitive and intransitive, serves scarcely any other purpose, than to show how the presence or absence of the objective case, affects the meaning of the word. In some instances the signification of the verb seems almost merged in that of its object; as, to lay hold, to make use, to take care. In others, the transitive character of the word is partial; as, “He paid my board; I told you so.” Some verbs will govern any objective whatever; as, to name, to mention. What is there that cannot be named or mentioned? Others again are restricted to one noun, or to a few; as, to transgress a law, or rule. What can be transgressed, but a law, a limit, or something equivalent? Some verbs will govern a kindred noun, or its pronoun, but scarcely any other; as, “He lived a virtuous life.”—“Hear, I pray you, this dream which I have dreamed”—Gen., xxxvii, 6. “I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.”—Isaiah, v, 6.

OBS. 14.—Our grammarians, when they come to determine what verbs are properly transitive, and what are not so, do not in all instances agree in opinion. In short, plain as they think the matter, they are much at odds. Many of them say, that, “In the phrases, ‘To dream a dream,’ ‘To live a virtuous life,’ ‘To run a race,’ ‘To walk a horse,’ ‘To dance a child,’ the verbs assume a transitive character, and in these cases may be denominated active.”—See Guy's Gram., p. 21; Murray's, 180; Ingersoll's, 183; Fisk's, 123; Smith's, 153. This decision is undoubtedly just; yet a late writer has taken a deal of pains to find fault with it, and to persuade his readers, that, “No verb is active in any sense, or under any construction, that will not, in every sense, permit the objective case of a personal pronoun after it.”—Wright's Gram., p. 174. Wells absurdly supposes, “An intransitive verb may be used to govern an objective.”—Gram., p. 145. Some imagine that verbs of mental action, such as conceive, think, believe, &c., are not properly transitive; and, if they find an object after such a verb, they choose to supply a preposition to govern it: as, “I conceived it (of) it in that light.”—Guy's Gram., p. 21. “Did you conceive (of) him to be me?”—Ib., p. 28. With this idea, few will probably concur.

OBS. 15.—We sometimes find the pronoun me needlessly thrown in after a verb that either governs some other object or is not properly transitive, at least, in respect to this word; as, “It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish, dull, and crudy vapours.”—Shakspeare’s Falstaff. “Then the vital commoners and inland petty spirits muster me all to their captain, the heart.”—Id. This is a faulty relic of our old Saxon dative case. So of the second person; “Fare you well, Falstaff.”—Shak. Here you was written for the objective case, but it seems now to have become the nominative to the verb fare. “Fare thee well.”—W. Scott. “Farewell to thee.”—Id. These expressions were once equivalent in syntax; but they are hardly so now; and, in lieu of the former, it would seem better English to say, “Fare thou well.” Again: “Turn thee aside to thy right hand or to thy left, and lay thee hold on one of the young men, and take thee his armour.”—2 Sam., ii, 21. If any modern author had written this, our critics would have guessed he had learned from some of the Quakers to misemploy thee for thou. The construction is an imitation of the French reciprocal or reflected verbs. It ought to be thus: “Turn thou aside to thy right hand or to thy left, and lay hold on one of the young men, and take to thyself his armour.” So of the third person: “The king soon found reason to repent him of his provoking such dangerous enemies.”—HUME: Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 180. Here both of the pronouns are worse than useless, though Murray discerned but one error.

“Good Margaret, run thee into the parlour;
There thou shalt find my cousin Beatrice.”—SHAK.: Much Ado.

NOTES TO RULE V.

NOTE I.—Those verbs or participles which require a regimen, or which signify action that must terminate transitively, should not be used without an object; as, “She affects [kindness,] in order to ingratiate [herself] with you.”—“I must caution [you], at the same time, against a servile imitation of any author whatever.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 192.

NOTE II.—Those verbs and participles which do not admit an object, or which express action that terminates in themselves, or with the doer, should not be used transitively; as, “The planters grow cotton.” Say raise, produce, or cultivate. “Dare you speak lightly of the law, or move that, in a criminal trial, judges should advance one step beyond what it permits them to go?”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 278. Say,—“beyond the point to which it permits them to go.”

NOTE III.—No transitive verb or participle should assume a government to which its own meaning is not adapted; as, “Thou is a pronoun, a word used instead of a noun—personal, it personates ‘man.’”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 131. Say, “It represents man.” “Where a string of such sentences succeed each other.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 168. Say, “Where many such sentences come in succession.”

NOTE IV.—The passive verb should always take for its subject or nominative the direct object of the active-transitive verb from which it is derived; as, (Active,) “They denied me this privilege.” (Passive,) “This privilege was denied me,” not, “I was denied this privilege,” for me may be governed by to understood, but privilege cannot, nor can any other regimen be found for it.

NOTE V.—Passive verbs should never be made to govern the objective case, because the receiving of an action supposes it to terminate on the subject or nominative. * Errors: “Sometimes it is made use of to give a small degree of emphasis.”—L. Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 197. Say, “Sometimes it is used,” &c. “His female characters have been found fault with as insipid.”—Hazlitt’s Lect., p. 111. Say,—“have been censured,” or,—“have been blamed, decried, dispraised, or condemned.”

NOTE VI.—The perfect participle, as such, should never be made to govern any objective term; because, without an active auxiliary, its signification is almost always passive: as, “We shall set down the characters made use of to represent all the elementary sounds.”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 5; Fisk’s, 34. Say,—“the characters employed, or used.”

NOTE VII.—As the different cases in English are not always distinguished by their form, care must be taken lest their construction be found equivocal, or ambiguous; as, “And we shall always find our sentences acquire more vigour and energy when thus retrenched.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 111. Say, “We shall always find that our sentences acquire more vigour,” &c.; or, “We shall always find our sentences to acquire more vigour and energy when thus retrenched.”

NOTE VIII.—In the language of our Bible, rightly quoted or printed, ye is not found in the objective case, nor you in the nominative; scriptural texts that preserve not this distinction of cases, are consequently to be considered inaccurate.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE V.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—THE OBJECTIVE FORM.

“Who should I meet the other day but my old friend!”—Spectator, No. 32.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pronoun who is in the nominative case, and is used as the object of the active-transitive verb should meet. But, according to Rule 5th, “A noun or a pronoun made the object of an active-transitive verb or participle, is governed by it in the objective case.” Therefore, who should be whom; thus, “Whom should I meet,” &c.]

“Let not him boast that puts on his armour, but he that takes it off.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 262. “Let none touch it, but they who are clean.”—Sale’s Koran, 95. “Let the sea roar, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.”—Psalms, xcvi, 7. “Pray be private, and careful who you trust.”—Mrs. Goffe’s Letter. “How shall the people know who to entrust with their property and their liberties?”—District School, p. 301. “The chaplain entreated my comrade and I to dress as well as possible.”—World Displayed, i, 163. “He that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out.”—Tract, No. 3, p. 6. “Who, during * This seems to be a reasonable principle of syntax, and yet I find it contradicted, or a principle opposite to it set up, by some modern teachers of note, who venture to justify all those abnormal phrases which I here condemn as errors. Thus Fowler: “Note 5. When a Verb with its Accusative case, is equivalent to a single verb, it may take this accusative after it in the passive voice; as, ‘This has been put an end to.’”—Fowler’s English Language, 8vo, §552. Now what is this, but an effort to teach bad English by rule?—and by such a rule, too, as is vastly more general than even the great class of terms which it was designed to include? And yet this rule, broad as it is, does not apply at all to the example given! For “put an end,” without the important word “to,” is not equivalent to stop or terminate. Nor is the example right. One ought rather to say, “This has been ended,” or, “This has been stopped.” See the marginal Note to Obs. 5th, above.

this preparation, they constantly and solemnly invoke.”—Hope of Israel, p. 84. “Whoever or whatever owes us, is Debtor; whoever or whatever we owe, is Creditor.”—Marsh’s Book-Keeping, p. 23. “Declaring the curricule was his, and he should have who he chose in it.”—Anna Ross, p. 147. “The fact is, Burke is the only one of all the host of brilliant contemporaries who we can rank as a first-rate orator.”—The Knickerbocker, May, 1833. “Thus you see, how naturally the Fribbles and the Daffodils have produced the Messalina’s of our time:”—Brown’s Estimate, ii, 53. “They would find in the Roman list both the Scipio’s.”—Ib., ii, 76. “He found his wife’s clothes on fire, and she just expiring.”—New-York Observer. “To present ye holy, unblameable, and unreprieveable in his sight.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 353. “Let the distributor do his duty with simplicity; the superintendent, with diligence; he who performs offices of compassion, with cheerfulness.”—Stuart’s Romans, xii, 9. “If the crew rail at the master of the vessel, who will they mind?”—Collier’s Antoninus, p. 106. “He having none but them, they having none but hee.”—DRAYTON’S Polyolbion.

“Thou, nature, partial nature, I arraign!
Of thy caprice maternal I complain!”—Burns’s Poems, p. 50.

“Nor knows he who it is his arms pursue
With eager clasps, but loves he knows not who.”—Addison’s, p. 218.

UNDER NOTE I.—OF VERBS TRANSITIVE.

“When it gives that sense, and also connects, it is a conjunction.”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 116. “Though thou wilt not acknowledge, thou canst not deny the fact.”—Murray’s Key, p. 209. “They specify, like many other adjectives, and connect sentences.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 114. “The violation of this rule tends so much to perplex and obscure, that it is safer to err by too many short sentences.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 312. “A few Exercises are subjoined to each important definition, for him to practice upon as he proceeds in committing.”—Nutting’s Gram., 3d Ed., p. vii. “A verb signifying actively governs the accusative.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 171; Gould’s, 172; Grant’s, 199; and others. “Or, any word that will conjugate, is a verb.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 44. “In these two concluding sentences, the author, hastening to finish, appears to write rather carelessly.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 216. “He simply reasons on one side of the question, and then finishes.”—Ib., p. 306. “Praise to God teaches to be humble and lowly ourselves.”—ATTERBURY: ib., p. 304. “This author has endeavored to surpass.”—Green’s Inductive Gram., p. 54. “Idleness and plezure fateeg az soon az bizziness.”—Noah Webster’s Essays, p. 402. “And, in conjugating, you must pay particular attention to the manner in which these signs are applied.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 140. “He said Virginia would have emancipated long ago.”—The Liberator, ix, 33. “And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience.”—2 Cor., x, 6. “However, in these cases, custom generally determines.”—Wright’s Gram., p. 50. “In proof, let the following cases demonstrate.”—Ib., p. 46. “We must surprise, that he should so speedily have forgotten his first principles.”—Ib., p. 147. “How should we surprise at the expression, ‘This is a soft question!’”—Ib., p. 219. “And such as prefer, can parse it as a possessive adjective.”—Goodenow’s Gram., p. 89. “To assign all the reasons, that induced to deviate from other grammarians, would lead to a needless prolixity.”—Alexander’s Gram., p. 4. “The Indicative mood simply indicates or declares.”—Farnum’s Gram., p. 33.

UNDER NOTE II.—OF VERBS INTRANSITIVE.

“In his seventh chapter he expatiateth himself at great length.”—Barclay's Works, iii, 350. “He quarrelleth my bringing some testimonies of antiquity, agreeing with what I say.”—Ib., iii, 373. “Repenting him of his design.”—Hume's Hist., ii, 56. “Henry knew, that an excommunication could not fail of operating the most dangerous effects.”—Ib., ii, 165. “The popular lords did not fail to enlarge themselves on the subject.”—Mrs. Macaulay's Hist., iii, 177. “He is always master of his subject; and seems to play himself with it.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 445. “But as soon as it comes the length of disease, all his secret infirmities shew themselves.”—Ib., p. 256. “No man repented him of his wickedness.”—Jeremiah, viii, 6. “Go thee one way or other, either on the right hand, or on the left.”—Ezekiel, xxi, 16. “He lies him down by the rivers side.”—Walker's Particles, p. 99. “My desire has been for some years past, to retire myself to some of our American plantations.”—Cowley's Pref. to his Poems, p. vii. “I fear me thou wilt shrink from the payment of it.”—Zenobia, i, 76. “We never recur an idea, without acquiring some combination.”—Ripplingham's Art of Speaking, p. xxxii.

“Yet more; the stroke of death he must abide,
Then lies him meekly down fast by his brethren's side.”—Milton.

UNDER NOTE III.—OF VERBS MISAPPLIED.

“A parliament forfeited all those who had borne arms against the king.”—Hume's Hist., ii, 223. “The practice of forfeiting ships which had been wrecked.”—Ib., i, 500. “The nearer his military successes approached him to the throne.”—Ib., v, 383. “In the next example, you personifies ladies, therefore it is plural.”—Kirkham's Gram., p. 103. “The first its personates vale; the second its represents stream.”—Ib., p. 103. “Pronouns do not always avoid the repetition of nouns.”—Ib., p. 96. “Very is an adverb of comparison, it compares the adjective good.”—Ib., p. 88. “You will please to commit the following paragraph.”—Ib., p. 140. “Even the Greek and Latin passive verbs require an auxiliary to conjugate some of their tenses.”—Murray's Gram., p. 100. “The deponent verbs, in Latin, require also an auxiliary to conjugate several of their tenses.”—Ib., p. 100. “I have no doubt he made as wise and true proverbs, as any body has done since.”—Ib., p. 145. “A uniform variety assumes as many set forms as Proteus had shapes.”—Kirkham's Elocution, p. 72. “When words in apposition follow each other in quick succession.”—Nixon's Parser, p. 57. “Where such sentences frequently succeed each other.”—L. Murray's Gram., p. 349. “Wisdom leads us to speak and act what is most proper.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 99; Murray's Gram., i, 303.

“Jul. Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?
Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thee dislike.”—Shak.

UNDER NOTE IV.—OF PASSIVE VERBS.

“We too must be allowed the privilege of forming our own laws.”—L. Murray's Gram., p. 134. “For we are not only allowed the use of all the ancient poetic feet,” &c.—Ib., p. 259; Kirkham's Elocution, 143; Jamieson's Rhet., 310. “By what code of morals am I denied the right and privilege?”—Dr. Bartlett's Lect., p. 4. “The children of Israel have alone been denied the possession of it.”—Keith's Evidences, p. 68. “At York fifteen hundred Jews were refused all quarter.”—Ib., p. 73. “He would teach the French language in three lessons, provided he was paid fifty-five dollars in advance.”—Chazotte's Essay, p. 4. “And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come.”—Luke, xvii, 20.

"I have been shown a book."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 392. "John Horne Tooke was refused admission only because he had been in holy orders."—Diversions of Purley, i, 60. "Mr. Horne Tooke having taken orders, he was refused admission to the bar."—Churchill's Gram., p. 145. "Its reference to place is lost sight of."—Bullions's E. Gram., p. 116. "What striking lesson are we taught by the tenor of this history?"—Bush's Questions, p. 71. "He had been left, by a friend, no less than eighty thousand pounds."—Priestley's Gram., p. 112. "Where there are many things to be done, each must be allowed its share of time and labour."—Johnson's Pref. to Dict., p. xiii. "Presenting the subject in a far more practical form than it has been heretofore given."—Kirkham's Phrenology, p. v. "If a being of entire impartiality should be shown the two companies."—Scott's Pref. to Bible, p. vii. "He was offered the command of the British army."—Grimshaw's Hist., p. 81. "Who had been unexpectedly left a considerable sum."—Johnson's Life of Goldsmith. "Whether a maid or a widow may be granted such a privilege."—Spectator, No. 536. "Happily all these affected terms have been denied the public suffrage."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 199. "Let him next be shewn the parsing table."—Nutting's Gram., p. viii. "Thence, he may be shown the use of the Analyzing Table."—Ib., p. ix. "Pittacus was offered a great sum of money."—Sanborn's Gram., p. 228. "He had been allowed more time for study."—Ib., p. 229. "If the walks were a little taken care of that lie between them."—Addison's Spect., No. 414. "Suppose I am offered an office or a bribe."—Pierpont's Discourse, Jan. 27, 1839.

"Am I one chaste, one last embrace deny'd?

Shall I not lay me by his clay-cold side?"—Rowe's Lucan, B. ix, l. 103.

UNDER NOTE V.—PASSIVE VERBS TRANSITIVE.

"The preposition to is made use of before nouns of place, when they follow verbs and participles of motion."—Murray's Gram., p. 203; Ingersoll's, 231; Greenleaf's, 35; Fisk's, 143; Smith's, 170; Guy's, 90; Fowler's, 555. "They were refused entrance into the house."—Murray's Key, ii, 204. "Their separate signification has been lost sight of."—Horne Tooke, ii, 422. "But, whenever ye is made use of, it must be in the nominative, and never in the objective, case."—Cobbett's E. Gram., 58. "It is said, that more persons than one are paid handsome salaries, for taking care to see acts of parliament properly worded."—Churchill's Gram., p. 334. "The following Rudiments of English Grammar, have been made use of in the University of Pennsylvania."—DR. ROGERS: in Harrison's Gram., p. 2. "It never should be lost sight of."—Newman's Rhetoric, p. 19. "A very curious fact hath been taken notice of by those expert metaphysicians."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 281. "The archbishop interfered that Michelet's lectures might be put a stop to."—The Friend, ix, 378. "The disturbances in Gottengen have been entirely put an end to."—Daily Advertiser. "Besides those that are taken notice of in these exceptions."—Priestley's Gram., p. 6. "As one, two, or three auxiliary verbs are made use of."—Ib., p. 24. "The arguments which have been made use of."—Addison's Evidences, p. 32. "The circumstance is properly taken notice of by the author."—Blair's Rhet., p. 217. "Patagonia has never been taken possession of by any European nation."—Cumming's Geog., p. 62. "He will be found fault withal no more, i. e. not hereafter."—Walker's Particles, p. 226. "The thing was to be put an end to somehow."—Leigh Hunt's Byron, p. 15. "In 1798, the Papal Territory was taken possession of by the French."—Pinnock's Geog., p. 223. "The idea has not for a moment been lost sight of by the Board."—Common School Journal, i, 37. "I shall easily be excused the labour of more transcription."—Johnson's Life of Dryden. "If I may be allowed that expression."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 259, and 288. "If without offence I may be indulged the observation."—Ib., p. 295. "There are other characters, which are frequently made use of in composition.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 280; Ingersoll’s, 293. “Such unaccountable infirmities might be in many, perhaps in most, cases got the better of.”—Seattle’s Moral Science, i, 153. “Which ought never to be had recourse to.”—Ib., i, 186. “That the widows may be taken care of.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 499. “Other cavils will yet be taken notice of.”—Pope’s Pref. to Homer. “Which implies, that all Christians are offered eternal salvation.”—West’s Letters, p. 149. “Yet even the dogs are allowed the crumbs which fall from their master’s table.”—Campbell’s Gospels, Matt., xv. 27. “For we say the light within must be taken heed unto.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 148. “This sound of a is taken notice of in Steele’s Grammar.”—Walker’s Dict., p. 22. “One came to be paid ten guineas for a pair of silver buckles.”—Castle Rackrent, p. 104. “Let him, therefore, be carefully shewn the application of the several questions in the table.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 8, “After a few times, it is no longer taken notice of by the hearers.”—Sheridan’s Lect., p. 182. “It will not admit of the same excuse, nor be allowed the same indulgence, by people of any discernment.”—Ibid. “Inanimate things may be made property of.”—Beanie’s M. Sci., p. 355.

“And, when he’s bid a liberaller price,
Will not be sluggish in the work, nor nice.”—Butler’s Poems, p. 162.

UNDER NOTE VI.—OF PERFECT PARTICIPLES.

“All the words made use of to denote spiritual and intellectual things, are in their origin metaphors.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 380. “A reply to an argument commonly made use of by unbelievers.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 293. “It was heretofore the only form made use of in the preter tenses.”—Dr. Ash’s Gram., p. 47. “Of the points, and other characters made use of in writing.”—Ib., p. xv. “If thy be the personal pronoun made use of.”—Walker’s Dict. “The Conjunction is a word made use of to connect sentences.”—Burn’s Gram., p. 28. “The points made use of to answer these purposes are the four following.”—Harrison’s Gram., p. 67. “Incense signifies perfumes exhaled by fire, and made use of in religious ceremonies.”—Murray’s Key, p. 171. “In most of his orations, there is too much art; even carried the length of ostentation.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 246. “To illustrate the great truth, so often lost sight of in our times.”—Common School Journal, I, 88. “The principal figures, made use of to affect the heart, are Exclamation, Confession, Deprecation, Commination, and Imprecation.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 133. “Disgusted at the odious artifices made use of by the Judge.”—Junius, p. 13. “The whole reasons of our being allotted a condition, out of which so much wickedness and misery would in fact arise.”—Butler’s Analogy p. 109. “Some characteristical circumstance being generally invented or laid hold of.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 246.

“And by is likewise us’d with Names that shew
The Means made use of, or the Method how.”—Ward’s Gram., p. 105.

UNDER NOTE VII.—CONSTRUCTIONS AMBIGUOUS.

“Many adverbs admit of degrees of comparison as well as adjectives.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 133. “But the author, who, by the number and reputation of his works, formed our language more than any one, into its present state, is Dryden.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 180. “In some States, Courts of Admiralty have no juries, nor Courts of Chancery at all.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 146. “I feel myself grateful to my friend.”—Murray’s Key, p. 276. “This requires a writer to have, himself, a very clear apprehension of the object he means to present to us.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 94. “Sense has its own harmony, as well as sound.”—

Ib., p. 127. "The apostrophe denotes the omission of an i which was formerly inserted, and made an addition of a syllable to the word."—Priestley's Gram., p. 67. "There are few, whom I can refer to, with more advantage than Mr. Addison."—Blair's Rhet., p. 139. "DEATH, in theology, [is a] perpetual separation from God, and eternal torments."—Webster's Dict. "That could inform the traveler as well as the old man himself!"—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 345.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—YE AND YOU IN SCRIPTURE.

"Ye daughters of Rabbah, gird ye with sackcloth."—ALGER'S BIBLE: Jer., xlix, 3. "Wash ye, make you clean."—Brown's Concordance, w. Wash. "Strip ye, and make ye bare, and gird sackcloth upon your loins."—ALGER'S BIBLE: Isaiah, xxxii, 11. "You are not ashamed that you make yourselves strange to me."—FRIENDS' BIBLE: Job, xix, 3. "You are not ashamed that ye make yourselves strange to me."—ALGER'S BIBLE: ib. "If you knew the gift of God."—Brown's Concordance, w. Knew. "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity, I know ye not."—Penington's Works, ii, 122.

RULE VI.—SAME CASES.

A Noun or a Pronoun put after a verb or participle not transitive, agrees in case with a preceding noun or pronoun referring to the same thing: as, "It is I."—"These are they."—"The child was named John."—"It could not be he."—"The Lord sitteth King forever."—Psalms, xxix, 10.

"What war could ravish, commerce could bestow,
And he return'd a friend, who came a foe."—Pope, Ep. iii, l. 206.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE VI.

OBS. 1.—Active-transitive verbs, and their imperfect and preperfect participles, always govern the objective case; but active-intransitive, passive, and neuter verbs, and their participles, take the same case after as before them, when both words refer to the same thing. The latter are rightly supposed not to govern * any case; nor are they in general followed by any noun or pronoun. But, because they are not transitive, some of them become connectives to such words as are in the same case and signify the same thing. That is, their finite tenses may be followed by a nominative, and their infinitives and participles by a nominative or an objective, agreeing with a noun or a pronoun which precedes them. The cases are the same, because the person or thing is one; as, "I am he."—"Thou art Peter."—"Civil government being the sole object of forming societies, its administration must be conducted by common consent."—Jefferson's Notes, p. 129. Identity is both the foundation and the characteristic of this construction. We chiefly use it to affirm or deny, to suggest or question, the sameness of things; but sometimes figuratively, to illustrate the relations of persons or things by comparison:† as, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman."—John, xv, 1. "I am the vine, ye are the

* Some, however, have conceived the putting of the same case after the verb as before it, to be government; as, "Neuter verbs occasionally govern either the nominative or [the] objective case, after them."—Alexander's Gram., p. 54. "The verb to be, always governs a Nominative, unless it be of the Infinitive Mood."—Buchanan's Gram., p. 94. This latter assertion is, in fact, monstrously untrue, and also solecistical.

† Not unfrequently the conjunction as intervenes between these "same cases," as it may also between words in apposition; as, "He then is as the head, and we as the members; he the vine, and we the branches."—Barclay's Works, Vol. ii, p. 189.

branches.”—John, xv, 5. Even the names of direct opposites, are sometimes put in the same case, under this rule; as,

“By such a change thy darkness is made light,
Thy chaos order, and thy weakness might.”—Cowper, Vol. i, p. 88.

OBS. 2.—In this rule, the terms after and preceding refer rather to the order of the sense and construction, than to the mere placing of the words; for the words in fact admit of various positions. The proper subject of the verb is the nominative to it, or before it, by Rule 2d; and the other nominative, however placed, is understood to be that which comes after it, by Rule 6th. In general, however, the proper subject precedes the verb, and the other word follows it, agreeably to the literal sense of the rule. But when the proper subject is placed after the verb, as in certain instances specified in the second observation under Rule 2d, the explanatory nominative is commonly introduced still later; as, “But be thou an example of the believers.”—1 Tim. iv, 12. “But what! is thy servant a dog?”—2 Kings, viii, 13. “And so would I, were I Parmenio.”—Goldsmith. “O Conloch’s daughter! is it thou?”—Ossian. But in the following example, on the contrary, there is a transposition of the entire lines, and the verb agrees with the two nominatives in the latter:

“To thee were solemn toys or empty show,
The robes of pleasure and the veils of wo.”—Dr. Johnson.

OBS. 3.—In interrogative sentences, the terms are usually transposed,* or both are placed after the verb; as, “Am I a Jew?”—John, xviii, 35. “Art thou a king then?”—Ib., ver. 37. “What is truth?”—Ib., ver. 38. “Who art thou?”—Ib., i, 19. “Art thou Elias?”—Ib., i, 21. “Tell me, Alciphron, is not distance a line turned endwise to the eye?”—Berkley’s Dialogues, p. 161.

“Whence, and what art thou, execrable shape?”—Milton.
“Art thou that traitor angel? art thou he?”—Idem.

OBS. 4.—In a declarative sentence also, there may be a rhetorical or poetical transposition of one or both of the terms: as, “And I thy victim now remain.”—Francis’s Horace, ii, 45. “To thy own dogs a prey thou shalt be made.”—Pope’s Homer, “I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame.”—Job, xxix, 15. “Far other scene is Thrasymenē now.”—Byron. In the following sentence, the latter term is palpably misplaced: “It does not clearly appear at first what the antecedent is to they.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 218. Say rather: “It does not clearly appear at first, what is the antecedent to [the pronoun] they.” In examples transposed like the following, there is an elegant ellipsis of the verb to which the pronoun is nominative; as, am, art, &c.

“When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou.”—Scott’s Marmion.

* “‘Whose house is that?’ This sentence, before it is parsed, should be transposed; thus, ‘Whose is that house?’ The same observation applies to every sentence of a similar construction.”—Chandler’s old Gram., p. 93. This instruction is worse than nonsense; for it teaches the pupil to parse every word in the sentence wrong! The author proceeds to explain Whose, as “qualifying house, understood;” is, as agreeing “with its nominative, house;” that, as “qualifying house;” and house, as “nominative case to the verb, is.” Nothing of this is true of the original question. For, in that, Whose is governed by house; house is nominative after is; is agrees with house understood; and that relates to house understood. The meaning is, “Whose house is that house?” or, in the order of a declarative sentence, “That house is whose house?”

“The forum’s champion, and the people’s chief,
Her new-born Numa thou—with reign, alas! too brief.”—Byron.

“For this commission’d, I forsook the sky—
Nay, cease to kneel—thy fellow-servant I.”—Parnell.

OBS. 5.—In some peculiar constructions, both words naturally come before the verb; as, “I know not who she is.”—“Who did you say it was?”—“I know not how to tell thee who I am.”—Romeo. “Inquire thou whose son the stripling is.”—1 Sam., xvii, 56. “Man would not be the creature which he now is.”—Blair. “I could not guess who it should be.”—Addison. And they are sometimes placed in this manner by hyberbaton, or transposition; as, “Yet he it is.”—Young. “No contemptible orator he was.”—Dr. Blair. “He it is to whom I shall give a sop.”—John, xiii, 26. “And a very noble personage Cato is.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 457. “Clouds they are without water.”—Jude, 12.

“Of worm or serpent kind it something looked,
But monstrous, with a thousand snaky heads.”—Pollok, B. i, l. 183.

OBS. 6.—As infinitives and participles have no nominatives of their own, such of them as are not transitive in their nature, may take different cases after them; and, in order to determine what case it is that follows them, the learner must carefully observe what preceding word denotes the same person or thing, and apply the principle of the rule accordingly. This word being often remote, and sometimes understood, the sense is the only clew to the construction. Examples: “Who then can bear the thought of being an outcast from his presence?”—Addison. Here outcast agrees with who, and not with thought. “I cannot help being so passionate an admirer as I am.”—Steele. Here admirer agrees with I. “To recommend what the soberer part of mankind look upon to be a trifle.”—Steele. Here trifle agrees with what as relative, the objective governed by upon. “It would be a romantic madness, for a man to be a lord in his closet.”—Id. Here madness is in the nominative case, agreeing with it; and lord, in the objective, agreeing with man. “To affect to be a lord in one’s closet, would be a romantic madness.” In this sentence also, lord is in the objective, after to be; and madness, in the nominative, after would be.

“My dear Tibullus! If that will not do,
Let me be Horace, and be Ovid you.”—Pope, B. ii, Ep. ii, 143.

OBS. 7.—An active-intransitive or a neuter participle in ing, when governed by a preposition, is often followed by a noun or a pronoun the case of which depends not on the preposition, but on the case which goes before. Example: “The Jews were in a particular manner ridiculed for being a credulous people.”—Addison’s Evidences, p. 28. Here people is in the nominative case, agreeing with Jews. Again: “The learned pagans ridiculed the Jews for being a credulous people.” Here people is in the objective case, because the preceding noun Jews is so. In both instances the preposition for governs the participle being, and nothing else. “The atrocious crime of being a young man, I shall neither attempt to palliate or deny.”—PITT: Bullions’s E. Gram., p. 82; S. S. Greene’s, 174. Sanborn has this text, with “nor” for “or.”—Analytical Gram., p. 190. This example has been erroneously cited, as one in which the case of the noun after the participle is not determined by its relation to any other word. Sanborn absurdly supposes it to be “in the nominative independent.” Bullions as strangely tells us, “it may correctly be called the objective indefinite”—like me in the following example: “He was not sure of its being me.”—

Bullions's E. Gram., p. 82. This latter text I take to be bad English. It should be, "He was not sure of it as being me;" or, "He was not sure that it was I." But, in the text above, there is an evident transposition. The syntactical order is this: "I shall neither deny nor attempt to palliate the atrocious crime of being a young man." The words man and I refer to the same person, and are therefore in the same case, according to the rule which I have given above.

OBS. 8.—S. S. Greene, in his late Grammar, improperly denominates this case after the participle being, "the predicate-nominative," and imagines that it necessarily remains a nominative even when the possessive case precedes the participle. If he were right in this, there would be an important exception to Rule 6th above. But so singularly absurd is his doctrine about "abridged predicates," that in general the abridging shows an increase of syllables, and often a conversion of good English into bad. For example: "It [the predicate] remains unchanged in the nominative, when, with the participle of the copula, it becomes a verbal noun, limited by the possessive case of the subject; as, 'That he was a foreigner prevented his election,' = 'His being a foreigner prevented his election.'"—Greene's Analysis, p. 169. Here the number of syllables is unaltered; but foreigner is very improperly called "a verbal noun," and an example which only lacks a comma, is changed to what Wells rightly calls an "anomalous expression," and one wherein that author supposes foreigner and his to be necessarily in the same case. But Greene varies this example into other "abridged forms," thus: "I knew that he was a foreigner," = "I knew his being, or of his being a foreigner." "The fact that he was a foreigner, = of his being a foreigner, was undeniable." "When he was first called a foreigner, = on his being first called a foreigner, his anger was excited."—Ib., p. 171. All these changes enlarge, rather than abridge, the expression; and, at the same time, make it questionable English, to say the least of it.

OBS. 9.—In some examples, the adverb there precedes the participle, and we evidently have nothing by which to determine the case that follows; as, "These judges were twelve in number. Was this owing to there being twelve primary deities among the Gothic nations?"—Webster's Essays, p. 263. Say rather: "Was this because there were twelve primary deities among the Gothic nations?" "How many are injured by Adam's fall, that know nothing of there ever being such a man in the world!"—Barclay's Apology, p. 185. Say rather,—"who know not that there ever was such a man in the world!"

OBS. 10.—In some other examples, we find a possessive before the participle, and a doubtful case after it; as, "This our Saviour himself was pleased to make use of as the strongest argument of his being the promised Messiah"—Addison's Evidences, p. 81. "But my chief affliction consisted in my being singled out from all the other boys, by a lad about fifteen years of age, as a proper object upon whom he might let loose the cruelty of his temper."—Couper's Memoir, p. 13. "Τοῦ πατρὸς [ὄντος] ὄνου εὐθὺς ὑπεμνήσθη. He had some sort of recollection of his father's being an ass"—Collectanea Græca Minora, Notæ, p. 7. This construction, though not uncommon, is anomalous in more respects than one. Whether or not it is worthy to form an exception to the rule of same cases, or even to that of possessives, the reader may judge from the observations made on it under the latter. I should rather devise some way to avoid it, if any can be found—and I believe there can; as, "This our Saviour himself was pleased to advance as the strongest proof that he was the promised Messiah."—"But my chief affliction consisted in this, that I was singled out," &c. The story of the mule is, "He seemed to recollect on a sudden that his father was an ass.” This is the proper meaning of the Greek text above; but the construction is different, the Greek nouns being genitives in apposition.

OBS. 11.—A noun in the nominative case sometimes follows a finite verb, when the equivalent subject that stands before the verb, is not a noun or pronoun, but a phrase or a sentence which supplies the place of a nominative; as, “That the barons and freeholders derived their authority from kings, is wholly a mistake.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 277. “To speak of a slave as a member of civil society, may, by some, be regarded a solecism.”—Stroud’s Sketch, p. 65. Here mistake and solecism are as plainly nominatives, as if the preceding subjects had been declinable words.

OBS. 12.—When a noun is put after an abstract infinitive that is not transitive, it appears necessarily to be in the objective case,* though not governed by the verb; for if we supply any noun to which such infinitive may be supposed to refer, it must be introduced before the verb by the preposition for: as, “To be an Englishman in London, a Frenchman in Paris, a Spaniard in Madrid, is no easy matter; and yet it is necessary.”—Home’s Art of Thinking, p. 89. That is, “For a traveller to be an Englishman in London,” &c. “It is certainly as easy to be a scholar, as a gamester.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 425. That is, “It is as easy for a young man to be a scholar, as it is for him to be a gamester.” “To be an eloquent speaker, in the proper sense of the word, is far from being a common or easy attainment.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 337. Here attainment is in the nominative, after is—or, rather after being, for it follows both; and speaker, in the objective after to be. “It is almost

---

* 1: In Latin, the accusative case is used after such a verb, because an other word in the same case is understood before it; as, “Facere quæ libet, id est [hominem] esse regem.”—SALLUST. “To do what he pleases, THAT is [for a man] to be a king.” If Professor Bullions had understood Latin, or Greek, or English, as well as his commenders imagine, he might have discovered what construction of cases we have in the following instances: “It is an honour [for a man] to be the author of such a work.”—Bullions’s Eng. Gram., p. 82. “To be surety for a stranger [,] is dangerous.”—Ib. “Not to know what happened before you were born, is to be always a child.”—Ib. “Nescire quid acciderit antequam natus es, est semper esse puerum.”—Ib. “Ἔστι τῶν αἰσχροῦν . . . τόπων, ὧν ἡμὲν ποτὲ κύριοι φαίνοσθαι προίεμένους.” “It is a shame to be seen giving up countries of which we were once masters.”—DEMOSTHENES: ib. What support these examples give to this grammarian’s new notion of “the objective indefinite” or to his still later seizure of Greene’s doctrine of “the predicate-nominative” the learned reader may judge. All the Latin and Greek grammarians suppose an ellipsis, in such instances; but some moderns are careless enough of that, and of the analogy of General Grammar in this case, to have seconded the Doctor in his absurdity. See Farnum’s Practical Gram., p. 23; and S. W. Clark’s, p. 149.

2. Professor Hart has an indecisive remark on this construction, as follows: “Sometimes a verb in the infinitive mood has a noun after it without any other noun before it; as, ‘To be a good man, is not so easy a thing as many people imagine.’ Here ‘man’ may be parsed as used indefinitely after the verb to be. It is not easy to say in what case the noun is in such sentences. The analogy of the Latin would seem to indicate the objective.—Thus, ‘Not to know what happened in past years, is to be always a child,’ Latin, ‘semper esse puerum.’ In like manner, in English, we may say, ‘Its being me, need make no change in your determination.’”—Hart’s English Gram., p. 127.

3. These learned authors thus differ about what certainly admits of no other solution than that which is given in the Observation above. To parse the nouns in question, “as used indefinitely,” without case, and to call them “objectives indefinite,” without agreement or government, are two methods equally repugnant to reason. The last suggestion of Hart’s is also a false argument for a true position. The phrases, “Its being me,” and “To be a good man,” are far from being constructed “in like manner.” The former is manifestly bad English; because its and me are not in the same case. But S. S. Greene would say, “Its being I, is right.” For in a similar instance, he has this conclusion: “Hence, in abridging the following proposition, ‘I was not aware that it was he,’ we should say ‘of its being he,’ not ‘his’ nor ‘him.’”—Greene’s Analysis, 1st Ed., p. 171. When being becomes a noun, no case after it appears to be very proper; but this author, thus “abridging four syllables into five,” produces an anomalous construction which it would be much better to avoid.

as hard a thing [for a man] to be a poet in despite of fortune, as it is [for one to be a poet] in despite of nature.”—Cowley’s Preface to his Poems, p. vii.

OBS. 13.—Where precision is necessary, loose or abstract infinitives are improper; as, “But to be precise, signifies, that they express that idea, and no more.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 94; Murray’s Gram., 301; Jamieson’s Rhet., 64. Say rather: “But, for an author’s words to be precise, signifies, that they express his exact idea, and nothing more or less.”

OBS. 14.—The principal verbs that take the same case after as before them, except those which are passive, are the following: to be, to stand, to sit, to lie, to live, to grow, to become, to turn, to commence, to die, to expire, to come, to go, to range, to wander, to return, to seem, to appear, to remain, to continue, to reign. There are doubtless some others, which admit of such a construction; and of some of these, it is to be observed, that they are sometimes transitive, and govern the objective: as, “To commence a suit.”—Johnson. “O continue thy loving kindness unto them.”—Psalms, xxxvi, 10. “A feather will turn the scale.”—Shak. “Return him a trespass offering.”—1 Samuel. “For it becomes me so to speak.”—Dryden. But their construction with like cases is easily distinguished by the sense; as, “When I commenced author, my aim was to amuse.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 286. “Men continue men’s destroyers.”—Nixon’s Parser, p. 56. “’Tis most just, that thou turn rascal”—Shak., Timon of Athens. “He went out mate, but he returned captain.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 182. “After this event he became physician to the king.”—Ib. That is, “When I began to be an author,” &c.

“Ev’n mean self-love becomes, by force divine,
The scale to measure others’ wants by thine.”—Pope.

OBS. 15.—The common instructions of our English grammars, in relation to the subject of the preceding rule, are exceedingly erroneous and defective. For example: “The verb TO BE, has always a nominative case after it, unless it be in the infinitive mode.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 77. “The verb TO BE requires the same case after it as before it.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 142. “The verb TO BE, through all its variations, has the same case after it, expressed or understood, as that which next precedes it.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 181; Alger’s, 62; Merchant’s, 91; Putnam’s, 116; Smith’s, 97; and many others. “The verb TO BE has usually the same case after it, as that which immediately precedes it.”—Hall’s Gram., p. 31. “Neuter verbs have the same case after them, as that which next precedes them.”—Folker’s Gram., p. 14. “Passive verbs which signify naming, and others of a similar nature, have the same case before and after them.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 182. “A Noun or Pronoun used in predication with a verb, is in the Independent Case. EXAMPLES—‘Thou art a scholar.’ ‘It is I.’ ‘God is love.’”—S. W. Clark’s Pract. Gram., p. 149. So many and monstrous are the faults of these rules, that nothing but very learned and reverend authority, could possibly impose such teaching anywhere. The first, though written by Lowth, is not a whit wiser than to say, “The preposition to has always an infinitive mood after it, unless it be a preposition.” And this latter absurdity is even a better rule for all infinitives, than the former for all predicated nominatives. Nor is there much more fitness in any of the rest. “The verb TO BE, through all,” or even in any, of its parts, has neither “always” nor usually a case “expressed or understood” after it; and, even when there is a noun or a pronoun put after it, the case is, in very many instances, not to be determined by that which “next” or “immediately” precedes the verb. Examples: “A sect of freethinkers is a sum of ciphers.”—Bentley. “And I am this day weak, though anointed king.”—2 Sam., iii, 39. “What made Luther a great man, was his unshaken reliance on God.”—Kortz’s Life of Luther, p. 13. "The devil offers his service; He is sent with a positive commission to be a lying spirit in the mouth of all the prophets."—Calvin's Institutes, p. 131. It is perfectly certain that in these four texts, the words sum, king, reliance, and spirit, are nominatives, after the verb or participle; and not objectives, as they must be, if there were any truth in the common assertion, "that the two cases, which, in the construction of the sentence, are the next before and after it, must always be alike."—Smith's New Gram., p. 98. Not only may the nominative before the verb be followed by an objective, but the nominative after it may be preceded by a possessive; as, "Amos, the herdsman of Tekoa, was not a prophet's son."—"It is the king's chapel, and it is the king's court."—Amos, vii, 13. How ignorant then must that person be, who cannot see the falsity of the instructions above cited! How careless the reader who overlooks it!

NOTES TO RULE VI.

NOTE I.—The putting of a noun in an unknown case after a participle or a participial noun, produces an anomaly which it seems better to avoid; for the cases ought to be clear, even in exceptions to the common rules of construction. Examples: (1.) "WIDOWHOOD, n. The state of being a widow."—Webster's Dict. Say rather, "WIDOWHOOD, n. The state of a widow."—Johnson, Walker, Worcester. (2.) "I had a suspicion of the fellow's being a swindler." Say rather, "I had a suspicion that the fellow was a swindler." (3.) "To prevent its being a dry detail of terms."—Buck. Better, "To prevent it from being a dry detail of terms." *

NOTE II.—The nominative which follows a verb or participle, ought to accord in signification, either literally or figuratively, with the preceding term which is taken for a sign of the same thing. Errors: (1.) "To be convicted of bribery, was then a crime altogether unpardonable."—Blair's Rhet., p. 265. To be convicted of a crime, is not the crime itself; say, therefore, "Bribery was then a crime altogether unpardonable." (2.) "The second * Parkhurst and Sanborn, by what they call "A NEW RULE," attempt to determine the doubtful or unknown case which this note censures, and to justify the construction as being well-authorized and hardly avoidable. Their rule is this: "A noun following a neuter or [a] passive participial noun, is in the nominative independent. A noun or pronoun in the possessive case, always precedes the participial noun, either expressed or understood, signifying the same thing as the noun does that follows it." To this new and exceptionable dogma, Sanborn adds: "This form of expression is one of the most common idioms of the language, and in general composition cannot be well avoided. In confirmation of the statement made, various authorities are subjoined. Two grammarians only, to our knowledge, have remarked on this phraseology: 'Participles are sometimes preceded by a possessive case and followed by a nominative; as, There is no doubt of his being a great statesman.' B. GREENLEAF. 'We sometimes find a participle that takes the same case after as before it, converted into a verbal noun, and the latter word retained unchanged in connexion with it; as, I have some recollection of his father's being a judge.' GOULD BROWN."—Sanborn's Analytical Gram., p. 189. On what principle the words statesman and judge can be affirmed to be in the nominative case, I see not; and certainly they are not nominatives "independent" because the word being, after which they stand, is not itself independent. It is true, the phraseology is common enough to be good English: but I dislike it; and if this citation from me, was meant for a confirmation of the reasonless dogmatism preceding, it is not made with fairness, because my opinion of the construction is omitted by the quoter. See Institutes of English Gram., p. 162. In an other late grammar,—a shameful work, because it is in great measure a tissue of petty larcenies from my Institutes, with alterations for the worse,—I find the following absurd "Note," or Rule: "An infinitive or participle is often followed by a substantive explanatory of an indefinite person or thing. The substantive is then in the objective case, and may be called the objective after the infinitive, or participle; [as,] It is an honor to be the author of such a work. His being a great man, did not make him a happy man. By being an obedient child, you will secure the approbation of your parents."—Farnum's Practical Gram., 1st Ed., p. 25. The first of these examples is elliptical; (see Obs. 12th above, and the Marginal Note;) the second is bad English,—or, at any rate, directly repugnant to the rule for same cases; and the third parsed wrong by the rule: "child" is in the nominative case. See Obs. 7th above.

---

person is the object of the Imperative.”—Murray’s Gram., Index, ii, 292. Say rather, “The second person is the subject of the imperative;” for the object of a verb is the word governed by it, and not its nominative.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE VI.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—OF PROPER IDENTITY.

“Who would not say, ‘If it be me,’ rather than, ‘If it be I?’—Priestley’s Gram., p. 105.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pronoun me,—which comes after the neuter verb be, is in the objective case, and does not agree with the pronoun it, the verb’s nominative,* which refers to the same thing. But, according to Rule 6th, “A noun or a pronoun put after a verb or participle not transitive, agrees in case with a preceding noun or pronoun referring to the same thing.” Therefore, me should be I; thus, “Who would not say, ‘If it be I,’ rather than, ‘If it be me?’”]

“Who is there? It is me.”—Priestley, ib., p. 104. “It is him.”—Id., ib., 104. “Are these the houses you were speaking of? Yes, they are them.”—Id., ib., 104. “It is not me you are in love with.”—Addison’s Spect., No. 290; Priestley’s Gram., p. 104; and Campbell’s Rhet., p. 203. “It cannot be me.”—SWIFT: Priestley’s Gram., p. 104. “To that which once was thee.”—PRIOR: ib., 104. “There is but one man that she can have, and that is me.”—CLARISSA: ib., 104. “We enter, as it were, into his body, and become, in some measure, him.”—ADAM SMITH: ib., p. 105. “Art thou proud yet? Ay, that I am not thee.”—Shak., Timon. “He knew not whom they were.”—Milnes, Greek Gram., p. 234. “Who do you think me to be?”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 108. “Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?”—Matt., xvi, 13. “But whom say ye that I am?”—Id., xvi, 15.—“Whom think ye that I am? I am not he.”—Acts, xiii, 25. “No; I am mistaken; I perceive it is not the person whom I supposed it was.”—Winter in London, ii, 66. “And while it is Him I serve, life is not without value.”—Zenobia, i, 76. “Without ever dreaming it was him.”—Life of Charles XII, p. 271. “Or he was not the illiterate personage whom he affected to be.”—Montgomery’s Lect. “Yet was he him, who was to be the greatest apostle of the Gentiles.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 540. “Sweet was the thrilling ecstasy; I know not if ‘twas love, or thee.”—Queen’s Wake, p. 14. “Time was, when none would cry, that oaf was me.”—Dryden, Prol. “No matter where the vanquish’d be, nor whom.”—Rowe’s Lucan, B. i, l. 676. “No, I little thought it had been him.”—Life of Oration. “That reverence and godly fear, whose object is ‘Him who can destroy both body and soul in hell.’”—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 312. “It is us that they seek to please, or rather to astonish.”—West’s Letters, p. 28. “Let the same be she that thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac.”—Gen., xxiv, 14. “Although I knew it to be he.”—Dickens’s Notes, p. 9. “Dear gentle youth, isn’t none but thee?”—Dorset’s Poems, p. 4. “Whom do they say it is?”—Fowler’s E. Gram., §493.

“These are her garb, not her; they but express
Her form, her semblance, her appropriate dress.”—Hannah More.

---

* When the preceding case is not “the verb’s nominative” this phrase must of course be omitted; and when the word which is to be corrected, does not literally follow the verb, it may be proper to say, “constructively follows,” in lieu of the phrase, “comes after.”

UNDER NOTE I.—THE CASE DOUBTFUL.

“I had no knowledge of there being any connexion between them.”—Stone, on Freemasonry, p. 25. “To promote iniquity in others, is nearly the same as being the actors of it ourselves.”—Murray’s Key, p. 170. “It must arise from feeling delicately ourselves.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 330; Murray’s Gram., 248. “By reason of there not having been exercised a competent physical power for their enforcement.”—Mass. Legislature, 1839. “PUPILAGE, n. The state of being a scholar.”—Johnson, Walker, Webster, Worcester. “Then the other part’s being the definition would make it include all verbs of every description.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 343. “John’s being my friend,* saved me from inconvenience.”—Ib., p. 201. “William’s having become a judge, changed his whole demeanor.”—Ib., p. 201. “William’s having been a teacher, was the cause of the interest which he felt.”—Ib., p. 216. “The being but one among many stifled the chidings of conscience.”—Book of Thoughts, p. 131. “As for its being esteemed a close translation, I doubt not many have been led into that error by the shortness of it.”—Pope’s Pref. to Homer. “All presumption of death’s being the destruction of living beings, must go upon supposition that they are compounded, and so discernible.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 63. “This argues rather their being proper names.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 382. “But may it not be retorted, that its being a gratification is that which excites our resentment?”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 145. “Under the common notion, of its being a system of the whole poetical art.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 401. “Whose time or other circumstances forbid their becoming classical scholars.”—Literary Convention, p. 113. “It would preclude the notion of his being a merely fictitious personage.”—Philological Museum, i, 446. “For, or under pretence of their being heretics or infidels.”—The Catholic Oath; Geo. III, 31st. “We may here add Dr. Home’s sermon on Christ’s being the Object of religious Adoration.”—Relig. World, Vol. ii, p. 200. “To say nothing of Dr. Priestley’s being a strenuous advocate,” &c.—Ib., ii, 207. “By virtue of Adam’s being their public head.”—Ib., ii, 233. “Objections against there being any such moral plan as this.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 57. “A greater instance of a man’s being a blockhead.”—Spect., No. 520. “We may insure or promote its being a happy state of existence to ourselves.”—Gurney’s Evidences, p. 86. “By its often falling a victim to the same kind of unnatural treatment.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 41. “Their appearing foolishness is no presumption against this.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 189. “But what arises from their being offences; i. e. from their being liable to be perverted.”—Ib., p. 185. “And he entered into a certain man’s house, named Justus, one that worshipped God.”—Acts, xviii, 7.

UNDER NOTE II.—OF FALSE IDENTIFICATION.

“But to be popular, he observes, is an ambiguous word.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 307. “The infinitive mood, or part of a sentence, is often the nominative case to a verb.”—L. Murray’s Index, Octavo Gram., Vol. ii, p. 290. “When any person, in speaking, introduces his own name, it is the first person; as, ‘I, James, of the city of Boston.’”—R. C. Smith’s New Gram., p. 43. “The name of the person spoken to, is the second person; as, ‘James, come to me.’”—Ibid. “The name of the person or thing spoken of, or about, is the third person; as,

---

* The author of this example supposes friend to be in the nominative case, though John’s is in the possessive, and both words denote the same person. But this is not only contrary to the general rule for the same cases, but contrary to his own application of one of his rules. Example: “Maria’s duty, as a teacher, is, to instruct her pupils.” Here, he says, “Teacher is in the possessive case, from its relation to the name Maria, denoting the same object.”—Peirce’s Gram., p. 211. This explanation, indeed, is scarcely intelligible, on account of its grammatical inaccuracy. He means, however, that, “Teacher is in the possessive case, from its relation to the name Maria’s, the two words denoting the same object.” No word can be possessive “from its relation to the name Maria,” except by standing immediately before it, in the usual manner of possessives; as, “Sterne’s Maria.”

‘James has come.’—Ibid. “The object [of a passive verb] is always its subject or nominative case.”—Ib., p. 62. “When a noun is in the nominative case to an active verb, it is the actor.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 44. “And the person commanded, is its nominative.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 120. “The first person is that who speaks.”—Pasquier’s Lévizac, p. 91. “The Conjugation of a Verb is its different variations or inflections throughout the Moods and Tenses.”—Wright’s Gram., p. 80. “The first person is the speaker. The second person is the one spoken to. The third person is the one spoken of.”—Parker and Fox’s Gram., Part i, p. 6; Hiley’s, 18. “The first person is the one that speaks, or the speaker.”—Sanborn’s Gram., pp. 23 and 75. “The second person is the one that is spoken to, or addressed.”—Ibid. “The third person is the one that is spoken of, or that is the topic of conversation.”—Ibid. “I, is the first person Singular. We, is the first person Plural.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 51; Alger’s, Ingersoll’s, and many others. “Thou, is the second person Singular. Ye or you, is the second person Plural.”—Ibid. “He, she, or it, is the third person Singular. They, is the third person Plural.”—Ibid. “The nominative case is the actor, or subject of the verb.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 43. “The noun John is the actor, therefore John is in the nominative case.”—Ibid. “The actor is always the nominative case.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 62. “The nominative case is always the agent or actor.”—Mack’s Gram., p. 67. “Tell the part of speech each name is.”—J. Flint’s Gram., p. 6. “What number is boy? Why? What number is pens? Why?”—Ib., p. 27. “The speaker is the first person, the person spoken to, the second person, and the person or thing spoken of, is the third person.”—Ib., p. 26. “What nouns are masculine gender? All males are masculine gender.”—Ib., p. 28. “An interjection is a sudden emotion of the mind.”—Barrett’s Gram., p. 62.

RULE VII.—OBJECTIVES.

A Noun or a Pronoun made the object of a preposition, is governed by it in the objective case: as, “The temple of fame stands upon the grave: the flame that burns upon its altars, is kindled from the ashes of great men”—Hazlitt.

“Life is His gift, from whom whate’er life needs,
With ev’ry good and perfect gift, proceeds.”—Cowper, Vol. i, p. 95.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE VII.

OBS. 1.—To this rule there are no exceptions; for prepositions, in English, govern no other case than the objective.* But the learner should observe that most of our prepositions may take the imperfect participle for their object, and some, the pluperfect, or preperfect; as, “On opening the trial they accused him of having defrauded them.”—“A quick wit, a nice judgment, &c., could not raise this man above being received only upon the foot of contributing to mirth and diversion.”—Steele. And the preposition to is often followed by an infinitive verb; as, “When one sort of wind is said to whistle, and an other to roar; when a serpent is said to hiss, a fly to buzz, and falling timber to crash; when a stream is said to flow, and hail to rattle; the analogy between the word and the thing signified, is plainly discernible.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 55. But let it not be supposed that participles or infinitives, when they are governed by prepositions, are therefore in the objective case; for case is no attribute of either of these classes of words: they are indeclinable in English, whatever be the relations they assume. They are governed as participles, or as infinitives, and not as cases. The mere fact of government is so far from creating the modification governed, that it necessarily presupposes it to exist, and that it is something cognizable in etymology.

* Dr. Webster, who was ever ready to justify almost any usage for which he could find half a dozen respectable authorities, absurdly supposes, that who may sometimes be rightly preferred to whom, as the object of a preposition. His remark is this: “In the use of who as an interrogative, there is an apparent deviation from regular construction—it being used without distinction of case; as, ‘Who do you speak to?’ ‘Who is she married to?’ ‘Who is this reserved for?’ ‘Who was it made by?’ This idiom is not merely colloquial: it is found in the writings of our best authors.”—Webster’s Philosophical Gram., p. 194; his Improved Gram., p. 136. “In this phrase, ‘Who do you speak to?’ there is a deviation from regular construction; but the practice of thus using who, in certain familiar phrases, seems to be established by the best authors.”—Webster’s Rudiments of E. Gram., p. 72. Almost any other solecism may be quite as well justified as this. The present work shows, in fact, a great mass of authorities for many of the incongruities which it ventures to rebuke.

OBS. 2.—The brief assertion, that, “Prepositions govern the objective case,” which till very lately our grammarians have universally adopted as their sole rule for both terms, the governing and the governed,—the preposition and its object,—is, in respect to both, somewhat exceptionable, being but partially and lamely applicable to either. It neither explains the connecting nature of the preposition, nor applies to all objectives, nor embraces all the terms which a preposition may govern. It is true, that prepositions, when they introduce declinable words, or words that have cases, always govern the objective; but the rule is liable to be misunderstood, and is in fact often misapplied, as if it meant something more than this. Besides, in no other instance do grammarians attempt to parse both the governing word and the governed, by one and the same rule. I have therefore placed the objects of this government here, where they belong in the order of the parts of speech, expressing the rule in such terms as cannot be mistaken; and have also given, in its proper place, a distinct rule for the construction of the preposition itself. See Rule 23d.

OBS. 3.—Prepositions are sometimes elliptically construed with adjectives, the real object of the relation being thought to be some objective noun understood: as, in vain, in secret, at first, on high; i. e. in a vain manner, in secret places, at the first time, on high places. Such phrases usually imply time, place, degree, or manner, and are equivalent to adverbs. In parsing, the learner may supply the ellipsis.

OBS. 4.—In some phrases, a preposition seems to govern a perfect participle; but these expressions are perhaps rather to be explained as being elliptical: as, “To give it up for lost,”—“To take that for granted which is disputed.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 109. That is, perhaps, “To give it up for a thing lost;”—“To take that for a thing granted,” &c. In the following passage the words ought and should are employed in such a manner that it is difficult to say to what part of speech they belong: “It is that very character of ought and should which makes justice a law to us; and the same character is applicable to propriety, though perhaps more faintly than to justice.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 286. The meaning seems to be, “It is that very character of being owed and required, that makes justice a law to us;” and this mode of expression, as it is more easy to be parsed, is perhaps more grammatical than his Lordship’s. But, as preterits are sometimes put by enallage for participles, a reference of them to this figure may afford a mode of explanation in parsing, whenever they are introduced by a preposition, and not by a nominative: as, “A kind of conquest Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag Of, came, and saw, and overcame”—Shak., Cymb., iii, 1. That is,—“of having come, and seen, and overcome.” Here, however, by assuming that a sentence is the object of the preposition, we may suppose the pronoun I to be understood, as ego is in the bulletin referred to, “Veni, vidi, vici.” For, as a short sentence is sometimes made the subject of a verb, so is it sometimes made the object of a preposition; as,

“Earth’s highest station ends in, ‘here he lies,’
And ‘dust to dust,’ concludes her noblest song.”—Young.

OBS. 5.—In some instances, prepositions precede adverbs; as, at once, at unawares, from thence, from above, till now, till very lately, for once, for ever. Here the adverb, though an indeclinable word, appears to be made the object of the preposition. It is in fact used substantively, and governed by the preposition. The term forever is often written as one word, and, as such, is obviously an adverb. The rest are what some writers would call adverbial phrases; a term not very consistent with itself, or with the true idea of parsing. If different parts of speech are to be taken together as having the nature of an adverb, they ought rather to coalesce and be united; for the verb to parse, being derived from the Latin pars, a part, implies in general a distinct recognition of the elements or words of every phrase or sentence.

OBS. 6.—Nouns of time, measure, distance, or value, have often so direct a relation to verbs or adjectives, that the prepositions which are supposed to govern them, are usually suppressed; as, “We rode sixty miles that day.” That is,—“through sixty miles on that day.” “The country is not a farthing richer.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 122. That is,—“richer by a farthing.” “The error has been copied times without number.”—Ib., p. 281. That is,—“on or at times innumerable.” “A row of columns ten feet high, and a row twice that height, require different proportions.” Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 344. That is,—“high to ten feet,” and, “a row of twice that height.” “Altus sex pedes, High on or at six feet.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist of Europ. Lang., ii, 150. All such nouns are in the objective case, and, in parsing them, the learner may supply the ellipsis;* or, perhaps it might be as well, to say, as do B. H. Smart and some others, that the noun is an objective of time, measure, or value, taken adverbially, and relating directly to the verb or adjective qualified by it. Such expressions as, “A board of six feet long,”—“A boy of twelve years old,” are wrong. Either strike out the of, or say, “A board of six feet in length,”—“A boy of twelve years of age,” because this preposition is not suited to the adjective, nor is the adjective fit to qualify the time or measure.

---

* Grammarians differ much as to the proper mode of parsing such nouns. Wells says, “This is the case independent by ellipsis.”—School Gram., p. 123. But the idea of such a case is a flat absurdity. Ellipsis occurs only where something, not uttered, is implied; and where a preposition is thus wanting, the noun is, of course, its object; and therefore not independent. Webster, with too much contempt for the opinion of “Lowth, followed by the whole tribe of writers on this subject,” declares it “a palpable error,” to suppose “prepositions to be understood before these expressions;” and, by two new rules, his 22d and 28th, teaches, that, “Names of measure or dimension, followed by an adjective,” and “Names of certain portions of time and space, and especially words denoting continuance of time or progression, are used without a governing word.”—Philos. Gram., pp. 165 and 172; Imp. Gram., 116 and 122; Rudiments, 65 and 67. But this is no account at all of the construction, or of the case of the noun. As the nominative, or the case which we may use independently, is never a subject of government, the phrase, “without a governing word,” implies that the case is objective; and how can this case be known, except by the discovery of some “governing word,” of which it is the object? We find, however, many such rules as the following: “Nouns of time, distance, and degree, are put in the objective case without a preposition.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 100. “Nouns which denote time, quantity, measure, distance, value, or direction are often put in the objective case without a preposition.”—Weld’s Gram., p. 153; “Abridged Ed.” 118. “Nunes signifying duration, extension, quantity, quality, and valuation, are in the objective case without a governing word.”—Frazee’s Gram., p. 154. Bullions, too, has a similar rule. To estimate these rules aright, one should observe how often the nouns in question are found with a governing word. Weld, of late, contradicts himself by admitting the ellipsis; and then, inconsistently with his admission, most absurdly denies the frequent use of the preposition with nouns of time, quantity, &c. “Before words of this description, the ellipsis of a preposition is obvious. But it is seldom proper to use the preposition before such words.”—Weld’s “Abridged Edition,” p. 118.

OBS. 7.—After the adjectives like, near, and nigh, the preposition to or unto is often understood;* as, “It is like [to or unto] silver.”—Allen. “How like the former.”—Dryden. “Near yonder copse.”—Goldsmith. “Nigh this recess.”—Garth. As similarity and proximity are relations, and not qualities, it might seem proper to call like, near, and nigh, prepositions; and some grammarians have so classed the last two. Dr. Johnson seems to be inconsistent in calling near a preposition, in the phrase, “So near thy heart,” and an adjective, in the phrase, “Being near their master.” See his Quarto Dict. I have not placed them with the prepositions, for the following four reasons: (1.) Because they are sometimes compared; (2.) Because they sometimes have adverbs evidently relating to them; (3.) Because the preposition to or unto is sometimes expressed after them; and (4.) Because the words which usually stand for them in the learned languages, are clearly adjectives.† But like, when it expresses similarity of manner, and near and nigh, when they express proximity of degree, are adverbs.

OBS. 8.—The word worth is often followed by an objective, or a participle, which it appears to govern; as, “If your arguments produce no conviction, they are worth nothing to me.”—Beattie. “To reign is worth ambition.”—Milton. “This is life indeed, life worth preserving.”—Addison. It is not easy to determine to what part of speech worth here belongs. Dr. Johnson calls it an adjective, but says nothing of the object after it, which some suppose to be governed by of understood. In this supposition, it is gratuitously assumed, that worth is equivalent to worthy, after which of should be expressed; as, “Whatsoever is worthy of their love, is worth their anger.”—Denham. But as worth appears to have no certain characteristic of an adjective, some call it a noun, and suppose a double ellipsis; as, “My knife is worth a shilling;” i. e. ‘My knife is of the worth of a shilling.’—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 163. “The book is worth that sum;” that is, ‘The book is (the) worth (of) that sum;’ ‘It is worth while;’ that is, ‘It is (the) worth (of the) while.’—Nixon’s Parser, p.

* Professor Fowler absurdly says, “Nigh, near, next, like, when followed by the objective case, may be regarded either as Prepositions or as Adjectives, to being understood.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, §458, Note 7. Now, “to being understood,” it is plain that no one of these words can be accounted a preposition, but by supposing the preposition to be complex, and to be partly suppressed. This can be nothing better than an idle whim; and, since the classification of words as parts of speech, is always positive and exclusive, to refer any particular word indecisively to “either” of two classes, is certainly no better teaching, than to say, “I do not know of which sort it is; call it what you please!” With decision prompt enough, but with too little regard to analogy or consistency, Latham and Child say, “The adjective like governs a case, and it is the only adjective that does so.”—Elementary Gram., p. 155. In teaching thus, they seem to ignore these facts: that near, nigh, or opposite, might just as well be said to be an adjective governing a case; and that the use of to or unto after like has been common enough to prove the ellipsis. The Bible has many examples; as, “Who is like to thee in Israel?”—1 Samuel, xxvi, 15. “Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first.”—Exodus, xxxiv, 1; and Deut., x, 1. But their great inconsistency here is, that they call the case after like “a dative”—a case unknown to their etymology! See Gram. of E. Gram., p. 259. In grammar, a solitary exception or instance can scarcely be a true one.

† The following examples may illustrate these points: “These verbs, and all others like to them, were like TIMAO.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of Europ. Lang., Vol. ii, p. 128. “The old German, and even the modern German, are much liker to the Visigothic than they are to the dialect of the Edda.”—Ib., i, 330. “Proximus finem, nighest the end.”—Ib., ii, 150. “Let us now come nearer to our own language.”—Dr. Blair’s Rhet., p. 85. “This looks very like a paradox.”—BEATTIE: Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 113. “He was near [to] falling.”—Ib., p. 116. Murray, who puts near into his list of prepositions, gives this example to show how “prepositions become adverbs!” “There was none ever before like unto it.”—Stone, on Masonry, p. 5.

“And earthly power doth then show likest God’s,
When mercy seasons justice.”—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 45.

54. This is still less satisfactory;* and as the whole appears to be mere guess-work, I see no good reason why worth is not a preposition, governing the noun or participle.† If an adverb precede worth, it may as well be referred to the foregoing verb, as when it occurs before any other preposition: as, “It is richly worth the money.”—“It lies directly before your door.” Or if we admit that an adverb sometimes relates to this word, the same thing may be as true of other prepositions; as, “And this is a lesson which, to the greatest part of mankind, is, I think, very well worth learning.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 303. “He sees let down from the ceiling, exactly over his head, a glittering sword, hung by a single hair.”—Murray’s E. Reader, p. 33. See Exception 3d to Rule 21st.

OBS. 9.—Both Dr. Johnson and Horne Tooke, (who never agreed if they could help it,) unite in saying that worth, in the phrases, “Wo worth the man,”—“Wo worth the day,” and the like, is from the imperative of the Saxon verb wyrthan or weorthan, to be; i. e., “Wo be [to] the man,” or, “Wo betide the man,” &c. And the latter affirms, that, as the preposition by is from the imperative of beon, to be, so with, (though admitted to be sometimes from withan, to join,) is often no other than this same imperative verb wyrth or worth: if so, the three words, by, with, and worth, were originally synonymous, and should now be referred at least to one and the same class. The dative case, or oblique object, which they governed as Saxon verbs, becomes their proper object, when taken as English prepositions; and in this also they appear to be alike. Worth, then, when it signifies value, is a common noun; but when it signifies equal in value to, it governs an objective, and has the usual characteristics of a preposition. Instances may perhaps be found in which worth is an adjective, meaning valuable or useful, as in the following lines:

“They glow’d, and grew more intimate with God,
More worth to men, more joyous to themselves.”—Young, N. ix, l. 988.

In one instance, the poet Campbell appears to have used the word worthless as a preposition:

“Eyes a mutual soul confessing,
Soon you’ll make them grow
Dim, and worthless your possessing,
Not with age, but woe!”

* Wright’s notion of this construction is positively absurd and self-contradictory. In the sentence, “My cane is worth a shilling,” he takes the word worth to be a noun “in apposition to the word shilling.” And to prove it so, he puts the sentence successively into these four forms: “My cane is worth or value for a shilling;”—“The worth or value of my cane is a shilling;”—“My cane is a shilling’s worth;”—“My cane is the worth of a shilling.”—Philosophical Gram., p. 150. In all these transmutations, worth is unquestionably a noun; but, in none of them, is it in apposition with the word shilling; and he is quite mistaken in supposing that they “indispensably prove the word in question to be a noun.” There are other authors, who, with equal confidence, and equal absurdity, call worth a verb. For example: “A noun, which signifies the price, is put in the objective case, without a preposition; as, ‘my book is worth twenty shillings.’ Is worth is a neuter verb, and answers to the latin verb valet.”—Barrett’s Gram., p. 138. I do not deny that the phrase “is worth” is a just version of the verb valet; but this equivalence in import, is no proof at all that worth is a verb. Prodest is a Latin verb, which signifies “is profitable to,” but who will thence infer, that profitable to is a verb?

† In J. R. Chandler’s English Grammar, as published in 1821, the word worth appears in the list of prepositions: but the revised list, in his edition of 1847, does not contain it. In both books, however, it is expressly parsed as a preposition; and, in expounding the sentence, “The book is worth a dollar,” the author makes this remark: “Worth has been called an adjective by some, and a noun by others: worth, however, in this sentence expresses a relation by value, and is so far a preposition; and no ellipsis, which may be formed, would change the nature of the word, without giving the sentence a different meaning.”—Chandler’s Gram., Old Ed., p. 155; New Ed., p. 181.

OBS. 10.—After verbs of giving, paying, procuring, and some others, there is usually an ellipsis of to or for before the objective of the person; as, “Give [to] him water to drink.”—“Buy [for] me a knife.”—“Pay [to] them their wages.” So in the exclamation, “Wo is me!” meaning, “Wo is to me!” This ellipsis occurs chiefly before the personal pronouns, and before such nouns as come between the verb and its direct object; as, “Whosoever killeth you, will think that he doeth [to] God service.”—John, xvi, 2. “Who brought [to] her masters much gain by soothsaying.”—Acts, xvi, 16. “Because he gave not [to] God the glory.”—Ib., xii, 23. “Give [to] me leave to allow [to] myself no respite from labour.”—Spect., No. 454. “And the sons of Joseph, which were born [to] him in Egypt, were two souls.”—Gen., xlvi, 27. This elliptical construction of a few objectives, is what remains to us of the ancient Saxon dative case. If the order of the words be changed, the preposition must be inserted; as, “Pray do my service to his majesty.”—Shak. The doctrine inculcated by several of our grammarians, that, “Verbs of asking, giving, teaching, and some others, are often employed to govern two objectives,” (Wells, §215,) I have, under a preceding rule, discountenanced; preferring the supposition, which appears to have greater weight of authority, as well as stronger support from reason, that, in the instances cited in proof of such government, a preposition is, in fact, understood. Upon this question of ellipsis, depends, in all such instances, our manner of parsing one of the objective words.

OBS. 11.—In dates, as they are usually written, there is much abbreviation; and several nouns of place and time are set down in the objective case, without the prepositions which govern them: as, “New York, Wednesday, 20th October, 1830.”—Journal of Literary Convention. That is, “At New York, on Wednesday, the 20th day of October, in the year 1830.”

NOTE TO RULE VII.

An objective noun of time or measure, if it qualifies a subsequent adjective, must not also be made an adjunct to a preceding noun; as, “To an infant of only two or three years old.”—Dr. Wayland. Expunge of, or for old write of age. The following is right: “The vast army of the Canaanites, nine hundred chariots strong, covered the level plain of Esdraelon.”—Milman’s Jews, Vol. i, p. 159. See Obs. 6th above.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE VII.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—OF THE OBJECTIVE IN FORM.

“But I do not remember who they were for.”—Abbott’s Teacher, p. 265.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pronoun who is in the nominative case, and is made the object of the preposition for. But, according to Rule 7th, “A noun or a pronoun made the object of a preposition, is governed by it in the objective case.” Therefore, who should be whom; thus, “But I do not remember whom they were for.”]

“But if you can’t help it, who do you complain of?”—Collier’s Antoninus, p. 137. “Who was it from? and what was it about?”—Edgeworth’s Frank, p. 72. “I have plenty of victuals, and, between you and I, something in a corner.”—Day’s Sandford and Merton. “The upper one, who I am now about to speak of.”—Hunt’s Byron, p. 311. “And to poor we, thine enmity’s most capital.”—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 201. “Which thou dost confess, were fit for thee to use, as they to claim.”—Ib., p. 196. “To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour, than thou of them.”—Ib., p. 197. “There are still a few who, like thou and I, drink nothing but water.”—Gil Blas, Vol. i, p. 104. “Thus, I shall fall; Thou shalt love thy neighbour; He shall be rewarded, express no resolution on the part of I, thou, he.”—Lennie’s E. Gram., p. 22; Bullions’s, 32. “So saucy with the hand of she here—What’s her name?”—Shak., Ant. and Cleop., Act iii, Sc. 11. “All debts are cleared between you and I.”—Id., Merchant of Venice, Act iii, Sc. 2. “Her price is paid, and she is sold like thou.”—Milman’s Fall of Jerusalem. “Search through all the most flourishing era’s of Greece.”—Brown’s Estimate, ii, 16. “The family of the Rudolph’s had been long distinguished.”—The Friend, Vol. v, p. 54. “It will do well enough for you and I.”—Castle Rackrent, p. 120. “The public will soon discriminate between him who is the sycophant, and he who is the teacher.”—Chazotte’s Essay, p. 10. “We are still much at a loss who civil power belongs to.”—Locke. “What do you call it? and who does it belong to?”—Collier’s Cebes. “He had received no lessons from the Socrates’s, the Plato’s, and the Confucius’s of the age.”—Hatter’s Letters. “I cannot tell who to compare them to.”—Bunyan’s P. P., p. 128. “I see there was some resemblance betwixt this good man and I.”—Pilgrim’s Progress, p. 298. “They by that means have brought themselves into the hands and house of I do not know who.”—Ib., p. 196. “But at length she said there was a great deal of difference between Mr. Cotton and we.”—Hutchinson’s Mass., ii, 430. “So you must ride on horseback after we.” *—MRS. GILPIN: Cowper, i, 275. “A separation must soon take place between our minister and I.”—Werter, p. 109. “When she exclaimed on Hastings, you, and I.”—Shakspeare. “To who? to thee? What art thou?”—Id. “That they should always bear the certain marks who they came from.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 221.

“This life has joys for you and I,
And joys that riches ne’er could buy.”—Burns.

UNDER THE NOTE—OF TIME OR MEASURE.

“Such as almost every child of ten years old knows.”—Town’s Analysis, p. 4. “One winter’s school of four months, will carry any industrious scholar, of ten or twelve years old, completely through this book.”—Ib., p. 12. “A boy of six years old may be taught to speak as correctly, as Cicero did before the Roman Senate.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 27. “A lad of about twelve years old, who was taken captive by the Indians.”—Ib., p. 235. “Of nothing else but that individual white figure of five inches long which is before him.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 288. “Where lies the fault, that boys of eight or ten years old, are with great difficulty made to understand any of its principles.”—Guy’s Gram., p. v. “Where language of three centuries old is employed.”—Booth’s Introd. to Dict., p. 21. “Let a gallows be made of fifty cubits high.”—Esther, v. 14. “I say to this child of nine years old bring me that hat, he hastens and brings it me.”—Osborn’s Key, p. 3. “He laid a floor twelve feet long, and nine feet wide; that is, over the extent of twelve feet long, and of nine feet wide.”—Merchants School Gram., p. 95. “The Goulah people are a tribe of about fifty thousand strong.”—Examiner, No. 71.

RULE VIII.—NOM. ABSOLUTE.

A Noun or a Pronoun is put absolute in the nominative, when its case depends on no other word: as, “He failing, who shall meet success?”—“Your fathers, where are they? and * Cowper here purposely makes Mrs. Gilpin use bad English; but this is no reason why a school-boy may not be taught to correct it. Dr. Priestley supposed that the word we, in the example, “To poor we, thine enmity,” &c., was also used by Shakespeare, “in a droll humorous way.”—Gram., p. 103. He surely did not know the connexion of the text. It is in “Volumnia’s pathetic speech” to her victorious son. See Coriolanus, Act V, Sc. 3.

the prophets, do they live forever?”—Zech., i, 5. “Or I only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working?”—1 Cor., ix, 6. “Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God?”—Rom., ix, 20. “O rare we!”—Cowper. “Miserable they!”—Thomson.

“The hour conceal’d, and so remote the fear,
Death still draws nearer, never seeming near.”—Pope.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE VIII.

OBS. 1.—Many grammarians make an idle distinction between the nominative absolute and the nominative independent, as if these epithets were not synonymous; and, at the same time, they are miserably deficient in directions for disposing of the words so employed. Their two rules do not embrace more than one half of those frequent examples in which the case of the noun or pronoun depends on no other word. Of course, the remaining half cannot be parsed by any of the rules which they give. The lack of a comprehensive rule, like the one above, is a great and glaring defect in all the English grammars that the author has seen, except his own, and such as are indebted to him for such a rule. It is proper, however, that the different forms of expression which are embraced in this general rule, should be discriminated, one from another, by the scholar: let him therefore, in parsing any nominative absolute, tell how it is put so; whether with a participle, by direct address, by pleonasm, or by exclamation. For, in discourse, a noun or a pronoun is put absolute in the nominative, after four modes, or under the following four circumstances: (of which Murray’s “case absolute,” or “nominative absolute,” contains only the first:)

- I. When, with a participle, it is used to express a cause, or a concomitant fact; as, “I say, this being so, the law being broken, justice takes place.”—Law and Grace, p. 27. “Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Iturea.” &c.—Luke, iii, 1. “I being in the way, the Lord led me to the house of my master’s brethren.”—Gen., xxiv, 27.

———“While shame, thou looking on,
Shame to be overcome or overreach’d,
Would utmost vigor raise.”—Milton, P. L., B. ix, 1, 312.

- II. When, by direct address, it is put in the second person, and set off from the verb, by a comma or an exclamation point; as, “At length, Seged, reflect and be wise.”—Dr. Johnson. “It may be, drunkard, swearer, liar, thief, thou dost not think of this.”—Law and Grace, p. 27.

“This said, he form’d thee, Adam! thee, O man!
Dust of the ground, and in thy nostrils breath’d
The breath of life.”—Milton’s Paradise Lost, B. vii, l. 524.

- III. When, by pleonasm, it is introduced abruptly for the sake of emphasis, and is not made the subject or the object of any verb; as, “He that hath, to him shall be given.”—Mark, iv, 25. “He that is holy, let him be holy still.”—Rev., xxii, 11. “Gad, a troop shall overcome him.”—Gen., xlix, 19. “The north and the south, thou hast created them.”—Psalms, lxxxix, 12. “And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them.”—1 Tim., vi, 2. “And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent, and his head bare.”—Levit., xiii, 45. “They who serve me with adoration,—I am in them, and they [are] in me.”—R. W. EMERSON: Liberator, No. 996.

—“What may this mean,
That thou, dead corse, again in complete steel,
Revisitst thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous; and, we fools of nature,*
So horribly to shake our disposition
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?”—Shak. Hamlet.

IV. When, by mere exclamation, it is used without address, and without other words expressed or implied to give it construction; as, “And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth.” Exodus, xxxiv, 6. “O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!”—Rom., xi, 33. “I should not like to see her limping back, Poor beast!”—Southey.

“Oh! deep enchanting prelude to repose,
The dawn of bliss, the twilight of our woes!”—Campbell.

OBS. 2.—The nominative put absolute with a participle, is often equivalent to a dependent clause commencing with when, while, if, since, or because. Thus, “I being a child,” may be equal to, “When I was a child,” or, “Because I was a child.” Here, in lieu of the nominative, the Greeks used the genitive case, and the Latins, the ablative. Thus, the phrase, “Καὶ ὑατερῆσαντος οἴνου,” “And the wine failing,” is rendered by Montanus, “Et deficiente vino;” but by Beza, “Et cum defecisset vinum;” and in our Bible, “And when they wanted wine.”—John, ii, 3. After a noun or a pronoun thus put absolute, the participle being is frequently understood, especially if an adjective or a like case come after the participle; as,

“They left their bones beneath unfriendly skies,
His worthless absolution [being] all the prize.”—Cowper, Vol. i, p. 84.

“Alike in ignorance, his reason [——] such,
Whether he thinks too little or too much.”—Pope, on Man.

OBS. 3.—The case which is put absolute in addresses or invocations, is what in the Latin and Greek grammars is called the Vocative. Richard Johnson says, “The only use of the Vocative Case, is, to call upon a Person, or a thing put Personally, which we speak to, to give notice to what we direct our Speech; and this is therefore, properly speaking, the only Case absolute or independent which we may make use of without respect to any other Word.”—Gram. Commentaries, p. 131. This remark, however, applies not justly to our language; for, with us, the vocative case, is unknown, or not distinguished from the nominative. In English, all nouns of the second person are either put absolute in the nominative, according to Rule 8th, or in apposition with their own pronouns placed before them, according to Rule 3d: as, “This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders.”—Acts, iv, 11. “How much rather ought you receivers to be considered as abandoned and execrable!”—Clarkson’s Essay, p. 114.

* Dr. Enfield misunderstood this passage; and, in copying it into his Speaker, (a very popular school-book,) he has perverted the text, by changing we to us: as if the meaning were, “Making us fools of nature.” But it is plain, that all “fool’s of nature!” must be fools of nature’s own making, and not persons temporarily frightened out of their wits by a ghost; nor does the meaning of the last two lines comport with any objective construction of this pronoun. See Enfield’s Speaker, p. 864.

“Peace! minion, peace! it boots not me to hear
The selfish counsel of you hangers-on.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 189.

“Ye Sylphs and Sylphids, to your chief give ear;
Fays, Faries, Genii, Elves, and Dæmons, hear!”—Pope, R. L., ii, 74.

OBS. 4.—The case of nouns used in exclamations, or in mottoes and abbreviated sayings, often depends, or may be conceived to depend, on something understood; and, when their construction can be satisfactorily explained on the principle of ellipsis, they are not put absolute, unless the ellipsis be that of the participle. The following examples may perhaps be resolved in this manner, though the expressions will lose much of their vivacity: “A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!”—Shak. “And he said unto his father, My head! my head!”—2 Kings, iv, 19. “And Samson said, With the jaw-bone of an ass, heaps upon heaps, with the jaw of an ass, have I slain a thousand men.”—Judges, xv, 16. “Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth.”—Matt., v, 38. “Peace, be still.”—Mark, iv, 39. “One God, world without end. Amen.”—Com. Prayer.

“My fan, let others say, who laugh at toil;
Fan! hood! glove! scarf! is her laconic style.”—Young.

OBS. 5.—“Such Expressions as, Hand to Hand, Face to Face, Foot to Foot, are of the nature of Adverbs, and are of elliptical Construction: For the Meaning is, Hand OPPOSED to Hand, &c.”—W. Ward’s Gram., p. 100. This learned and ingenious author seems to suppose the former noun to be here put absolute with a participle understood; and this is probably the best way of explaining the construction both of that word and of the preposition that follows it. So Samson’s phrase, “heaps upon heaps,” may mean, “heaps being piled upon heaps;” and Scott’s, “man to man, and steel to steel,” may be interpreted, “man being opposed to man, and steel being opposed to steel:”

“Now, man to man, and steel to steel,
A chieftain’s vengeance thou shalt feel.”—Lady of the Lake.

OBS. 6.—Cobbett, after his own hasty and dogmatical manner, rejects the whole theory of nominatives absolute, and teaches his “soldiers, sailors, apprentices, and ploughboys,” that, “The supposition, that there can be a noun, or pronoun, which has reference to no verb, and no preposition, is certainly a mistake.”—Cobbett’s E. Gram., ¶ 201. To sustain his position, he lays violent hands upon the plain truth, and even trips himself up in the act. Thus: “For want of a little thought, as to the matter immediately before us, some grammarians have found out ‘an absolute case,’ as they call it; and Mr. Lindley Murray gives an instance of it in these words: ‘Shame being lost, all virtue is lost.’ The full meaning of this sentence is this: ‘It being, or the state of things being such, that shame is lost, all virtue is lost.’”—Cobbett’s E. Gram., ¶ 191. Again: “There must, you will bear in mind, always be a verb expressed or understood. One would think, that this was not the case in [some instances: as,] ‘Sir, I beg you to give me a bit of bread.’ The sentence which follows the Sir, is complete; but the Sir appears to stand wholly without connexion. However, the full meaning is this: ‘I beg you, who are a Sir, to give me a bit of bread.’ Now, if you take time to reflect a little on this matter, you will never be puzzled for a moment by those detached words, to suit which grammarians have invented vocative cases and cases absolute, and a great many other appellations, with which they puzzle themselves, and confuse and bewilder and torment those who read their books.”—Ib., Let. xix, ¶¶ 225 and

226. All this is just like Cobbett. But, let his admirers reflect on the matter as long as they please, the two independent nominatives it and state, in the text, “It being, or the state of things being such,” will forever stand a glaring confutation both of his doctrine and of his censure: “the case absolute” is there still! He has, in fact, only converted the single example into a double one!

OBS. 7.—The Irish philologer, J. W. Wright, is even more confident than Cobbett, in denouncing “the case absolute,” and more severe in his reprehension of “Grammarians in general, and Lowth and Murray in particular,” for entertaining the idea of such a case. “Surprise must cease,” says he, “on an acquaintance with the fact, that persons who imbibe such fantastical doctrine should be destitute of sterling information on the subject of English grammar.—The English language is a stranger to this case. We speak thus, with confidence, conscious of the justness of our opinion:—an opinion, not precipitately formed, but one which is the result of mature and deliberate inquiry. ‘Shame being lost, all virtue is lost.’ The meaning of this is,—‘When shame is being lost, all virtue is lost.’ Here, the words is being lost form the true present tense of the passive voice; in which voice, all verbs, thus expressed, are unsuspectingly situated: thus, agreeing with the noun shame, as the nominative of the first member of the sentence.”—Wright’s Philosophical Gram., p. 192. With all his deliberation, this gentleman has committed one oversight here, which, as it goes to contradict his scheme of the passive verb, some of his sixty venerable commenders ought to have pointed out to him. My old friend, the “Professor of Elocution in Columbia College,” who finds by this work of “superior excellence,” that “the nature of the verb, the most difficult part of grammar, has been, at length, satisfactorily explained,” ought by no means, after his “very attentive examination” of the book, to have left this service to me. In the clause, “all virtue is lost,” the passive verb “is lost” has the form which Murray gave it—the form which, till within a year or two, all men supposed to be the only right one; but, according to this new philosophy of the language, all men have been as much in error in this matter, as in their notion of the nominative absolute. If Wright’s theory of the verb is correct, the only just form of the foregoing expression is, “all virtue is being lost.” If this central position is untenable, his management of the nominative absolute falls of course. To me, the inserting of the word being into all our passive verbs, seems the most monstrous absurdity ever broached in the name of grammar. The threescore certifiers to the accuracy of that theory, have, I trow, only recorded themselves as so many ignoramus; for there are more than threescore myriads of better judgements against them.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE VIII.

NOUNS OR PRONOUNS PUT ABSOLUTE.

“Him having ended his discourse, the assembly dispersed.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 190.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pronoun him, whose case depends on no other word, is in the objective case. But, according to Rule 8th, “A noun or a pronoun is put absolute in the nominative, when its case depends on no other word.” Therefore, him should be he; thus, “He having ended his discourse, the assembly dispersed.”]

“Me being young, they deceived me.”—Inst. E. Gram., p. 190. “Them refusing to comply, I withdrew.”—Ib. “Thee being present, he would not tell what he knew.”—Ib. “The child is lost; and me, whither shall I go?”—Ib. “Oh! happy us, surrounded with so many blessings.”—Murray’s Key, p. 187; Merchant’s, 197; Smith’s New Gram., 96; Farnum’s, 63.

“Thee, too! Brutus, my son!’ cried Cæsar, overcome.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 190. “Thee! Maria! and so late! and who is thy companion?”—New-York Mirror, Vol. x, p. 353. “How swiftly our time passes away! and ah! us, how little concerned to improve it!”—Comly’s Gram., Key, p. 192.

“There all thy gifts and graces we display,
Thee, only thee, directing all our way.”

CHAPTER IV.—ADJECTIVES.

The syntax of the English Adjective is fully embraced in the following brief rule, together with the exceptions, observations, and notes, which are, in due order, subjoined.

RULE IX.—ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives relate to nouns or pronouns: as, “Miserable comforters are ye all”—Job, xvi, 2. “No worldly enjoyments are adequate to the high desires and powers of an immortal spirit.”—Blair.

“Whatever faction’s partial notions are,
No hand is wholly innocent in war.”—Rowe’s Lucan, B. vii, l. 191.

EXCEPTION FIRST.

An adjective sometimes relates to a phrase or sentence which is made the subject of an intervening verb; as, “To insult the afflicted, is impious”—Dillwyn. “That he should refuse, is not strange”—“To err is human.” Murray says, “Human belongs to its substantive ‘nature’ understood.”—Gram., p. 233. From this I dissent.

EXCEPTION SECOND.

In combined arithmetical numbers, one adjective often relates to an other, and the whole phrase, to a subsequent noun; as, “One thousand four hundred and fifty-six men.”—“Six dollars and eighty-seven and a half cents for every five days’ service.”—“In the one hundred and twenty-second year.”—“One seven times more than it was wont to be heated.”—Daniel, iii, 19.

EXCEPTION THIRD.

With an infinitive or a participle denoting being or action in the abstract, an adjective is sometimes also taken abstractly; (that is, without reference to any particular noun, pronoun, or other subject;) as, “To be sincere, is to be wise, innocent, and safe.”—Hawkesworth. “Capacity marks the abstract quality of being able to receive or hold.”—Crabb’s Synonymes. “Indeed, the main secret of being sublime, is to say great things in few and plain words.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 215. “Concerning being free from sin in heaven, there is no question.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 437. Better: “Concerning freedom from sin,” &c.

EXCEPTION FOURTH.

Adjectives are sometimes substituted for their corresponding abstract nouns; (perhaps, in most instances, elliptically, like Greek neuters;) as, “The sensations of sublime and beautiful are not always distinguished by very distant boundaries.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 47. That is, “of sublimity and beauty.” “The faults opposite to the sublime are chiefly two:

the frigid, and the bombast”—Ib., p. 44. Better: “The faults opposite to sublimity, are chiefly two; frigidity and bombast.” “Yet the ruling character of the nation was that of barbarous and cruel.”—Brown’s Estimate, ii, 26. That is, “of barbarity and cruelty.” “In a word, agreeable and disagreeable are qualities of the objects we perceive,” &c.—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 99. “Polished, or refined, was the idea which the author had in view.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 219.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE IX.

OBS. 1.—Adjectives often relate to nouns or pronouns understood; as, “A new sorrow recalls all the former” [sorrows].—Art of Thinking, p. 31. [The place] “Farthest from him is best.”—Milton, P. L. “To whom they all gave heed, from the least [person] to the greatest” [person].—Acts, viii, 10. “The Lord your God is God of gods, and Lord of lords, a great God, a mighty [God], and a terrible” [God].—Deut., x, 17. “Every one can distinguish an angry from a placid, a cheerful from a melancholy, a thoughtful from a thoughtless, and a dull from a penetrating, countenance.”—Beattie’s Moral Science, p. 192. Here the word countenance is understood seven times; for eight different countenances are spoken of. “He came unto his own [possessions], and his own [men] received him not.”—John, i, 11. The Rev. J. G. Cooper, has it: “He came unto his own (creatures,) and his own (creatures) received him not.”—Pl. and Pract. Gram., p. 44. This ambitious editor of Virgil, abridger of Murray, expounder of the Bible, and author of several “new and improved” grammars, (of different languages,) should have understood this text, notwithstanding the obscurity of our version. “Εἰς τὰ ἴδια ἦλθε, καὶ οἱ ἴδιοι αἰτὸν οὐ παρέλαβον.”—“In propria venit, et proprii eum non receperunt.”—Montanus. “Ad sua venit, et sui eum non exceperunt.”—Beza. “Il est venu chez soi; et les siens ne l’ont point reçu.”—French Bible. Sometimes the construction of the adjective involves an ellipsis of several words, and those perhaps the principal parts of the clause; as, “The sea appeared to be agitated more than [in that degree which is] usual.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 217. “During the course of the sentence, the scene should be changed as little as [in the least] possible” [degree].—Blair’s Rhet., p. 107; Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 312.

“Presumptuous man! the reason wouldst thou find,
Why [thou art] form’d so weak, so little, and so blind”—Pope.

OBS. 2.—Because qualities belong only to things, most grammarians teach, that, “Adjectives are capable of being added to nouns only.”—Buchanan’s Syntax, p. 26. Or, as Murray expresses the doctrine: “Every adjective, and every adjective pronoun, belongs to a substantive, expressed or understood.”—Octavo Gram., p. 161. “The adjective always relates to a substantive.”—Ib., p. 169. This teaching, which is alike repugnant to the true definition of an adjective, to the true rule for its construction, and to all the exceptions to this rule, is but a sample of that hasty sort of induction, which is ever jumping to false conclusions for want of a fair comprehension of the facts in point. The position would not be tenable, even if all our pronouns were admitted to be nouns, or “substantives,” and, if these two parts of speech are to be distinguished, the consequence must be, that Murray supposes a countless number of unnecessary and absurd ellipses. It is sufficiently evident, that in the construction of sentences, adjectives often relate immediately to pronouns, and only through them to the nouns which they represent. Examples: “I should like to know who has been carried off, except poor dear me.”—Byron. “To poor us there is not much hope remaining.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 204. “It is the final pause which alone, on many occasions, marks the difference between prose and verse.”—Murray’s Gram., p.

260. "And sometimes after them both."—Ib., p. 196. "All men hail'd me happy."—Milton. "To receive unhappy me."—Dryden. "Superior to them all."—Blair's Rhet., p. 419. "They returned to their own country, full of the discoveries which they had made."—Ib., p. 350. "All ye are brethren."—Matt., xxiii, 8. "And him only shalt thou serve."—Matt., iv, 10.

"Go wiser thou, and in thy scale of sense Weigh thy opinion against Providence."—Pope.

OBS. 3.—When an adjective follows a finite verb, and is not followed by a noun, it generally relates to the subject of the verb; as, "I am glad that the door is made wide."—"An unbounded prospect doth not long continue agreeable."—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 244. "Every thing which is false, vicious, or unworthy, is despicable to him, though all the world should approve it."—Spectator, No. 520. Here false, vicious, and unworthy, relate to which; and despicable relates to thing. The practice of Murray and his followers, of supplying a "substantive" in all such cases, is absurd. "When the Adjective forms the Attribute of a Proposition, it belongs to the noun [or pronoun] which serves as the Subject of the Proposition, and cannot be joined to any other noun, since it is of the Subject that we affirm the quality expressed by this Adjective."—De Sacy, on General Gram., p. 37. In some peculiar phrases, however, such as, to fall short of, to make bold with, to set light by, the adjective has such a connexion with the verb, that it may seem questionable how it ought to be explained in parsing. Examples: (1.) "This latter mode of expression falls short of the force and vehemence of the former."—L. Murray's Gram., p. 353. Some will suppose the word short to be here used adverbially, or to qualify falls only; but perhaps it may as well be parsed as an adjective, forming a predicate with "falls," and relating to "mode," the nominative. (2.) "And that I have made so bold with thy glorious Majesty."—Jenks's Prayers, p. 156. This expression is perhaps elliptical: it may mean, "that I have made myself so bold," &c. (3.) "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother: and all the people shall say, Amen."—Deut., xxvii, 16. This may mean, "that setteth light esteem or estimation," &c.

OBS. 4.—When an adjective follows an infinitive or a participle, the noun or pronoun to which it relates, is sometimes before it, and sometimes after it, and often considerably remote; as, "A real gentleman cannot but practice those virtues which, by an intimate knowledge of mankind, he has found to be useful to them."—"He [a melancholy enthusiast] thinks himself obliged in duty to be sad and disconsolate."—Addison. "He is scandalized at youth for being lively, and at childhood for being playful."—Id. "But growing weary of one who almost walked him out of breath, he left him for Horace and Anacreon."—Steele.

OBS. 5.—Adjectives preceded by the definite article, are often used, by ellipsis, as nouns; as, the learned, for learned men. Such phrases usually designate those classes of persons or things, which are characterized by the qualities they express; and this, the reader must observe, is a use quite different from that substitution of adjectives for nouns, which is noticed in the fourth exception above. In our language, the several senses in which adjectives may thus be taken, are not distinguished with that clearness which the inflections of other tongues secure. Thus, the noble, the vile, the excellent, or the beautiful, may be put for three extra constructions: first, for noble persons, vile persons, &c.; secondly, for the noble man, the vile man, &c.; thirdly, for the abstract qualities, nobility, vileness, excellence, beauty. The last-named usage forms an exception to the rule; in the other two the noun is understood, and should be supplied by the parser. Such terms, if elliptical, are most commonly of the plural number, and refer to the word persons or things understood; as, “The careless and the imprudent, the giddy and the fickle, the ungrateful and the interested, everywhere meet us.”—Blair. Here the noun persons is to be six times supplied. “Wherever there is taste, the witty and the humorous make themselves perceived.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 21. Here the author meant, simply, the qualities wit and humour, and he ought to have used these words, because the others are equivocal, and are more naturally conceived to refer to persons. In the following couplet, the noun places or things is understood after “open,” and again after “covert,” which last word is sometimes misprinted “coverts.”

“Together let us beat this ample field,
Try what the open, what the covert, yield.”—Pope, on Man.

OBS. 6.—The adjective, in English, is generally placed immediately before its noun; as, “Vain man! is grandeur given to gay attire?”—Beattie. Those adjectives which relate to pronouns, most commonly follow them; as, “They left me weary on a grassy turf.”—Milton. But to both these general rules there are many exceptions; for the position of an adjective may be varied by a variety of circumstances, not excepting the mere convenience of emphasis: as, “And Jehu said, Unto which of all us?”—2 Kings, ix, 5. In the following instances the adjective is placed after the word to which it relates:

1. When other words depend on the adjective, or stand before it to qualify it; as, “A mind conscious of right,”—“A wall three feet thick,”—“A body of troops fifty thousand strong.”
2. When the quality results from an action, or receives its application through a verb or participle; as, “Virtue renders life happy.”—“He was in Tirzah, drinking himself drunk in the house of Arza.”—1 Kings, xvi, 9. “All men agree to call vinegar sour, honey sweet, and aloes bitter.”—Burke, on Taste, p. 38. “God made thee perfect, not immutable.”—Milton.
3. When the quality excites admiration, and the adjective would thus be more clearly distinctive; as, “Goodness infinite,”—“Wisdom unsearchable.”—Murray.
4. When a verb comes between the adjective and the noun; as, “Truth stands independent of all external things.”—Burgh. “Honour is not seemly for a fool.”—Solomon.
5. When the adjective is formed by means of the prefix a; as, afraid, alert, alike, alive, alone, asleep, awake, aware, averse, ashamed, askew. To these may be added a few other words; as, else, enough, extant, extinct, fraught, pursuant.
6. When the adjective has the nature, but not the form, of a participle; as, “A queen regnant,”—“The prince regent,”—“The heir apparent,”—“A lion, not rampant, but couchant or dormant,”—“For the time then present.”

OBS. 7.—In some instances, the adjective may either precede or follow its noun; and the writer may take his choice, in respect to its position: as,

1. In poetry—provided the sense be obvious; as,

—————“Wilt thou to the isles
Atlantic, to the rich Hesperian clime, Fly in the train of Autumn?”—Akenside, P. of I., Book i, p. 27.

—————“Wilt thou fly
With laughing Autumn to the Atlantic isles,
And range with him th’ Hesperian field?”—Id. Bucke’s Gram., p. 120.

2. When technical usage favours one order, and common usage another; as, "A notary public," or, "A public notary;"—"The heir presumptive," or, "The presumptive heir."—See Johnson's Dict., and Webster's.
3. When an adverb precedes the adjective; as, "A Being infinitely wise," or, "An infinitely wise Being." Murray, Comly, and others, here approve only the former order; but the latter is certainly not ungrammatical.
4. When several adjectives belong to the same noun; as, "A woman, modest, sensible, and virtuous," or, "A modest, sensible, and virtuous woman." Here again, Murray, Comly, and others, approve only the former order; but I judge the latter to be quite as good.
5. When the adjective is emphatic, it may be foremost in the sentence, though the natural order of the words would bring it last; as, "Weighty is the anger of the righteous."—Bible. "Blessed are the pure in heart."—Ib. "Great is the earth, high is the heaven, swift is the sun in his course."—1 Esdras, iv, 34. "The more laborious the life is, the less populous is the country."—Goldsmith's Essays, p. 151.
6. When the adjective and its noun both follow a verb as parts of the predicate, either may possibly come before the other, yet the arrangement is fixed by the sense intended: thus there is a great difference between the assertions, "We call the boy good," and, "We call the good boy"

OBS. 8.—By an ellipsis of the noun, an adjective with a preposition before it, is sometimes equivalent to an adverb; as, "In particular," that is, "In a particular manner," equivalent to particularly. So "in general" is equivalent to generally. It has already been suggested, that, in parsing, the scholar should here supply the ellipsis. See Obs. 3d, under Rule vii.

OBS. 9.—Though English adjectives are, for the most part, incapable of any agreement, yet such of them as denote unity or plurality, ought in general to have nouns of the same number: as, this man, one man, two men, many men.* In phrases of this form, the rule is well observed; but in some peculiar ways of numbering things, it is commonly disregarded; for certain nouns are taken in a plural sense without assuming the plural termination. Thus people talk of many stone of cheese,—many sail of vessels,—many stand of arms,—many head of cattle,—many dozen of eggs,—many brace of partridges,—many pair of shoes. So we read in the Bible of "two hundred pennyworth of bread," and "twelve manner of fruits." In all such phraseology, there is, in regard to the form of the latter word, an evident disagreement of the adjective with its immediate noun; but sometimes, (where the preposition of does not occur,) expressions that seem somewhat like these, may be elliptical: as when historians tell of many thousand foot (soldiers), or many hundred horse (troops). To denote a collective number, a singular adjective may precede a plural one; as, "One hundred men,"—"Every six weeks." And to denote plurality, the adjective many may, in like manner, precede an or a with a singular noun; as, "The Odyssey entertains us with many a wonderful adventure, and many a landscape of nature."—Blair's Rhet., p. 436." There starts up many a writer."—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 306.

* In Clark's Practical Grammar, of 1848, is found this NOTE: "The Noun should correspond in number with the Adjectives. EXAMPLES—A two feet ruler. A ten feet pole."—P. 165. These examples are wrong: the doctrine is misapplied in both. With this author, a, as well as two or ten, is an adjective of number; and, since these differ in number, what sort of concord or construction do the four words in each of these phrases make? When a numeral and a noun are united to form a compound adjective, we commonly, if not always, use the latter in its primitive or singular form: as, "A twopenny toy,"—"a twofold error,"—"three-coat plastering," say, "a twofoot rule,"—"a tenfoot pole," which phrases are right; while Clark's are not only unusual, but unanalogical, ungrammatical.

“Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.”—Gray.

OBS. 10.—Though this and that cannot relate to plurals, many writers do not hesitate to place them before singulars taken conjointly, which are equivalent to plurals; as, “This power and will do necessarily produce that which man is empowered to do.”—Salé’s Koran, i, 229. “That sobriety and self-denial which are essential to the support of virtue.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 218. “This modesty and decency were looked upon by them as a law of nature.”—Rollin’s Hist., ii, 45. Here the plural forms, these and those, cannot be substituted; but the singular may be repeated, if the repetition be thought necessary. Yet, when these same pronominal adjectives are placed after the nouns to suggest the things again, they must be made plural; as, “Modesty and decency were thus carefully guarded, for these were looked upon as being enjoined by the law of nature.”

OBS. 11.—In prose, the use of adjectives for adverbs is improper; but, in poetry, an adjective relating to the noun or pronoun, is sometimes elegantly used in stead of an adverb qualifying the verb or participle; as; “Gradual sinks the breeze Into a perfect calm.”—Thomson’s Seasons, p. 34. “To Thee I bend the knee; to Thee my thoughts Continual climb.”—Ib., p. 48. “As on he walks Graceful, and crowns defiance.”—Ib., p. 56. “As through the falling glooms Pensive I stray.”—Ib., p. 80. “They, sportive, wheel; or, sailing down the stream, Are snatch’d immediate by the quick-eyed trout.”—Ib., p. 82. “Incessant still you flow.”—Ib., p. 91. “The shatter’d clouds Tumultuous rove, the interminable sky Sublimer swells.”—Ib., p. 116. In order to determine, in difficult cases, whether an adjective or an adverb is required, the learner should carefully attend to the definitions of these parts of speech, and consider whether, in the case in question, quality is to be expressed, or manner: if the former, an adjective is always proper; if the latter, an adverb. That is, in this case, the adverb, though not always required in poetry, is specially requisite in prose. The following examples will illustrate this point: “She looks cold,”—“She looks coldly on him.”—“I sat silent,”—“I sat silently musing.”—“Stand firm; maintain your cause firmly.” See Etymology, Chap, viii, Obs. 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th, on the Modifications of Adverbs.

OBS. 12.—In English, an adjective and its noun are often taken as a sort of compound term, to which other adjectives may be added; as, “An old man; a good old man; a very learned, judicious, good old man.”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 169; Brit. Gram., 195; Buchanan’s, 79. “Of an other determinate positive new birth, subsequent to baptism, we know nothing.”—West’s Letters, p. 183. When adjectives are thus accumulated, the subsequent ones should convey such ideas as the former may consistently qualify, otherwise the expression will be objectionable. Thus the ordinal adjectives, first, second, third, next, and last, may qualify the cardinal numbers, but they cannot very properly be qualified by them. When, therefore, we specify any part of a series, the cardinal adjective ought, by good right, to follow the ordinal, and not, as in the following phrase, be placed before it: “In reading the nine last chapters of John.”—Fuller. Properly speaking, there is but one last chapter in any book. Say, therefore, “the last nine chapters;” for, out of the twenty-one chapters in John, a man may select several different nines. (See Etymology, Chap, iv, Obs. 7th, on the Degrees of Comparison.) When one of the adjectives merely qualifies the other, they should be joined together by a hyphen; as, “A red-hot iron.”—“A dead-ripe melon.” And when both or all refer equally and solely to the noun, they ought either to be connected by a conjunction, or to be separated by a comma. The following example is therefore faulty: “It is the business of an epic poet, to form a probable interesting tale.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 427. Say, “probable and interesting;” or else insert a comma in lieu of the conjunction.

“Around him wide a sable army stand,
A low-born, cell-bred, selfish, servile band.”—Dunciad, B. ii, l. 355.

OBS. 13.—Dr. Priestley has observed: “There is a remarkable ambiguity in the use of the negative adjective no; and I do not see,” says he, “how it can be remedied in any language. If I say, ‘No laws are better than the English,’ it is only my known sentiments that can inform a person whether I mean to praise, or dispraise them.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 136. It may not be possible to remove the ambiguity from the phraseology here cited, but it is easy enough to avoid the form, and say in stead of it, “The English laws are worse than none,” or, “The English laws are as good as any;” and, in neither of these expressions, is there any ambiguity, though the other may doubtless be taken in either of these senses. Such an ambiguity is sometimes used on purpose: as when one man says of an other, “He is no small knave;” or, “He is no small fool.”

“There liv’d in primo Georgii (they record)
A worthy member, no small fool, a lord.”—Pope, p. 409.

NOTES TO RULE IX.

NOTE I.—Adjectives that imply unity or plurality, must agree with their nouns in number: as, “That sort, those sorts;”—“This hand, these hands.” *

NOTE II.—When the adjective is necessarily plural, or necessarily singular, the noun should be made so too: as, “Twenty pounds” not, “Twenty pound;”—“Four feet long,” not, “Four foot long;”—“One session” not, “One sessions.”

NOTE III.—The reciprocal expression, one an other, should not be applied to two objects, nor each other, or one the other, to more than two; as, “Verse and prose, on some occasions, run into one another, like light and shade.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 377; Jamieson’s, 298. Say, “into each other” “For mankind have always been butchering each other”—Webster’s Essays, p. 151. Say, “one an other” See Etymology, Chap, iv, Obs. 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th, on the Classes of Adjectives.

NOTE IV.—When the comparative degree is employed with than, the latter term of comparison should never include the former; nor the former the latter: as, “Iron is more useful than all the metals”—“All the metals are less useful than iron.” In either case, it should be, “all the other metals,”

NOTE V.—When the superlative degree is employed, the latter term of comparison, which is introduced by of, should never exclude the former; as, “A fondness for show, is, of all other follies, the most vain.” Here the word other should be expunged; for this latter term must include the former: that is, the fondness for show must be one of the follies of which it is the vainest.

* Certain adjectives that differ in number, are sometimes connected disjunctively by or or than, while the noun literally agrees with that which immediately precedes it, and with the other merely by implication or supplement, under the figure which is called zeugma: as, “Two or more nouns joined together by one or more copulative conjunctions.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 75; L. Murray’s, 2d Ed., p. 106. “He speaks not to one or a few judges, but to a large assembly.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 280. “More than one object at a time.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 301. See Obs. 10th on Rule 17th.

NOTE VI.—When equality is denied, or inequality affirmed, neither term of the comparison should ever include the other; because every thing must needs be equal to itself, and it is absurd to suggest that a part surpasses the whole: as, “No writings whatever about so much with the bold and animated figures, as the sacred books.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 414. Say, “No other writings whatever;” because the sacred books are “writings” See Etymology, Chap. iv, Obs. 6th, on Regular Comparison.

NOTE VII.—Comparative terminations, and adverbs of degree, should not be applied to adjectives that are not susceptible of comparison; and all double comparatives and double superlatives should be avoided: as, “So universal a complaint:” say rather, “So general.”—“Some less nobler plunder:” say, “less noble”—“The most straitest sect:” expunge most. See Etymology, Chap. iv, from Obs. 5th to Obs. 13th, on Irregular Comparison.*

NOTE VIII.—When adjectives are connected by and, or, or nor, the shortest and simplest should in general be placed first; as, “He is older and more respectable than his brother.” To say, “more respectable and older” would be obviously inelegant, as possibly involving the inaccuracy of “more older.”

NOTE IX.—When one adjective is superadded to an other without a conjunction expressed or understood, the most distinguishing quality must be expressed next to the noun, and the latter must be such as the former may consistently qualify; as, “An agreeable young man,” not, “A young agreeable man.”—“The art of speaking, like all other practical arts, may be facilitated by rules,”—Enfield’s Speaker, p. 10. Example of error: “The Anglo-Saxon language possessed, for the two first persons, a Dual number.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 1850, p. 59. Say, “the first two persons;” for the second of three can hardly be one of the first; and “two first” with the second and third added, will clearly make more than three. See Obs. 12th, above.

NOTE X.—In prose, the use of adjectives for adverbs, is a vulgar error; the adverb alone being proper, when manner or degree is to be expressed, and not quality; as, “He writes elegant,” say, “elegantly.”—“It is a remarkable good likeness;” say, “remarkably good.”

NOTE XI.—The pronoun them should never be used as an adjective, in lieu of those: say, “I bought those books;” not, “them books.” This also is a vulgar error, and chiefly confined to the conversation of the unlearned.†

* Double comparatives and double superlatives, such as, “The more serener spirit,”—“The most straitest sect,”—are noticed by Latham and Child, in their syntax, as expressions which “we occasionally find, even in good writers,” and are truly stated to be “pleonastic;” but, forbearing to censure them as errors, these critics seem rather to justify them as pleonasms allowable. Their indecisive remarks are at fault, not only because they are indecisive, but because they are both liable and likely to mislead the learner.—See their Elementary Grammar, p. 155.

† The learned William B. Fowle strangely imagines all pronouns to be adjectives, belonging to nouns expressed or understood after them; as, “We kings require them (subjects) to obey us (kings).”—The True English Gram., p. 21. “They grammarians, [i. e.] those grammarians. They is an other spelling of the, and of course means this, that, these, those, as the case may be.”—Ibid. According to him, then, “them grammarians,” for “those grammarians,” is perfectly good English; and so is “they grammarians,” though the vulgar do not take care to vary this adjective, “as the case may be.” His notion of subjoining a noun to every pronoun, is a fit counterpart to that of some other grammarians, who imagine an ellipsis of a pronoun after

NOTE XII.—When the pronominal adjectives, this and that, or these and those, are contrasted; this or these should represent the latter of the antecedent terms, and that or those the former: as,

“And, reason raise o’er instinct as you can,
In this ‘tis God directs, in that ‘tis man.”—Pope.

“Farewell my friends! farewell my foes!
My peace with these, my love with those!”—Burns.

NOTE XIII.—The pronominal adjectives either and neither, in strict propriety of syntax, relate to two things only; when more are referred to, any and none, or any one and no one, should be used in stead of them: as, “Any of the three,” or, “Any one of the three;” not, “Either of the three.”—“None of the four,” or, “No one of the four;” not, “Neither of the four.”*

NOTE XIV.—The adjective whole must not be used in a plural sense, for all; nor less, in the sense of fewer; nor more or most, in any ambiguous construction, where it may be either an adverb of degree, or an adjective of number or quantity: as, “Almost the whole inhabitants were present.”—HUME: see Priestley’s Gram., p. 190.† Say, “Almost all the inhabitants.” “No less than three dictionaries have been published to correct it.”—Dr. Webster. Say, “No fewer.” “This trade enriched some people more than them.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 215. This passage is not clear in its import: it may have either of two meanings. Say, “This trade enriched some other people, besides them.” Or, “This trade enriched some others more than it did them.”

NOTE XV.—Participial adjectives retain the termination, but not the government of participles; when, therefore, they are followed by the objective case, a preposition must be inserted to govern it: as, “The man who is most sparing of his words, is generally most deserving of attention.”

NOTE XVI.—When the figure of any adjective affects the syntax and sense of the sentence, care must be taken to give to the word or words that form, simple or compound, almost every noun. Thus: “The personal Relatives, for the most part, are suppressed when the Noun is expressed: as, Man (he) is the Lord of this lower world. Woman (she) is the fairest Part of the Creation. The Palace (it) stands on a Hill. Men and Women (they) are rational Creatures.”—British Gram., p. 234; Buchanan’s, 131. It would have been worth a great deal to some men, to have known what an Ellipsis is; and the man who shall yet make such knowledge common, ought to be forever honoured in the schools.

---

* “An illegitimate and ungrammatical use of these words, either and neither, has lately been creeping into the language, in the application of these terms to a plurality of objects: as, ‘Twenty ruffians broke into the house, but neither of them could be recognized.’ Here are fifty pens, you will find that either of them will do.”—MATT. HARRISON, on the English Language, p. 199. “Either and neither, applied to any number more than one of two objects, is a mere solecism, and one of late introduction.”—Ib., p. 200. Say, “Either OR neither,” &c.—G. B.

† Dr. Priestley censures this construction, on the ground, that the word whole is an “attribute of unity,” and therefore improperly added to a plural noun. But, in fact, this adjective is not necessarily singular, nor is all necessarily plural. Yet there is a difference between the words: whole is equivalent to all only when the noun is singular; for then only do entireness and totality coincide. A man may say, “the whole thing,” when he means, “all the thing,” but he must not call all things, whole things. In the following example, all is put for whole, and taken substantively; but the expression is a quaint one, because the article and preposition seem needless: “Which doth encompass and embrace the all of things.”—The Dial, Vol. i, p. 59.

which suits the true meaning and construction. Examples: “He is forehead bald, yet he is clean.”—FRIENDS’ BIBLE: Lev., xiii, 41. Say, “forehead-bald.”—Alger’s Bible, and SCOTT’S. “From such phrases as, ‘New England scenery,’ convenience requires the omission of the hyphen.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 89. This is a false notion. Without the hyphen, the phrase properly means, “New scenery in England,” but New-England scenery is scenery in New England. “‘Many coloured wings,’ means many wings which are coloured; but ‘many coloured wings’ means wings of many colours.”—Blair’s Gram., p. 116.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE IX.

EXAMPLES UNDER NOTE I.—AGREEMENT OF ADJECTIVES.

“I am not recommending these kind of sufferings to your liking.”—BP. SHERLOCK: Lowth’s Gram., p. 87.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the adjective these is plural, and does not agree with its noun kind, which is singular. But, according to Note 1st under Rule 9th: “Adjectives that imply unity or plurality, must agree with their nouns in number.” Therefore, these should be this; thus, “I am not recommending this kind of sufferings.”]

“I have not been to London this five years.”—Webster’s Philos. Gram., p. 152. “These kind of verbs are more expressive than their radicals.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of Lang., Vol. ii, p. 163. “Few of us would be less corrupted than kings are, were we, like them, beset with flatterers, and poisoned with that vermin.”—Art of Thinking, p. 66. “But it seems this literati had been very ill rewarded for their ingenious labours.”—Roderick Random, Vol. ii, p. 87. “If I had not left off troubling myself about those kind of things.”—Swift. “For these sort of things are usually join’d to the most noted fortune.”—Bacon’s Essays, p. 101. “The nature of that riches and long-suffering is, to lead to repentance.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 380. “I fancy they are these kind of gods, which Horace mentions.”—Addison, on Medals, p. 74. “During that eight days they are prohibited from touching the skin.”—Hope of Israel, p. 78. “Besides, he had not much provisions left for his army.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, i, 86. “Are you not ashamed to have no other thoughts than that of amassing wealth, and of acquiring glory, credit, and dignities?”—Ib., p. 192. “It distinguisheth still more remarkably the feelings of the former from that of the latter.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. xvii. “And this good tidings of the reign shall be published through all the world.”—Campbell’s Gospels, Matt., xxiv, 14. “This twenty years have I been with thee.”—Gen., xxxi, 38. “In these kind of expressions some words seem to be understood.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 179. “He thought these kind of excesses indicative of greatness.”—Hunt’s Byron, p. 117. “These sort of fellows are very numerous.”—Spect., No. 486. “Whereas these sort of men cannot give account of their faith.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 444. “But the question is, whether that be the words.”—Ib., iii, 321. “So that these sort of Expressions are not properly Optative.”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 276. “Many things are not that which they appear to be.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 176. “So that every possible means are used.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. iv.

“We have strict statutes, and most biting laws,
Which for this nineteen years we have let sleep.”—Shak.

“They could not speak; and so I left them both,
To bear this tidings to the bloody king.”—Id., Richard III.

UNDER NOTE II.—OF FIXED NUMBERS.

“Why, I think she cannot be above six foot two inches high.”—Spect., No. 533. “The world is pretty regular for about forty rod east and ten west.”—Ib., No. 535. “The standard being more than two foot above it.”—BACON: Joh. Dict., w. Standard. “Supposing (among other Things) he saw two Suns, and two Thebes.”—Bacon’s Wisdom, p. 25. “On the right hand we go into a parlour thirty three foot by thirty nine.”—Sheffield’s Works, ii, 258. “Three pound of gold went to one shield.”—1 Kings, x, 17. “Such an assemblage of men as there appears to have been at that sessions.”—The Friend, x, 389. “And, truly, he hath saved me this pains.”—Barclay’s Works, ii, 266. “Within this three mile may you see it coming.”—SHAK.: Joh. Dict., w. Mile. “Most of the churches, not all, had one or more ruling elder.”—Hutchinson’s Hist. of Mass., i, 375. “While a Minute Philosopher, not six foot high, attempts to dethrone the Monarch of the universe.”—Berkley’s Alciphron, p. 151. “The wall is ten foot high.”—Harrison’s Gram., p. 50. “The stalls must be ten foot broad.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 201. “A close prisoner in a room twenty foot square, being at the north side of his chamber, is at liberty to walk twenty foot southward, not to walk twenty foot northward.”—LOCKE: Joh. Dict., w. Northward. “Nor, after all this pains and industry, did they think themselves qualified.”—Columbian Orator, p. 13. “No less than thirteen gypsies were condemned at one Suffolk assizes, and executed.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 333. “The king was petitioned to appoint one, or more, person, or persons.”—MACAULAY: Priestley’s Gram., p. 194. “He carries weight! he rides a race! ‘Tis for a thousand pound!”—Cowper’s Poems, i, 279. “They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns.”—Joh. Dict., w. Galleass. “The verses consist of two sort of rhymes.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 112. “A present of 40 camel’s load of the most precious things of Syria.”—Wood’s Dict., Vol. i, p. 162. “A large grammar, that shall extend to every minutiae.”—S. Barrett’s Gram., Tenth Ed., Pref., p. iii.

“So many spots, like næves on Venus’ soil,
One jewel set off with so many foil.”—Dryden.

“For, of the lower end, two handful
It had devour’d, it was so manful.”—Hudibras, i, 365.

UNDER NOTE III.—OF RECIPROCALLS.

“That shall and will might be substituted for one another.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 131. “We use not shall and will promiscuously for one another.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. 110. “But I wish to distinguish the three high ones from each other also.”—Fowle’s True Eng. Gram., p. 13. “Or on some other relation, which two objects bear to one another.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 142. “Yet the two words lie so near to one another in meaning, that in the present case, any one of them, perhaps, would have been sufficient.”—Ib., p. 203. “Both orators use great liberties with one another.”—Ib., p. 244. “That greater separation of the two sexes from one another.”—Ib., p. 466. “Most of whom live remote from each other.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 39. “Teachers like to see their pupils polite to each other.”—Webster’s El. Spelling-Book, p. 28. “In a little time, he and I must keep company with one another only.”—Spect., No. 474. “Thoughts and circumstances crowd upon each other.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 32. “They cannot see how the ancient Greeks could understand each other.”—Literary Convention, p. 96. “The spirit of the poet, the patriot, and the prophet, vied with each other in his breast.”—Hazlitt’s Lect., p. 112. “Athamas and Ino loved one another.”—Classic Tales, p. 91. “Where two things are compared or contrasted to one another.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 119. “Where two things are compared, or contrasted, with one another.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 324. “In the classification of words, almost all writers differ from each other.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. iv.

“I will not trouble thee, my child. Farewell;
We’ll no more meet; no more see one another.”—Shak. Lear.

UNDER NOTE IV.—OF COMPARATIVES.

“Errours in Education should be less indulged than any.”—Locke, on Ed., p. iv. “This was less his case than any man’s that ever wrote.”—Pref. to Waller. “This trade enriched some people more than it enriched them.” *—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 215. “The Chaldee alphabet, in which the Old Testament has reached us, is more beautiful than any ancient character known.”—Wilson’s Essay, p. 5. “The Christian religion gives a more lovely character of God, than any religion ever did.”—Murray’s Key, p. 169. “The temple of Cholula was deemed more holy than any in New Spain.”—Robertson’s America, ii, 477. “Cibber grants it to be a better poem of its kind than ever was writ.”—Pope. “Shakspeare is more faithful to the true language of nature, than any writer.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 468. “One son I had—one, more than all my sons, the strength of Troy.”—Cowper’s Homer. “Now Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was the son of his old age.”—Gen., xxxvii, 3.

UNDER NOTE V.—OF SUPERLATIVES.

“Of all other simpletons, he was the greatest.”—Nutting’s English Idioms. “Of all other beings, man has certainly the greatest reason for gratitude.”—Ibid., Gram., p. 110. “This lady is the prettiest of all her sisters.”—Peyton’s Elements of Eng. Lang., p. 39. “The relation which, of all others, is by far the most fruitful of tropes, I have not yet mentioned.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 141. “He studied Greek the most of any nobleman.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 231. “And indeed that was the qualification of all others most wanted at that time.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, ii, 35. “Yet we deny that the knowledge of him, as outwardly crucified, is the best of all other knowledge of him.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 144. “Our ideas of numbers are of all others the most accurate and distinct.”—Duncan’s Logic, p. 35. “This indeed is of all others the case when it can be least necessary to name the agent.”—J. Q. Adams’s Rhet., i, 231. “The period, to which you have arrived, is perhaps the most critical and important of any moment of your lives.”—Ib., i, 394. “Perry’s royal octavo is esteemed the best of any pronouncing Dictionary yet known.”—Red Book, p. x. “This is the tenth persecution, and of all the foregoing, the most bloody.”—Sammes’s Antiquities, Chap. xiii. “The English tongue is the most susceptible of sublime imagery, of any language in the world.”—See Bucke’s Gram., p. 141. “Homer is universally allowed to have had the greatest Invention of any writer whatever.”—Pope’s Preface to Homer. “In a version of this particular work, which most of any other seems to require a venerable antique cast.”—Ib. “Because I think him the best informed of any naturalist who has ever written.”—Jefferson’s Notes, p. 82. “Man is capable of being the most social of any animal.”—Sheridan’s Elocution, p. 145. “It is of all others that which most moves us.”—Ib., p. 158. “Which of all others, is the most necessary article.”—Ib., p. 166.

“Quoth he ‘this gambol thou advisest,
Is, of all others, the unwisest.”—Hudibras, iii, 316.

* This is not a mere repetition of the last example cited under Note 14th above; but it is Murray’s interpretation of the text there quoted. Both forms are faulty, but not in the same way.—G. BROWN.

UNDER NOTE VI.—INCLUSIVE TERMS.

“Noah and his family outlived all the people who lived before the flood.”—Webster’s El. Spelling-Book, p. 101. “I think it superior to any work of that nature we have yet had.”—Dr. Blair’s Rec. in Murray’s Gram., Vol. ii, p. 300. “We have had no grammarian who has employed so much labour and judgment upon our native language, as the author of these volumes.”—British Critic, ib., ii, 299. “No persons feel so much the distresses of others, as they who have experienced distress themselves.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo., p. 227. “Never was any people so much infatuated as the Jewish nation.”—ib., p. 185; Frazee’s Gram., p. 135. “No tongue is so full of connective particles as the Greek.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 85. “Never sovereign was so much beloved by the people.”—Murray’s Exercises, R. xv, p. 68. “No sovereign was ever so much beloved by the people.”—Murray’s Key, p. 202. “Nothing ever affected her so much as this misconduct of her child.”—ib., p. 203; Merchant’s, 195. “Of all the figures of speech, none comes so near to painting as metaphor.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 142; Jamieson’s, 149. “I know none so happy in his metaphors as Mr. Addison.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 150. “Of all the English authors, none is so happy in his metaphors as Addison.”—Jamieson’s, Rhet., p. 157. “Perhaps no writer in the world was ever so frugal of his words as Aristotle.”—Blair, p. 177; Jamieson, 251. “Never was any writer so happy in that concise spirited style as Mr. Pope.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 403. “In the harmonious structure and disposition of periods, no writer whatever, ancient or modern, equals Cicero.”—Blair, 121; Jamieson, 123. “Nothing delights me so much as the works of nature.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 150. “No person was ever so perplexed as he has been to-day.”—Murray’s Key, ii, 216. “In no case are writers so apt to err as in the position of the word only.”—Maunder’s Gram., p. 15. “For nothing is so tiresome as perpetual uniformity.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 102.

“No writing lifts exalted man so high,
As sacred and soul-moving poesy.”—Sheffield.

UNDER NOTE VII.—EXTRA COMPARISONS.

“How much more are ye better than the fowls!”—Luke, xii, 24. “Do not thou hasten above the Most Highest.”—2 Esdras, iv, 34. “This word peer is most principally used for the nobility of the realm.”—Cowell. “Because the same is not only most universally received,” &c.—Barclay’s Works, i, 447. “This is, I say, not the best and most principal evidence.”—ib., iii, 41. “Offer unto God thanksgiving, and pay thy vows unto the Most Highest.”—The Psalter, Ps. 1, 14. “The holy place of the tabernacle of the Most Highest.”—ib., Ps. xlv, 4. “As boys should be educated with temperance, so the first greatest lesson that should be taught them is to admire frugality.”—Goldsmith’s Essays, p. 152. “More universal terms are put for such as are more restricted.”—Brown’s Metaphors, p. 11. “This was the most unkindest cut of all.”—Dodd’s Beauties of Shak., p. 251; Singer’s Shak., ii, 264. “To take the basest and most poorest shape.”—Dodd’s Shak., p. 261. “I’ll forbear: and am fallen out with my more headier will.”—ib., p. 262. “The power of the Most Highest guard thee from sin.”—Percival, on Apostolic Succession, p. 90. “Which title had been more truer, if the dictionary had been in Latin and Welch.”—VERSTEGAN: Harrison’s E. Lang., p. 254. “The waters are more sooner and harder frozen, than more further upward, within the inlands.”—Id., ib. “At every descent, the worst may become more worse.”—H. MANN: Louisville Examiner, 8vo, Vol. i, p. 149.

“Or as a moat defensive to a house
Against the envy of less happier lands.”—Shakspeare.

“A dreadful quiet felt, and worser far
Than arms, a sullen interval of war.”—Dryden.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—ADJECTIVES CONNECTED.

“It breaks forth in its most energetick, impassioned, and highest strain.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 66. “He has fallen into the most gross and vilest sort of railing.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 261. “To receive that more general and higher instruction which the public affords.”—District School, p. 281. “If the best things have the perfectest and best operations.”—HOOKER: Joh. Dict. “It became the plainest and most elegant, the most splendid and richest, of all languages.”—See Bucke’s Gram., p. 140. “But the most frequent and the principal use of pauses, is, to mark the divisions of the sense.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 331; Murray’s Gram., 248. “That every thing belonging to ourselves is the perfectest and the best.”—Clarkson’s Prize Essay, p. 189. “And to instruct their pupils in the most thorough and best manner.”—Report of a School Committee.

UNDER NOTE IX.—ADJECTIVES SUPERADDED.

“The Father is figured out as an old venerable man.”—Dr. Brownlee’s Controversy. “There never was exhibited such another masterpiece of ghostly assurance.”—Id. “After the three first sentences, the question is entirely lost.”—Spect., No, 476. “The four last parts of speech are commonly called particles.”—Alex. Murray’s Gram., p. 14. “The two last chapters will not be found deficient in this respect.”—Student’s Manual, p. 6. “Write upon your slates a list of the ten first nouns.”—Abbott’s Teacher, p. 85. “We have a few remains of other two Greek poets in the pastoral style, Moschus and Bion.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 393. “The nine first chapters of the book of Proverbs are highly poetical.”—Ib., p. 417. “For of these five heads, only the two first have any particular relation to the sublime.”—Ib., p. 35. “The resembling sounds of the two last syllables give a ludicrous air to the whole.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 69. “The three last are arbitrary.”—Ib., p. 72. “But in the phrase ‘She hangs the curtains,’ the verb hangs is a transitive active verb.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 30. “If our definition of a verb, and the arrangement of transitive or intransitive active, passive, and neuter verbs, are properly understood.”—Ib., 15th Ed., p. 30. “These two last lines have an embarrassing construction.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. 160. “God was provoked to drown them all, but Noah and other seven persons.”—Wood’s Dict., ii, 129. “The six first books of the Æneid are extremely beautiful.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 27. “A few more instances only can be given here.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 131. “A few more years will obliterate every vestige of a subjunctive form.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 46. “Some define them to be verbs devoid of the two first persons.”—Crombie’s Treatise, p. 205. “In such another Essay-tract as this.”—White’s English Verb, p. 302. “But we fear that not such another man is to be found.”—REV. ED. IRVING: on Horne’s Psalms, p. xxiii.

“Oh such another sleep, that I might see
But such another man!”—SHAK., Antony and Cleopatra.

UNDER NOTE X.—ADJECTIVES FOR ADVERBS.

“The is an article, relating to the noun balm, agreeable to Rule 11.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 133. “Wise is an adjective relating to the noun man’s, agreeable to Rule 11th.”—Ibid., 12th Ed., often. “To whom I observed, that the beer was extreme good.”—Goldsmith’s Essays, p. 127. “He writes remarkably elegant.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 152. “John behaves truly civil to all men.”—Ib., p. 153. “All the sorts of words hitherto considered have each of them some meaning, even when taken separate.”—Beattie’s Moral Science, i, 44. “He behaved himself conformable to that blessed example.”—Sprat’s Sermons, p. 80. “Marvellous graceful.”—Clarendon, Life, p. 18. “The Queen having changed her ministry suitable to her wisdom.”—Swift, Exam., No. 21. “The assertions of this author are easier detected.”—Swift: censured in Lowth’s Gram., p. 93. “The characteristic of his sect allowed him to affirm no stronger than that.”—Bentley: ibid. “If one author had spoken nobler and loftier than an other.”—Id., ib. “Xenophon says express.”—Id., ib. “I can never think so very mean of him.”—Id., ib. “To convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed.”—Jude, 15th: ib. “I think it very masterly written.”—Swift to Pope, Let. 74: ib. “The whole design must refer to the golden age, which it lively represents.”—Addison, on Medals: ib. “Agreeable to this, we read of names being blotted out of God’s book.”—BURDER: approved in Webster’s Impr. Gram., p. 107; Frazee’s, 140; Maltby’s, 93. “Agreeable to the law of nature, children are bound to support their indigent parents.”—Webster’s Impr. Gram., p. 109. “Words taken independent of their meaning are parsed as nouns of the neuter gender.”—Maltby’s Gr., 96.

“Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works.”—Beaut. of Shak., p. 236.

UNDER NOTE XI.—THEM FOR THOSE.

“Though he was not known by them letters, or the name Christ.”—Wm. Bayly’s Works, p. 94. “In a gig, or some of them things.”—Edgeworth’s Castle Rackrent, p. 35. “When cross-examined by them lawyers.”—Ib., p. 98. “As the custom in them cases is.”—Ib., p. 101. “If you’d have listened to them slanders.”—Ib., p. 115. “The old people were telling stories about them fairies, but to the best of my judgment there’s nothing in it.”—Ib., p. 188. “And is it not a pity that the Quakers have no better authority to substantiate their principles than the testimony of them old Pharisees?”—Hibbard’s Errors of the Quakers, p. 107.

UNDER NOTE XII.—THIS AND THAT.

“Hope is as strong an incentive to action, as fear: this is the anticipation of good, that of evil.”—Brown’s Institutes, p. 135. “The poor want some advantages which the rich enjoy; but we should not therefore account those happy, and these miserable.”—Ib.

“Ellen and Margaret fearfully,
Sought comfort in each other’s eye;
Then turned their ghastly look each one,
This to her sire, that to her son.”

Scott’s Lady of the Lake, Canto ii, Stanza 29.

“Six youthful sons, as many blooming maids,
In one sad day beheld the Stygian shades;
These by Apollo’s silver bow were slain,
Those Cynthia’s arrows stretched upon the plain.”—Pope, Il., xxiv, 760.

“Memory and forecast just returns engage,
This pointing back to youth, that on to age.”—See Key.

UNDER NOTE XIII.—EITHER AND NEITHER.

“These make the three great subjects of discussion among mankind; truth, duty, and interest. But the arguments directed towards either of them are generically distinct.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 318. “A thousand other deviations may be made, and still either of them may be correct in principle. For these divisions and their technical terms, are all arbitrary.”—R. W. Green’s Inductive Gram., p. vi. “Thus it appears, that our alphabet is deficient, as it has but seven vowels to represent thirteen different sounds; and has no letter to represent either of five simple consonant sounds.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 19. “Then neither of these [five] verbs can be neuter.”—Oliver B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 343. “And the asserter is in neither of the four already mentioned.”—Ib., p. 356. “As it is not in either of these four.”—Ib., p. 356. “See whether or not the word comes within the definition of either of the other three simple cases.”—Ib., p. 51. “Neither of the ten was there.”—Frazee’s Gram., p. 108. “Here are ten oranges, take either of them.”—Ib., p. 102. “There are three modes, by either of which recollection will generally be supplied; inclination, practice, and association.”—Ripplingham’s Art of Speaking, p. xxix. “Words not reducible to either of the three preceding heads.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, pp. 335 and 340. “Now a sentence may be analyzed in reference to either of these [four] classes.”—Ib., p. 577.

UNDER NOTE XIV.—WHOLE, LESS, MORE, AND MOST.

“Does not all proceed from the law, which regulates the whole departments of the state?”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 278. “A messenger relates to Theseus the whole particulars.”—Kames. El. of Crit., Vol. ii, p. 313. “There are no less than twenty diphthongs in the English language.”—Dr. Ash’s Gram., p. xii. “The Redcross Knight runs through the whole steps of the Christian life.”—Spectator No. 540. “There were not less than fifty or sixty persons present.”—Teachers’ Report. “Greater experience, and more cultivated society, abate the warmth of imagination, and chasten the manner of expression.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 152; Murray’s Gram., i, 351. “By which means knowledge, much more than oratory, is become the principal requisite.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 254. “No less than seven illustrious cities disputed the right of having given birth to the greatest of poets.”—Lemp. Dict., n. Homer. “Temperance, more than medicines, is the proper means of curing many diseases.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 222. “I do not suppose, that we Britons want genius, more than our neighbours.”—Ib., p. 215. “In which he saith, he has found no less than twelve untruths.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 460. “The several places of rendezvous were concerted, and the whole operations fixed.”—HUME: see Priestley’s Gram., p. 190. “In these rigid opinions the whole sectaries concurred.”—Id., ib. “Out of whose modifications have been made most complex modes.”—LOCKE: Sanborn’s Gram., p. 148. “The Chinese vary each of their words on no less than five different tones.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 58. “These people, though they possess more shining qualities, are not so proud as he is, nor so vain as she.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 211. “’Tis certain, we believe ourselves more, after we have made a thorough Inquiry into the Thing.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. 244. “As well as the whole Course and Reasons of the Operation.”—Ib. “Those rules and principles which are of most practical advantage.”—Newman’s Rhet., p. 4. “And there shall be no more curse.”—Rev., xxii, 3. “And there shall be no more death.”—Rev., xxi, 4. “But in recompense, we have more pleasing pictures of ancient manners.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 436. “Our language has suffered more injurious changes in America, since the British army landed on our shores, than it had suffered before, in the period of three centuries.”—Webster’s Essays, Ed. of 1790, p. 96. “The whole conveniences of life are derived from mutual aid and support in society.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 166.

UNDER NOTE XV.—PARTICIPIAL ADJECTIVES.

“To such as think the nature of it deserving their attention.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 84. “In all points, more deserving the approbation of their readers.”—Keepsake, 1830. “But to give way to childish sensations was unbecoming our nature.”—Lempriere’s Dict., n. Zeno. “The following extracts are deserving the serious perusal of all.”—The Friend, Vol. v, p. 135. “No inquiry into wisdom, however superficial, is undeserving attention.”—Bulwer’s Disowned, ii, 95. “The opinions of illustrious men are deserving great consideration.”—Porter’s Family Journal, p. 3. “And resolutely keeps its laws, Uncaring consequences.”—Burns’s Works, ii, 43. “This is an item that is deserving more attention.”—Goodell’s Lectures.

“Leave then thy joys, unsuited such an age,
To a fresh comer, and resign the stage.”—Dryden.

UNDER NOTE XVI.—FIGURE OF ADJECTIVES.

“The tall dark mountains and the deep toned seas.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 278. “O! learn from him To station quick eyed Prudence at the helm.”—ANON.: Frost’s El. of Gram., p. 104. “He went in a one horse chaise.”—Blair’s Gram., p. 113. “It ought to be, ‘in a one horse chaise.’”—Dr. Crombie’s Treatise, p. 334. “These are marked with the above mentioned letters.”—Folker’s Gram., p. 4. “A many headed faction.”—Ware’s Gram., p. 18. “Lest there should be no authority in any popular grammar for the perhaps heaven inspired effort.”—Fowle’s True English Gram., Part 2d, p. 25. “Common metre stanzas consist of four Iambic lines; one of eight, and the next of six syllables. They were formerly written in two fourteen syllable lines.”—Goodenow’s Gram., p. 69. “Short metre stanzas consist of four Iambic lines; the third of eight, and the rest of six syllables.”—Ibid. “Particular metre stanzas consist of six Iambic lines; the third and sixth of six syllables, the rest of eight.”—Ibid. “Hallelujah metre stanzas consist of six Iambic lines; the last two of eight syllables, and the rest of six.”—Ibid. “Long metre stanzas are merely the union of four Iambic lines, of ten syllables each.”—Ibid. “A majesty more commanding than is to be found among the rest of the Old Testament poets.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 418.

“You sulphurous and thought executed fires,
Vaunt couriers to oak cleaving thunderbolts,
Singe my white head! And thou, all shaking thunder Strike flat the thick rotundity o’ the world!”—Beauties of Shak., p. 264.

CHAPTER V.—PRONOUNS.

The rules for the agreement of Pronouns with their antecedents are four; hence this chapter extends from the tenth rule to the thirteenth, inclusively. The cases of Pronouns are embraced with those of nouns, in the seven rules of the third chapter.

RULE X.—PRONOUNS.

A Pronoun must agree with its antecedent, or the noun or pronoun which it represents, in person, number, and gender:* as, “This is the friend of whom I spoke; he

* Some authors erroneously say, “A personal pronoun does not always agree in person with its antecedent; as, ‘John said, I will do it.’”—Goodenow’s Gram. “When I say, ‘Go, and say to those children, you must come in,’ you perceive that the noun children is of the third person, but the pronoun you is of the second; yet you stands for children,”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 54. Here are different speakers, with separate speeches; and these critics are manifestly deceived by the circumstance. It is not to be supposed, that the nouns represented by one speaker’s pronouns, are to be found or sought in what an other speaker utters. The pronoun I does not here stand for the noun John which is of the third person; it is John’s own word, has just arrived.”—“This is the book which I bought; it is an excellent work.”—“Ye, therefore, who love mercy, teach your sons to love it too.”—Cowper.

“Speak thou, whose thoughts at humble peace repine, Shall Wolsey’s wealth with Wolsey’s end be thine?”—Dr. Johnson.

EXCEPTION FIRST.

When a pronoun stands for some person or thing indefinite, or unknown to the speaker, this rule is not strictly applicable; because the person, number, and gender, are rather assumed in the pronoun, than regulated by an antecedent: as, “I do not care who knows it.”—Steele. “Who touched me? Tell me who it was.”—“We have no knowledge how, or by whom, it is inhabited.”—ABBOT: Joh. Dict.

EXCEPTION SECOND.

The neuter pronoun it may be applied to a young child, or to other creatures masculine or feminine by nature, when they are not obviously distinguishable with regard to sex; as, “Which is the real friend to the child, the person who gives it the sweetmeats, or the person who, considering only its health, resists its importunities?”—Opie. “He loads the animal he is showing me, with so many trappings and collars, that I cannot distinctly view it”—Murray’s Gram., p. 301. “The nightingale sings most sweetly when it sings in the night.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 52.

EXCEPTION THIRD.

The pronoun it is often used without a definite reference to any antecedent, and is sometimes a mere expletive, and sometimes the representative of an action expressed afterwards by a verb; as, “Whether she grapple it with the pride of philosophy.”—Chalmers. “Seeking to lord it over God’s heritage.”—The Friend, vii, 253. “It is not for kings, O Lemuel, it is not for kings to drink wine, nor for princes strong drink.”—Prov., xxxi, 4. “Having no temptation to it, God cannot act unjustly without defiling his nature.”—Brown’s Divinity, p. 11.

“Come, and trip it as you go,
On the light fantastic toe.”—Milton.

EXCEPTION FOURTH.

A singular antecedent with the adjective many, sometimes admits a plural pronoun, but never in the same clause; as, “Hard has been the fate of many a great genius, that while they have conferred immortality on others, they have wanted themselves some friend to embalm their names to posterity.”—Welwood’s Pref. to Rowe’s Lucan.

“In Hawick twinkled many a light,
Behind him soon they set in night.”—W. Scott.

---

representing himself as the speaker. The meaning is, “I myself, John, of the first person, will do it.” Nor does you stand for children as spoken of by Ingersoll; but for children of the second person, uttered or implied in the address of his messenger: as, “Children, you must come in.”

EXCEPTION FIFTH.

When a plural pronoun is put by enallagè for the singular, it does not agree with its noun in number, because it still requires a plural verb; as, “We [Lindley Murray] have followed those authors, who appear to have given them the most natural and intelligible distribution.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 29. “We shall close our remarks on this subject, by introducing the sentiments of Dr. Johnson respecting it.”—Ib. “My lord, you know I love you”—Shakspeare.

EXCEPTION SIXTH.

The pronoun sometimes disagrees with its antecedent in one sense, because it takes it in an other; as, “I have perused Mr. Johnson’s Grammatical Commentaries, and find it * a very laborious, learned, and useful Work.”—Tho. Knipe, D. D. “Lamps is of the plural number, because it means more than one.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 8. “Man is of the masculine gender, because it is the name of a male.”—Ib. “The Utica Sentinel says it has not heard whether the wounds are dangerous.”—Evening Post. (Better: “The editor of the Utica Sentinel says, he has not heard,” &c.) “There is little Benjamin with their ruler.”—Psalms, lxviii, 27.

“Her end when emulation misses,
She turns to envy, stings, and hisses.”—Swift’s Poems, p. 415.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE X.

OBS. 1.—Respecting a pronoun, the main thing is, that the reader perceive clearly for what it stands; and next, that he do not misapprehend its relation of case. For the sake of completeness and uniformity in parsing, it is, I think, expedient to apply the foregoing rule not only to those pronouns which have obvious antecedents expressed, but also to such as are not accompanied by the nouns for which they stand. Even those which are put for persons or things unknown or indefinite, may be said to agree with whatever is meant by them; that is, with such nouns as their own properties indicate. For the reader will naturally understand something by every pronoun, unless it be a mere expletive, and without any antecedent. For example: “It would depend upon who the forty were.”—Trial at Steubenville, p. 50. Here who is an indefinite relative, equivalent to what persons; of the third person, plural, masculine; and is in the nominative case after were, by Rule 6th. For the full construction seems to be this: “It would depend upon the persons who the forty were.” So which, for which person, or which thing, (if we call it a pronoun rather than an adjective,) may be said to have the properties of the noun person or thing understood; as,

“His notions fitted things so well,
 That which was which he could not tell.”—Hudibras.

OBS. 2.—The pronoun we is used by the speaker or writer to represent himself and others, and is therefore plural. But it is sometimes used, by a sort of fiction, in stead of the singular, to intimate that the speaker or writer is not alone in his opinions; or, perhaps more frequently, to evade the charge of egotism; for this modest assumption of plurality seems most common with those who have something else to assume: as, “And so lately as 1809, Pope Pius VII, in excommunicating his ‘own dear son,’ Napoleon, whom he crowned and blessed, says: ‘We, unworthy as we are, represent the God of peace.’”—Dr.

* The propriety of this construction is questionable. See Obs. 2d on Rule 14th.

Brownlee. "The coat fits us as well as if we had been melted and poured into it."—Prentice. Monarchs sometimes prefer we to I, in immediate connexion with a singular noun; as, "We Alexander, Autocrat of all the Russias."—"We the Emperor of China," &c.—Economy of Human Life, p. vi. They also employ the anomalous compound ourself, which is not often used by other people; as, "Witness ourself at Westminster, 28 day of April, in the tenth year of our reign. CHARLES."

"Cæs. What touches us ourself, shall be last serv'd."—Shak., J. C., Act iii, Sc. 1.

"Ourself to hoary Nestor will repair."—Pope, Iliad, B. x, l. 65.

OBS. 3.—The pronoun you, though originally and properly plural, is now generally applied alike to one person or to more. Several observations upon this fashionable substitution of the plural number for the singular, will be found in the fifth and sixth chapters of Etymology. This usage, however it may seem to involve a solecism, is established by that authority against which the mere grammarian has scarcely a right to remonstrate. Alexander Murray, the schoolmaster, observes, "When language was plain and simple, the English always said thou, when speaking to a single person. But when an affected politeness, and a fondness for continental manners and customs began to take place, persons of rank and fashion said you in stead of thou. The innovation gained ground, and custom gave sanction to the change, and stamped it with the authority of law."—English Gram., Third Edition, 1793, p. 107. This respectable grammarian acknowledged both thou and you to be of the second person singular. I do not, however, think it necessary or advisable to do this, or to encumber the conjugations, as some have done, by introducing the latter pronoun, and the corresponding form of the verb, as singular.* It is manifestly better to say, that the plural is used for the singular, by the figure Enallage. For if you has literally become singular by virtue of this substitution, we also is singular for the same reason, as often as it is substituted for I; else the authority of innumerable authors, editors, compilers, and crowned heads, is insufficient to make it so. And again, if you and the corresponding form of the verb are literally of the second person singular, (as Wells contends, with an array of more than sixty names of English grammarians to prove it,) then, by their own rule of concord, since thou and its verb are still generally retained in the same place by these grammarians, a verb that agrees with one of these nominatives, must also agree with the other; so that you hast and thou have, you seest and thou see, may be, so far as appears from their instructions, as good a concord as can be made of these words!

OBS. 4.—The putting of you for thou has introduced the anomalous compound yourself, which is now very generally used in stead of thyself. In this instance, as in the

---

* Among the authors who have committed this great fault, are, Alden, W. Allen, D. C. Allen, C. Adams, the author of the British Grammar, Buchanan, Cooper, Cutler, Davis, Dilworth, Felton, Fisher, Fowler, Frazee, Goldsbury, Hallock, Hull, M'Culloch, Morley, Pinneo, J. Putnam, Russell, Sanborn, R. C. Smith, Spencer, Weld, Wells, Webster, and White. "You is plural, whether it refer to only one individual, or to more."—Dr. Crombie, on Etym. and Synt., p. 240. "The word you, even when applied to one person, is plural, and should never be connected with a singular verb."—Alexander's Gram., p. 53; Emmons's, 26. "You is of the Plural Number, even though used as the Name of a single Person."—W. Ward's Gram., p. 88. "Altho' the Second Person Singular in both Times be marked with thou, to distinguish it from the Plural, yet we, out of Complaisance, though we speak but to one particular Person, use the Plural you, and never thou, but when we address ourselves to Almighty God, or when we speak in an emphatical Manner, or make a distinct and particular Application to a Person."—British Gram., p. 126; Buchanan's, 37. "But you, tho' applied to a single Person, requires a Plural Verb, the same as ye; as, you love, not you lovest or loves; you were, not you was or wast."—Buchanan's Gram., p. 37.

less frequent adoption of ourself for myself, Fashion so tramples upon the laws of grammar, that it is scarcely possible to frame an intelligible exception in her favour. These pronouns are essentially singular, both in form and meaning; and yet they cannot be used with I or thou, with me or thee, or with any verb that is literally singular; as, "I ourself am." but, on the contrary, they must be connected only with such plural terms as are put for the singular; as, "We ourself are king."—"Undoubtedly you yourself become an innovator."—L. Murray's Gram., p. 364; Campbell's Rhet., 167.

"Try touch, or sight, or smell; try what you will,
You strangely find nought but yourself alone."—Pollok, C. of T., B. i, l. 162.

OBS. 5.—Such terms of address, as your Majesty, your Highness, your Lordship, your Honour, are sometimes followed by verbs and pronouns of the second person plural, substituted for the singular; and sometimes by words literally singular, and of the third person, with no other figure than a substitution of who for which: as, "Wherein your Lordship, who shines with so much distinction in the noblest assembly in the world, peculiarly excels"—Dedication of Sale's Koran. "We have good cause to give your Highness the first place; who, by a continued series of favours have obliged us, not only while you moved in a lower orb, but since the Lord hath called your Highness to supreme authority."—Massachusetts to Cromwell, in 1654.

OBS. 6.—The general usage of the French is like that of the English, you for thou; but Spanish, Portuguese, or German politeness requires that the third person be substituted for the second. And when they would be very courteous, the Germans use also the plural for the singular, as they for thou. Thus they have a fourfold method of addressing a person: as, they, denoting the highest degree of respect; he, a less degree; you, a degree still less; and thou, none at all, or absolute reproach. Yet, even among them, the last is used as a term of endearment to children, and of veneration to God! Thou, in English, still retains its place firmly, and without dispute, in all addresses to the Supreme Being; but in respect to the first person, an observant clergyman has suggested the following dilemma: "Some men will be pained, if a minister says we in the pulpit; and others will quarrel with him, if he says I."—Abbott's Young Christian, p. 268.

OBS. 7.—Any extensive perversion of the common words of a language from their original and proper use, is doubtless a matter of considerable moment. These changes in the use of the pronouns, being some of them evidently a sort of complimentary fictions, some religious people have made it a matter of conscience to abstain from them, and have published their reasons for so doing. But the moral objections which may lie against such or any other applications of words, do not come within the grammarian's province. Let every one consider for himself the moral bearing of what he utters: not forgetting the text, "But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgement: for by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."—Matt., xii, 36 and 37. What scruples this declaration ought to raise, it is not my business to define. But if such be God's law, what shall be the reckoning of those who make no conscience of uttering continually, or when they will, not idle words only, but expressions the most absurd, insignificant, false, exaggerated, vulgar, indecent, injurious, wicked, sophistical, unprincipled, ungentle, and perhaps blasphemous, or profane?

OBS. 8.—The agreement of pronouns with their antecedents, it is necessary to observe, is liable to be controlled or affected by several of the figures of rhetoric. A noun used figuratively often suggests two different senses, the one literal, and the other tropical; and the agreement of the pronoun must be sometimes with this, and sometimes with that, according to the nature of the trope. If the reader be unacquainted with tropes and figures, he should turn to the explanation of them in Part Fourth of this work; but almost every one knows something about them, and such as must here be named, will perhaps be made sufficiently intelligible by the examples. There seems to be no occasion to introduce under this head more than four; namely, personification, metaphor, metonymy, and synecdoche.

OBS. 9.—When a pronoun represents the name of an inanimate object personified, it agrees with its antecedent in the figurative, and not in the literal sense; as, “There were others whose crime it was rather to neglect Reason than to disobey her.”—Dr. Johnson. “Penance dreams her life away.”—Rogers. “Grim Darkness furls his leaden shroud.”—Id. Here if the pronoun were made neuter, the personification would be destroyed; as, “By the progress which England had already made in navigation and commerce, it was now prepared for advancing farther.”—Robertson’s America, Vol. ii, p. 341. If the pronoun it was here intended to represent England, the feminine she would have been much better; and, if such was not the author’s meaning, the sentence has some worse fault than the agreement of a pronoun with its noun in a wrong sense.

OBS. 10.—When the antecedent is applied metaphorically, the pronoun usually agrees with it in its literal, and not in its figurative sense; as, “Pitt was the pillar which upheld the state.”—“The monarch of mountains rears his snowy head.”—“The stone which the builders rejected.”—Matt., xxi, 42. According to this rule, which would be better than whom, in the following text: “I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them an other little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots.”—Daniel, vii, 8. In Rom., ix, 33, there is something similar: “Behold, I lay in Sion a stumbling-stone and rock of offence: and whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.” Here the stone or rock is a metaphor for Christ, and the pronoun him may be referred to the sixth exception above; but the construction is not agreeable, because it is not regular: it would be more grammatical, to change on him to thereon. In the following example, the noun “wolves,” which literally requires which, and not who, is used metaphorically for selfish priests; and, in the relative, the figurative or personal sense is allowed to prevail:

“Wolves shall succeed for teachers, grievous wolves,
Who all the sacred mysteries of Heaven
 To their own vile advantages shall turn.”—Milton, P. L., B. xii, l. 508.

This seems to me somewhat forced and catachrestical. So too, and worse, the following; which makes a star rise and speak:

“So spake our Morning Star then in his rise,
 And looking round on every side beheld
 A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades.”—Id., P. R., B. i, l. 294.

OBS. 11.—When the antecedent is put by metonymy for a noun of different properties, the pronoun sometimes agrees with it in the figurative, and sometimes in the literal sense; as, “When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called my son out of Egypt. As they called them, so they went from them: [i. e., When Moses and the prophets called the Israelites, they often refused to hear:] they sacrificed unto Baalim, and burnt incense to graven images. I taught Ephraim also to go, taking them by their arms; but they knew not that I healed them.”—Hosea, xi, 1, 2, 3. The mixture and obscurity which are here, ought not to be imitated. The name of a man, put for the nation or tribe of his descendants, may have a pronoun of either number, and a nation may be figuratively represented as feminine; but a mingling of different genders or numbers ought to be avoided: as, “Moab is spoiled, and gone up out of her cities, and his chosen young men are gone down to the slaughter.”—Jeremiah, xlviii, 15.

“The wolf, who [say that] from the nightly fold,
Fierce drags the bleating prey, ne’er drunk her milk,
Nor wore her warming fleece.”—Thomson’s Seasons.

“That each may fill the circle mark’d by Heaven,
Who sees with equal eye, as God of all,
A hero perish or a sparrow fall.”—Pope’s Essay on Man.

“And heaven behold its image in his breast.”—Ib.

“Such fate to suffering worth is given,
Who long with wants and woes has striven.”—Burns.

OBS. 12.—When the antecedent is put by synecdoche for more or less than it literally signifies, the pronoun agrees with it in the figurative, and not in the literal sense; as,

“A dauntless soul erect, who smiled on death.”—Thomson

“But to the generous still improving mind,
That gives the hopeless heart to sing for joy,
To him the long review of ordered life
Is inward rapture only to be felt.”—Id. Seasons.

OBS. 13.—Pronouns usually follow the words which they represent; but this order is sometimes reversed: as, “Whom the cap fits, let him put it on.”—“Hark! they whisper; angels say,” &c.—Pope. “Thou, O Lord, art a God full of compassion.”—Old Test. And in some cases of apposition, the pronoun naturally comes first; as, “I Tertius”—“Ye lawyers.” The pronoun it, likewise, very often precedes the clause or phrase which it represents; as, “Is it not manifest, that the generality of people speak and write very badly?”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 160; Murray’s Gram., i, 358. This arrangement is too natural to be called a transposition. The most common form of the real inversion is that of the antecedent and relative in poetry; as,

“Who stops to plunder at this signal hour,
The birds shall tear him, and the dogs devour.”—POPE: Iliad, xv, 400.

OBS. 14.—A pronoun sometimes represents a phrase or a sentence; and in this case the pronoun is always in the third person singular neuter: as, “Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not.”—Gen., xxviii, 10. “Yet men can go on to vilify or disregard Christianity; which is to talk and act as if they had a demonstration of its falsehood.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 269. “When it is asked wherein personal identity consists, the answer should be the same as if it were asked, wherein consists similitude or equality.”—Ib., p.

270. “Also, that the soul be without knowledge, it is not good.”—Prov., xix, 2. In this last example, the pronoun is not really necessary. “That the soul be without knowledge, is not good.”—Jenks’s Prayers, p. 144. Sometimes an infinitive verb is taken as an antecedent; as, “He will not be able to think, without which it is impertinent to read; nor to act, without which it is impertinent to think.”—Bolingbroke, on History, p. 103.

OBS. 15.—When a pronoun follows two words, having a neuter verb between them, and both referring to the same thing, it may represent either of them, but not often with the same meaning: as, 1. “I am the man, who command.” Here, who command belongs to the subject I, and the meaning is, “I who command, am the man.” (The latter expression places the relative nearer to its antecedent, and is therefore preferable.) 2. “I am the man who commands.” Here, who commands belongs to the predicate man, and the meaning is, “I am the commander.” Again: “I perceive thou art a pupil, who possessest good talents.”—Cooper’s Pl. and Pract. Gram., p. 136. Here the construction corresponds not to the perception, which is, of the pupil’s talents. Say, therefore, “I perceive thou art a pupil possessing (or, who possesses) good talents.”

OBS. 16.—After the expletive it, which may be employed to introduce a noun or a pronoun of any person, number, or gender, the above-mentioned distinction is generally disregarded; and the relative is most commonly made to agree with the latter word, especially if this word be of the first or the second person: as, “It is no more I that do it.”—Rom., vii, 20. “For it is not ye that speak.”—Matt., x, 20. The propriety of this construction is questionable. In the following examples, the relative agrees with the it, and not with the subsequent nouns: “It is the combined excellencies of all the denominations that gives to her her winning beauty and her powerful charms.”—Bible Society’s Report, 1838, p. 89. “It is purity and neatness of expression which is chiefly to be studied.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 271. “It is not the difficulty of the language, but on the contrary the simplicity and facility of it, that occasions this neglect.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. vi. “It is a wise head and a good heart that constitutes a great man.”—Child’s Instructor, p. 22.

OBS. 17.—The pronoun it very frequently refers to something mentioned subsequently in the sentence; as, “It is useless to complain of what is irremediable.” This pronoun is a necessary expletive at the commencement of any sentence in which the verb is followed by a phrase or a clause which, by transposition, might be made the subject of the verb; as, “It is impossible to please every one.”—W. Allen’s Gram. “It was requisite that the papers should be sent.”—Ib. The following example is censured by the Rev. Matt. Harrison: “It is really curious, the course which balls will sometimes take.”—Abernethy’s Lectures. “This awkward expression,” says the critic, “might have been avoided by saying, ‘The course which balls will sometimes take is really curious.’”—Harrison, on the English Language, p. 147. If the construction is objectionable, it may, in this instance, be altered thus: “It is really curious, to observe the course which balls will sometimes take!” So, it appears, we may avoid a pleonasm by an addition. But he finds a worse example: saying, “Again, in an article from the ‘New Monthly,’ No. 103, we meet with the same form of expression, but with an aggravated aspect:—‘It is incredible, the number of apothecaries’ shops, presenting themselves.’ It would be quite as easy to say, ‘The number of apothecaries’ shops, presenting themselves, is incredible.’”—Ib., p. 147. This, too, may take an infinitive, “to tell,” or “to behold,” for there is no more extravagance in doubting one’s eyes, than in declaring one’s own statement “incredible.” But I am not sure that the original form is not allowable. In the following line, we seem to have something like it:

"It curled not Tweed alone, that breeze."—Sir W. Scott.

OBS. 18.—Relative and interrogative pronouns are placed at or near the beginning of their own clauses; and the learner must observe that, through all their cases, they almost invariably retain this situation in the sentence, and are found before their verbs even when the order of the construction would reverse this arrangement: as, "He who preserves me, to whom I owe my being, whose I am, and whom I serve, is eternal."—Murray, p. 159. "He whom you seek."—Lowth.

"The good must merit God's peculiar care;
But who, but God, can tell us who they are?"—Pope.

OBS. 19.—A relative pronoun, being the representative of some antecedent word or phrase, derives from this relation its person, number, and gender, but not its case. By taking an other relation of case, it helps to form an other clause; and, by retaining the essential meaning of its antecedent, serves to connect this clause to that in which the antecedent is found. No relative, therefore, can ever be used in an independent simple sentence, or be made the subject of a subjunctive verb, or be put in apposition with any noun or pronoun; but, like other connectives, this pronoun belongs at the head of a clause in a compound sentence, and excludes conjunctions, except when two such clauses are to be joined together, as in the following example: "I should be glad, at least, of an easy companion, who may tell me his thoughts, and to whom I may communicate mine."—Goldsmith's Essays, p. 196.

OBS. 20.—The two special rules commonly given by the grammarians, for the construction of relatives, are not only unnecessary* but faulty. I shall notice them only to show my reasons for discarding them. With whom they originated, it is difficult to say. Paul's Accidence has them, and if Dean Colet, the supposed writer, did not take them from some earlier author, they must have been first taught by him, about the year 1510; and it is certain that they have been copied into almost every grammar published since. The first one is faulty, because, "When there cometh no nominative case between the relative and the verb, the relative shall [not always] be the nominative case to the verb;" as may be seen by the following examples: "Many are the works of human industry, which to begin and finish are [say is] hardly granted to the same man."—Dr. Johnson's Adv. to Dict. "They aim at his removal; which there is reason to fear they will effect."—"Which to avoid, I cut them off."—Shak., Hen. IV. The second rule is faulty, because, "When there cometh a nominative case between the relative and the verb, the relative shall [not always] be such case as the verb will have after it;" as may be seen by the following examples: "The author has not advanced any instances, which he does not think are pertinent."—Murray's Gram., i, 192. "Which we have reason to think was the case with the Greek and Latin."—Ib., 112. "Is this your son, who ye say was born blind?"—John, ix, 19. The case of the relative cannot be accurately determined by any rules of mere location. It may be nominative to a verb afar off, or it may be objective with a verb immediately following; as, "Which I do not find that there ever was."—Knight, on the Greek Alphabet, p. 31. "And our chief reason for believing which is that our ancestors did so before us."—Philological Museum, i, 641. Both these particular rules are useless, because the general rules for the cases, as given in chapter third above, are applicable to relatives, sufficient to all the purpose, and not liable to any exceptions.

* "Mr. Murray's 6th Rule is unnecessary."—Lennie's English Gram., p. 81; Bullions's, p. 90. The two rules of which I speak, constitute Murray's Rule VI; Alger's and Bacon's Rule VI; Merchant's Rule IX; Ingersoll's Rule XII; Kirkham's Rules XV and XVI; Jaudon's XXI and XXII; Crombie's X and XI; Nixon's Obs. 86th and 87th: and are found in Lowth's Gram., p. 100; Churchill's, 136; Adam's, 203; W. Allen's, 156; Blair's, 75; and many other books.

OBS. 21.—In syntactical parsing, each word, in general, is to be resolved by some one rule; but the parsing of a pronoun commonly requires two; one for its agreement with the noun or nouns for which it stands, and an other for its case. The rule of agreement will be one of the four which are embraced in this present chapter; and the rule for the case will be one of the seven which compose chapter third. So that the whole syntax of pronouns requires the application of eleven different rules, while that of nouns or verbs is embraced in six or seven, and that of any other part of speech, in one only. In respect to their cases, relatives and interrogatives admit of every construction common to nouns, or to the personal pronouns, except apposition. This is proved by the following examples:

1. Nominatives by Rule 2d: “I who write;—Thou who writest;—He who writes;—The animal which runs.”—Dr. Adam. “He that spareth his rod, hateth his son.”—Solomon. “He who does any thing which he knows is wrong, ventures on dangerous ground.”—“What will become of us without religion?”—Blair. “Here I determined to wait the hand of death; which, I hope, when at last it comes, will fall lightly upon me.”—Dr. Johnson. “What is sudden and unaccountable, serves to confound.”—Crabb. “They only are wise, who are wise to salvation.”—Goodwin.
2. Nominatives by Rule 6th: (i.e., words parsed as nominatives after the verbs, though mostly transposed:) “Who art thou?”—Bible. “What were we?”—Ib. “Do not tell them who I am.”—“Let him be who he may, he is not the honest fellow that he seemed.”—“The general conduct of mankind is neither what it was designed, nor what it ought to be.”
3. Nominatives absolute by Rule 8th: “There are certain bounds to imprudence, which being transgressed, there remains no place for repentance in the natural course of things.”—Bp. Butler. “Which being so, it need not be any wonder, why I should.”—Walker’s Particles, Pref., p. xiv. “He offered an apology, which not being admitted, he became submissive.”—Murray’s Key, p. 202. This construction of the relative is a Latinism, and very seldom used by the best English writers.
4. Possessives by Rule 4th: “The chief man of the island, whose name was Publius.”—Acts. “Despair, a cruel tyrant, from whose prisons none can escape.”—Dr. Johnson. “To contemplate on Him whose yoke is easy and whose burden is light.”—Steele.
5. Objectives by Rule 5th: “Those whom she persuaded.”—Dr. Johnson. “The cloak that I left at Troas.”—St. Paul. “By the things which he suffered.”—Id. “A man whom there is reason to suspect.”—“What are we to do?”—Burke. “Love refuses nothing that love sends.”—Gurnall. “The first thing, says he, is, to choose some maxim or point of morality; to inculcate which, is to be the design of his work.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 421. “Whomsoever you please to appoint.”—Lowth. “Whatsoever he doeth, shall prosper.”—Bible. “What we are afraid to do before men, we should be afraid to think before God.”—Sibs. “Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?”—Gen., xviii, 32. “Shall I hide from Abraham what I am going to do?”—“Call imperfection what thou fanciest such.”—Pope.
6. Objectives by Rule 6th: (i.e., pronouns parsed as objectives after neuter verbs, though they stand before them:) “He is not the man that I took him to be.”—“Whom did you suppose me to be?”—“If the lad ever become what you wish him to be.”
7. Objectives by Rule 7th: “To whom shall we go?”—Bible. “The laws by which the world is governed, are general.”—Bp. Butler. “Whom he looks upon as his defender.”—Addison.

“That secret heaviness of heart which unthinking men are subject to.”—Id. “I cannot but think the loss of such talents as the man of whom I am speaking was master of, a more melancholy instance.”—Steele. “Grammar is the solid foundation upon which all other science rests.”—Buchanan’s Eng. Synt., p. xx.

OBS. 22.—In familiar language, the relative of the objective case is frequently understood; as, “The man [whom] I trust.”—Cowper. “Here is the letter [which] I received.” So in the following sentences: “This is the man they hate. These are the goods they bought. Are these the Gods they worship? Is this the woman you saw?”—Ash’s Gram., p. 96. This ellipsis seems allowable only in the familiar style. In grave writing, or deliberate discourse, it is much better to express this relative. The omission of it is often attended with some obscurity; as, “The next error [that] I shall mention [,] is a capital one.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 157. “It is little [that] we know of the divine perfections.”—Scougal, p. 94. “The faith [which] we give to memory, may be thought, on a superficial view, to be resolvable into consciousness, as well as that [which] we give to the immediate impressions of sense.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 53. “We speak that [which] we do know, and testify that [which] we have seen.”—John, iii, 11. The omission of a relative in the nominative case, is almost always inelegant; as, “This is the worst thing [that] could happen.”—“There were several things [which] brought it upon me.”—Pilgrim’s Progress, p. 162. The latter ellipsis may occur after but or than, and it is also sometimes allowed in poetry; as, [There is] “No person of reflection but [who] must be sensible, that an incident makes a stronger impression on an eye-witness, than when heard at second hand.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 257.

“In this ‘tis God directs, in that ‘tis man.”—Pope, on Man.

“Abuse on all he lov’d, or lov’d him, spread.”—Id., to Arbuthnot.

“There’s nothing blackens like the ink of fools.”—Id., to Augustus.

OBS. 23.—The antecedent is sometimes suppressed, especially in poetry; as, “Who will, may be a judge.”—Churchill. “How shall I curse [him or them] whom God hath not cursed?”—Numbers, xxiii, 8. “There are, indeed, [some persons] who seem disposed to extend her authority much farther.”—Campbell’s Philosophy of Rhet., p. 187.

[He] “Who lives to nature, rarely can be poor;

[He] Who lives to fancy, never can be rich.”—Young.

“Serious should be an author’s final views;

[They] Who write for pure amusement, ne’er amuse.”—Id.

OBS. 24.—Which, as well as who, was formerly applied to persons; as, “Our Father which art in heaven.”—Bible. “Pray for them which despitefully use you.”—Luke, vi, 28. And, as to the former example here cited, some British critics, still preferring the archaism, have accused “The Americans” of “poor criticism,” in that they “have changed which into who, as being more consonant to the rules of Grammar.” Falsely imagining, that which and who, with the same antecedent, can be of different genders, they allege, that, “The use of the neuter pronoun carried with it a certain vagueness and sublimity, not inappropriate in reminding us that our worship is addressed to a Being, infinite, and superior to all distinctions applicable to material objects.”—Men and Manners in America: quoted and endorsed by the REV. MATT. HARRISON, in his treatise on the English Language, p. 191. This is all fancy; and, in my opinion, absurd. It is just like the religious prejudice which could discern “a singular propriety” in “the double superlative most highest.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 28. But which may still be applied to a young child, if sex and intelligence be disregarded; as, “The child which died.” Or even to adults, when they are spoken of without regard to a distinct personality or identity; as, “Which of you will go?”—“Crabb knoweth not which is which, himself or his parodist.”—Leigh Hunt.

OBS. 25.—A proper name taken merely as a name, or an appellative taken in any sense not strictly personal, must be represented by which, and not by who; as, “Herod—which is but an other name for cruelty.”—“In every prescription of duty, God proposeth himself as a rewarder; which he is only to those that please him.”—Dr. J. Owen. Which would perhaps be more proper than whom, in the following passage: “They did not destroy the nations, concerning whom the Lord commanded them.”—Psalms, cvi, 34. Dr. Blair has preferred it in the following instance: “My lion and my pillar are sufficiently interpreted by the mention of Achilles and the minister, which I join to them.”—Lectures, p. 151. He meant, “whose names I connect with theirs,” and not, that he joined the person of Achilles to a lion, or that of a minister to a pillar.

OBS. 26.—When two or more relative clauses pertain to the same antecedent, if they are connected by a conjunction, the same relative ought to be employed in each, agreeably to the doctrine of the seventh note below; but if no conjunction is expressed or understood between them, the pronouns ought rather to be different; as, “There are many things that you can speak of, which cannot be seen.”—R. W. Green’s Gram., p. 11. This distinction is noticed in the fifth chapter of Etymology, Obs. 29th, on the Classes of Pronouns. Dr. Priestley says, “Whatever relative be used, in a series of clauses, relating to the same antecedent, the same ought to be used in them all. It is remarkable, that Holland, against which the war was undertaken, and that, in the very beginning, was reduced to the brink of destruction, lost nothing.”—Universal History, Vol. 25, p. 117. It ought to have been, and which in the very beginning.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 102. L. Murray, (as I have shown in the Introduction, Ch. x, ¶ 22,) assumes all this, without references; adding as a salvo the word “generally,” which merely impairs the certainty of the rule:—“the same relative ought generally to be used in them all.”—Octavo Gram., p. 155. And, of who and that, Cobbett says: “Either may do; but both never ought to be relatives of the same antecedent in the same sentence.”—Gram., ¶ 202. The inaccuracy of these rules is as great as that of the phraseology which is corrected under them. In the following sentence, the first relative only is restrictive, and consequently the other may be different: “These were the officers that were called Homotimoi, and who signaled themselves afterwards so gloriously upon all occasions.”—Rollin’s Hist., ii, 62. See also in Rev., x, 6th, a similar example without the conjunction.

OBS. 27.—In conversation, the possessive pronoun your is sometimes used in a droll way, being shortened into your in pronunciation, and nothing more being meant by it, than might be expressed by the article an or a: as, “Rich honesty dwells, like your miser, sir, in a poor house; as, your pearl in your foul oyster.”—Shakspeare.

NOTES TO RULE X.

NOTE 1.—A pronoun should not be introduced in connexion with words that belong more properly to the antecedent, or to an other pronoun; as, “And then there is good use for Pallas her glass.”—Bacon’s Wisdom, p. 22. Say—“for Pallas’s glass.”

“My banks they are furnish’d with bees,
Whose murmur invites one to sleep.”—Shenstone, p. 284.

This last instance, however, is only an example of pleonasm; which is allowable and frequent in animated discourse, but inelegant in any other. Our grammarians have condemned it too positively. It occurs sundry times in the Bible; as, “Know ye that the LORD he is God.”—Psalms, c, 3.

NOTE II.—A change of number in the second person, or even a promiscuous use of ye and you in the same case and the same style, is inelegant, and ought to be avoided; as, “You wept, and I for thee”—“Harry, said my lord, don’t cry; I’ll give you something towards thy loss.”—Swift’s Poems, p. 267. “Ye sons of sloth, you offspring of darkness, awake from your sleep.”—Brown’s Metaphors, p. 96. Our poets have very often adopted the former solecism, to accommodate their measure, or to avoid the harshness of the old verb in the second person singular: as, “Thy heart is yet blameless, O fly while you may!”—Queen’s Wake, p. 46.

“Oh! Peggy, Peggy, when thou goest to brew, Consider well what you’re about to do.”—King’s Poems, p. 594.

“As in that lov’d Athenian bower,
You learn’d an all-commanding power,
Thy mimic soul, O nymph endear’d!
Can well recall what then it heard.”—Collins, Ode to Music.

NOTE III.—The relative who is applied only to persons, and to animals or things personified; and which, to brute animals and inanimate things spoken of literally: as, “The judge who presided;”—“The old crab who advised the young one;”—“The horse which ran away;”—“The book which was given me.”

NOTE IV.—Nouns of multitude, unless they express persons directly as such, should not be represented by the relative who: to say, “The family whom I visited,” would hardly be proper; that would here be better. When such nouns are strictly of the neuter gender, which may represent them; as, “The committees which were appointed.” But where the idea of rationality is predominant, who or whom seems not to be improper; as, “The conclusion of the Iliad is like the exit of a great man out of company whom he has entertained magnificently.”—Couper. “A law is only the expression of the desire of a multitude who have power to punish.”—Brown’s Philosophy of the Mind.

NOTE V.—In general, the pronoun must so agree with its antecedent as to present the same idea, and never in such a manner as to confound the name with the thing signified, or any two things with each other. Examples: “Jane is in the nominative case, because it leads the sentence.”—Infant School Gram., p. 30. Here it represents the word “Jane” and not the person Jane. “What mark or sign is put after master to show that he is in the possessive case? Spell it”—Ib., p. 32. Here the word “master” is most absurdly confounded with the man; and that to accommodate grammar to a child’s comprehension!

NOTE VI.—The relative that may be applied either to persons or to things. In the following cases, it is more appropriate than who, whom, or which; and ought to be preferred, unless it be necessary to use a preposition before the relative:—(1.) After an adjective of the superlative degree, when the relative clause is restrictive;* as, “He was the first that came.”—“He was the fittest person that could then be found.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 422. “The Greeks were the greatest reasoners that ever appeared in the world.”—BEATTIE: Murray’s Gram., p. 127. (2.) After the adjective same, when the relative clause is restrictive; as, “He is the same man that you saw before.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 101; Murray’s, 156; Campbell’s Rhet., 422. (3.) After the antecedent who; as, “Who that is a sincere friend to it, can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?”—Washington. (4.) After two or more antecedents that demand a relative adapted both to persons and to things; as, “He spoke largely of the men and things that he had seen.”—“When some particular person or thing is spoken of, that ought to be more distinctly marked.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 51. (5.) After an unlimited antecedent which the relative clause is designed to restrict; as, “Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn.”—Gray. “Music that accords with the present tone of mind, is, on that account, doubly agreeable.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 311. “For Theocritus descends sometimes into ideas that are gross and mean.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 393. (6.) After any antecedent introduced by the expletive it; as, “It is you that suffer.”—“It was I, and not he, that did it.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 142. “It was not he† that they were so angry with.”—Murray’s Exercises, R. 17. “It was not Gavius alone that Verres meant to insult.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 325. (7.) And, in general, wherever the propriety of who or which is doubtful; as, “The little child that was placed in the midst.”

NOTE VII.—When two or more relative clauses connected by a conjunction have a similar dependence in respect to the antecedent, the same pronoun must be employed in each; as, “O thou, who art, and who wast, and who art to come!”—“And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshiped.”—Jer., viii, 2. NOTE VIII.—The relative, and the preposition governing it, should not be omitted, when they are necessary to the sense intended, or to a proper connexion of the parts of the sentence; as, “He is still in the situation you saw him.” Better thus: “He is still in the situation in which you saw him.”

NOTE IX.—After certain nouns, of time, place, manner, or cause, the conjunctive adverbs when, where, whither, whence, how, and why, are a sort of special relatives; but no such adverb should be used where a preposition and a relative pronoun would better express the relation of the terms: as, “A cause where justice is so much concerned.” Say, “A cause in which.” See Etymology, Obs. 6th, 7th, and 8th, on the Classes of Adverbs.

---

* This rule, in all its parts, is to be applied chiefly, if not solely, to such relative clauses as are taken in the restrictive sense; for, in the resumptive sense of the relative, who or which may be more proper than that: as, “Abraham solemnly adjures his most faithful servant, whom he despatches to Charan on this matrimonial mission for his son, to discharge his mission with all fidelity.”—Milman’s Jews, i, 21. See Etymology, Chap. 5th, Obs. 23d, 24th, &c., on the Classes of Pronouns.

† Murray imagined this sentence to be bad English. He very strangely mistook the pronoun he for the object of the preposition with; and accordingly condemned the text, under the rule, “Prepositions govern the objective case.” So of the following: “It is not I he is engaged with.”—Murray’s Exercises, R. 17. Better: “It is not I that he is engaged with.” Here is no violation of the foregoing rule, or of any other; and both sentences, with even Murray’s form of the latter, are quite as good as his proposed substitutes: “It was not with him, that they were so angry.”—Murray’s Key, p. 51. “It is not with me he is engaged.”—Ib. In these fancied corrections, the phrases with him and with me have a very awkward and questionable position: it seems doubtful, whether they depend on was and is, or on angry and engaged.

NOTE X.—Where a pronoun or a pronominal adjective will not express the meaning clearly, the noun must be repeated, or inserted in stead of it: as, “We see the beautiful variety of colour in the rainbow, and are led to consider the cause of it.” Say,—“the cause of that variety,” because the it may mean the variety, the colour, or the rainbow.

NOTE XI.—To prevent ambiguity or obscurity, the relative should, in general, be placed as near as possible to the antecedent. The following sentence is therefore faulty: “He is like a beast of prey, that is void of compassion.” Better thus: “He that is void of compassion, is like a beast of prey.”

NOTE XII.—The pronoun what should never be used in stead of the conjunction that; as, “Think no man so perfect but what he may err.” This is a vulgar fault. Say,—“but that he may err.”

NOTE XIII.—A pronoun should never be used to represent an adjective,—except the pronominal adjectives, and others taken substantively; because a pronoun can neither express a concrete quality as such, nor convert it properly into an abstract: as, “Be attentive; without which you will learn nothing.” Better thus: “Be attentive; for without attention you will learn nothing.”

NOTE XIV.—Though the relative which may in some instances stand for a phrase or a sentence, it is seldom, if ever, a fit representative of an indicative assertion; as, “The man opposed me, which was anticipated.”—Nixon’s Parser, p. 127. Say,—“but his opposition was anticipated.” Or: “The man opposed me, as was anticipated.” Or:—“as I expected he would.” Again: “The captain disobeys orders, which is punished.”—Ib., p. 128. This is an other factitious sentence, formed after the same model, and too erroneous for correction: none but a conceited grammarist could ever have framed such a construction.

NOTE XV.—The possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, her, its, &c., should be inserted or repeated as often as the sense or construction of the sentence requires them; their omission, like that of the articles, can scarcely in any instance constitute a proper ellipsis: as, “Of Princeton and vicinity.”—Say, “Of Princeton and its vicinity.” “The man and wife.”—Say, “The man and his wife.” “Many verbs vary both their signification and construction.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 170; Gould’s, 171. Say,—“and their construction.”

NOTE XVI.—In the correcting of any discord between the antecedent and its pronoun, if the latter for any sufficient reason is most proper as it stands, the former must be changed to accord with it: as, “Let us discuss what relates to each particular in their order:—its order.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 193. Better thus: “Let us discuss what relates to the several particulars, in their order.” For the order of things implies plurality.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE X.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—OF AGREEMENT

“The subject is to be joined with his predicate.”—BP. WILKINS: Lowth’s Gram., p. 42.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pronoun his is of the masculine gender, and does not correctly represent its antecedent noun subject, which is of the third person, singular, neuter. But, according to Rule 10th, “A pronoun must agree with its antecedent, or the noun or pronoun which it represents, in person, number, and gender.” Therefore, his should be its; thus, “The subject is to be joined with its predicate.”]

“Every one must judge of their own feelings.”—Byron's Letters. “Every one in the family should know their duty.”—Wm. Penn. “To introduce its possessor into ‘that way in which it should go.’”—Infant School Gram., p. v. “Do not they say, every true believer has the Spirit of God in them?”—Barclay's Works, iii, 388. “There is none in their natural state righteous, no not one.”—Wood's Dict. of Bible, ii, 129. “If ye were of the world, the world would love his own.”—John, xv, 19. “His form had not yet lost all her original brightness.”—Milton. “No one will answer as if I were their friend or companion.”—Steele, Spect., No. 534. “But in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.”—Philippians, ii, 3. “And let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour.”—Zechariah, viii, 17. “For every tree is known by his own fruit.”—Luke, vi, 44. “But she fell to laughing, like one out of their right mind.”—Castle Rackrent, p. 51. “Now these systems, so far from having any tendency to make men better, have a manifest tendency to make him worse.”—Wayland's Moral Science, p. 128. “And nobody else would make that city their refuge any more.”—Josephus's Life, p. 158. “What is quantity, as it respects syllables or words? It is that time which is occupied in pronouncing it.”—Bradley's Gram., p. 108. “In such expressions the adjective so much resembles an adverb in its meaning, that they are usually parsed as such.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 103. “The tongue is like a race-horse; which runs the faster the less weight it carries.”—ADDISON: Joh. Dict.; Murray's Key, Rule 8. “As two thoughtless boys were trying to see which could lift the greatest weight with their jaws, one of them had several of his firm-set teeth wrenched from their sockets.”—Newspaper. “Everybody nowadays publishes memoirs; everybody has recollections which they think worthy of recording.”—Duchess D'Abrantes, p. 25. “Every body trembled for themselves or their friends.”—Goldsmith's Greece, i, 171.

“A steed comes at morning: no rider is there;
But its bridle is red with the sign of despair.”—Campbell.

UNDER NOTE I.—PRONOUNS WRONG OR NEEDLESS.

“Charles loves to study; but John, alas! he is very idle.”—Merchant's School Gram., p. 22. “Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone?”—Matt., vii, 9. “Who, in stead of going about doing good, they are perpetually intent upon doing mischief.”—Tillotson. “Whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pontius Pilate.”—Acts, iii, 13. “Whom, when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber.”—Acts, ix, 37. “Then Manasseh knew that the Lord he was God.”—2 Chron., xxxiii, 13. “Whatever a man conceives clearly, he may, if he will be at the trouble, put it into distinct propositions, and express it clearly to others.”—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 293. “But to that point of time which he has chosen, the painter being entirely confined, he cannot exhibit various stages of the same action.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 52. “It is without any proof at all what he subjoins.”—Barclay's Works, i, 301. “George Fox his Testimony concerning Robert Barclay.”—Ib., i, 111. “According to the author of the Postscript his advice.”—Ib., iii, 263. “These things seem as ugly to the Eye of their Meditations, as those Æthiopians pictur'd in Nemesis her Pitcher.”—Bacon's Wisdom of the Ancients, p. 49. “Moreover, there is always a twofold Condition propounded with Sphynx her Ænigma's.”—Ib., p. 73. “Whoever believeth not therein, they shall perish.”—Sale's Koran, p. 20. “When, at Sestius his entreaty, I had been at his house.”—Walker's Particles, p. 59.

“There high on Sipylus his shaggy brow,
She stands, her own sad monument of woe.”

—Pope's Homer, B. xxiv, l. 777.

UNDER NOTE II.—CHANGE OF NUMBER.

“So will I send upon you famine, and evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee.”—Ezekiel, v, 17. “Why do you plead so much for it? why do ye preach it up?”—Barclay's Works, i, 180. “Since thou hast decreed that I shall bear man, your darling.”—Edward's First Lesson in Gram., p. 106. “You have my book and I have thine; i.e. thy book.”—Chandler's Gram., 1821, p. 22. “Neither art thou such a one as to be ignorant of what you are.”—Bullions, Lat. Gram., p. 70. “Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you.”—Jeremiah, iii, 12. “The Almighty, unwilling to cut thee off in the fullness of iniquity, has sent me to give you warning.”—Art of Thinking, p. 278. “Wert thou born only for pleasure? were you never to do any thing?”—Collier's Antoninus, p. 63. “Thou shalt be required to go to God, to die, and give up your account.”—BARNES'S NOTES: on Luke, xii, 20. “And canst thou expect to behold the resplendent glory of the Creator? would not such a sight annihilate you?”—Milton. “If the prophet had commanded thee to do some great thing, would you have refused?”—Common School Journal, i, 80. “Art thou a penitent? Evince your sincerity by bringing forth fruits meet for repentance.”—Christian's Vade-Mecum, p. 117. “I will call thee my dear son: I remember all your tenderness.”—Classic Tales, p. 8. “So do thou, my son: open your ears, and your eyes.”—Wright's Athens, p. 33. “I promise you, this was enough to discourage thee.”—Pilgrim's Progress, p. 446. “Ere you remark an other's sin, Bid thy own conscience look within.”—Gay. “Permit that I share in thy woe, The privilege can you refuse?”—Perfect's Poems, p. 6. “Ah! Strephon, how can you despise Her who without thy pity dies?”—Swift's Poems, p. 340.

“Thy verses, friend, are Kidderminster stuff,
And I must own, you've measur'd out enough.”—Shenstone.

“This day, dear Bee, is thy nativity;
Had Fate a luckier one, she'd give it ye.”—Swift.

UNDER NOTE III.—WHO AND WHICH.

“Exactly like so many puppets, who are moved by wires.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 462. “They are my servants, which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt.”—Leviticus, xxv, 42. “Behold I and the children which God hath given me.”—Heb., ii, 13; Webster's Bible, and others. “And he sent Eliakim which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe.”—2 Kings, xix, 2. “In a short time the streets were cleared of the corpses who filled them.”—M'Irvine's Led., p. 411. “They are not of those which teach things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake.”—Barclay's Works, i, 435. “As a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep; who, if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces.”—Micah, v, 8. “Frequented by every fowl whom nature has taught to dip the wing in water.”—Rasselas, p. 10. “He had two sons, one of which was adopted by the family of Maximus.”—Lempriere, w. Æmytius. “And the ants, who are collected by the smell, are burned by fire.”—The Friend, xii, 49. “They being the agents, to which this thing was trusted.”—Nixon's Parser, p. 139. “A packhorse who is driven constantly forwards and backwards to market.”—LOCKE: Joh. Dict. “By instructing children, the affection of which will be increased.”—Nixon's Parser, p. 136. “He had a comely young woman which travelled with him.”—Hutchinson’s Hist., i, 29. “A butterfly, which thought himself an accomplished traveller, happened to light upon a beehive.”—Inst., p. 143. “It is an enormous elephant of stone, who disgorges from his uplifted trunk a vast but graceful shower.”—Zenobia, i, 150. “He was met by a dolphin, who sometimes swam before him, and sometimes behind him.”—Edward’s First Lessons in Gram., p. 34.

“That Cæsar’s horse, who, as fame goes,
Had corns upon his feet and toes,
Was not by half so tender-hoof,
Nor trod upon the ground so soft.”—Hudibras, p. 6.

UNDER NOTE IV.—NOUNS OF MULTITUDE.

“He instructed and fed the crowds who surrounded him.”—Murray’s Exercises, p. 52. “The court, who gives currency to manners, ought to be exemplary.”—Ibid. “Nor does he describe classes of sinners who do not exist.”—Anti-Slavery Magazine, i, 27. “Because the nations among whom they took their rise, were not savage.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 113. “Among nations who are in the first and rude periods of society.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 60. “The martial spirit of those nations, among whom the feudal government prevailed.”—Ib., p. 374. “France who was in alliance with Sweden.”—Smollett’s Voltaire, vi, 187. “That faction in England who most powerfully opposed his arbitrary pretensions.”—Mrs. Macaulay’s Hist., iii, 21. “We may say, the crowd, who was going up the street.”—Cobbett’s Gram., ¶ 204. “Such members of the Convention who formed this Lyceum, as have subscribed this Constitution.”—New-York Lyceum.

UNDER NOTE V.—CONFUSION OF SENSES.

“The possessor shall take a particular form to show its case.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 53. “Of which reasons the principal one is, that no Noun, properly so called, implies its own Presence.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 76. “Boston is a proper noun, which distinguishes it from other cities.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 22. “Conjunction means union, or joining together. It is used to join or unite either words or sentences.”—Ib., p. 20. “The word interjection means thrown among. It is interspersed among other words to express sudden or strong emotion.”—Ib., p. 21. “In deed, or in very deed, may better be written separately, as they formerly were.”—Cardell’s Gram., 12mo, p. 89. “Alexander, on the contrary, is a particular name, and is restricted to distinguish him alone.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 25. “As an indication that nature itself had changed her course.”—Hist. of America, p. 9. “Of removing from the United States and her territories the free people of colour.”—Jenifer. “So that gh may be said not to have their proper sound.”—Webster’s El. Spelling-Book, p. 10. “Are we to welcome the loathsome harlot, and introduce it to our children?”—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 167. “The first question is this, ‘Is reputable, national, and present use, which, for brevity’s sake, I shall hereafter simply denominate good use, always uniform in her decisions?’—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 171. “Time is always masculine, on account of its mighty efficacy. Virtue is feminine from its beauty, and its being the object of love.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 37; Blair’s, 125; Sanborn’s, 189; Emmons’s, 13; Putnam’s, 25; Fisk’s, 57; Ingersoll’s, 26; Greenleaf’s, 21. See also Blair’s Rhet., p. 76. “When you speak to a person or thing, it is in the second person.”—Bartlett’s Manual, Part ii, p. 27. “You now know the noun, for it means name.”—Ibid. “T. What do you see? P. A book. T. Spell it.”—R. W. Green’s Gram., p. 12. “T. What do you see now? P. Two books. T. Spell them.”—Ibid. “If the United States lose her rights as a nation.”—Liberator, Vol. ix, p. 24. “When a person or thing is addressed or spoken to, it is in the second person.”—Frost’s El. of Gram., p. 7.

“When a person or thing is spoken of, it is in the third person.”—Ibid. “The ox, that ploughs the ground, has the same plural termination also, oxen.”—Bucke’s Classical Gram., p. 40.

“Hail, happy States! thine is the blissful seat,
Where nature’s gifts and art’s improvements meet.”

EVERETT: Columbian Orator, p. 239.

UNDER NOTE VI.—THE RELATIVE THAT.

(1.) “This is the most useful art which men possess.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 275. “The earliest accounts which history gives us concerning all nations, bear testimony to these facts.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 379; Jamieson’s, 300. “Mr. Addison was the first who attempted a regular inquiry [into the pleasures of taste.]—Blair’s Rhet., p. 28. “One of the first who introduced it was Montesquieu.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 125. “Massillon is perhaps the most eloquent writer of sermons which modern times have produced.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 289. “The greatest barber who ever lived, is our guiding star and prototype.”—Hart’s Figaro, No. 6.

(2.) “When prepositions are subjoined to nouns, they are generally the same which are subjoined to the verbs, from which the nouns are derived.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 157. “The same proportions which are agreeable in a model, are not agreeable in a large building.”—Kames, EL of Crit., ii, 343. “The same ornaments, which we admire in a private apartment, are unseemly in a temple.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 128. “The same whom John saw also in the sun.”—Milton. P. L., B. iii, l. 623.

(3.) “Who can ever be easy, who is reproached with his own ill conduct?”—Thomas à Kempis, p. 72. “Who is she who comes clothed in a robe of green?”—Inst., p. 143. “Who who has either sense or civility, does not perceive the vileness of profanity?”

(4.) “The second person denotes the person or thing which is spoken to.”—Compendium in Kirkham’s Gram. “The third person denotes the person or thing which is spoken of.”—Ibid. “A passive verb denotes action received or endured by the person or thing which is its nominative.”—Ibid. and Gram., p. 157. “The princes and states who had neglected or favoured the growth of this power.”—Bolingbroke, on History, p. 222. “The nominative expresses the name of the person, or thing which acts, or which is the subject of discourse.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 19. (5.) “Authors who deal in long sentences, are very apt to be faulty.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 108. “Writers who deal in long sentences, are very apt to be faulty.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 313. “The neuter gender denotes objects which are neither male nor female.”—Merchant’s Gram., p. 26. “The neuter gender denotes things which have no sex.”—Kirkham’s Compendium. “Nouns which denote objects neither male nor female, are of the neuter gender.”—Wells’s Gram., 1st Ed., p. 49. “Objects and ideas which have been long familiar, make too faint an impression to give an agreeable exercise to our faculties.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 50. “Cases which custom has left dubious, are certainly within the grammarian’s province.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 164. “Substantives which end in ery, signify action or habit.”—Ib., p. 132. “After all which can be done to render the definitions and rules of grammar accurate,” &c.—Ib., p. 36. “Possibly, all which I have said, is known and taught.”—A. B. Johnson’s Plan of a Dict., p. 15.

(6.) "It is a strong and manly style which should chiefly be studied."—Blair's Rhet., p. 261. "It is this which chiefly makes a division appear neat and elegant."—Ib., p. 313. "I hope it is not I with whom he is displeased."—Murray's Key, R. 17. "When it is this alone which renders the sentence obscure."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 242. "This sort of full and ample assertion, 'it is this which,' is fit to be used when a proposition of importance is laid down."—Blair's Rhet., p. 197. "She is the person whom I understood it to have been." See Murray's Gram., p. 181. "Was it thou, or the wind, who shut the door?"—Inst., p. 143. "It was not I who shut it."—Ib.

(7.) "He is not the person who it seemed he was."—Murray's Gram., p. 181; Ingersoll's, p. 147. "He is really the person who he appeared to be."—Same. "She is not now the woman whom they represented her to have been."—Same. "An only child, is one who has neither brother nor sister; a child alone, is one who is left by itself"—Blair's Rhet., p. 98; Jamieson's, 71; Murray's Gram. 303.

UNDER NOTE VII.—RELATIVE CLAUSES CONNECTED.

(1.) "A Substantive, or Noun, is the name of a thing; of whatever we conceive in any way to subsist, or of which we have any notion."—Lowth's Gram., p. 14. (2.) "A Substantive or noun is the name of any thing that exists, or of which we have any notion."—L. Murray's Gram., p. 27; Alger's, 15; Bacon's, 9; E. Dean's, 8; A. Flint's, 10; Folker's, 5; Hamlin's, 9; Ingersoll's, 14; Merchant's, 25; Pond's, 15; S. Putnam's, 10; Rand's, 9; Russell's, 9; T. Smith's, 12; and others. (3.) "A substantive or noun is the name of any person, place, or thing that exists, or of which we can have an idea."—Frost's El. of E. Gram., p. 6. (4.) "A noun is the name of anything that exists, or of which we form an idea."—Hallock's Gram., p. 37. (5.) "A Noun is the name of any person, place, object, or thing, that exists, or which we may conceive to exist."—D. C. Allen's Grammatic Guide, p. 19. (6.) "The name of every thing that exists, or of which we can form any notion, is a noun."—Fisk's Murray's Gram., p. 56. (7.) "An allegory is the representation of some one thing by an other that resembles it, and which is made to stand for it."—Murray's Gram., p. 341. (8.) "Had he exhibited such sentences as contained ideas inapplicable to young minds, or which were of a trivial or injurious nature."—Murray's Gram., Vol. ii, p. v. (9.) "Man would have others obey him, even his own kind; but he will not obey God, that is so much above him, and who made him."—Penn's Maxims. (10.) "But what we may consider here, and which few Persons have taken Notice of, is," &c.—Brightland's Gram., p. 117. (11.) "The Compiler has not inserted such verbs as are irregular only in familiar writing or discourse, and which are improperly terminated by t, instead of ed."—Murray's Gram., p. 107; Fisk's, 81; Hart's, 68; Ingersoll's, 104; Merchant's, 63. (12.) "The remaining parts of speech, which are called the indeclinable parts, or that admit of no variations, will not detain us long."—Blair's Rhet., p. 84.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—THE RELATIVE AND PREPOSITION.

"In the temper of mind he was then."—Addison, Spect., No. 54. "To bring them into the condition I am at present."—Spect., No. 520. "In the posture I lay."—Swift's Gulliver. "In the sense it is sometimes taken."—Barclay's Works, i, 527. "Tools and utensils are said to be right, when they serve for the uses they were made."—Collier's Antoninus, p. 99. "If, in the extreme danger I now am, I do not imitate the behaviour of those," &c.—Goldsmith's Greece, i, 193. "News was brought, that Darius was but twenty miles from the place they then were."—Ib., ii, 113. "Alexander, upon hearing this news, continued four days in the place he then was."—Ib., ii, 113. "To read, in the best manner it is now taught."—L.

Murray's Gram., p. 246. "It may be expedient to give a few directions as to the manner it should be studied."—Hallock's Gram., p. 9. "Participles are words derived from verbs, and convey an idea of the acting of an agent, or the suffering of an object, with the time it happens."—Alex. Murray's Gram., p. 50.

"Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies."—Beauties of Shak., p. 173.

UNDER NOTE IX.—ADVERBS FOR RELATIVES.

"In compositions where pronunciation has no place."—Blair's Rhet., p. 101. "They framed a protestation, where they repeated their claims."—Hume's Hist. "Which have reference to Substances, where Sex never had existence."—Harris's Hermes, p. 43. "Which denote substances where sex never had existence."—Murray's Gram., p. 38; Fisk's, 57. "There is no rule given how truth may be found out."—Walker's Particles, p. 160. "The nature of the objects whence they are taken."—Blair's Rhet., p. 165. "That darkness of character, where we can see no heart."—Murray's Key, 8vo, p. 236. "The states where they negotiated."—Formey's Belles-Lettres, p. 159. "Till the motives whence men act be known."—Beattie's Moral Science, p. 262. "He assigns the principles whence their power of pleasing flows."—Blair's Rhet., p. 19. "But I went on, and so finished this History in that form as it now appears."—Sewel's Preface, p. v. "By prepositions we express the cause why, the instrument by which, wherewith, or the manner how a thing is done."—Alex. Murray's Gram., p. 128; John Burn's, 121. "They are not such in the language whence they are derived."—Town's Analysis, p. 13. "I find it very hard to persuade several, that their passions are affected by words from whence they have no ideas."—Burke, on the Sublime, p. 95. "The known end, then, why we are placed in a state of so much affliction, hazard, and difficulty, is our improvement in virtue and piety."—Butler's Anal., p. 109.

"Yet such his acts, as Greeks unborn shall tell,
And curse the battle where their fathers fell."—Pope, Il., B. x, l. 61.

UNDER NOTE X.—REPEAT THE NOUN.

"Youth may be thoughtful, but it is not very common."—Webster's El. Spelling-Book, p. 85. "A proper name is that given to one person or thing."—Bartlett's School Manual, ii, 27. "A common name is that given to many things of the same sort."—Ibid. "This rule is often violated; some instances of which are annexed."—Murray's Gram., p. 149; Ingersoll's, 237. "This is altogether careless writing. It renders style often obscure, always embarrassed and inelegant."—Blair's Rhet., p. 106. "Every inversion which is not governed by this rule, will be disrelished by every one of taste."—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 62. "A proper diphthong is that in which both the vowels are sounded."—Murray's Gram., p. 9; Alger's, 11; Bacon's, 8; Merchant's, 9; Hiley's, 3; and others. "An improper Diphthong is one in which only one of the two Vowels is sounded."—Lennie's Gram., p. 5. "Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and his descendants, are called Hebrews."—Wood's Dict. "Every word in our language, of more than one syllable, has one of them distinguished from the rest in this manner."—Murray's Gram., p. 236. "Two consonants proper to begin a word must not be separated; as, fa-ble, sti-fle. But when they come between two vowels, and are such as cannot begin a word, they must be divided; as, ut-most, un-der."—Ib., p. 22. "Shall the intellect alone feel no pleasures in its energy, when we allow them to the grossest energies of appetite and sense?"—Harris's Hermes, p. 298; Murray's Gram., 289. "No man hath a propensity to vice as such: on the contrary, a wicked deed disgusts him, and makes him abhor the author.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 66. “The same that belong to nouns, belong also to pronouns.”—Greenleaf’s Gram., p. 8. “What is Language? It is the means of communicating thoughts from one to another.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 15. “A simple word is that which is not made up of more than one.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 4; Gould’s, p. 4. “A compound word is that which is made up of two or more words.”—Ib. “When a conjunction is to be supplied, it is called Asyndeton.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 235.

UNDER NOTE XI.—PLACE OF THE RELATIVE.

“It gives a meaning to words, which they would not have.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 244. “There are many words in the English language, that are sometimes used as adjectives, and sometimes as adverbs.”—Ib., p. 114. “Which do not more effectually show the varied intentions of the mind, than the auxiliaries do which are used to form the potential mood.”—Ib., p. 67. “These accents make different impressions on the mind, which will be the subject of a following speculation.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 108. “And others very much differed from the writer’s words, to whom they were ascribed.”—Pref. to Lily’s Gram., p. xii. “Where there is nothing in the sense which requires the last sound to be elevated, an easy fall will be proper.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 250; Bullions’s E. Gram., 167. “There is an ellipsis of the verb in the last clause, which, when you supply, you find it necessary to use the adverb not.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 176; Murray’s Gram., 368. “Study is singular number, because its nominative I is, with which it agrees.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 22. “John is the person, or, thou art who is in error.”—Wright’s Gram., p. 136. “For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin.”—2 Cor., v, 21.

“Take that of me, my friend, who have the power
To seal the accuser’s lips.”—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 268.

UNDER NOTE XII.—WHAT FOR THAT.

“I had no idea but what the story was true.”—Browns Inst., p. 144. “The post-boy is not so weary but what he can whistle.”—Ib. “He had no intimation but what the men were honest.”—Ib. “Neither Lady Haversham nor Miss Mildmay will ever believe, but what I have been entirely to blame.”—See Priestley’s Gram., p. 93. “I am not satisfied, but what the integrity of our friends is more essential to our welfare than their knowledge of the world.”—Ibid. “There is, indeed, nothing in poetry, so entertaining or descriptive, but what a didactic writer of genius may be allowed to introduce in some part of his work.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 401. “Brasidas, being bit by a mouse he had caught, let it slip out of his fingers: ‘No creature, (says he,) is so contemptible but what may provide for its own safety, if it have courage.’”—PLUTARCH: Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 81.

UNDER NOTE XIII.—ADJECTIVES FOR ANTECEDENTS.

“In narration, Homer is, at all times, remarkably concise, which renders him lively and agreeable.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 435. “It is usual to talk of a nervous, a feeble, or a spirited style; which are plainly the characters of a writer’s manner of thinking.”—Ib., p. 92. “It is too violent an alteration, if any alteration were necessary, which none is.”—Knight, on the Greek Alphabet, p. 134. “Some men are too ignorant to be humble, without which, there can be no docility.”—Berkley’s Alciphron, p. 385. “Judas declared him innocent; which he could not be, had he in any respect deceived the disciples.”—Porteus. “They supposed him to be innocent, which he certainly was not.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 50; Emmons’s, 25. “They accounted him honest, which he certainly was not.”—Fetch’s Comp. Gram., p. 89.

“Be accurate in all you say or do; for it is important in all the concerns of life.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 145. “Every law supposes the transgressor to be wicked; which indeed he is, if the law is just.”—Ib. “To be pure in heart, pious, and benevolent, which all may be, constitutes human happiness.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 232. “To be dexterous in danger, is a virtue; but to court danger to show it, is weakness.”—Penn’s Maxims.

UNDER NOTE XIV.—SENTENCES FOR ANTECEDENTS.

“This seems not so allowable in prose; which the following erroneous examples will demonstrate.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 175. “The accent is laid upon the last syllable of a word; which is favourable to the melody.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 86. “Every line consists of ten syllables, five short and five long; from which there are but two exceptions, both of them rare.”—Ib., ii, 89. “The soldiers refused obedience, which has been explained.”—Nixon’s Parser, p. 128. “Cæsar overcame Pompey, which was lamented.”—Ib. “The crowd hailed William, which was expected.”—Ib. “The tribunes resisted Scipio, which was anticipated.”—Ib. “The censors reproved vice, which was admired.”—Ib. “The generals neglected discipline, which has been proved.”—Ib. “There would be two nominatives to the verb was, which is improper.”—Adam’s Lat. Gram., p. 205; Gould’s, 202. “His friend bore the abuse very patiently; which served to increase his rudeness: it produced, at length, contempt and insolence.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 50; Emmons’s, 25. “Almost all compounded sentences, are more or less elliptical; some examples of which may be seen under the different parts of speech.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 217; Guy’s, 90; R G. Smith’s, 180; Ingersoll’s, 153; Fisk’s, 144; J. M. Putnam’s, 137; Weld’s, 190, Weld’s Imp. Ed., 214.

UNDER NOTE XV.—REPEAT THE PRONOUN.

“In things of Nature’s workmanship, whether we regard their internal or external structure, beauty and design are equally conspicuous.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 269. “It puzzles the reader, by making him doubt whether the word ought to be taken in its proper or figurative sense.”—Ib., ii, 231. “Neither my obligations to the muses, nor expectations from them, are so great.”—Cowley’s Preface. “The Fifth Annual Report of the Anti-Slavery Society of Ferrisburgh and vicinity.”—Liberator, ix, 69. “Meaning taste in its figurative as well as proper sense.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 360. “Every measure in which either your personal or political character is concerned.”—Junius, Let. ix. “A jealous, righteous God has often punished such in themselves or offspring.”—Extracts, p. 179. “Hence their civil and religious history are inseparable.”—Milman’s Jews, i, 7. “Esau thus carelessly threw away both his civil and religious inheritance.”—Ib., i, 24. “This intelligence excited not only our hopes, but fears likewise.”—Jaudon’s Gram., p. 170. “In what manner our defect of principle and ruling manners have completed the ruin of the national spirit of union.”—Brown’s Estimate, i, 77. “Considering her descent, her connexion, and present intercourse.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 85. “His own and wife’s wardrobe are packed up in a firkin.”—Parker and Fox’s Gram., Part i, p. 73.

UNDER NOTE XVI.—CHANGE THE ANTECEDENT.

“The sound of e and o long, in their due degrees, will be preserved, and clearly distinguished.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 242. “If any person should be inclined to think,” &c., “the author takes the liberty to suggest to them,” &c.—Ib., Pref., p. iv. “And he walked in all the ways of Asa his father; he turned not aside from it.”—1 Kings, xxii, 43. “If ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses.”—Matt., xviii, 35. “Nobody ever fancied they were slighted by him, or had the courage to think themselves his betters.”—Collier’s Antoninus, p. 8. “And Rebekah took goodly raiment of her eldest son

Esau, which were with her in the house, and put them upon Jacob her younger son.”—Gen., xxvii, 15. “Where all the attention of man is given to their own indulgence.”—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 181. “The idea of a father is a notion superinduced to the substance, or man—let man be what it will.”—Locke’s Essay, i, 219. “Leaving every one to do as they list.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 460. “Each body performed his part handsomely.”—J. Flint’s Gram., p. 15. “This block of marble rests on two layers of stone, bound together with lead, which, however, has not prevented the Arabs from forcing out several of them.”—Parker and Fox’s Gram., Part i, p. 72.

“Love gives to every power a double power,
Above their functions and their offices.”—Shakspeare.

RULE XI.—PRONOUNS.

When the antecedent is a collective noun conveying the idea of plurality, the Pronoun must agree with it in the plural number: as, “The council were divided in their sentiments.”—“The Christian world are beginning to awake out of their slumber.”—C. Simeon. “Whatever Adam’s posterity lost through him, that and more they gain in Christ.”—J. Phipps.

“To this, one pathway gently-winding leads,
Where march a train with baskets on their heads.”
—Pope, Iliad, B. xviii, l. 657.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XI.

OBS. 1.—The collective noun, or noun of multitude, being a name that signifies many, may in general be taken in either of two ways, according to the intention of the user: that is, either with reference to the aggregate as one thing, in which sense it will accord with the neuter pronoun it or which; or with reference to the individuals, so as to accord with a plural pronoun they, their, them, or who, masculine, or feminine, as the individuals of the assemblage may happen to be. The noun itself, being literally singular both in form and in fact, has not unfrequently some article or adjective before it that implies unity; so that the interpretation of it in a plural sense by the pronoun or verb, was perhaps not improperly regarded by the old grammarians as an example of the figure sylllepsis: as, “Liberty should reach every individual of a people, as they all share one common nature.”—Spectator, No. 287.

“Thus urg’d the chief; a generous troop appears,
Who spread their bucklers and advance their spears.”—Pope, Iliad, B. xi, l. 720.

OBS. 2.—Many of our grammarians say, “When a noun of multitude is preceded by a definitive word, which clearly limits the sense to an aggregate with an idea of unity, it requires a verb and pronoun to agree with it in the singular number.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 153; Ingersoll’s, 249; Fisk’s, 122; Fowler’s, 528. But this principle, I apprehend, cannot be sustained by an appeal to general usage. The instances in practice are not few, in which both these senses are clearly indicated with regard to the same noun; as, “Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgement require secrecy.”—Constitution of the United States, Art. i, Sec. 5. “I mean that part of mankind who are known by the name of women’s men, or beaux.”—Addison, Spect., No. 536. “A set of men who are common enough in the world.”—Ibid. “It is vain for a people to expect to be free, unless they are first willing to be virtuous.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 397. “For this people’s heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed.”—Matt., xiii, 15. “This enemy had now enlarged their confederacy, and made themselves more formidable than before.”—Life of Antoninus, p. 62.

“Thus from the tents the fervent legion swarms;
So loud their clamour, and so keen their arms.”—Pope, Iliad, B. xvi, l. 320.

OBS. 3.—Most collective nouns of the neuter gender, may take the regular plural form, and be represented by a pronoun in the third person, plural, neuter; as, “The nations will enforce their laws.” This construction comes under Rule 10th, as does also the singular, “The nations will enforce its laws;” for, in either case, the agreement is entirely literal. Half of Murray’s Rule 4th is therefore needless. To Rule 11th above, there are properly no exceptions; because the number of the pronoun is itself the index to the sense in which the antecedent is therein taken. It does not follow, however, but that there may be violations of the rule, or of the notes under it, by the adoption of one number when the other would be more correct, or in better taste. A collection of things inanimate, as a fleet, a heap, a row, a tier, a bundle, is seldom, if ever, taken distributively, with a plural pronoun. For a further elucidation of the construction of collective nouns, see Rule 15th, and the observations under it.

NOTES TO RULE XI.

NOTE I.—A collective noun conveying the idea of unity, requires a pronoun in the third person, singular, neuter; as, “When a legislative body makes laws, it acts for itself only; but when it makes grants or contracts, it acts as a party.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 40. “A civilized people has no right to violate its solemn obligations, because the other party is uncivilized.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 314.

NOTE II.—When a collective noun is followed by two or more words which must each in some sense agree with it, uniformity of number is commonly preferable to diversity, and especially to such a mixture as puts the singular both before and after the plural; as, “That ingenious nation who have done so much honour to modern literature, possesses, in an eminent degree, the talent of narration.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 364. Better: “which has done.”

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XI.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—THE IDEA OF PLURALITY.

“The jury will be confined till it agrees on a verdict.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 145.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pronoun it is of the singular number, and does not correctly represent its antecedent jury, which is a collective noun conveying rather the idea of plurality. But, according to Rule 11th, “When the antecedent is a collective noun conveying the idea of plurality, the pronoun must agree with it in the plural number.” Therefore, it should be they; thus, “The jury will be confined till they agree on a verdict.”]

“And mankind directed its first cares towards the needful.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 114. “It is difficult to deceive a free people respecting its true interest.”—Life of Charles XII,

p. 67. "All the virtues of mankind are to be counted upon a few fingers, but his follies and vices are innumerable."—Swift. "Every sect saith, 'Give me liberty;' but give it him, and to his power, he will not yield it to any body else."—Oliver Cromwell. "Behold, the people shall rise up as a great lion, and lift up himself as a young lion."—Numbers, xxiii, 24. "For all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth."—Gen., vi, 12. "There happened to the army a very strange accident, which put it in great consternation."—Goldsmith.

UNDER NOTE I.—THE IDEA OF UNITY.

"The meeting went on in their business as a united body."—Foster's Report, i, 69. "Every religious association has an undoubted right to adopt a creed for themselves."—Gould's Advocate, iii, 405. "It would therefore be extremely difficult to raise an insurrection in that State against their own government."—Webster's Essays, p. 104. "The mode in which a Lyceum can apply themselves in effecting a reform in common schools."—New York Lyceum. "Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods?"—Jeremiah, ii, 11. "In the holy scriptures each of the twelve tribes of Israel is often called by the name of the patriarch, from whom they descended."—J. Q. Adams's Rhet., ii, 331.

UNDER NOTE II.—UNIFORMITY OF NUMBER.

"A nation, by the reparation of their own wrongs, achieves a triumph more glorious than any field of blood can ever give."—J. Q. Adams. "The English nation, from which we descended, have been gaining their liberties inch by inch."—Webster's Essays, p. 45. "If a Yearly Meeting should undertake to alter its fundamental doctrines, is there any power in the society to prevent their doing so?"—Foster's Report, i, 96. "There is a generation that curseth their father, and doth not bless their mother."—Proverbs, xxx, 11. "There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness."—Ib., xxx, 12. "He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel: the Lord his God is with him, and the shout of a king is among them."—Numb., xxiii, 21. "My people hath forgotten me, they have burnt incense to vanity."—Jer., xviii, 15. "When a quarterly meeting hath come to a judgment respecting any difference, relative to any monthly meeting belonging to them," &c.—Extracts, p. 195; N. E. Discip., p. 118. "The number of such compositions is every day increasing, and appear to be limited only by the pleasure or conveniency of the writer."—Booth's Introd. to Dict., p. 37. "The church of Christ hath the same power now as ever, and are led by the same Spirit into the same practices."—Barclay's Works, i, 477. "The army, whom the chief had thus abandoned, pursued meanwhile their miserable march."—Lockhart's Napoleon, ii, 165.

RULE XII.—PRONOUNS.

When a Pronoun has two or more antecedents connected by and, it must agree with them jointly in the plural, because they are taken together: as, "Minos and Thales sung to the lyre the laws which they composed."—STRABO: Blair's Rhet., p. 379. "Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided."—2 Sam., i, 23.

"Rhesus and Rhodius then unite their rills, Caresus roaring down the stony hills."—Pope, Il., B. xii, l. 17.

EXCEPTION FIRST.

When two or more antecedents connected by and serve merely to describe one person or thing, they are either in apposition or equivalent to one name, and do not require a plural pronoun; as, “This great philosopher and statesman continued in public life till his eighty-second year.”—“The same Spirit, light, and life, which enlighteneth, also sanctifieth, and there is not an other.”—Penington. “My Constantius and Philetus confesseth me two years older when I writ it.”—Cowley’s Preface. “Remember these, O Jacob and Israel! for thou art my servant.”—Isaiah, xliv, 21. “In that strength and cogency which renders eloquence powerful.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 252.

EXCEPTION SECOND.

When two antecedents connected by and are emphatically distinguished, they belong to different propositions, and, if singular, do not require a plural pronoun; as, “The butler, and not the baker, was restored to his office.”—“The good man, and the sinner too, shall have his reward.”—“Truth, and truth only, is worth seeking for its own sake.”—“It is the sense in which the word is used, and not the letters of which it is composed, that determines what is the part of speech to which it belongs.”—Cobbett’s Gram., ¶ 130.

EXCEPTION THIRD.

When two or more antecedents connected by and are preceded by the adjective each, every, or no, they are taken separately, and do not require a plural pronoun; as, “Every plant and every tree produces others after its own kind.”—“It is the cause of every reproach and distress which has attended your government.”—Junius, Let. xxxv. But if the latter be a collective noun, the pronoun may be plural; as, “Each minister and each church act according to their own impressions.”—Dr. M’Cartee.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XII.

OBS. 1.—When the antecedents are of different persons, the first person is preferred to the second, and the second to the third; as, “John, and thou, and I, are attached to our country.”—“John and thou are attached to your country.”—“The Lord open some light, and show both you and me our inheritance!”—Baxter. “Thou and thy sons with thee shall bear the iniquity of your priesthood.”—Numbers, xviii, 1.

“For all are friends in heaven; all faithful friends;
And many friendships in the days of Time
Begun, are lasting here, and growing still:
So grows ours evermore, both theirs and mine.”—Pollok, C. of T., B. v, l. 335.

OBS. 2.—The gender of pronouns, except in the third person singular, is distinguished only by their antecedents. In expressing that of a pronoun which has antecedents of different genders, the masculine should be preferred to the feminine, and the feminine to the neuter. The parser of English should remember, that this is a principle of General Grammar.

OBS. 3.—When two words are taken separately as nominatives, they ought not to be united in the same sentence as antecedents. In the following example, therefore, them should be it: “The first has a lenis, and the other an asper over them.”—Printer’s Gram., p. 246. Better thus: “The first has a lenis over it, and the other an asper.”

OBS. 4.—Nouns that stand as nominatives or antecedents, are sometimes taken conjointly when there is no conjunction expressed; as, “The historian, the orator, the philosopher, address themselves primarily to the understanding: their direct aim is, to inform, to persuade, to instruct.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 377. The copulative and may here be said to be understood, because the verb and the pronouns are plural; but it seems better in general, either to introduce the connective word, or to take the nouns disjunctively: as, “They have all the copiousness, the fervour, the inculcating method, that is allowable and graceful in an orator; perhaps too much of it for a writer.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 343. To this, however, there may be exceptions,—cases in which the plural form is to be preferred,—especially in poetry; as, “Faith, justice, heaven itself, now quit their hold,

When to false fame the captive heart is sold.”—Brown, on Satire.

OBS. 5.—When two or more antecedents connected by and are nominally alike, one or more of them may be understood; and, in such a case, the pronoun must still be plural, as agreeing with all the nouns, whether expressed or implied: as, “But intellectual and moral culture ought to go hand in hand; they will greatly help each other.”—Dr. Weeks. Here they stands for intellectual culture and moral culture. The following example is incorrect: “The Commanding and Unlimited mode may be used in an absolute sense, or without a name or substitute on which it can depend.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 80. Change it to they, or and to or. See Note 6th to Rule 16th.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XII.

PRONOUNS WITH ANTECEDENTS CONNECTED BY AND.

“Discontent and sorrow manifested itself in his countenance.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 146.

[FORMULE—Not proper, because the pronoun itself is of the singular number, and does not correctly represent its two antecedents discontent and sorrow, which are connected by and, and taken conjointly. But, according to Rule 12th, “When a pronoun has two or more antecedents connected by and, it must agree with them, jointly in the plural, because they are taken together.” Therefore, itself should be themselves; thus, “Discontent and sorrow manifested themselves in his countenance.”]

“Both conversation and public speaking became more simple and plain, such as we now find it.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 59. “Idleness and ignorance, if it be suffered to proceed, &c.”—Johnson: Priestley’s Gram., p. 186. “Avoid questions and strife; it shows a busy and contentious disposition.”—Wm. Penn. “To receive the gifts and benefits of God with thanksgiving, and witness it blessed and sanctified to us by the word and prayer, is owned by us.”—Barclays Works, i, 213. “Both minister and magistrate are compelled to choose between his duty and his reputation.”—Junius, p. 9. “All the sincerity, truth, and faithfulness, or disposition of heart or conscience to approve it, found among rational creatures, necessarily originate from God.”—Brown’s Divinity, p. 12. “Your levity and heedlessness, if it continue, will prevent all substantial improvement.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 147. “Poverty and obscurity will oppress him only who esteems it oppressive.”—Ib. “Good sense and refined policy are obvious to few, because it cannot be discovered but by a train of reflection.”—Ib. “Avoid haughtiness of behaviour, and affectation, of manners: it implies a want of solid merit.”—Ib. “If love and unity continue, it will make you partakers of one another’s joy.”—Ib. “Suffer not jealousy and distrust to enter: it will destroy, like a canker, every germ of friendship.”—Ib. “Hatred and animosity are inconsistent with Christian charity; guard, therefore, against the slightest indulgence of it.”—Ib. “Every man is entitled to liberty of conscience, and freedom of opinion, if he does not pervert it to the injury of others.”—Ib.

“With the azure and vermilion
Which is mix’d for my pavilion.”—Byron’s Manfred, p. 9.

RULE XIII.—PRONOUNS.

When a Pronoun has two or more antecedents connected by or or nor, it must agree with them singly, and not as if taken together: as; “James or John will favour us with his company.”—“Neither wealth nor honour can secure the happiness of its votaries.”

“What virtue or what mental grace,
But men unqualified and base
Will boast it their possession?”—Cowper, on Friendship.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XIII.

OBS. 1.—When two or more singular antecedents are connected by or or nor, the pronoun which represents them, ought in general to be singular, because or and nor are disjunctives; and, to form a complete concord, the nouns ought also to be of the same person and gender, that the pronoun may agree in all respects with each of them. But when plural nouns are connected in this manner, the pronoun will of course be plural, though it still agrees with the antecedents singly; as, “Neither riches nor honours ever satisfy their pursuers.” Sometimes, when different numbers occur together, we find the plural noun put last, and the pronoun made plural after both, especially if this noun is a mere substitute for the other; as,

“What’s justice to a man, or laws,
That never comes within their claws.”—Hudibras.

OBS. 2.—When antecedents of different persons, numbers, or genders, are connected by or or nor, they cannot very properly be represented by any pronoun that is not applicable to each of them. The following sentences are therefore inaccurate; or at least they contradict the teachings of their own authors: “Either thou or I am greatly mistaken, in our judgment on this subject.”—Murray’s Key, p. 184 “Your character, which I, or any other writer, may now value ourselves by (upon) drawing.”—SWIFT: Lowth’s Gram., p. 96. “Either you or I will be in our place in due time.”—Coopers Gram., p. 127. But different pronouns may be so connected as to refer to such antecedents taken separately; as, “By requiring greater labour from such slave or slaves, than he or she or they are able to perform.”—Prince’s Digest. Or, if the gender only be different, the masculine may involve the feminine by implication; as, “If a man smite the eye of his servant, or the eye of his maid, that it perish, he shall let him go free for his eye’s sake.”—Exodus, xxi, 26.

OBS. 3.—It is however very common to resort to the plural number in such instances as the foregoing, because our plural pronouns are alike in all the genders; as, “When either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite.”—Numbers, vi, 2. “Then shalt thou bring forth that man or that woman unto thy gates, and shalt stone them with stones, till they die.”—Deut., xvii, 5. “Not on outward charms could he or she build their pretensions to please.”—Opie, on Lying, p. 148. “Complimenting either man or woman on agreeable qualities which they do not possess, in hopes of imposing on their credulity.”—Ib., p. 108. “Avidien, or his wife, (no matter which,) sell their presented partridges and fruits.”—Pope, Sat. ii, l. 50. “Beginning with Latin or Greek hexameter, which are the same.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 79.

“Did ever Proteus, Merlin, any witch, Transform themselves so strangely as the rich?”—Pope, Ep. i, l. 152.

OBS. 4.—From the observations and examples above, it may be perceived, that whenever there is a difference of person, number, or gender, in antecedents connected disjunctively, there is an inherent difficulty respecting the form of the pronoun personal. The best mode of meeting this inconvenience, or of avoiding it by a change of the phraseology, may be different on different occasions. The disjunctive connexion of explicit pronouns is the most correct, but it savours too much of legal precision and wordiness to be always eligible. Commonly an ingenious mind may invent some better expression, and yet avoid any syntactical anomaly. In Latin, when nouns are connected by the conjunctions which correspond to or or nor, the pronoun or verb is so often made plural, that no such principle as that of the foregoing Rule, or of Rule 17th, is taught by the common grammars of that language. How such usage can be logically right, however, it is difficult to imagine. Lowth, Murray, Webster, and most other English grammarians, teach, that, “The conjunction disjunctive has an effect contrary to that of the copulative; and, as the verb, noun, or pronoun, is referred to the preceding terms taken separately, it must be in the singular number.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 75; L. Murray’s, 151; Churchill’s, 142; W. Allen’s, 133; Lennie’s, 83; and many others. If there is any allowable exception to this principle, it is for the adoption of the plural when the concord cannot be made by any one pronoun singular; as, “If I value my friend’s wife or son upon account of their connexion with him.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 73. “Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation.”—Levit., x, 8. These examples, though they do not accord with the preceding rule, seem not to be susceptible of any change for the better. There are also some other modes of expression, in which nouns that are connected disjunctively, may afterwards be represented together; as “Foppery is a sort of folly much more contagious THAN pedantry; but as they result alike from affectation, they deserve alike to be proscribed.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 217.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XIII.

PRONOUNS WITH ANTECEDENTS CONNECTED BY OR OR NOR.

“Neither prelate nor priest can give their flocks any decisive evidence that you are lawful pastors.”—Dr. Brownlee.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the pronoun their is of the plural number, and does not correctly represent its two antecedents prelate and priest, which are connected by nor, and taken disjunctively. But, according to Rule 13th, “When a pronoun has two or more antecedents connected by or or nor, it must agree with them singly, and not as if taken together.” Therefore, their should be his; thus, “Neither prelate nor priest can give his flocks any decisive evidence that you are lawful pastors.”]

“And is there a heart of parent or of child, that does not beat and burn within them?”—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 367. “This is just as if an eye or a foot should demand a salary for their service to the body.”—Collier’s Antoninus, p. 178. “If thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee.”—Matt., xviii, 8. “The same might as well be said of Virgil, or any great author, whose general character will infallibly raise many casual additions to their reputation.”—Pope’s Pref. to Homer. “Either James or John, one of them, will come.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 37. “Even a rugged rock or barren heath, though in themselves disagreeable, contribute by contrast to the beauty of the whole.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 185. “That neither Count Rechteren nor Monsieur Mesnager had behaved themselves right in this affair.”—Spect., No. 481. “If an Aristotle, a Pythagoras, or a Galileo, suffer for their opinions, they are ‘martyrs.’”—Gospel its own Witness, p. 80. “If an ox gore a man or a woman, that they die; then the ox shall be surely stoned.”—Exodus, xxi, 28. “She was calling out to one or another, at every step, that a Habit was ensnaring them.”—DR. JOHNSON: Murray’s Sequel, 181. “Here is a Task put upon Children, that neither this Author, nor any other have yet undergone themselves.”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 162. “Hence, if an adjective or participle be subjoined to the verb, when of the singular number, they will agree both in gender and number with the collective noun.”—Adam’s Lat. Gram., p. 154; Gould’s, 158. “And if you can find a diphthong, or a triphthong, be pleased to point them out too.”—Bucke’s Classical Gram., p. 16. “And if you can find a diphthong, or a triphthong, a trissyllable, or a polysyllable, point them respectively out.”—Ib., p. 25. “The false refuges in which the atheist or the sceptic have intrenched themselves.”—Christian Spect., viii, 185. “While the man or woman thus assisted by art expects their charms will be imputed to nature alone.”—Opie, 141. “When you press a watch, or pull a clock, they answer your question with precision; for they repeat exactly the hour of the day, and tell you neither more nor less than you desire to know.”—Bolingbroke, on History, p. 102.

“Not the Mogul, or Czar of Muscovy,
Not Prester John, or Cham of Tartary,
Are in their houses Monarch more than I.”—KING: Brit. Poets, Vol. iii, p. 613.

CHAPTER VI.—VERBS.

In this work, the syntax of Verbs is embraced in six consecutive rules, with the necessary exceptions, notes, and observations, under them; hence this chapter extends from the fourteenth to the twentieth rule in the series.

RULE XIV.—FINITE VERBS.

Every finite Verb must agree with its subject, or nominative, in person and number: as, “I know; thou knowst, or knowest; he knows, or knoweth”—“The bird flies; the birds fly.”

“Our fathers’ fertile fields by slaves are till’d,
And Rome with dregs of foreign lands is fill’d.”—Rowe’s Lucan, B. vii, l. 600.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XIV.

OBS. 1.—To this general rule for the verb, there are properly no exceptions;* and all the special rules that follow, which prescribe the concord of verbs in particular instances, virtually accord with it. Every finite verb, (that is, every verb not in the infinitive mood,) must have some noun, pronoun, or phrase equivalent, known as the subject of the being, action, or passion;† and with this subject, whether expressed or understood, the verb

* In their speculations on the personal pronouns, grammarians sometimes contrive, by a sort of abstraction, to reduce all the persons to the third; that is, the author or speaker puts I, not for himself in particular, but for any one who utters the word, and thou, not for his particular hearer or reader, but for any one who is addressed; and, conceiving of these as persons merely spoken of by himself, he puts the verb in the third person, and not in the first or second: as, “I is the speaker, thou [is] the hearer, and he, she, or it, is the person or thing spoken of. All denote qualities of existence, but such qualities as make different impressions on the mind. I is the being of consciousness, thou [is] the being of perception, and he of memory.”—Booth's Introd., p. 44. This is such syntax as I should not choose to imitate; nor is it very proper to say, that the three persons in grammar “denote qualities of existence.” But, supposing the phraseology to be correct, it is no real exception to the foregoing rule of concord; for I and thou are here made to be pronouns of the third person. So in the following example, which I take to be bad English: “I, or the person who speaks, is the first person; you, is the second; he, she, or it, is the third person singular.”—Bartlett's Manual, Part ii, p. 70. Again, in the following; which is perhaps a little better: “The person ‘I is spoken of as acted upon.’”—Bullions, Prin. of E. Gram., 2d Edition, p. 29. But there is a manifest absurdity in saying, with this learned “Professor of Languages,” that the pronouns of the different persons are those persons: as, “I is the first person, and denotes the speaker. Thou is the second, and denotes the person spoken to.”—Ib., p. 22.

† (1.) Concerning the verb need, Dr. Webster has the following note: “In the use of this verb there is another irregularity, which is peculiar, the verb being without a nominative, expressed or implied. ‘Whereof here needs no account.’—Milt., P. L., 4. 235. There is no evidence of the fact, and there needs none. This is an established use of need.”—Philos. Gram., p. 178; Improved Gram., 127; Greenleaf's Gram. Simp., p. 38; Fowler's E. Gram., p. 537. “Established use?” To be sure, it is “an established use;” but the learned Doctor's comment is a most unconscionable blunder,—a pedantic violation of a sure principle of Universal Grammar,—a perversion worthy only of the veriest ignoramus. Yet Greenleaf profitably publishes it, with other plagiarisms, for “Grammar Simplified!” Now the verb “needs,” like the Latin  eget, signifying is necessary, is here not active, but neuter; and has the nominative set after it, as any verb must, when the adverb there or here is before it. The verbs lack and want may have the same construction, and can have no other, when the word there, and not a nominative, precedes them; as, “Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous.”—Gen., xviii, 28. There is therefore neither “irregularity,” nor any thing “peculiar,” in thus placing the verb and its nominative.

(2.) Yet have we other grammarians, who, with astonishing facility, have allowed themselves to be misled, and whose books are now misleading the schools, in regard to this very simple matter. Thus Wells: “The transitive verbs need and want, are sometimes employed in a general sense, without a nominative, expressed or implied. Examples:—‘There needed a new dispensation.’—Caleb Cushing. ‘There needs no better picture.’—Irving. ‘There wanted not patrons to stand up.’—Sparks. ‘Nor did there want Cornice, or frieze.’—Milton.”—Wells's School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 141; 113th Ed., p. 154. In my edition of Milton, the text is, “Nor did they want Cornice or frieze.”—P. L., B. i, l. 715, 716. This reading makes want a “transitive” verb, but the other makes it neuter, with the nominative following it. Again, thus Weld: “A verb in the imperative mode, and the transitive verbs need, want, and require, sometimes appear to be used indefinitely, without a nominative; as, let there be light; There required haste in the business; There needs no argument for proving, &c. There wanted not men who would, &c. The last expressions have an active form with a passive sense, and should perhaps rather be considered elliptical than wanting a nominative; as, haste is required, no argument is needed, &c.”—Weld's English Grammar Illustrated, p. 143. Is there anywhere, in print, viler pedantry than this? The only elliptical example, “Let there be light,”—a kind of sentence from which the nominative is usually suppressed,—is here absurdly represented as being full, yet without a subject for its verb; while other examples, which are full, and in which the nominative must follow the verb, because the adverb “there” precedes, are first denied to have nominatives, and then most bunglingly tortured with false ellipses, to prove that they have them!

(3.) The idea of a command wherein no person or thing is commanded, seems to have originated with Webster, by whom it has been taught, since 1807, as follows: “In some cases, the imperative verb is used without a definite nominative.”—Philos. Gram., p. 141; Imp. Gram., 86; Rudiments, 69. See the same words in Frazee's Gram., p. 133. Wells has something similar: “A verb in the imperative is sometimes used must agree in person and number. The infinitive mood, as it does not unite with a nominative to form an assertion, is of course exempt from any such agreement. These may be considered principles of Universal Grammar. The Greeks, however, had a strange custom of using a plural noun of the neuter gender, with a verb of the third person singular; and in both Greek and Latin, the infinitive mood with an accusative before it was often equivalent to a finite verb with its nominative. In English we have neither of these usages; and plural nouns, even when they denote no absolute plurality, (as shears, scissors, trowsers, *pantaloon*s, tongs,) require plural verbs or pronouns: as, “Your shears come too late, to clip the bird’s wings.”—SIDNEY: Churchill’s Gram., p. 30.

OBS. 2.—When a book that bears a plural title, is spoken of as one thing, there is sometimes presented an apparent exception to the foregoing rule; as, “The Pleasures of Memory was published in the year 1792, and became at once popular.”—Allan Cunningham. “The ‘Sentiments of a Church-of-England Man’ is written with great coolness, moderation, ease, and perspicuity.”—Johnson’s Life of Swift. “The ‘Pleasures of Hope’ is a splendid poem; it was written for perpetuity.”—Samuel L. Knapp. In these instances, there is, I apprehend, either an agreement of the verb, by the figure sylllepsis, with the mental conception of the thing spoken of; or an improper ellipsis of the common noun, with which each sentence ought to commence; as, “The poem entitled,”—“The work entitled,” &c. But the plural title sometimes controls the form of the verb; as, “My Lives are reprinting.”—Dr. Johnson.

OBS. 3.—In the figurative use of the present tense for the past or imperfect, the vulgar have a habit of putting the third person singular with the pronoun I; as, “Thinks I to myself.”—Rev. J. Marriott. “O, says I, Jacky, are you at that work?”—Day’s Sandford and Merton. “Huzza! huzza! Sir Condry Rackrent forever, was the first thing I hears in the morning.”—Edgeworth’s Castle Rackrent, p. 97. This vulgarism is to be avoided, not by a simple omission of the terminational s, but rather by the use of the literal preterit: as, absolutely, having no direct reference to any particular subject expressed or implied; as, ‘And God said, Let there be light.’”—School Gram., p. 141. But, when this command was uttered to the dark waves of primeval chaos, it must have meant, “Do ye let light be there.” What else could it mean? There may frequently be difficulty in determining what or who is addressed by the imperative let, but there seems to be more in affirming that it has no subject. Nutting, puzzled with this word, makes the following dubious and unsatisfactory suggestion: “Perhaps it may be, in many cases, equivalent to may; or it may be termed itself an imperative mode impersonal; that is, containing a command or an entreaty addressed to no particular person.”—Nutting’s Practical Gram., p. 47.

---

(4.) These several errors, about the “Imperative used Absolutely,” with “no subject addressed,” as in “Let there be light,” and the Indicative “verbs NEED and WANT, employed without a nominative, either expressed or implied,” are again carefully reiterated by the learned Professor Fowler, in his great text-book of philology “in its Elements and Forms,”—called, rather extravagantly, an “English Grammar.” See, in his edition of 1850, §597, Note 3 and Note 7; also §520, Note 2. Wells’s authorities for “Imperatives Absolute,” are, “Frazee, Allen and Cornwell, Nutting, Lynde, and Chapin;” and, with reference to “NEED and WANT,” he says, “See Webster, Perley, and Ingersoll.”—School Gram., 1850, §209.

(5.) But, in obvious absurdity most strangely overlooked by the writer, all these blunderers are outdone by a later one, who says: “Need and dare are sometimes used in a general sense without a nominative: as, ‘There needed no prophet to tell us that;’ ‘There wanted no advocates to secure the voice of the people.’ It is better, however, to supply it, as a nominative, than admit an anomaly. Sometimes, when intransitive, they have the plural form with a singular noun: as, ‘He need not fear;’ ‘He dare not hurt you.’”—Rev. H. W. Bailey’s E. Gram., 1854, p. 128. The last example—“He dare”—is bad English: dare should be dares. “He need not fear,” if admitted to be right, is of the potential mood; in which no verb is inflected in the third person. “He,” too, is not a “noun,” nor can it ever rightly have a “plural” verb. “To supply it, as a nominative,” where the verb is declared to be “without a nominative,” and to make “wanted” an example of “dare” are blunders precisely worthy of an author who knows not how to spell anomaly!

“Thought I to myself;”—“O, said I;”—“The first thing I heard.” The same mode of correction is also proper, when, under like circumstances, there occurs a disagreement in number; as, “After the election was over, there comes shoals of people from all parts.”—Castle Rackrent, p. 103. “Didn’t ye hear it? says they that were looking on.”—Ib., p. 147. Write, “there came,”—“said they.”

OBS. 4.—It has already been noticed, that the article a, or a singular adjective, sometimes precedes an arithmetical number with a plural noun; as, “A thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday.”—Psalms, xc, 4. So we might say, “One thousand years are,”—“Each thousand years are”—“Every thousand years are,” &c. But it would not be proper to say, “A thousand years is,” or, “Every thousand years is,” because the noun years is plainly plural, and the anomaly of putting a singular verb after it, is both needless and unauthorized. Yet, to this general rule for the verb, the author of a certain “English Grammar on the Productive System,” (a strange perversion of Murray’s compilation, and a mere catch-penny work, now extensively used in New England,) is endeavouring to establish, by his own bare word, the following exception: “Every is sometimes associated with a plural noun, in which case the verb must be singular; as, ‘Every hundred years constitutes a century.’”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 103. His reason is this; that the phrase containing the nominative, “signifies a single period of time, and is, therefore, in reality singular.”—Ib. Cutler also, a more recent writer, seems to have imbibed the same notion; for he gives the following sentence as an example of “false construction: Every hundred years are called a century.”—Cutler’s Grammar and Parser, p. 145. But, according to this argument, no plural verb could ever be used with any definite number of the parts of time; for any three years, forty years, or threescore years and ten, are as single a period of time, as “every hundred years,” “every four years,” or “every twenty-four hours.” Nor is it true, that, “Every is sometimes associated with a plural noun;” for “every years” or “every hours,” would be worse than nonsense. I, therefore, acknowledge no such exception; but, discarding the principle of the note, put this author’s pretended corrections among my quotations of false syntax.

OBS. 5.—Different verbs always have different subjects, expressed or understood; except when two or more verbs are connected in the same construction, or when the same word is repeated for the sake of emphasis. But let not the reader believe the common doctrine of our grammarians, respecting either the ellipsis of nominatives or the ellipsis of verbs. In the text, “The man was old and crafty,” Murray sees no connexion of the ideas of age and craftiness, but thinks the text a compound sentence, containing two nominatives and two verbs; i.e., “The man was old, and the man was crafty.” * And all his other instances of “the ellipsis of the verb” are equally fanciful! See his Octavo Gram., p. 219; Duodecimo, 175. In the text, “God loves, protects, supports, and rewards the rights,” there are four verbs in the same construction, agreeing with the same nominative, and governing the same object; but Buchanan and others expound it, “God loves, and God protects, and God supports, and God rewards the righteous.”—English Syntax, p. 76; British Gram., 192. This also is fanciful and inconsistent. If the nominative is here “elegantly understood to each verb,” so is the objective, which they do not repeat. “And again,” they immediately add, “the verb is often understood to its noun or nouns; as, He dreams of gibbets, halters, racks, daggers, &c. i.e. He dreams of gibbets, and he dreams of halters, &c.”—Same works and places. In none of these examples is there any occasion to suppose an ellipsis, if we admit that two or more words can be connected in the same construction!

* This interpretation, and others like it, are given not only by Murray, but by many other grammarians, one of whom at least was earlier than he. See Bicknell’s Gram., Part i, p. 123; Ingersoll’s, 153; Guy’s, 91; Alger’s, 73; Merchant’s, 100; Picket’s, 211; Fisk’s, 146; D. Adams’s, 81; R. C. Smith’s, 182.

OBS. 6.—Verbs in the imperative mood commonly agree with the pronoun thou, ye, or you, understood after them; as, “Heal [ye] the sick, cleanse [ye] the lepers, raise [ye] the dead, cast [ye] out devils.”—Matt., x, 8. “Trust God and be doing, and leave the rest with him.”—Dr. Sibbs. When the doer of a thing must first proceed to the place of action, we sometimes use go or come before an other verb, without any conjunction between the two; as, “Son, go work to-day in my vineyard.”—Matt., xxi, 28. “Come see a man who [has] told me all things that ever I did.”—John, iv, 29. “He ordered his soldiers to go murder every child about Bethlehem, or near it.”—Wood’s Dict. of Bible, w. Herod. “Take a present in thine hand, and go meet the man of God.”—2 Kings, viii, 8. “I will go see if he be at home.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 169.

OBS. 7.—The place of the verb has reference mainly to that of the subject with which it agrees, and that of the object which it governs; and as the arrangement of these, with the instances in which they come before or after the verb, has already been noticed, the position of the latter seems to require no further explanation. See Obs. 2d under Rule 2d, and Obs. 2d under Rule 5th.

OBS. 8.—The infinitive mood, a phrase, or a sentence, (and, according to some authors, the participle in ing, or a phrase beginning with this participle,) is sometimes the proper subject of a verb, being equivalent to a nominative of the third person singular; as, “To play is pleasant.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 80. “To write well, is difficult; to speak eloquently, is still more difficult.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 81. “To take men off from prayer, tends to irreligiousness, is granted.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 214. “To educate a child perfectly, requires profounder thought, greater wisdom, than to govern a state.”—Channing’s Self-Culture, p. 30. “To determine these points, belongs to good sense.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 321. “How far the change would contribute to his welfare, comes to be considered.”—Id., Sermons. “That too much care does hurt in any of our tasks, is a doctrine so flattering to indolence, that we ought to receive it with extreme caution.”—Life of Schiller, p. 148. “That there is no disputing about taste, is a saying so generally received as to have become a proverb.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 360. “For what purpose they embarked, is not yet known.”—“To live in sin and yet to believe the forgiveness of sin, is utterly impossible.”—Dr. J. Owen.

“There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
But drinking largely sobers us again.”—Pope.

OBS. 9.—The same meaning will be expressed, if the pronoun it be placed before the verb, and the infinitive, phrase, or sentence, after it; as, “It is pleasant to play,”—“It is difficult to write well,” &c. The construction of the following sentences is rendered defective by the omission of this pronoun: “Why do ye that which [it] is not lawful to do on the sabbath days?”—Luke, vi, 2. “The show-bread, which [it] is not lawful to eat, but for the priests only.”—Ib., vi, 4. “We have done that which [it] was our duty to do.”—Ib., xvii, 10. Here the relative which ought to be in the objective case, governed by the infinitives; but the omission of the word it makes this relative the nominative to is or was, and leaves to do and to eat without any regimen. This is not ellipsis, but error. It is an accidental gap into which a side piece falls, and leaves a breach elsewhere. The following is somewhat like it, though what falls in, appears to leave no chasm: “From this deduction, [it] may be easily seen how it comes to pass, that personification makes so great a figure.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 155. “Whether the author had any meaning in this expression, or what it was, [it] is not easy to determine.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 298. “That warm climates should accelerate the growth of the human body, and shorten its duration, [it] is very reasonable to believe.”—Ib., p. 144. These also need the pronoun, though Murray thought them complete without it.

OBS. 10.—When the infinitive mood is made the subject of a finite verb, it is most commonly used to express action or state in the abstract; as, “To be contents his natural desire.”—Pope. Here to be stands for simple existence; or if for the existence of the Indian, of whom the author speaks, that relation is merely implied. “To define ridicule, has puzzled and vexed every critic.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 300. Here “to define” expresses an action quite as distinct from any agent, as would the participial noun; as, “The defining of ridicule,” &c. In connexion with the infinitive, a concrete quality may also be taken as an abstract; as, “To be good is to be happy.” Here good and happy express the quality of goodness and the state of happiness considered abstractly; and therefore these adjectives do not relate to any particular noun. So also the passive infinitive, or a perfect participle taken in a passive sense; as, “To be satisfied with a little, is the greatest wisdom.”—“To appear discouraged, is the way to become so.” Here the satisfaction and the discouragement are considered abstractly, and without reference to any particular person. (See Obs. 12th and 13th on Rule 6th.) So too, apparently, the participles doing and suffering, as well as the adjective weak, in the following example:

“Fallen Cherub, to be weak is miserable,
Doing or suffering.”—Milton’s Paradise Lost.

OBS. 11.—When the action or state is to be expressly limited to one class of beings, or to a particular person or thing, without making the verb finite; the noun or pronoun may be introduced before the infinitive by the preposition for: as, “For men to search their own glory, is not glory.”—Prov., xxv, 27. “For a prince to be reduced by villainy to my distressful circumstances, is calamity enough.”—Translation of Sallust. “For holy persons to be humble, is as hard, as for a prince to submit himself to be guided by tutors.”—TAYLOR: Priestley’s Gram., p. 132; Murray’s, 184. But such a limitation is sometimes implied, when the expression itself is general; as, “Not to know me, argues thyself unknown.”—Milton. That is, “For thee not to know me.” The phrase is put far, “Thy ignorance of me,” for an other’s ignorance would be no argument in regard to the individual addressed. “I, to bear this, that never knew but better, is some burden.”—Beauties of Shak., p. 327. Here the infinitive to bear, which is the subject of the verb is, is limited in sense by the pronoun I, which is put absolute in the nominative, though perhaps improperly; because, “For me to bear this,” &c., will convey the same meaning, in a form much more common, and perhaps more grammatical. In the following couplet, there is an ellipsis of the infinitive; for the phrase, “fool with fool,” means, “for fool to contend with fool,” or, “for one fool to contend with an other:”

“Blockheads with reason wicked wits abhor,
But fool with fool is barb’rous civil war.”—Pope, Dunciad, B. iii, l. 175.

OBS. 12.—The objective noun or pronoun thus introduced by for before the infinitive, was erroneously called by Priestley, “the subject of the affirmation,” (Gram., p. 132;) and Murray, Ingersoll, and others, have blindly copied the blunder. See Murray’s Gram., p.

184; Ingersoll's, 244. Again, Ingersoll says, "The infinitive mood, or part of a sentence, is sometimes the subject of a verb, and is, therefore, its NOMINATIVE."—Conversations on English Gram., p. 246. To this erroneous deduction, the phraseology used by Murray and others too plainly gives countenance: "The infinitive mood, or part of a sentence, is sometimes put as the nominative case to the verb."—Murray's Gram., p. 144; Fisk's, 123; Kirkham's, 188; Lennie's, 99; Bullions's, 89; and many more. Now the objective before the infinitive may not improperly be called the subject of this form of the verb, as the nominative is, of the finite; but to call it "the subject of the affirmation," is plainly absurd; because no infinitive, in English, ever expresses an affirmation. And again, if a whole phrase or sentence is made the subject of a finite verb, or of an affirmation, no one word contained in it, can singly claim this title. Nor can the whole, by virtue of this relation, be said to be "in the nominative case;" because, in the nature of things, neither phrases nor sentences are capable of being declined by cases.

OBS. 13.—Any phrase or sentence which is made the subject of a finite verb, must be taken in the sense of one thing, and be spoken of as a whole; so that the verb's agreement with it, in the third person singular, is not an exception to Rule 14th, but a construction in which the verb may be parsed by that rule. For any one thing merely spoken of, is of the third person singular, whatever may be the nature of its parts. Not every phrase or sentence, however, is fit to be made the subject of a verb;—that is, if its own import, and not the mere expression, is the thing whereof we affirm. Thus Dr. Ash's example for this very construction, "a sentence made the subject of a verb," is, I think, a palpable solecism: "The King and Queen appearing in public was the cause of my going."—Ash's Gram., p. 52. What is here before the verb was, is no "sentence", but a mere phrase, and such a one as we should expect to see used independently, if any regard were had to its own import. The Doctor would tell us what "was the cause of his going:" and here he has two nominatives, which are equivalent to the plural they; q.d., "They appearing in public was the cause." But such a construction is not English. It is an other sample of the false illustration which grammar receives from those who invent the proof-texts which they ought to quote.

OBS. 14.—One of Murray's examples of what he erroneously terms "nominative sentences," i.e., "sentences or clauses constituting the subject of an affirmation," is the following: "A desire to excel others in learning and virtue [,] is commendable."—Gram., 8vo, p. 144. Here the verb is agrees regularly with the noun desire, and with that only; the whole text being merely a simple sentence, and totally irrelevant to the doctrine which it accompanies.* But the great "Compiler" supposes the adjuncts of this noun to be parts of

---

* The same may be said of Dr. Webster's "nominative sentences;" three fourths of which are nothing but phrases that include a nominative with which the following verb agrees. And who does not know, that to call the adjuncts of any thing "an essential part of it," is a flat absurdity? An adjunct is "something added to another, but not essentially a part of it."—Webster's Dict. But, says the Doctor, "Attributes and other words often make an essential part of the nominative; [as,] 'Our IDEAS of eternity CAN BE nothing but an infinite succession of moments of duration.'—LOCKE. 'A wise SON MAKETH a glad father; but a foolish SON IS the heaviness of his mother.' Abstract the name from its attribute, and the proposition cannot always be true. 'HE that gathereth in summer is a wise son.' Take away the description, 'that gathereth in summer,' and the affirmation ceases to be true, or becomes inapplicable. These sentences or clauses thus constituting the subject of an affirmation, may be termed nominative sentences."—Improved Gram., p. 95. This teaching reminds me of the Doctor's own exclamation: "What strange work has been made with Grammar!"—Ib., p. 94; Philos. Gram., 138. In Nesbit's English Parsing, a book designed mainly for "a Key to Murray's Exercises in Parsing," the following example is thus expounded: "The smooth stream, the serene atmosphere, [and] the mild zephyr, are the proper emblems of a gentle temper, and a peaceful life."—Murray's Exercises, p. 8. "The the nominative, and imagines the verb to agree with all that precedes it. Yet, soon after, he expends upon the ninth rule of Webster's Philosophical Grammar a whole page of useless criticism, to show that the adjuncts of a noun are not to be taken as parts of the nominative; and that, when objectives are thus subjoined, "the assertion grammatically respects the first nouns only."—Ib., p. 148. I say useless, because the truth of the doctrine is so very plain. Some, however, may imagine an example like the following to be an exception to it; but I do not, because I think the true nominative suppressed:

"By force they could not introduce these gods;
For ten to one in former days was odds."—Dryden's Poems, p. 38.

OBS. 15.—Dr. Webster's ninth rule is this: "When the nominative consists of several words, and the last of the names is in the plural number, the verb is commonly in the plural also; as, 'A part of the exports consist of raw silk.' 'The number of oysters increase.' GOLDSMITH. 'Such as the train of our ideas have lodged in our memories.' LOCKE. 'The greater part of philosophers have acknowledged the excellence of this government.' ANACHARSIS."—Philos. Gram., p. 146; Impr. Gram., 100. The last of these examples Murray omits; the second he changes thus: "A number of men and women were present." But all of them his reasoning condemns as ungrammatical. He thinks them wrong, upon the principle, that the verbs, being plural, do not agree with the first nouns only. Webster, on the contrary, judges them all to be right; and, upon this same principle, conceives that his rule must be so too. He did not retract or alter the doctrine after he saw the criticism, but republished it verbatim, in his "Improved Grammar," of 1831. Both err, and neither convinces the other.

OBS. 16.—In this instance, as Webster and Murray both teach erroneously, whoever follows either, will be led into many mistakes. The fact is, that some of the foregoing examples, though perhaps not all, are perfectly right; and hundreds more, of a similar character, might be quoted, which no true grammarian would presume to condemn. But what have these to do with the monstrous absurdity of supposing objective adjuncts to be "parts of the actual nominative?" The words, "part," "number," "train" and the like, are collective nouns; and, as such, they often have plural verbs in agreement with them. To say, "A number of men and women were present," is as correct as to say, "A very great number of our words are plainly derived from the Latin."—Blair's Rhet., p. 86. Murray's criticism, therefore, since it does not exempt these examples from the censure justly laid upon Webster's rule, will certainly mislead the learner. And again the rule, being utterly wrong in principle, will justify blunders like these: "The truth of the narratives have never been disputed;"—"The virtue of these men and women are indeed exemplary."—Murray's Gram., p. 148. In one of his notes, Murray suggests, that the article an or a before a collective noun must confine the verb to the singular number; as, "A great number of men and women was collected."—Ib., p. 153. But this doctrine he sometimes forgot or disregarded; as, "But if a number of interrogative or exclamatory sentences are thrown into one general group."—Ib., p. 284; Comly, 166; Fisk, 160; Ingersoll, 295.

---

smooth stream, the serene atmosphere, the mild zephyr, is part of a sentence, which is the nominative case to the verb 'are.' Are is an irregular verb neuter, in the indicative mood, the present tense, the third person plural, and agrees with the aforementioned part of a sentence, as its nominative case."—Introduction to English Parsing, p. 137. On this principle of analysis, all the rules that speak of the nominatives or antecedents connected by conjunctions, may be dispensed with, as useless; and the doctrine, that a verb which has a phrase or sentence for its subject, must be singular, is palpably contradicted, and supposed erroneous!

OBS. 17.—Cobbett, in a long paragraph, (the 245th of his English Grammar,) stoutly denies that any relative pronoun can ever be the nominative to a verb; and, to maintain this absurdity, he will have the relative and its antecedent to be always alike in case, the only thing in which they are always independent of each other. To prove his point, he first frames these examples: “The men who are here, the man who is here; the cocks that crow, the cock that crows,” and then asks, “Now, if the relative be the nominative, why do the verbs change, seeing that here is no change in the relative?” He seems ignorant of the axiom, that two things severally equal to a third, are also equal to each other: and accordingly, to answer his own question, resorts to a new principle: “The verb is continually varying. Why does it vary? Because it disregards the relative and goes and finds the antecedent, and accommodates its number to that.”—Ibid. To this wild doctrine, one erratic Irishman yields a full assent; and, in one American grammarist, we find a partial and unintentional concurrence with it.* But the fact is, the relative agrees with the antecedent, and the verb agrees with the relative: hence all three of the words are alike in person and number. But between the case of the relative and that of the antecedent, there never is, or can be, in our language, any sort of connexion or interference. The words belong to different clauses; and, if both be nominatives, they must be the subjects of different verbs: or, if the noun be sometimes put absolute in the nominative, the pronoun is still left to its own verb. But Cobbett concludes his observation thus: “You will observe, therefore, that, when I, in the etymology and syntax as relating to relative pronouns, speak of relatives as being in the nominative case, I mean, that they relate to nouns or to personal pronouns, which are in that case. The same observation applies to the other cases.”—Ib., ¶ 245. This suggestion betrays in the critic an unaccountable ignorance of his subject.

OBS. 18.—Nothing is more certain, than that the relatives, who, which, what, that, and as, are often nominatives, and the only subjects of the verbs which follow them: as, “The Lord will show who are his, and who is holy.”—Numbers, xvi, 5. “Hardly is there any person, but who, on such occasions, is disposed to be serious.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 469. “Much of the merit of Mr. Addison’s Cato depends upon that moral turn of thought which distinguishes it.”—Ib., 469. “Admit not a single word but what is necessary.”—Ib., p. 313. “The pleader must say nothing but what is true; and, at the same time, he must avoid saying any thing that will hurt his cause.”—Ib., 313. “I proceed to mention such as appear to me most material.”—Ib., p. 125. After but or than, there is sometimes an ellipsis of the relative, and perhaps also of the antecedent; as, “There is no heart but must feel them.”— * “No Relative can become a Nominative to a Verb.”—Joseph W. Wright’s Philosophical Grammar, p. 162. “A personal pronoun becomes a nominative, though a relative does not.”—Ib., p. 152. This teacher is criticised by the other as follows: “Wright says that ‘Personal pronouns may be in the nominative case,’ and that ‘relative pronouns can not be. Yet he declines his relatives thus: ‘Nominative case, who; possessive, whose; objective, whom!’—Oliver B. Peirce’s Grammar, p. 331. This latter author here sees the palpable inconsistency of the former, and accordingly treats who, which, what, whatever, &c., as relative pronouns of the nominative case—or, as he calls them, “connective substitutes in the subjective form,” but when what or whatever precedes its noun, or when as is preferred to who or which, he refers both verbs to the noun itself, and adopts the very principle by which Cobbett and Wright erroneously parse the verbs which belong to the relatives, who, which, and that: as, “Whatever man will adhere to strict principles of honesty, will find his reward in himself.”—Peirce’s Gram., p. 55. Here Peirce considers whatever to be a mere adjective, and man the subject of will adhere and will find. “Such persons as write grammar, should themselves be grammarians.”—Ib., p. 330. Here he declares as to be no pronoun, but “a modifying connective,” i.e., conjunction; and supposes persons to be the direct subject of write as well as of should be: as if a conjunction could connect a verb and its nominative!

---

Blair's Rhet., p. 469. "There is no one but must be sensible of the extravagance."—Ib., p. 479. "Since we may date from it a more general and a more concerted opposition to France than there had been before."—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 213. That is, "than what there had been before;"—or, "than any opposition which there had been before." "John has more fruit than can be gathered in a week."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., pp. 196 and 331. I suppose this sentence to mean, "John has more fruit than what can be gathered in a week." But the author of it denies that it is elliptical, and seems to suppose that can be gathered agrees with John. Part of his comment stands thus: "The above sentence—'John has more fruit than can be gathered in a week'—in every respect full and perfect—must, to be grammatical! according to all the 'old theories,' stand, John has more fruit than that fruit is which, or which fruit can be gathered in a week!!!"—Ib., 331. What shall be done with the headlong critic who thus mistakes exclamation points for arguments, and multiplies his confidence in proportion to his fallacies and errors?

OBS. 19.—In a question, the nominative I or thou put after the verb, controls the agreement, in preference to the interrogative who, which, or what, put before it; as, "Who am I? What am I? Who art thou? What art thou?" And, by analogy, this seems to be the case with all plurals; as, "Who are we? Who are you? Who are they? What are these?" But sometimes the interrogative pronoun is the only nominative used; and then the verb, whether singular or plural, must agree with this nominative, in the third person, and not, as Cobbett avers, with an antecedent understood: as, "Who is in the house? Who are in the house? Who strikes the iron? Who strike the iron? Who was in the street? Who were in the street?"—Cobbett's Gram., ¶ 245. All the interrogative pronouns may be used in either number, but, in examples like the following, I imagine the singular to be more proper than the plural: "What have become of our previous customs?"—Hunt's Byron, p. 121. "And what have become of my resolutions to return to God?"—Young Christian, 2d Ed., p. 91. When two nominatives of different properties come after the verb, the first controls the agreement, and neither the plural number nor the most worthy person is always preferred; as, "Is it I? Is it thou? Is it they?"

OBS. 20.—The verb after a relative sometimes has the appearance of disagreeing with its nominative, because the writer and his reader disagree in their conceptions of its mood. When a relative clause is subjoined to what is itself subjunctive or conditional, some writers suppose that the latter verb should be put in the subjunctive mood; as, "If there be any intrigue which stand separate and independent."—Blair's Rhet., p. 457. "The man also would be of considerable use, who should vigilantly attend to every illegal practice that were beginning to prevail."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 171. But I have elsewhere shown, that relatives, in English, are not compatible with the subjunctive mood; and it is certain, that no other mood than the indicative or the potential is commonly used after them. Say therefore, "If there be any intrigue which stands," &c. In assuming to himself the other text, Murray's says, "That man also would be of considerable use, who should vigilantly attend to every illegal practice that was beginning to prevail."—Octavo Gram., p. 366. But this seems too positive. The potential imperfect would be better: viz., "that might begin to prevail."

OBS. 21.—The termination st or est, with which the second person singular of the verb is formed in the indicative present, and, for the solemn style, in the imperfect also; and the termination s or es, with which the third person singular is formed in the indicative present, and only there; are signs of the mood and tense, as well as of the person and number, of the verb. They are not applicable to a future uncertainty, or to any mere supposition in which we would leave the time indefinite and make the action hypothetical; because they are commonly understood to fix the time of the verb to the present or the past, and to assume the action as either doing or done. For this reason, our best writers have always omitted those terminations, when they intended to represent the action as being doubtful and contingent as well as conditional. And this omission constitutes the whole formal difference between the indicative and the subjunctive mood. The essential difference has, by almost all grammarians, been conceived to extend somewhat further; for, if it were confined strictly within the limits of the literal variation, the subjunctive mood would embrace only two or three words in the whole formation of each verb. After the example of Priestley, Dr. Murray, A. Murray, Harrison, Alexander, and others, I have given to it all the persons of the two simple tenses, singular and plural; and, for various reasons, I am decidedly of the opinion, that these are its most proper limits. The perfect and pluperfect tenses, being past, cannot express what is really contingent or uncertain; and since, in expressing conditionally what may or may not happen, we use the subjunctive present as embracing the future indefinitely, there is no need of any formal futures for this mood. The comprehensive brevity of this form of the verb, is what chiefly commends it. It is not an elliptical form of the future, as some affirm it to be; nor equivalent to the indicative present, as others will have it; but a true subjunctive, though its distinctive parts are chiefly confined to the second and third persons singular of the simple verb: as, “Though thou wash thee with nitre.”—Jer., ii, 22. “It is just, O great king! that a murderer perish.”—Corneille. “This single crime, in my judgment, were sufficient to condemn him.”—Duncan’s Cicero, p. 82. “Beware that thou bring not my son thither.”—BIBLE: Ward’s Gram., p. 128. “See [that] thou tell no man.”—Id., ib. These examples can hardly be resolved into any thing else than the subjunctive mood.

NOTES TO RULE XIV.

NOTE I.—When the nominative is a relative pronoun, the verb must agree with it in person and number, according to the pronoun’s agreement with its true antecedent or antecedents. Example of error: “The second book [of the Æneid] is one of the greatest masterpieces that ever was executed by any hand.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 439. Here the true antecedent is masterpieces, and not the word one; but was executed is singular, and “by any hand” implies but one agent. Either say, “It is one of the greatest masterpieces that ever were executed,” or else, “It is the greatest masterpiece that ever was executed by any hand.” But these assertions differ much in their import.

NOTE II.—“The adjuncts of the nominative do not control its agreement with the verb; as, Six months’ interest was due. The progress of his forces was impeded.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 131. “The ship, with all her furniture, was destroyed.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 150. “All appearances of modesty are favourable and prepossessing.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 308. “The power of relishing natural enjoyments is soon gone.”—Fuller, on the Gospel, p. 135. “I, your master, command you (not commands)”—Latham’s Hand-Book, p. 330.*

---

* Dr. Latham, conceiving that, of words in apposition, the first must always be the leading one and control the verb, gives to his example an other form thus: “Your master, I, commands you (not command).”—ib. But this I take to be bad English. It is the opinion of many grammarians, perhaps of most, that nouns, which are ordinarily of the third person, may be changed in person, by being set in apposition with a pronoun of the first or second. But even if terms so used do not assimilate in person, the first cannot be subjected to the third, as above. It must have the preference, and ought to have the first place. The following study-bred example of the Doctor’s, is also awkward and ungrammatical: “I, your master, who commands you to make haste, am in a hurry.”—Hand-Book, p. 334.

NOTE III.—Any phrase, sentence, mere word, or other sign, taken as one whole, and made the subject of an assertion, requires a verb in the third person singular; as, “To lie is base.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 154. “When, to read and write, was of itself an honorary distinction.”—Hazlitt’s Lect., p. 40. “To admit a God and then refuse to worship him, is a modern and inconsistent practice.”—Fuller, on the Gospel, p. 30. “We is a personal pronoun.”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 227. “Th has two sounds.”—Ib., p. 161. “The ‘s is annexed to each.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 89. “Ld. stands for lord.”—Webster’s American Dict., 8vo.

NOTE IV.—The pronominal adjectives, each, one,* either, and neither, are always in the third person singular; and, when they are the leading words in their clauses, they require verbs and pronouns to agree with them accordingly: as, “Each of you is entitled to his share.”—“Let no one deceive himself.”

NOTE V.—A neuter or a passive verb between two nominatives should be made to agree with that which precedes it;† as, “Words are wind:” except when the terms are transposed, and the proper subject is put after the verb by question or hyperbaton; as, “His pavilion were dark waters and thick clouds of the sky.”—Bible. “Who art thou?”—Ib. “The wages of sin is death.”—Ib. Murray, Comly, and others. But, of this last example, Churchill says, “Wages are the subject, of which it is affirmed, that they are death.”—New Gram., p. 314. If so, is ought to be are; unless Dr. Webster is right, who imagines wages to be singular, and cites this example to prove it so. See his Improved Gram., p. 21.

---

* Professor Fowler says, “One when contrasted with other, sometimes represents plural nouns; as, ‘The reason why the one are ordinarily taken for real qualities, and the other for bare powers, seems to be.’—LOCKE.”, Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, p. 242. This doctrine is, I think, erroneous; and the example, too, is defective. For, if one may be plural, we have no distinctive definition or notion of either number. “One” and “other” are not here to be regarded as the leading words in their clauses; they are mere adjectives, each referring to the collective noun class or species, understood, which should have been expressed after the former. See Etym., Obs. 19, p. 276.

† Dr. Priestley says, “It is a rule, I believe, in all grammars, that when a verb comes between two nouns, either of which may be understood as the subject of the affirmation, that it may agree with either of them; but some regard must be had to that which is more naturally the subject of it, as also to that which stands next to the verb; for if no regard be paid to these circumstances, the construction will be harsh: [as,] Minced pies was regarded as a profane and superstitious viand by the sectaries. Hume’s Hist. A great cause of the low state of industry were the restraints put upon it. Ib. By this term was understood, such persons as invented, or drew up rules for themselves and the world.”—English Gram. with Notes, p. 189. The Doctor evidently supposed all these examples to be bad English, or at least harsh in their construction. And the first two unquestionably are so; while the last, whether right or wrong, has nothing at all to do with his rule: it has but one nominative, and that appears to be part of a definition, and not the true subject of the verb. Nor, indeed, is the first any more relevant; because Hume’s “viand” cannot possibly be taken “as the subject of the affirmation.” Lindley Murray, who literally copies Priestley’s note, (all but the first line and the last,) rejects these two examples, substituting for the former, “His meat was locusts and wild honey,” and for the latter, “The wages of sin is death.” He very evidently supposes all three of his examples to be good English. In this, according to Churchill, he is at fault in two instances out of the three; and still more so, in regard to the note, or rule, itself. In stead of being “a rule in all grammars,” it is (so far as I know) found only in these authors, and such as have implicitly copied it from Murray. Among these last, are Alger, Ingersoll, R. C. Smith, Fisk, and Merchant. Churchill, who cites it only as Murray’s, and yet expends two pages of criticism upon it, very justly says: “To make that the nominative case, [or subject of the affirmation,] which happens to stand nearest to the verb, appears to me to be on a par with the blunder pointed out in note 204th;” [that is, of making the verb agree with an objective case which happens to stand nearer to it, than its subject, or nominative.]—Churchill’s New Gram., p. 313.

NOTE VI.—When the verb cannot well be made singular, the nominative should be made plural, that they may agree: or, if the verb cannot be plural, let the nominative be singular. Example of error: “For every one of them know their several duties.”—Hope of Israel, p. 72. Say, “For all of them know their several duties.”

NOTE VII.—When the verb has different forms, that form should be adopted, which is the most consistent with present and reputable usage in the style employed: thus, to say familiarly, “The clock hath stricken,”—“Thou laughedst and talkedst, when thou oughtest to have been silent;”—“He readeth and writeth, but he doth not cipher,” would be no better, than to use don’t, won’t, can’t, shan’t, and didn’t, in preaching.

NOTE VIII.—Every finite verb not in the imperative mood, should have a separate nominative expressed; as, “I came, I saw, I conquered,” except when the verb is repeated for the sake of emphasis, or connected to an other in the same construction, or put after but or than; as, “Not an eminent orator has lived but is an example of it.”—Ware. “Where more is meant than meets the ear.”—Milton’s Allegro. (See Obs. 5th and Obs. 18th above.)

“They bud, blow, wither, fall, and die.”—Watts.

“That evermore his teeth they chatter,
Chatter, chatter, chatter still.”—Wordsworth.

NOTE IX.—A future contingency is best expressed by a verb in the subjunctive present; and a mere supposition, with indefinite time, by a verb in the subjunctive imperfect; but a conditional circumstance assumed as a fact, requires the indicative mood:* as, “If thou forsake him, he will cast thee off forever.”—Bible. “If it were not so, I would have told you.”—Ib. “If thou went, nothing would be gained.”—“Though he is poor, he is contented.”—“Though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor.”—2 Cor., viii, 9.

NOTE X.—In general, every such use or extension of the subjunctive mood, as the reader will be likely to mistake for a discord between the verb and its nominative, ought to be avoided as an impropriety: as, “We are not sensible of disproportion, till the difference between the quantities compared become the most striking circumstance.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 341. Say rather, “becomes,” which is indicative. “Till the general preference of certain forms have been declared.”—Priestley’s Gram., Pref., p. xvii. Say, “has been declared,” for “preference” is here the nominative, and Dr. Priestley himself recognizes no other subjunctive tenses than the present and the imperfect; as, “If thou love, If thou loved.”—Ib., p. 16.

---

* “If the excellence of Dryden’s works was lessened by his indigence, their number was increased.”—Dr. Johnson. This is an example of the proper and necessary use of the indicative mood after an if, the matter of the condition being regarded as a fact. But Dr. Webster, who prefers the indicative too often, has the following note upon it: “If Johnson had followed the common grammars, or even his own, which is prefixed to his Dictionary, he would have written were—‘If the excellence of Dryden’s works were lessened’—Fortunately this great man, led by usage rather than by books, wrote correct English, instead of grammar.”—Philosophical Gram., p. 238. Now this is as absurd, as it is characteristic of the grammar from which it is taken. Each form is right sometimes, and neither can be used for the other, without error.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XIV.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—VERB AFTER THE NOMINATIVE.

“Before you left Sicily, you was reconciled to Verres.”—Duncan’s Cicero, p. 19.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the passive verb was reconciled is of the singular number, and does not agree with its nominative you, which is of the second person plural. But, according to Rule 14th, “Every finite verb must agree with its subject, or nominative, in person and number.” Therefore, was reconciled should be were reconciled; thus, “Before you left Sicily, you were reconciled to Verres.”]

“Knowing that you was my old master’s good friend.”—Spect., No. 517. “When the judge dare not act, where is the loser’s remedy?”—Webster’s Essays, p. 131. “Which extends it no farther than the variation of the verb extend.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, Vol. i, p. 211. “They presently dry without hurt, as myself hath often proved.”—Roger Williams. “Whose goings forth hath been from of old, from everlasting.”—Keith’s Evidences. “You was paid to fight against Alexander, not to rail at him.”—Porter’s Analysis, p. 70. “Where more than one part of speech is almost always concerned.”—Churchill’s Gram., Pref., p. viii. “Nothing less than murders, rapines, and conflagrations, employ their thoughts.”—Duncan’s Cicero, p. 175. “I wondered where you was, my dear.”—Lloyd’s Poems, p. 185. “When thou most sweetly sings.”—Drummond of Hawthornden. “Who dare, at the present day, avow himself equal to the task?”—Music of Nature, p. 11. “Every body are very kind to her, and not discourteous to me.”—Byron’s Letters. “As to what thou says respecting the diversity of opinions.”—The Friend, Vol. ix, p. 45. “Thy nature, immortality, who knowest?”—Everest’s Gram., p. 38. “The natural distinction of sex in animals gives rise to what, in grammar, is called genders.”—Ib., p. 51. “Some pains has likewise been taken.”—Scott’s Pref. to Bible. “And many a steed in his stables were seen.”—Penwarne’s Poems, p. 108. “They was forced to eat what never was esteemed food.”—Josephus’s Jewish War, B. i, Ch. i, §7. “This that yourself hath spoken, I desire that they may take their oaths upon.”—Hutchinson’s Mass., ii, 435. “By men whose experience best qualify them to judge.”—Committee on Literature, N. Y. Legislature. “He dare venture to kill and destroy several other kinds of fish.”—Johnson’s Dict., w. Perch. “If a gudgeon meet a roach, He dare not venture to approach.”—SWIFT: Ib., w. Roach. “Which thou endeavours to establish unto thyself.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 164. “But they pray together much oftener than thou insinuates.”—Ib., i, 215. “Of people of all denominations, over whom thou presideth.”—The Friend, Vol. v, p. 198. “I can produce ladies and gentlemen whose progress have been astonishing.”—Chazotte, on Teaching Lang., p. 62. “Which of these two kinds of vice are more criminal?”—Brown’s Estimate, ii, 115. “Every twenty-four hours affords to us the vicissitudes of day and night.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 103. “Every four years adds another day.”—Ib. “Every error I could find, Have my busy muse employed.”—Swift’s Poems, p. 335. “A studious scholar deserve the approbation of his teacher.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 226. “Perfect submission to the rules of a school indicate good breeding.”—Ib., p. 37. “A comparison in which more than two is concerned.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 114. “By the facilities which artificial language afford them.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 16. “Now thyself hath lost both lop and top.”—SPENSER: Joh. Dict., w. Lop. “Glad tidings is brought to the poor.”—Campbell’s Gospels: Luke, vii, 23. “Upon which, all that is pleasurable, or affecting in elocution, chiefly depend.”—Sheridan’s Elocution, p. 129. “No pains has been spared to render this work complete.”—Bullions, Lat. Gram., Pref., p. iv. “The United States contains more than a twentieth part of the land of this globe.”—DE WITT CLINTON: Cobb’s N.

Amer. Reader, p. 173. "I am mindful that myself is (or am) strong."—Fowler's E. Gram., § 500. "Myself is (not am) weak; thyself is (not art) weak."—Ib., §479.

"How pale each worshipful and reverend guest Rise from a clergy or a city feast!"—Pope, Sat. ii, l. 75.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—VERB BEFORE THE NOMINATIVE.

"Where was you born? In London."—Buchanan's Syntax, p. 133. "There is frequent occasions for commas."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 281. "There necessarily follows from thence, these plain and unquestionable consequences."—Priestley's Gram., p. 191. "And to this impression contribute the redoubled effort."—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 112. "Or if he was, was there no spiritual men then?"—Barclay's Works, iii, 86. "So by these two also is signified their contrary principles."—Ib., iii, 200. "In the motions made with the hands, consist the chief part of gesture in speaking."—Blair's Rhet., p. 336. "Dare he assume the name of a popular magistrate?"—Duncan's Cicero, p. 140. "There was no damages as in England, and so Scott lost his wager."—Byron. "In fact there exists such resemblances."—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 64. "To him giveth all the prophets witness."—Crewdson's Beacon, p. 79. "That there was so many witnesses and actors."—Addison's Evidences, p. 37. "How does this man's definitions stand affected?"—Collier's Antoninus, p. 136. "Whence comes all the powers and prerogatives of rational beings?"—Ib., p. 144. "Nor does the Scriptures cited by thee prove thy intent."—Barclay's Works, i, 155. "Nor do the Scripture cited by thee prove the contrary."—Ib., i, 211. "Why then cite thou a Scripture which is so plain and clear for it?"—Ib., i, 163. "But what saith the Scriptures as to respect of persons among Christians?"—Ib., i, 404. "But in the mind of man, while in the savage state, there seems to be hardly any ideas but what enter by the senses."—Robertson's America, i, 289. "What sounds have each of the vowels?"—Griscom's Questions. "Out of this has grown up aristocracies, monarchies, despotisms, tyrannies."—Brownson's Elwood, p. 222. "And there was taken up, of fragments that remained to them, twelve baskets."—Luke, ix, 17. "There seems to be but two general classes."—Day's Gram., p. 3. "Hence arises the six forms of expressing time."—Ib., p. 37. "There seems to be no other words required."—Chandler's Gram., p. 28. "If there is two, the second increment is the syllable next the last."—Bullions, Lat. Gram., 12th Ed., p. 281. "Hence arises the following advantages."—Id., Analyt. and Pract. Gram., 1849, p. 67. "There is no data by which it can be estimated."—J. C. Calhoun's Speech, March 4, 1850. "To this class belong the Chinese [language], in which we have nothing but naked roots."—Fowler's E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, p. 27. "There was several other grotesque figures that presented themselves."—Spect., No. 173. "In these consist that sovereign good which ancient sages so much extol."—Percival's Tales, ii, 221. "Here comes those I have done good to against my will."—Shak., Shrew. "Where there is more than one auxiliary."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 80.

"On me to cast those eyes where shine nobility."—SIDNEY: Joh. Dict.

"Here's half-pence in plenty, for one you'll have twenty."—Swift's Poems, p. 347.

"Ah, Jockey, ill advises thou, I wis,

To think of songs at such a time as this."—Churchill, p. 18.

UNDER NOTE I.—THE RELATIVE AND VERB.

"Thou who loves us, wilt protect us still."—Alex. Murray's Gram., p. 67. "To use that endearing language, Our Father, who is in heaven"—Bates's Doctrines, p. 103. "Resembling the passions that produceth these actions."—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 157.

“Except dwarf, grief, hoof, muff, &c. which takes s to make the plural.”—Ash’s Gram., p. 19. “As the cattle that goeth before me and the children be able to endure.”—Gen. xxxiii, 14 “Where is the man who dare affirm that such an action is mad?”—Werter. “The ninth book of Livy affords one of the most beautiful exemplifications of historical painting, that is any where to be met with.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 360. “In some studies too, that relate to taste and fine writing, which is our object,” &c.—Ib., p. 349. “Of those affecting situations, which makes man’s heart feel for man.”—Ib., p. 464. “We see very plainly, that it is neither Osmyn, nor Jane Shore, that speak.”—Ib., p. 468. “It should assume that briskness and ease, which is suited to the freedom of dialogue.”—Ib., p. 469. “Yet they grant, that none ought to be admitted into the ministry, but such as is truly pious.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 147. “This letter is one of the best that has been written about Lord Byron.”—Hunt’s Byron, p. 119. “Thus, besides what was sunk, the Athenians took above two hundred ships.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, i, 102. “To have made and declared such orders as was necessary.”—Hutchinson’s Hist., i, 470. “The idea of such a collection of men as make an army.”—Locke’s Essay, p. 217. “I’m not the first that have been wretched.”—Southern’s In. Ad., Act 2. “And the faint sparks of it, which is in the angels, are concealed from our view.”—Calvin’s Institutes, B. i, Ch. 11. “The subjects are of such a nature, as allow room for much diversity of taste and sentiment.”—Blair’s Rhet., Pref., p. 5. “It is in order to propose examples of such perfection, as are not to be found in the real examples of society.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 16. “I do not believe that he would amuse himself with such fooleries as has been attributed to him.”—Ib., p. 218. “That shepherd, who first taughtst the chosen seed.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 238. “With respect to the vehemence and warmth which is allowed in popular eloquence.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 261. “Ambition is one of those passions that is never to be satisfied.”—Home’s Art of Thinking, p. 36. “Thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel.”—2 Samuel, v, 2; and 1 Chron., xi, 2. “Art thou the man of God that camest from Judah?”—1 Kings, xiii, 14.

“How beauty is excell’d by manly grace
And wisdom, which alone is truly fair.”—Milton, B. iv, l. 490.

“What art thou, speak, that on designs unknown,
While others sleep, thus range the camp alone?”—Pope, Il., x, 90.

UNDER NOTE II.—NOMINATIVE WITH ADJUNCTS.

“The literal sense of the words are, that the action had been done.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of Lang., i, 65. “The rapidity of his movements were beyond example.”—Wells’s Hist., p. 161. “Murray’s Grammar, together with his Exercises and Key, have nearly superseded every thing else of the kind.”—EVAN’S REC.: Murray’s Gram., 8vo, ii, 305. “The mechanism of clocks and watches were totally unknown.”—HUME: Priestley’s Gram., p. 193. “The it, together with the verb to be, express states of being.”—Cobbett’s Eng. Gram., ¶ 190. “Hence it is, that the profuse variety of objects in some natural landscapes, neither breed confusion nor fatigue.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 266. “Such a clatter of sounds indicate rage and ferocity.”—Music of Nature, p. 195. “One of the fields make threescore square yards, and the other only fifty-five.”—Duncan’s Logic, p. 8. “The happy effects of this fable is worth attending to.”—Bailey’s Ovid, p. x. “Yet the glorious serenity of its parting rays still linger with us.”—Gould’s Advocate. “Enough of its form and force are retained to render them uneasy.”—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 261. “The works of nature, in this respect, is extremely regular.”—Dr. Pratt’s Werter. “No small addition of exotic and foreign words and phrases have been made by commerce.”—Bicknell’s Gram., Part ii, p. 10. “The dialect of some nouns are taken notice of in the notes.”—Milnes, Greek Gram., p. 255. “It has been said, that a discovery of the full resources of the arts, afford the means of debasement, or of perversion.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. xxvii. “By which means the Order of the Words are disturbed.”—Holmes’s Rhet., B. i, p. 57. “The twofold influence of these and the others require the asserter to be in the plural form.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 251. “And each of these afford employment.”—Percival’s Tales, Vol. ii, p. 175. “The pronunciation of the vowels are best explained under the rules relative to the consonants.”—Coar’s Gram., p. 7. “The judicial power of these courts extend to all cases in law and equity.”—Hall and Baker’s School Hist., p. 286. “One of you have stolen my money.”—Rational Humorist, p. 45. “Such redundancy of epithets, instead of pleasing, produce satiety and disgust.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 256. “It has been alleged, that a compliance with the rules of Rhetoric, tend to cramp the mind.”—Hiley’s Gram., 3d Ed., p. 187. “Each of these are presented to us in different relations”—Hendrick’s Gram., 1st Ed., p. 34. “The past tense of these verbs, should, would, might, could, are very indefinite with respect to time.”—Bullions, E. Gram., 2d Ed., p. 33; 5th Ed., p. 31. “The power of the words, which are said to govern this mood, are distinctly understood.”—Chandler’s Gram., Ed. of 1821, p. 33.

“And now, at length, the fated term of years
The world’s desire have brought, and lo! the God appears.”
—Dr. Lowth, on “the Genealogy of Christ.”

“Variety of Numbers still belong
To the soft Melody of Ode or Song.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. 170.

UNDER NOTE III.—COMPOSITE OR CONVERTED SUBJECTS.

“Many are the works of human industry, which to begin and finish are hardly granted to the same man.”—Johnson, Adv. to Dict. “To lay down rules for these are as inefficacious.”—Dr. Pratt’s Werter, p. 19. “To profess regard, and to act differently, discover a base mind.”—Murray’s Key, ii, p. 206. See also Bullions’s E. Gram., 82 and 112; Lennie’s, 58. “To magnify to the height of wonder things great, new, and admirable, extremely please the mind of man.”—Fisher’s Gram., p. 152. “In this passage, according as are used in a manner which is very common.”—Webster’s Philosophical Gram., p. 183. “A cause de are called a preposition; a cause que, a conjunction.”—DR. WEBSTER: Knickerbocker, 1836. “To these are given to speak in the name of the Lord.”—The Friend, vii, 256. “While wheat has no plural, oats have seldom any singular.”—Cobbett’s E. Gram. ¶ 41. “He cannot assert that ll are inserted in fullness to denote the sound of u.”—Cobb’s Review of Webster, p. 11. “ch have the power of k.”—Gould’s Adam’s Gram., p. 2. “ti, before a vowel, and unaccented, have the sound of si or ci.”—Ibid. “In words derived from the French, as chagrin, chicanery, and chaise, ch are sounded like sh.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 10. “But in the word schism, schismatic, &c., the ch are silent.”—Ibid. “Ph are always sounded like f, at the beginning of words.”—Bucke’s Gram. “Ph have the sound of f as in philosophy.”—Webster’s El. Spelling-Book, p. 11. “Sh have one sound only as in shall.”—Ib. “Th have two sounds.”—Ib. “Sc have the sound of sk, before a, o, u, and r.”—Ib. “Aw, have the sound of a in hall.”—Bolles’s Spelling-Book, p. vi. “Ew, sound like u.”—Ib. “Ow, when both sounded, have the sound of ou.”—Ib. “Ui, when both pronounced in one syllable sound like wi in languid.”—Ib.

“Ui three several Sorts of Sound express,
As Guile, rebuild, Bruise and Recruit confess.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. 34.

UNDER NOTE IV.—EACH, ONE, EITHER, AND NEITHER.

“When each of the letters which compose this word, have been learned.”—Dr. Weeks, on Orthog., p. 22. “As neither of us deny that both Homer and Virgil have great beauties.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 21. “Yet neither of them are remarkable for precision.”—Ib., p. 95. “How far each of the three great epic poets have distinguished themselves.”—Ib., p. 427. “Each of these produce a separate agreeable sensation.”—Ib., p. 48. “On the Lord’s day every one of us Christians keep the sabbath.”—Tr. of Irenæus. “And each of them bear the image of purity and holiness.”—Hope of Israel, p. 81. “Were either of these meetings ever acknowledged or recognized?”—Foster’s Report, i, 96. “Whilst neither of these letters exist in the Eugubian inscription.”—Knight, on Greek Alph., p. 122. “And neither of them are properly termed indefinite.”—Wilson’s Essay on Gram., p. 88. “As likewise of the several subjects, which have in effect each their verb.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 120. “Sometimes when the word ends in s, neither of the signs are used.”—Alex. Murray’s Gram., p. 21. “And as neither of these manners offend the ear.”—Walker’s Dict., Pref., p. 5. “Neither of these two Tenses are confined to this signification only.”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 339. “But neither of these circumstances are intended here.”—Tooke’s Diversions, ii, 237. “So that all are indebted to each, and each are dependent upon all.”—Am. Bible Society’s Rep., 1838, p. 89. “And yet neither of them express any more action in this case than they did in the other.”—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 201. “Each of these expressions denote action.”—Hallock’s Gram., p. 74. “Neither of these moods seem to be defined by distinct boundaries.”—Butler’s Practical Gram., p. 66. “Neither of these solutions are correct.”—Bullions, Lat. Gram., p. 236. “Neither bear any sign of case at all.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, §217.

“Each in their turn like Banquo’s monarchs stalk.”—Byron.

“And tell what each of them by th’other lose.”—Shak., Cori., iii, 2.

UNDER NOTE V.—VERB BETWEEN TWO NOMINATIVES.

“The quarrels of lovers is a renewal of love.”—Adam’s Lat. Gram., p. 156; Alexander’s, 49; Gould’s, 159; Bullions’s, 206. “Two dots, one placed above the other, is called Sheva.”—Dr. Wilson’s Heb. Gram., p. 43. “A few centuries, more or less, is a matter of small consequence.”—Ib. p. 31. “Pictures were the first step towards the art of writing. Hieroglyphicks was the second step.”—Parker’s English Composition, p. 27. “The comeliness of youth are modesty and frankness; of age, condescension and dignity.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 166. “Merit and good works is the end of man’s motion.”—Lord Bacon. “Divers philosophers hold that the lips is parcel of the mind.”—Shakspeare. “The clothing of the natives were the skins of wild beasts.”—Indian Wars, p. 92. “Prepossessions in favor of our nativ town, is not a matter of surprise.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 217. “Two shillings and six pence is half a crown, but not a half crown.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 150; Bicknell’s, ii, 53. “Two vowels, pronounced by a single impulse of the voice, and uniting in one sound, is called a diphthong.”—Cooper’s Pl. and Pr. Gram., p. 1. “Two or more sentences united together is called a Compound Sentence.”—P. E. Day’s District School Gram., p. 10. “Two or more words rightly put together, but not completing an entire proposition, is called a Phrase.”—Ibid. “But the common Number of Times are five.”—The British Grammar, p. 122. “Technical terms, injudiciously introduced, is another source of darkness in composition.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 107. “The United States is the great middle division of North America.”—Morse’s Geog., p. 44. “A great cause of the low state of industry were the restraints put upon it.”—HUME: Murray’s Gram., p. 145; Ingersoll’s, 172; Sanborn’s, 192; Smith’s, 123; and others. “Here two tall ships becomes the victor’s prey.”—

Rowe's Lucan, B. ii, l. 1098. "The expenses incident to an outfit is surely no object."—The Friend, Vol. iii., p. 200.

"Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep,
Was all that did their silly thoughts so busy keep."—Milton.

UNDER NOTE VI.—CHANGE THE NOMINATIVE.

"Much pains has been taken to explain all the kinds of words."—Infant School Gram. p. 128. "Not less [time] than three years are spent in attaining this faculty."—Music of Nature, p. 28. "Where this night are met in state Many a friend to gratulate His wish'd presence."—Milton's Comus. l. 948. "Peace! my darling, here's no danger, Here's no oxen near thy bed."—Watts. "But every one of these are mere conjectures, and some of them very unhappy ones."—Coleridge's Introduction, p. 61. "The old theorists, calling the Interrogatives and Repliers, adverbs, is only a part of their regular system of naming words."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 374. "Where a series of sentences occur, place them in the order in which the facts occur."—Ib., p. 264. "And that the whole in conjunction make a regular chain of causes and effects."—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 275. "The origin of the Grecian, and Roman republics, though equally involved in the obscurities and uncertainties of fabulous events, present one remarkable distinction."—Adam's Rhet., i, 95. "In these respects, mankind is left by nature an unformed, unfinished creature."—Butler's Analogy, p. 144. "The scripture are the oracles of God himself."—HOOKER: Joh. Dict., w. Oracle. "And at our gates are all manner of pleasant fruits."—Solomon's Song, vii, 13. "The preterit of pluck, look, and toss are, in speech, pronounced pluckt, lookt, tosst."—Fowler's E. Gram., 1850, §68.

"Severe the doom that length of days impose,
To stand sad witness of unnumber'd woes!"—Melmoth.

UNDER NOTE VII.—ADAPT FORM TO STYLE.

1. Forms not proper for the Common or Familiar Style.

"Was it thou that buildedst that house?"—Inst., p. 151. "That boy writeth very elegantly."—Ib. "Couldst not thou write without blotting thy book?"—Ib. "Thinkest thou not it will rain to-day?"—Ib. "Doth not your cousin intend to visit you?"—Ib. "That boy hath torn my book."—Ib. "Was it thou that spreadest the hay?"—Ib. "Was it James, or thou, that didst let him in?"—Ib. "He dareth not say a word."—Ib. "Thou stoodest in my way and hinderedst me."—Ib.

"Whom see I?—Whom seest thou now?—Whom sees he?—Whom lovest thou most?—What dost thou to-day?—What person seest thou teaching that boy?—He hath two new knives.—Which road takest thou?—What child teaches he?"—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 66. "Thou, who makest my shoes, sellest many more."—Ib., p. 67.

"The English language hath been much cultivated during the last two hundred years. It hath been considerably polished and refined."—Lowth's Gram., Pref., p. iii. "This stile is ostentatious, and doth not suit grave writing."—Priestley's Gram., p. 82. "But custom hath now appropriated who to persons, and which to things."—Ib., p. 97. "The indicative mood sheweth or declareth; as, Ego amo, I love: or else asketh a question; as, Amas tu? Dost thou love?"—Paul's Accidence, Ed. of 1793, p. 16. "Though thou canst not do much for the cause, thou mayst and shouldst do something.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 143. “The support of so many of his relations, was a heavy task; but thou knowest he paid it cheerfully.”—Murray’s Key, R. 1, p. 180. “It may, and often doth, come short of it.”—Campbell’s Rhetoric, p. 160.

“’Twas thou, who, while thou seem’dst to chide,
To give me all thy pittance tried.”—Mitford’s Blanch, p. 78.

2. Forms not proper for the Solemn or Biblical Style.

“The Lord has prepaid his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom rules over all.”—See Key. “Thou answer’d them, O Lord our God: thou was a God that forgave them, though thou took vengeance of their inventions.”—See Key. “Then thou spoke in vision to thy Holy One, and said, I have laid help upon one that is mighty.”—See Key. “So then, it is not of him that wills, nor of him that rules, but of God that shows mercy; who dispenses his blessings, whether temporal or spiritual, as seems good in his sight.”—See Key.

“Thou, the mean while, was blending with my thought;
Yea, with my life, and life’s own secret joy.”—Coleridge.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—EXPRESS THE NOMINATIVE.

“Who is here so base, that would be a bondman?”—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 249. “Who is here so rude, that would not be a Roman?”—Ib. “There is not a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 300. “In order to adjust them so, as shall consist equally with the perspicuity and the strength of the period.”—Ib., p. 324; Blair’s Rhet., 118. “But, sometimes, there is a verb comest in.”—Cobbett’s English Gram., ¶248. “Mr. Prince has a genius would prompt him to better things.”—Spectator, No. 466. “It is this removes that impenetrable mist.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 362. “By the praise is given him for his courage.”—Locke, on Education, p. 214. “There is no man would be more welcome here.”—Steele, Spect., No. 544. “Between an antecedent and a consequent, or what goes before, and immediately follows.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 141. “And as connected with what goes before and follows.”—Ib., p. 354. “There is no man doth a wrong for the wrong’s sake.”—Lord Bacon. “All the various miseries of life, which people bring upon themselves by negligence and folly, and might have been avoided by proper care, are instances of this.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 108. “Ancient philosophers have taught many things in favour of morality, so far at least as respect justice and goodness towards our fellow-creatures.”—Gospel its own Witness, p. 56. “Indeed, if there be any such, have been, or appear to be of us, as suppose, there is not a wise man among us all, nor an honest man, that is able to judge betwixt his brethren; we shall not covet to meddle in their matter.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 504. “There were that drew back; there were that made shipwreck of faith: yea, there were that brought in damnable heresies.”—Ib., i, 466. “The nature of the cause rendered this plan altogether proper, and in similar situations is fit to be imitated.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 274. “This is an idiom to which our language is strongly inclined, and was formerly very prevalent.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 150. “His roots are wrapped about the heap, and seeth the place of stones.”—Job, viii, 17.

“New York, Fifthmonth 3d, 1823.

“Dear friend, Am sorry to hear of thy loss; but hope it may be retrieved. Should be happy to render thee any assistance in my power. Shall call to see thee to-morrow morning. Accept assurances of my regard. A. B.”

“New York, May 3d, P. M., 1823.

“Dear Sir, Have just received the kind note favoured me with this morning; and cannot forbear to express my gratitude to you. On further information, find have not lost so much as at first supposed; and believe shall still be able to meet all my engagements. Should, however, be happy to see you. Accept, dear sir, my most cordial thanks. C. D.”

—See Brown's Institutes, p. 151.

“Will martial flames forever fire thy mind,
And never, never be to Heaven resign'd?”—Pope, Odys., xii, 145.

UNDER NOTE IX.—APPLICATION OF MOODS.

First Clause of the Note.—For the Subjunctive Present.

“He will not be pardoned, unless he repents.”—Brown's Institutes, p. 191.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the verb repents, which is here used to express a future contingency, is in the indicative mood. But, according to the first clause of Note 9th to Rule 14th, “A future contingency is best expressed by a verb in the subjunctive present.” Therefore, repents should be repent; thus, “He will not be pardoned, unless he repent.”]

“If thou findest any kernelwort in this marshy meadow, bring it to me.”—Neef's Method of Teaching, p. 258. “If thou leavest the room, do not forget to shut that drawer.”—Ib., p. 246. “If thou graspest it stoutly, thou wilt not be hurt.”—Ib., p. 196. “On condition that he comes, I will consent to stay.”—Murray's Exerc., p. 74. “If he is but discreet, he will succeed.”—Inst., p. 191. “Take heed that thou speakest not to Jacob.”—Ib. “If thou castest me off, I shall be miserable.”—Ib. “Send them to me, if thou pleasest.”—Ib. “Watch the door of thy lips, lest thou utterest folly.”—Ib. “Though a liar speaks the truth, he will hardly be believed.”—Common School Manual, ii, 124. “I will go unless I should be ill.”—Murray's Gram., p. 300. “If the word or words understood are supplied, the true construction will be apparent.”—Murray's Exercises in Parsing, p. 21. “Unless thou shalt see the propriety of the measure, we shall not desire thy support.”—Murray's Key, p. 209. “Unless thou shouldst make a timely retreat, the danger will be unavoidable.”—Ib., p. 209. “We may live happily, though our possessions are small.”—Ib., p. 202. “If they are carefully studied, they will enable the student to parse all the exercises.”—Ib., Note, p. 165. “If the accent is fairly preserved on the proper syllable, this drawling sound will never be heard.”—Murray's Gram., p. 242. “One phrase may, in point of sense, be equivalent to another, though its grammatical nature is essentially different.”—Ib., p. 108. “If any man obeyeth not our word by this epistle, note that man.”—Dr. Webster's Bible. “Thy skill will be the greater, if thou hittest it.”—Putnam's Analytical Reader, p. 204. “Thy skill will be the greater if thou hit'st it.”—Cobb's N. A. Reader, p. 321. “We shall overtake him though he should run.”—Priestley's Gram., p. 113; Murray's, 207; Smith's, 173. “We shall be disgusted if he gives us too much.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 388.

“What is't to thee, if he neglect thy urn,
Or without spices lets thy body burn?”—DRYDEN: Joh. Dict., w. What.

Second Clause of Note IX.—For the Subjunctive Imperfect.

“And so would I, if I was he.”—Brown’s Institutes, p. 191.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the verb was, which is here used to express a mere supposition, with indefinite time, is in the indicative mood. But, according to the second clause of Note 9th to Rule 14th, “A mere supposition, with indefinite time, is best expressed by a verb in the subjunctive imperfect.” Therefore, was should be were; thus, “And so would I, if I were he.”]

“If I was a Greek, I should resist Turkish despotism.”—Cardell’s Elements of Gram., p. 80. “If he was to go, he would attend to your business.”—Ib., p. 81. “If thou feltest as I do, we should soon decide.”—Inst., p. 191. “Though thou sheddest thy blood in the cause, it would but prove thee sincerely a fool.”—Ib. “If thou lovedst him, there would be more evidence of it.”—Ib. “If thou couldst convince him, he would not act accordingly.”—Murray’s Key, p. 209. “If there was no liberty, there would be no real crime.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 118. “If the house was burnt down, the case would be the same.”—Foster’s Report, i, 89. “As if the mind was not always in action, when it prefers any thing!”—West, on Agency, p. 38. “Suppose I was to say, ‘Light is a body.’”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 78. “If either oxygen or azote was omitted, life would be destroyed.”—Gurney’s Evidences, p. 155. “The verb dare is sometimes used as if it was an auxiliary.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 132. “A certain lady, whom I could name, if it was necessary.”—Spectator, No. 536. “If the e was dropped, c and g would assume their hard sounds.”—Buchanan’s Syntax, p. 10. “He would no more comprehend it, than if it was the speech of a Hottentot.”—Neefs Sketch, p. 112. “If thou knewest the gift of God,” &c.—John, iv, 10. “I wish I was at home.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 260. “Fact alone does not constitute right; if it does, general warrants were lawful.”—Junius, Let. xliv, p. 205. “Thou look’st upon thy boy as though thou guessest it.”—Putnam’s Analytical Reader, p. 202. “Thou look’st upon thy boy as though thou guessedst it.”—Cobb’s N. A. Reader, p. 320. “He fought as if he had contended for life.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 92. “He fought as if he had been contending for his life.”—Ib., 92.

“The dewdrop glistens on thy leaf,
As if thou seem’st to shed a tear;
As if thou knew’st my tale of grief,
Felt all my sufferings severe.”—Alex. Letham.

Last Clause of Note IX.—For the Indicative Mood.

“If he know the way, he does not need a guide.”—Brown’s Institutes, p. 191.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the verb know, which is used to express a conditional circumstance assumed as a fact, is in the subjunctive mood. But, according to the last clause of Note 9th to Rule 14th, “A conditional circumstance assumed as a fact, requires the indicative mood.” Therefore, know should be knows; thus, “If he knows the way, he does not need a guide.”]

“And if there be no difference, one of them must be superfluous, and ought to be rejected.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 149. “I cannot say that I admire this construction, though it be much used.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 172. “We are disappointed, if the verb do not immediately follow it.”—Ib., p. 177. “If it were they who acted so ungratefully, they are doubly in fault.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 223. “If art become apparent, it disgusts the reader.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 80. “Though perspicuity be more properly a rhetorical than a grammatical quality, I thought it better to include it in this book.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 238. “Although the efficient cause be obscure, the final cause of those sensations lies open.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 29. “Although the barrenness of language, and the want of words be doubtless one cause of the invention of tropes.”—Ib., p. 135. “Though it enforce not its instructions, yet it furnishes us with a greater variety.”—Ib., p. 353. “In other cases, though the idea be one, the words remain quite separate”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 140. “Though the Form of our language be more simple, and has that peculiar Beauty.”—Buchanan’s Syntax, p. v. “Human works are of no significancy till they be completed.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 245. “Our disgust lessens gradually till it vanish altogether.”—Ib., i, 338. “And our relish improves by use, till it arrive at perfection.”—Ib., i, 338. “So long as he keep himself in his own proper element.”—COKE: ib., i, 233. “Whether this translation were ever published or not I am wholly ignorant.”—Sale’s Koran, i, 13. “It is false to affirm, ‘As it is day, it is light,’ unless it actually be day.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 246. “But we may at midnight affirm, ‘If it be day, it is light.’”—Ibid. “If the Bible be true, it is a volume of unspeakable interest.”—Dickinson. “Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered.”—Heb., v, 8. “If David then call him Lord, how is he his son?”—Matt., xxii, 45.

“Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill Appear in writing or in judging ill.”—Pope, Ess. on Crit.

UNDER NOTE X.—FALSE SUBJUNCTIVES.

“If a man have built a house, the house is his.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 286.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the verb have built, which extends the subjunctive mood into the perfect tense, has the appearance of disagreeing with its nominative man. But, according to Note 10th to Rule 14th, “Every such use or extension of the subjunctive mood, as the reader will be likely to mistake for a discord between the verb and its nominative, ought to be avoided as an impropriety.” Therefore, have built should be has built; thus, “If a man has built a house, the house is his.”]

“If God have required them of him, as is the fact, he has time.”—Ib., p. 351. “Unless a previous understanding to the contrary have been had with the Principal.”—Berrian’s Circular, p. 5. “O if thou have Hid them in some flowery cave.”—Milton’s Comus, l. 239. “O if Jove’s will Have linked that amorous power to thy soft lay.”—Milton, Sonnet 1. “SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD: If thou love, If thou loved, If thou have loved, If thou had loved, If thou shall or will love, If thou shall or will have loved.”—L. Murray’s Gram., 2d Ed., p. 71; Cooper’s Murray, 58; D. Adams’s Gram., 48; and others. “Till religion, the pilot of the soul, have lent thee her unfathomable coil.”—Tupper’s Thoughts, p. 170. “Whether nature or art contribute most to form an orator, is a trifling inquiry.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 338. “Year after year steals something from us; till the decaying fabric totter of itself, and crumble at length into dust.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 225. “If spiritual pride have not entirely vanquished humility.”—West’s Letters, p. 184. “Whether he have gored a son, or have gored a daughter.”—Exodus, xxi, 31. “It is doubtful whether the object introduced by way of simile, relate to what goes before, or to what follows.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 45.

“And bridle in thy headlong wave,
Till thou our summons answer’d have.”—Milt., Comus, l. 887.

RULE XV.—FINITE VERBS.

When the nominative is a collective noun conveying the idea of plurality, the Verb must agree with it in the plural number: as, “The council were divided.”—“The college of cardinals are the electors of the pope.”—Murray’s Key, p. 176. “Quintus Curtius relates, that a number of them were drowned in the river Lycus.”—Home’s Art of Thinking, p. 125.

“Yon host come learn’d in academic rules.”—Rowe’s Lucan, vii, 401.

“While heaven’s high host on hallelujahs live.”—Young’s N. Th., iv, 378.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XV.

OBS. 1.—To this rule there are no exceptions; because, the collective noun being a name which even in the singular number “signifies many,” the verb which agrees with it, can never properly be singular, unless the collection be taken literally as one aggregate, and not as “conveying the idea of plurality.” Thus, the collective noun singular being in general susceptible of two senses, and consequently admitting two modes of concord, the form of the verb, whether singular or plural, becomes the principal index to the particular sense in which the nominative is taken. After such a noun, we can use either a singular verb, agreeing with it literally, strictly, formally, according to Rule 14th; as, “The whole number WAS two thousand and six hundred;” or a plural one, agreeing with it figuratively, virtually, ideally, according to Rule 15th; as, “The whole number WERE two thousand and six hundred.”—2 Chron., xxvi, 12. So, when the collective noun is an antecedent, the relative having in itself no distinction of the numbers, its verb becomes the index to the sense of all three; as, “Wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that IS left.”—Isaiah, xxxvii, 4. “Wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that ARE left.”—2 Kings, xix, 4. Ordinarily the word remnant conveys no idea of plurality; but, it being here applied to persons, and having a meaning to which the mere singular neuter noun is not well adapted, the latter construction is preferable to the former. The Greek version varies more in the two places here cited; being plural in Isaiah, and singular in Kings. The Latin Vulgate, in both, is, “pro reliquiis quæ repertæ sunt,” i.e., “for the remains, or remnants, that are found.”

OBS. 2.—Dr. Adam’s rule is this: “A collective noun may be joined with a verb either of the singular or of the plural number; as, Multitudo stat, or stant; the multitude stands, or stand.”—Latin and English Gram. To this doctrine, Lowth, Murray, and others, add: “Yet not without regard to the import of the word, as conveying unity or plurality of idea.”—Lowth, p. 74; Murray, 152. If these latter authors mean, that collective nouns are permanently divided in import, so that some are invariably determined to the idea of unity, and others to that of plurality, they are wrong in principle; for, as Dr. Adam remarks, “A collective noun, when joined with a verb singular, expresses many considered as one whole; but when joined with a verb plural, it signifies many separately, or as individuals.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 154. And if this alone is what their addition means, it is entirely useless; and so, for all the purposes of parsing, is the singular half of the rule itself. Kirkham divides this rule into two, one for “unity of idea,” and the other for “plurality of idea,” shows how each is to be applied in parsing, according to his “systematick order,” and then, turning round with a gallant tilt at his own work, condemns both, as idle fabrications, which it were better to reject than to retain; alleging that, “The existence of such a thing as ‘unity or plurality of idea,’ as applicable to nouns of this class, is doubtful.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 59.* How then shall a plural verb or pronoun, after a collective noun, be parsed, seeing it does not agree with the noun by the ordinary rule of agreement? Will any one say, that every such construction is bad English? If this cannot be maintained, rules eleventh and fifteenth of this series are necessary. But when the noun conveys the idea of unity or takes the plural form, the verb or pronoun has no other than a literal agreement by the common rule; as,

“A priesthood, such as Baal’s was of old,
A people, such as never was till now.”—Cowper.

OBS. 3.—Of the construction of the verb and collective noun, a late British author gives the following account: “Collective nouns are substantives which signify many in the singular number. Collective nouns are of two sorts: 1. Those which cannot become plural like other substantives; as, nobility, mankind, &c. 2. Those which can be made plural by the usual rules for a substantive; as, ‘A multitude, multitudes; a crowd, crowds;’ &c. Substantives which imply plurality in the singular number, and consequently have no other plural, generally require a plural verb. They are cattle, cavalry, clergy, commonalty, gentry, laity, mankind, nobility, peasantry people, populace, public, rabble, &c. [;] as, ‘The public are informed.’ Collective nouns which form a regular plural, such as, number, numbers; multitude, multitudes; have, like all other substantives, a singular verb, when they are in the singular number; and a plural verb, when they are in the plural number; as, ‘A number of people is assembled; Numbers are assembled.’—‘The fleet was dispersed; a part of it was injured; the several parts are now collected.’”—Nixon’s Parser, p. 120. To this, his main text, the author appends a note, from which the following passages are extracted: “There are few persons acquainted with Grammar, who may not have noticed, in many authors as well as speakers, an irregularity in supposing collective nouns to have, at one time, a singular meaning, and consequently to require a singular verb; and, at an other time, to have a plural meaning, and therefore to require a plural verb. This irregularity appears to have arisen from the want of a clear idea of the nature of a collective noun. This defect the author has endeavoured to supply; and, upon his definition, he has founded the two rules above. It is allowed on all sides that, hitherto, no satisfactory rules have been produced to enable the pupil to ascertain, with any degree of certainty, when a collective noun should have a singular verb, and when a plural one. A rule that simply tells its examiner, that when a collective noun in the nominative case conveys the idea of unity, its verb should be singular; and when it implies plurality, its verb should be plural, is of very little value; for such a rule will prove the pupil’s being in the right, whether he should put the verb in the singular or the plural.”—Ibid.

OBS. 4.—The foregoing explanation has many faults; and whoever trusts to it, or to any thing like it, will certainly be very much misled. In the first place, it is remarkable that an author who could suspect in others “the want of a clear idea of the nature of a collective noun,” should have hoped to supply the defect by a definition so ambiguous and ill-written as is the one above. Secondly, his subdivision of this class of nouns into two sorts, is both baseless and nugatory; for that plurality which has reference to the individuals of an assemblage, has no manner of connexion or affinity with that which * Taking this allegation in one sense, the reader may see that Kirkham was not altogether wrong here; and that, had he condemned the solecisms adopted by himself and others, about “unity of idea” and “plurality of idea,” in stead of condemning the things intended to be spoken of, he might have made a discovery which would have set him wholly right. See a footnote on page 738, under the head of Absurdities.

---

refers to more than one such aggregate; nor is there any interference of the one with the other, or any ground at all for supposing that the absence of the latter is, has been, or ought to be, the occasion for adopting the former. Hence, thirdly, his two rules, (though, so far as they go, they seem not untrue in themselves,) by their limitation under this false division, exclude and deny the true construction of the verb with the greater part of our collective nouns. For, fourthly, the first of these rules rashly presumes that any collective noun which in the singular number implies a plurality of individuals, is consequently destitute of any other plural; and the second accordingly supposes that no such nouns as, council, committee, jury, meeting, society, assembly, court, college, company, army, host, band, retinue, train, multitude, number, part, half, portion, majority, minority, remainder, set, sort, kind, class, nation, tribe, family, race, and a hundred more, can ever be properly used with a plural verb, except when they assume the plural form. To prove the falsity of this supposition, is needless. And, finally, the objection which this author advances against the common rules, is very far from proving them useless, or not greatly preferable to his own. If they do not in every instance enable the student to ascertain with certainty which form of concord he ought to prefer, it is only because no rules can possibly tell a man precisely when he ought to entertain the idea of unity, and when that of plurality. In some instances, these ideas are unavoidably mixed or associated, so that it is of little or no consequence which form of the verb we prefer; as, “Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language.”—Gen., xi, 6.

“Well, if a king’s a lion, at the least

The people ARE a many-headed beast.”—Pope, Epist. i, l. 120.

OBS. 5.—Lindley Murray says, “On many occasions, where a noun of multitude is used, it is very difficult to decide, whether the verb should be in the singular, or in the plural number; and this difficulty has induced some grammarians to cut the knot at once, and to assert that every noun of multitude must always be considered as conveying the idea of unity.”—Octavo Gram., p. 153. What these occasions, or who these grammarians, are, I know not; but it is certain that the difficulty here imagined does not concern the application of such rules as require the verb and pronoun to conform to the sense intended; and, where there is no apparent impropriety in adopting either number, there is no occasion to raise a scruple as to which is right. To cut knots by dogmatism, and to tie them by sophistry, are employments equally vain. It cannot be denied that there are in every multitude both a unity and a plurality, one or the other of which must be preferred as the principle of concord for the verb or the pronoun, or for both. Nor is the number of nouns small, or their use unfrequent, which, according to our best authors, admit of either construction: though Kirkham assails and repudiates his own rules, because, “Their application is quite limited.”—Grammar in Familiar Lectures, p. 59.

OBS. 6.—Murray’s doctrine seems to be, not that collective nouns are generally susceptible of two senses in respect to number, but that some naturally convey the idea of unity, others, that of plurality, and a few, either of these senses. The last, which are probably ten times more numerous than all the rest, he somehow merges or forgets, so as to speak of two classes only: saying, “Some nouns of multitude certainly convey to the mind an idea of plurality, others, that of a whole as one thing, and others again, sometimes that of unity, and sometimes that of plurality. On this ground, it is warrantable, and consistent with the nature of things, to apply a plural verb and pronoun to the one class, and a singular verb and pronoun to the other. We shall immediately perceive the impropriety of the following constructions: The clergy has withdrawn itself from the temporal courts;’ ‘The assembly was divided in its opinion;’ &c.”—Octavo Gram., p. 153. The simple fact is, that clergy, assembly, and perhaps every other collective noun, may sometimes convey the idea of unity, and sometimes that of plurality; but an “opinion” or a voluntary “withdrawing” is a personal act or quality; wherefore it is here more consistent to adopt the plural sense and construction, in which alone we take the collection as individuals, or persons.

OBS. 7.—Although a uniformity of number is generally preferable to diversity, in the construction of words that refer to the same collective noun: and although many grammarians deny that any departure from such uniformity is allowable; yet, if the singular be put first, a plural pronoun may sometimes follow without obvious impropriety: as, “So Judah was carried away out of their land.”—2 Kings, xxv, 21. “Israel is reproved and threatened for their impiety and idolatry.”—Friends’ Bible, Hosea, x. “There is the enemy who wait to give us battle.”—Murray’s Introductory Reader, p. 36. When the idea of plurality predominates in the author’s mind, a plural verb is sometimes used before a collective noun that has the singular article an or a; as, “There are a sort of authors, who seem to take up with appearances.”—Addison. “Here are a number of facts or incidents leading to the end in view.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 296. “There are a great number of exceedingly good writers among the French.”—Maunder’s Gram., p. 11.

“There in the forum swarm a numerous train,
The subject of debate a townsman slain.”—Pope, Iliad, B. xviii, l. 578.

OBS. 8.—Collective nouns, when they are merely partitive of the plural, like the words sort and number above, are usually connected with a plural verb, even though they have a singular definitive; as, “And this sort of adverbs commonly admit of Comparison.”—Buchanan’s English Syntax, p. 64. Here, perhaps, it would be better to say, “Adverbs of this sort commonly admit of comparison.” “A part of the exports consist of raw silk.”—Webster’s Improved Gram., p. 100. This construction is censured by Murray, in his octavo Gram., p. 148; where we are told, that the verb should agree with the first noun only. Dr. Webster alludes to this circumstance, in improving his grammar, and admits that, “A part of the exports consists, seems to be more correct.”—Improved Gram., p. 100. Yet he retains his original text, and obviously thinks it a light thing, that, “in some cases,” his rules or examples “may not be vindicable.” (See Obs. 14th, 15th, and 16th, on Rule 14th, of this code.) It would, I think, be better to say, “The exports consist partly of raw silk.” Again: “A multitude of Latin words have, of late, been poured in upon us.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 94. Better, perhaps: “Latin words, in great multitude, have, of late, been poured in upon us.” So: “For the bulk of writers are very apt to confound them with each other.”—Ib., p. 97. Better: “For most writers are very apt to confound them with each other.” In the following example, (here cited as Kames has it, El. of Crit., ii, 247,) either the verb is, or the phrase, “There are some moveless men” might as well have been used:

“There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond.”—Shak.

OBS. 9.—Collections of things are much less frequently and less properly regarded as individuals, or under the idea of plurality, than collections of persons. This distinction may account for the difference of construction in the two clauses of the following example; though I rather doubt whether a plural verb ought to be used in the former: “The number of commissioned officers in the guards are to the marching regiments as one to eleven: the number of regiments given to the guards, compared with those given to the line, is about three to one.”—Junius, p. 147. Whenever the multitude is spoken of with reference to a personal act or quality, the verb ought, as I before suggested, to be in the plural number; as, “The public are informed.”—“The plaintiff’s counsel have assumed a difficult task.”—“The committee were instructed to prepare a remonstrance.” “The English nation declare they are grossly injured by their representatives.”—Junius, p. 147. “One particular class of men are permitted to call themselves the King’s friends.”—Id., p. 176. “The Ministry have realized the compendious ideas of Caligula.”—Id., p. 177. It is in accordance with this principle, that the following sentences have plural verbs and pronouns, though their definitives are singular, and perhaps ought to be singular: “So depraved were that people whom in their history we so much admire.”—HUME: M’Ilvaine’s Lect., p. 400. “Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold.”—Exodus, xxxii, 31. “This people thus gathered have not wanted those trials.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 460. The following examples, among others, are censured by Priestley, Murray, and the copyists of the latter, without sufficient discrimination, and for a reason which I think fallacious; namely, “because the ideas they represent seem not to be sufficiently divided in the mind:”—“The court of Rome were not without solicitude.”—Hume. “The house of Lords were so much influenced by these reasons.”—Id. See Priestley’s Gram., p. 188; Murray’s, 152; R. C. Smith’s, 129; Ingersoll’s, 248; and others.

OBS. 10.—In general, a collective noun, unless it be made plural in form, no more admits a plural adjective before it, than any other singular noun. Hence the impropriety of putting these or those before kind or sort; as, “These kind of knaves I know.”—Shakspeare. Hence, too, I infer that cattle is not a collective noun, as Nixon would have it to be, but an irregular plural which has no singular; because we can say these cattle or those cattle, but neither a bullock nor a herd is ever called a cattle, this cattle, or that cattle. And if “cavalry, clergy, commonalty,” &c., were like this word, they would all be plurals also, and not “substantives which imply plurality in the singular number, and consequently have no other plural.” Whence it appears, that the writer who most broadly charges others with not understanding the nature of a collective noun, has most of all misconceived it himself. If there are not many clergies, it is because the clergy is one body, with one Head, and not because it is in a particular sense many. And, since the forms of words are not necessarily confined to things that exist, who shall say that the plural word clergies, as I have just used it, is not good English?

OBS. 11.—If we say, “these people,” “these gentry,” “these folk,” we make people, gentry, and folk, not only irregular plurals, but plurals to which there are no correspondent singulars; but by these phrases, we must mean certain individuals, and not more than one people, gentry, or folk. But these names are sometimes collective nouns singular; and, as such, they may have verbs of either number, according to the sense; and may also form regular plurals, as peoples, and folks; though we seldom, if ever, speak of gentries; and folks is now often irregularly applied to persons, as if one person were a folk. So troops is sometimes irregularly, if not improperly, put for soldiers, as if a soldier were a troop; as, “While those gallant troops, by whom every hazardous, every laborious service is performed, are left to perish.”—Junius, p. 147. In Genesis, xxvii, 29th, we read, “Let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee.” But, according to the Vulgate, it ought to be, “Let peoples serve thee, and nations bow down to thee;” according to the Septuagint, “Let nations serve thee, and rulers bow down to thee.” Among Murray’s “instances of false syntax,” we find the text, “This people draweth near to me with their mouth,” &c.—Octavo Gram., Vol. ii, p. 49. This is corrected in his Key, thus: “These people draw near to me with their mouth.”—Ib., ii, 185. The Bible has it: “This people draw near me with their mouth.”—Isaiah, xxix, 13. And again: “This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth.”—Matt., xv, 8. Dr. Priestley thought it ought to be, “This people draws nigh unto me with their mouths.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 63. The second evangelist omits some words: “This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.”—Mark, vii, 6. In my opinion, the plural verb is here to be preferred; because the pronoun their is plural, and the worship spoken of was a personal rather than a national act. Yet the adjective this must be retained, if the text specify the Jews as a people. As to the words mouth and heart, they are to be understood figuratively of speech and love; and I agree not with Priestley, that the plural number must necessarily be used. See Note 4th to Rule 4th.

OBS. 12.—In making an assertion concerning a number or quantity with some indefinite excess or allowance, we seem sometimes to take for the subject of the verb what is really the object of a preposition; as, “In a sermon, there may be from three to five, or six heads.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 313. “In those of Germany, there are from eight to twelve professors.”—Dwight, Lit. Convention, p. 138. “About a million and a half was subscribed in a few days.”—N. Y. Daily Advertiser. “About one hundred feet of the Muncy dam has been swept off.”—N. Y. Observer. “Upwards of one hundred thousand dollars have been appropriated.”—Newspaper. “But I fear there are between twenty and thirty of them.”—Tooke’s Diversions, ii, 441. “Besides which, there are upwards of fifty smaller islands.”—Balbi’s Geog., p. 30. “On board of which embarked upwards of three hundred passengers.”—Robertson’s Amer., ii, 419. The propriety of using above or upwards of for more than, is questionable, but the practice is not uncommon. When there is a preposition before what seems at first to be the subject of the verb, as in the foregoing instances, I imagine there is an ellipsis of the word number, amount, sum or quantity; the first of which words is a collective noun and may have a verb either singular or plural: as, “In a sermon, there may be any number from three to five or six heads.” This is awkward, to be sure; but what does the Doctor’s sentence mean, unless it is, that there may be an optional number of heads, varying from three to six?

OBS. 13.—Dr. Webster says, “When an aggregate amount is expressed by the plural names of the particulars composing that amount, the verb may be in the singular number; as, ‘There was more than a hundred and fifty thousand pounds sterling.’ Mavor’s Voyages.” To this he adds, “However repugnant to the principles of grammar this may seem at first view, the practice is correct; for the affirmation is not made of the individual parts or divisions named, the pounds, but of the entire sum or amount.”—Philosophical Gram., p. 146; Improved Gram., p. 100. The fact is, that the Doctor here, as in some other instances, deduces a false rule from a correct usage. It is plain that either the word more, taken substantively, or the noun to which it relates as an adjective, is the only nominative to the verb was. Mavor does not affirm that there were a hundred and fifty thousand pounds; but that there was more—i.e., more money than so many pounds are, or amount to. Oliver B. Peirce, too, falls into a multitude of strange errors respecting the nature of more than, and the construction of other words that accompany these. See his “Analytical Rules,” and the manner in which he applies them, in “The Grammar,” p. 195 et seq.

OBS. 14.—Among certain educationists,—grammarians, arithmeticians, schoolmasters, and others,—there has been of late not a little dispute concerning the syntax of the phraseology which we use, or should use, in expressing multiplication, or in speaking of abstract numbers. For example: is it better to say, “Twice one is two,” or, “Twice one are two?”—“Two times one is two,” or, “Two times one are two?”—“Twice two is four,” or, “Twice two are four?”—“Thrice one is or are, three?”—“Three times one is, or are, three?”—“Three times naught is, or are, naught?”—“Thrice three is, or are, nine?”—“Three times four is, or are, twelve?”—“Seven times three make, or makes, twenty-one?”—“Three times his age do not, or does not, equal mine?”—“Three times the quantity is not, or are not, sufficient?”—“Three quarters of the men were discharged; and three quarters of the money was, or were, sent back?”—“As 2 is to 4, so is 6 to 12;” or, “As two are to four, so are six to twelve?”

OBS. 15.—Most of the foregoing expressions, though all are perhaps intelligible enough in common practice, are, in some respect, difficult of analysis, or grammatical resolution. I think it possible, however, to frame an argument of some plausibility in favour of every one of them. Yet it is hardly to be supposed, that any teacher will judge them all to be alike justifiable, or feel no interest in the questions which have been raised about them. That the language of arithmetic is often defective or questionable in respect to grammar, may be seen not only in many an ill choice between the foregoing variant and contrasted modes of expression, but in sundry other examples, of a somewhat similar character, for which it may be less easy to find advocates and published arguments. What critic will not judge the following phraseology to be faulty? “4 times two units is 8 units, and 4 times 5 tens is twenty tens.”—Chase’s Common School Arithmetic, 1848, p. 42. Or this? “1 time 1 is 1. 2 times 1 are 2; 1 time 4 is 4, 2 times 4 are 8.”—Ray’s Arithmetic, 1853. Or this? “8 and 7 is 15, 9’s out leaves 6; 3 and 8 is 11, 9’s out leaves 2.”—Babcock’s Practical Arithmetic, 1829, p. 22. Or this again? “3 times 3 is 9, and 2 we had to carry is 11.”—Ib., p. 20.

OBS. 16.—There are several different opinions as to what constitutes the grammatical subject of the verb in any ordinary English expression of multiplication. Besides this, we have some variety in the phraseology which precedes the verb; so that it is by no means certain, either that the multiplying terms are always of the same part of speech, or that the true nominative to the verb is not essentially different in different examples. Some absurdly teach, that an abstract number is necessarily expressed by “a singular noun,” with only a singular meaning; that such a number, when multiplied, is always, of itself the subject of the assertion; and, consequently, that the verb must be singular, as agreeing only with this “singular noun.” Others, not knowing how to parse separately the multiplying word or words and the number multiplied, take them both or all together as “the grammatical subject” with which the verb must agree. But, among these latter expounders, there are two opposite opinions on the very essential point, whether this “entire expression” requires a singular verb or a plural one:—as, whether we ought to say, “Twice one is two,” or, “Twice one are two;”—“Twice two is four,” or, “Twice two are four;”—“Three times one is three,” or, “Three times one are three;”—“Three times three is nine,” or, “Three times three are nine.” Others, again, according to Dr. Bullions, and possibly according to their own notion, find the grammatical subject, sometimes, if not generally, in the multiplying term only; as, perhaps, is the case with those who write or speak as follows: “If we say, ‘Three times one are three,’ we make ‘times’ the subject of the verb.”—Bullions, Analyt. and Pract. Gram., 1849, p. 39. “Thus, 2 times 1 are 2; 2 times 2 are four; 2 times 3 are 6.”—Chase’s C. S. Arith., p. 43. “Say, 2 times 0 are 0; 2 times 1 are 2.”—Robinson’s American Arith., 1825, p. 24.

OBS. 17.—Dr. Bullions, with a strange blunder of some sort in almost every sentence, propounds and defends his opinion on this subject thus: “Numeral adjectives, being also names of numbers, are often used as nouns, and so have the inflection and construction of nouns: thus, by twos, by tens, by fifties. Two is an even number. Twice two is four. Four is equal to twice two. In some arithmetics the language employed in the operation of multiplying—such as ‘Twice two are four, twice three are six’—is incorrect. It should be, ‘Twice two is four,’ &c.; for the word two is used as a singular noun—the name of a number. The adverb ‘twice’ is not in construction with it, and consequently does not make it plural. The meaning is, ‘The number two taken twice is equal to four.’ For the same reason we should say, ‘Three times two is six,’ because the meaning is, ‘Two taken three times is six.’ If we say, ‘Three times one are three,’ we make ‘times’ the subject of the verb, whereas the subject of the verb really is ‘one,’ and ‘times’ is in the objective of number (§828). 2:4:: 6:12, should be read, ‘As 2 is to 4, so is 6 to 12;’ not ‘As two are to four, so are six to twelve.’ But when numerals denoting more than one, are used as adjectives, with a substantive expressed or understood, they must have a plural construction.”—Bullions, Analyt. and Pract. Gram., 1849, p. 39.

OBS. 18.—Since nouns and adjectives are different parts of speech, the suggestion, that, “Numeral adjectives are also names, or nouns,” is, upon the very face of it, a flat absurdity; and the notion that “the name of a number” above unity, conveys only and always the idea of unity, like an ordinary “singular noun,” is an other. A number in arithmetic is most commonly an adjective in grammar; and it is always, in form, an expression that tells how many, or—“denotes how many things are spoken of.”—Chase, p. 11. But the name of a number is also a number, whenever it is not made plural in form. Thus four is a number, but fours is not; so ten is a number, but tens is not. Arithmetical numbers, which run on to infinity, severally consist of a definite idea of how many; each is a precise count by the unit; one being the beginning of the series, and the measure of every successive step. Grammatical numbers are only the verbal forms which distinguish one thing from more of the same sort. Thus the word fours or tens, unless some arithmetical number be prefixed to it, signifies nothing but a mere plurality which repeats indefinitely the collective idea of four or ten.

OBS. 19.—All actual names of numbers calculative, except one, (for naught, though it fills a place among numbers, is, in itself, a mere negation of number; and such terms as oneness, unity, duality, are not used in calculation,) are collective nouns—a circumstance which seems to make the discussion of the present topic appropriate to the location which is here given it under Rule 15th. Each of them denotes a particular aggregate of units. And if each, as signifying one whole, may convey the idea of unity, and take a singular verb; each, again, as denoting so many units, may quite as naturally take a plural verb, and be made to convey the idea of plurality. For the mere abstractness of numbers, or their separation from all “particular objects,” by no means obliges us to limit them always to the construction with verbs singular. If it is right to say, “Two is an even number;” it is certainly no error to say, “Two are an even number.” If it is allowable to say, “As 2 is to 4, so is 6 to 12;” it is as well, if not better, to say, “As two are to four, so are six to twelve.” If it is correct to say, “Four is equal to twice two;” it is quite as grammatical to say, “Four are equal to twice two.” Bullions bids say, “Twice two is four,” and, “Three times two is six;” but I very much prefer to say, “Twice two are four,” and, “Three times two are six.” The Doctor’s reasoning, whereby he condemns the latter phraseology, is founded only upon false assumptions. This I expect to show; and more—that the word which he prefers, is wrong.

OBS. 20.—As to what constitutes the subject of the verb in multiplication, I have already noticed three different opinions. There are yet three or four more, which must not be overlooked in a general examination of this grammatical dispute. Dr. Bullions's notion on this point, is stated with so little consistency, that one can hardly say what it is. At first, he seems to find his nominative in the multiplicand, "used as a singular noun;" but, when he ponders a little on the text, "Twice two is four," he finds the leading term not to be the word "two," but the word "number," understood. He resolves, indeed, that no one of the four words used, "is in construction with" any of the rest; for he thinks, "The meaning is, 'The number two taken twice is equal to four.'" Here, then, is a fourth opinion in relation to the subject of the verb: it must be "number" understood. Again, it is conceded by the same hand, that, "When numerals denoting more than one, are used as adjectives, with a substantive expressed or understood, they must have a plural construction." Now who can show that this is not the case in general with the numerals of multiplication? To explain the syntax of "Twice two are four," what can be more rational than to say, "The sense is, 'Twice two units, or things, are four?'" Is it not plain, that twice two things, of any sort, are four things of that same sort, and only so? Twice two duads are how many? Answer: Four duads, or eight units. Here, then, is a fifth opinion,—and a very fair one too,—according to which we have for the subject of the verb, not "two" nor "twice" nor "twice two," nor "number," understood before "two," but the plural noun "units" or "things" implied in or after the multiplicand.

OBS. 21.—It is a doctrine taught by sundry grammarians, and to some extent true, that a neuter verb between two nominatives "may agree with either of them." (See Note 5th to Rule 14th, and the footnote.) When, therefore, a person who knows this, meets with such examples as, "Twice one are two;"—"Twice one unit are two units;"—"Thrice one are three;"—he will of course be apt to refer the verb to the nominative which follows it, rather than to that which precedes it; taking the meaning to be, "Two are twice one;"—"Two units are twice one unit;"—"Three are thrice one." Now, if such is the sense, the construction in each of these instances is right, because it accords with such sense; the interpretation is right also, because it is the only one adapted to such a construction; and we have, concerning the subject of the verb, a sixth opinion,—a very proper one too,—that it is found, not where it is most natural to look for it, in the expression of the factors, but in a noun which is either uttered or implied in the product. But, no doubt, it is better to avoid this construction, by using such a verb as may be said to agree with the number multiplied. Again, and lastly, there may be, touching all such cases as, "Twice one are two," a seventh opinion, that the subject of the verb is the product taken substantively, and not as a numeral adjective. This idea, or the more comprehensive one, that all abstract numbers are nouns substantive, settles nothing concerning the main question, What form of the verb is required by an abstract number above unity? If the number be supposed an adjective, referring to the implied term units, or things, the verb must of course be plural; but if it be called a collective noun, the verb only follows and fixes "the idea of plurality," or "the idea of unity," as the writer or speaker chooses to adopt the one or the other.

OBS. 22.—It is marvellous, that four or five monosyllables, uttered together in a common simple sentence, could give rise to all this diversity of opinion concerning the subject of the verb; but, after all, the chief difficulty presented by the phraseology of multiplication, is that of ascertaining, not "the grammatical subject of the verb," but the grammatical relation between the multiplier and the multiplicand—the true way of parsing the terms once, twice, three times, &c., but especially the word times. That there must be some such relation, is obvious; but what is it? and how is it to be known? To most persons, undoubtedly, "Twice two," and, "Three times two," seem to be regular phrases, in which the words cannot lack syntactical connexion; yet Dr. Bullions, who is great authority with some thinkers, denies all immediate or direct relation between the word “two,” and the term before it, preferring to parse both “twice” and “three times” as adjuncts to the participle “taken,” understood. He says, “The adverb ‘twice’ is not in construction with ‘two,’ and consequently does not make it plural.” His first assertion here is, in my opinion, untrue; and the second implies the very erroneous doctrine, that the word twice, if it relate to a singular term, will “make it plural.” From a misconception like this, it probably is, that some who ought to be very accurate in speech, are afraid to say, “Twice one is two,” or, “Thrice one is three,” judging the singular verb to be wrong; and some there are who think, that “usage will not permit” a careful scholar so to speak. Now, analysis favours the singular form here; and it is contrary to a plain principle of General Grammar, to suppose that a plural verb can be demanded by any phrase which is made collectively the subject of the assertion. (See Note 3d, and Obs. 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th, under Rule 14th.) Are is, therefore, not required here; and, if allowable, it is so only on the supposition that the leading nominative is put after it.

OBS. 23.—In Blanchard’s small Arithmetic, published in 1854, the following inculcations occur: “When we say, 3 times 4 trees are 12 trees, we have reference to the objects counted; but in saying 3 times 4 is twelve, we mean, that 3 times the number 4, is the number 12. Here we use 4 and 12, not as numeral adjectives, but as nouns, the names of particular numbers, and as such, each conveys the idea of unity, and the entire expression is the subject of is, and conveys the idea of unity.”—P. iv. Here we have, with an additional error concerning “the entire expression,” a repetition of Dr. Bullions’s erroneous assumption, that the name of a particular number, as being “a singular noun,” must “convey the idea of unity,” though the number itself be a distinct plurality. These men talk as if there were an absurdity in affirming that “the number 4” is plural! But, if four be taken as only one thing, how can three multiply this one thing into twelve? It is by no means proper to affirm, that, “Every four, taken three times, is, or are, twelve;” for three instances, or “times,” of the figure 4, or of the word four, are only three 4’s, or three verbal fours. And is it not because “the number 4” is plural—is in itself four units—and because the word four, or the figure 4, conveys explicitly the idea of this plurality, that the multiplication table is true, where it says, “3 times 4 are 12?” It is not right to say, “Three times one quaternion is twelve;” nor is it quite unobjectionable to say, with Blanchard “3 times the number 4, is the number 12.” Besides, this pretended interpretation explains nothing. The syntax of the shorter text, “3 times 4 is 12,” is in no way justified or illustrated by it. Who does not perceive that the four here spoken of must be four units, or four things of some sort; and that no such “four,” multiplied by 3, or till “3 times,” can “convey the idea of unity,” or match a singular verb? Dr. Webster did not so conceive of this “abstract number,” or of “the entire expression” in which it is multiplied; for he says, “Four times four amount to sixteen.”—American Dict., w. Time.

OBS. 24.—In fact no phrase of multiplication is of such a nature that it can, with any plausibility be reckoned a composite subject of the verb. Once, twice, and thrice, are adverbs; and each of them may, in general, be parsed as relating directly to the multiplicand. Their construction, as well as that of the plural verb, is agreeable to the Latin norm; as, when Cicero says of somebody, “Si, bis bina quot essent, didicisset,”—“If he had learned how many twice two are.”—See Ainsworth’s Dict., w. Binus. The phrases, “one time,” for once, and “two times” for twice, seem puerile expressions: they are not often used by competent teachers. Thrice is a good word, but more elegant than popular. Above twice, we use the phrases, three times, four times, and the like, which are severally composed of a numeral adjective and the noun times. If these words were united, as some think they ought to be, the compounds would be adverbs of time repeated; as, threetimes, fourtimes, &c., analogous to sometimes. Each word would answer, as each phrase now does, to the question, How often? These expressions are taken by some as having a direct adverbial relation to the terms which they qualify; but they are perhaps most commonly explained as being dependent on some preposition understood. See Obs. 1st on Rule 5th, and Obs. 6th on Rule 7th.

OBS. 25.—In multiplying one only, it is evidently best to use a singular verb: as, “Twice naught is naught;”—“Three times one is three.” And, in multiplying any number above one, I judge a plural verb to be necessary: as, “Twice two are four;”—“Three times two are six,” because this number must be just so many in order to give the product. Dr. Bullions says, “We should say, ‘Three times two is six,’ because the meaning is, ‘Two taken three times is six.’” This is neither reasoning, nor explanation, nor good grammar. The relation between “two” and “three,” or the syntax of the word “times,” or the propriety of the singular verb, is no more apparent in the latter expression than in the former. It would be better logic to affirm, “We should say, ‘Three times two are six,’ because the meaning is, ‘Two (units), taken for, to, or till three times, are six.’” The preposition till, or until, is sometimes found in use before an expression of times numbered; as, “How oft shall I forgive? till seven times? I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but, Until seventy times seven.”—Matt., xviii, 21. But here is still a difficulty with respect to the multiplying term, or the word “times.” For, unless, by an unallowable ellipsis, “seventy times seven,” is presumed to mean, “seventy times of seven,” the preposition Until must govern, not this noun “times,” expressed, but an other, understood after “seven,” and the meaning must be, “Thou shalt forgive him until seventy-times seven times;” or—“until seven times taken for, to, or till, seventy times.”

OBS. 26.—With too little regard to consistency. Dr. Bullions suggests that when “we make ‘times’ the subject of the verb,” it is not “really” such, but “is in the objective of number.” He is, doubtless, right in preferring to parse this word as an objective case, rather than as a nominative, in the construction to which he alludes; but to call it an “objective of number,” is an uncouth error, a very strange mistake for so great a grammarian to utter: there being in grammar no such thing as “the objective of number.” nothing of the sort, even under his own “Special Rule,” to which he refers us for it! And, if such a thing there were, so that a number could be “put in the objective case without a governing word,” (see his §828,) the plural word times, since it denotes no particular aggregate of units, could never be an example of it. It is true that times, like days, weeks, and other nouns of time, may be, and often is, in the objective case without a governing word expressed; and, in such instances, it may be called the objective of repetition, or of time repeated. But the construction of the word appears to be such as is common to many nouns of time, of value, or of measure; which, in their relation to other words, seem to resemble adverbs, but which are usually said to be governed by prepositions understood: as, “Three days later;” i.e., “Later by three days.”—“Three shillings cheaper;” i.e., “Cheaper by three shillings.”—“Seven times hotter;” i.e., “Hotter by seven times.”—“Four feet high;” i.e., “High to four feet.”—“Ten years old;” i.e., “Old to ten years.”—“Five times ten;” i.e., “Ten by five times;” or, perhaps, “Ten taken till five times.”

NOTE TO RULE XV.

A collective noun conveying the idea of unity, requires a verb in the third person, singular; and generally admits also the regular plural construction: as, "His army was defeated."—"His armies were defeated."

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XV.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—THE IDEA OF PLURALITY.

"The gentry is punctilious in their etiquette."

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the verb is is of the singular number, and does not correctly agree with its nominative gentry, which is a collective noun conveying rather the idea of plurality. But, according to Rule 15th, "When the nominative is a collective noun conveying the idea of plurality, the verb must agree with it in the plural number." Therefore, is should be are; thus, "The gentry are punctilious in their etiquette."]

"In France the peasantry goes barefoot, and the middle sort makes use of wooden shoes."—HARVEY: Priestley's Gram., p. 188. "The people rejoices in that which should cause sorrow."—See Murray's Exercises, p. 49. "My people is foolish, they have not known me."—Jer., iv, 22; Lowth's Gram., p. 75. "For the people speaks, but does not write."—Philological Museum, i, 646. "So that all the people that was in the camp, trembled."—Exodus, xix, 16. "No company likes to confess that they are ignorant."—Student's Manual, p. 217. "Far the greater part of their captives was anciently sacrificed."—Robertson's America, i, 339. "Above one half of them was cut off before the return of spring."—Ib., ii, 419. "The other class, termed Figures of Thought, supposes the words to be used in their proper and literal meaning."—Blair's Rhet., p. 133; Murray's Gram., 337. "A multitude of words in their dialect approaches to the Teutonic form, and therefore afford excellent assistance."—Dr. Murray's Hist of Lang., i, 148. "A great majority of our authors is defective in manner."—James Brown's Crit. "The greater part of these new-coined words has been rejected."—Tooke's Diversions, ii, 445. "The greater part of the words it contains is subject to certain modifications and inflections."—The Friend, ii, 123. "While all our youth prefers her to the rest."—Waller's Poems, p. 17. "Mankind is appointed to live in a future state."—Butler's Analogy, p. 57. "The greater part of human kind speaks and acts wholly by imitation."—Wright's Gram., p. 169. "The greatest part of human gratifications approaches so nearly to vice."—Ibid.

"While still the busy world is treading o'er
The paths they trod five thousand years before."—Young.

UNDER THE NOTE.—THE IDEA OF UNITY.

"In old English this species of words were numerous."—Dr. Murray's Hist. of Lang., ii, 6. "And a series of exercises in false grammar are introduced towards the end."—Frost's El. of E. Gram., p. iv. "And a jury, in conformity with the same idea, were anciently called homagium, the homage, or manhood."—Webster's Essays, p. 296. "With respect to the former, there are indeed plenty of means."—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 319. "The number of school districts have increased since the last year."—Governor Throop, 1832. "The Yearly Meeting have purchased with its funds these publications."—Foster's Reports, i, 76. "Have the legislature power to prohibit assemblies?"—Wm. Sullivan. "So that the whole number of the streets were fifty."—Rollin's Ancient Hist., ii, 8. "The number of inhabitants were not more than four millions."—SMOLLETT: see Priestley's Gram., p. 193. "The House of Commons were of small weight.”—HUME: Ib., p. 188. “The assembly of the wicked have enclosed me.”—Psal. xxii, 16; Lowth’s Gram., p. 75. “Every kind of convenience and comfort are provided.”—Com. School Journal, i, 24. “Amidst the great decrease of the inhabitants of Spain, the body of the clergy have suffered no diminution; but has rather been gradually increasing.”—Payne’s Geog., ii, 418. “Small as the number of inhabitants are, yet their poverty is extreme.”—Ib., ii, 417. “The number of the names were about one hundred and twenty.”—Ware’s Gram., p. 12; see Acts, i, 15.

RULE XVI.—FINITE VERBS.

When a Verb has two or more nominatives connected by and, it must agree with them jointly in the plural, because they are taken together: as, “True rhetoric and sound logic are very nearly allied.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 11. “Aggression and injury in no case justify retaliation.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 406.

“Judges and senates have been bought for gold, Esteem and love were never to be sold.”—Pope.

EXCEPTION FIRST.

When two nominatives connected by and serve merely to describe one person or thing, they are either in apposition or equivalent to one name, and do not require a plural verb; as, “Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves.”—L’Estrange. “The hue and cry of the country pursues him.”—Junius, Letter xxiii. “Flesh and blood [i. e. man, or man’s nature,] hath not revealed it unto thee.”—Matt., xvi, 17. “Descent and fall to us is adverse.”—Milton, P. L., ii, 76. “This philosopher and poet was banished from his country.”—“Such a Saviour and Redeemer is actually provided for us.”—Gurney’s Essays, p. 386. “Let us then declare what great things our God and Saviour has done for us.”—Dr. Scott, on Luke viii. “Toll, tribute, and custom, was paid unto them.”—Ezra, iv, 20.

“Whose icy current and compulsive course
Ne’er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on.”—Shakspeare.

EXCEPTION SECOND.

When two nominatives connected by and, are emphatically distinguished, they belong to different propositions, and, if singular, do not require a plural verb; as, “Ambition, and not the safety of the state, was concerned.”—Goldsmith. “Consanguinity, and not affinity, is the ground of the prohibition.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 324. “But a modification, and oftentimes a total change, takes place.”—Maunder. “Somewhat, and, in many circumstances, a great deal too, is put upon us.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 108. “Disgrace, and perhaps ruin, was the certain consequence of attempting the latter.”—Robertson’s America, i, 434.

“Ay, and no too, was no good divinity.”—Shakspeare.

“Love, and love only, is the loan for love.”—Young.

EXCEPTION THIRD.

When two or more nominatives connected by and are preceded by the adjective each, every, or no, they are taken separately, and do not require a plural verb; as, “When no part of their substance, and no one of their properties, is the same.”—Bp. Butler. “Every limb and feature appears with its respective grace.”—Steele. “Every person, and every occurrence, is beheld in the most favourable light.”—Murray’s Key, p. 190. “Each worm, and each insect, is a marvel of creative power.”

“Whose every look and gesture was a joke
To clapping theatres and shouting crowds.”—Young.

EXCEPTION FOURTH.

When the verb separates its nominatives, it agrees with that which precedes it, and is understood to the rest; as, “The earth is the Lord’s, and the fullness thereof.”—Murray’s Exercises, p. 36.

“Disdain forbids me, and my dread of shame.”—Milton.

“——Forth in the pleasing spring,
Thy beauty walks, thy tenderness, and love.”—Thomson.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XVI.

OBS. 1.—According to Lindley Murray, (who, in all his compilation, from whatever learned authorities, refers us to no places in any book but his own.) “Dr. Blair observes, that ‘two or more substantives, joined by a copulative, must always require the verb or pronoun to which they refer, to be placed in the plural number:’ and this,” continues the great Compiler, “is the general sentiment of English grammarians.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 150. The same thing is stated in many other grammars: thus, Ingersoll has the very same words, on the 238th page of his book; and R. C. Smith says, “Dr. Blair very justly observes,” &c.—Productive Gram., p. 126. I therefore doubt not, the learned rhetorician has somewhere made some such remark: though I can neither supply the reference which these gentlemen omit, nor vouch for the accuracy of their quotation. But I trust to make it very clear, that so many grammarians as hold this sentiment, are no great readers, to say the least of them. Murray himself acknowledges one exception to this principle, and unconsciously furnishes examples of one or two more; but, in stead of placing the former in his Grammar, and under the rule, where the learner would be likely to notice it, he makes it an obscure and almost unintelligible note, in the margin of his Key, referring by an asterisk to the following correction: “Every man and every woman was numbered.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, Vol. ii. p. 190. To justify this phraseology, he talks thus: “Whatever number of nouns may be connected by a conjunction with the pronoun EVERY, this pronoun is as applicable to the whole mass of them, as to any one of the nouns; and therefore the verb is correctly put in the singular number, and refers to the whole separately and individually considered.”—Ib. So much, then, for “the pronoun EVERY!” But, without other exceptions, what shall be done with the following texts from Murray himself? “The flock, and not the fleece, is, or ought to be the object of the shepherd’s care.”—Ib., ii, 184. “This prodigy of learning, this scholar, critic, and antiquary, was entirely destitute of breeding and civility.”—Ib., ii, 217. And, in the following line, what conjunction appears, or what is the difference between “horror” and “black despair.” that the verb should be made plural?

“What black despair, what horror, fill his mind!”—Ib., ii, 183.

“What black despair, what horror fills his heart!”—Thomson.*

---

* In his English Reader, (Part II, Chap. 5th, Sec. 7th,) Murray has this line in its proper form, as it here stands in the words of Thomson; but, in his Grammar, he corrupted it, first in his Exercises, and then still more in his Key. Among his examples of “False Syntax” it stands thus:

OBS. 2.—Besides the many examples which may justly come under the four exceptions above specified, there are several questionable but customary expressions, which have some appearance of being deviations from this rule, but which may perhaps be reasonably explained on the principle of ellipsis: as, “All work and no play, makes Jack a dull boy.”—“Slow and steady often outtravels haste.”—Dillwyn’s Reflections, p. 23. “Little and often fills the purse.”—Treasury of Knowledge, Part i, p. 446. “Fair and softly goes far.” These maxims, by universal custom, lay claim to a singular verb; and, for my part, I know not how they can well be considered either real exceptions to the foregoing rule, or real inaccuracies under it; for, in most of them, the words connected are not nouns; and those which are so, may not be nominatives. And it is clear, that every exception must have some specific character by which it may be distinguished; else it destroys the rule, instead of confirming it, as known exceptions are said to do. Murray appears to have thought the singular verb wrong; for, among his examples for parsing, he has, “Fair and softly go far,” which instance is no more entitled to a plural verb than the rest. See his Octavo Gram., Vol. ii, p. 5. Why not suppose them all to be elliptical? Their meaning may be as follows: “To have all work and no play, makes Jack a dull boy.”—“What is slow and steady, often outtravels haste.”—“To put in little and often, fills the purse.”—“What proceeds fair and softly, goes far.” The following line from Shakspeare appears to be still more elliptical:

“Poor and content is rich, and rich enough.”—Othello.

This may be supposed to mean, “He who is poor and content,” &c. In the following sentence again, we may suppose an ellipsis of the phrase To have, at the beginning; though here, perhaps, to have pluralized the verb, would have been as well:

“One eye on death and one full fix’d on heaven, Becomes a mortal and immortal man.”—Young.

OBS. 3.—The names of two persons are not unfrequently used jointly as the name of their story; in which sense, they must have a singular verb, if they have any; as, “Prior’s Henry and Emma contains an other beautiful example.”—Jamieson’s Rhetoric, p. 179. I somewhat hesitate to call this an exception to the foregoing rule, because here too the phraseology may be supposed elliptical. The meaning is, “Prior’s little poem, entitled, ‘Henry and Emma,’ contains,” &c.;—or, “Prior’s story of Henry and Emma contains,” &c. And, if the first expression is only an abbreviation of one of these, the construction of the verb contains may be referred to Rule 14th. See Exception 1st to Rule 12th, and Obs. 2d on Rule 14th.

OBS. 4.—The conjunction and, by which alone we can with propriety connect different words to make them joint nominatives or joint antecedents, is sometimes suppressed and understood; but then its effect is the same, as if it were inserted; though a singular verb might sometimes be quite as proper in the same sentences, because it would merely imply a disjunctive conjunction or none at all: as, “The high breach of trust, the notorious corruption, are stated in the strongest terms.”—Junius, Let. xx. “Envy, self-will, jealousy, pride, often reign there.”—Abbott’s Corner Stone, p. 111. (See Obs. 4th on Rule 12th.)

---

“What black despair, what horror, fills his mind!”—Exercises, Rule 2.

So the error is propagated in the name of Learning, and this verse goes from grammar to grammar, as one that must have a “plural” verb. See Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 242; Smith’s New Gram., p. 127; Fisk’s Gram., p. 120; Weld’s E. Gram., 2d Ed., p. 189; Imp. Ed., p. 196.

“Art, empire, earth itself, to change are doomed.”—Beattie.

“Her heart, her mind, her love, is his alone.”—Cowley.

In all the foregoing examples, a singular verb might have been used without impropriety; or the last, which is singular, might have been plural. But the following couplet evidently requires a plural verb, and is therefore correct as the poet wrote it; both because the latter noun is plural, and because the conjunction and is understood between the two. Yet a late grammarian, perceiving no difference between the joys of sense and the pleasure of reason, not only changes “lie” to “lies,” but uses the perversion for a proof text, under a rule which refers the verb to the first noun only, and requires it to be singular. See Oliver B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 250.

“Reason’s whole pleasure, all the joys of sense.

Lie in three words—health, peace, and competence.”—Pope’s Ess., Ep. iv, l. 80.

OBS. 5.—When the speaker changes his nominative to take a stronger expression, he commonly uses no conjunction; but, putting the verb in agreement with the noun which is next to it, he leaves the other to an implied concord with its proper form of the same verb: as, “The man whose designs, whose whole conduct, tends to reduce me to subjection, that man is at war with me, though not a blow has yet been given, nor a sword drawn.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 265. “All Greece, all the barbarian world, is too narrow for this man’s ambition.”—Ibid. “This self-command, this exertion of reason in the midst of passion, has a wonderful effect both to please and to persuade.”—Ib., p. 260. “In the mutual influence of body and soul, there is a wisdom, a wonderful wisdom, which we cannot fathom.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 150. If the principle here stated is just, Murray has written the following models erroneously: “Virtue, honour, nay, even self-interest, conspire to recommend the measure.”—Ib., p. 150. “Patriotism, morality, every public and private consideration, demand our submission to just and lawful government.”—Ibid. In this latter instance, I should prefer the singular verb *demand*s; and in the former, the expression ought to be otherwise altered, thus. “Virtue, honour, and interest, all conspire to recommend the measure.” Or thus: “Virtue, honour—nay, even self-interest, recommends the measure.” On this principle, too, Thomson was right, and this critic wrong, in the example cited at the close of the first observation above. This construction is again recurred to by Murray, in the second chapter of his Exercises; where he explicitly condemns the following sentence because the verb is singular: “Prudence, policy, nay, his own true interest, strongly recommends the line of conduct proposed to him.”—Octavo Gram., Vol. ii, p. 22.

OBS. 6.—When two or more nominatives are in apposition with a preceding one which they explain, the verb must agree with the first word only, because the others are adjuncts to this, and not joint subjects to the verb; as, “Loud, the ancient Lydda and Diospolis, appears like a place lately ravaged by fire and sword.”—Keith’s Evidences, p. 93. “Beattie, James,—a philosopher and poet,—was born in Scotland, in the year 1735.”—Murray’s Sequel, p. 306. “For, the quantity, the length, and shortness of our syllables, is not, by any means, so fixed.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 124. This principle, like the preceding one, persuades me again to dissent from Murray, who corrects or perverts the following sentence, by changing originates to originate: “All that makes a figure on the great theatre of the world; the employments of the busy, the enterprises of the ambitious, and the exploits of the warlike; the virtues which form the happiness, and the crimes which occasion the misery of mankind; originates in that silent and secret recess of thought, which is hidden from every human eye.”—See Murray’s Octavo Gram., Vol. ii, p. 181; or his Duodecimo Key, p. 21. The true subject of this proposition is the noun all, which is singular; and the other nominatives are subordinate to this, and merely explanatory of it.

OBS. 7.—Dr. Webster says, “Enumeration and addition of numbers are usually expressed in the singular number; [as,] two and two is four; seven and nine is sixteen; that is, the sum of seven and nine is sixteen. But modern usage inclines to reject the use of the verb in the singular number, in these and similar phrases.”—Improved Gram., p. 106. Among its many faults, this passage exhibits a virtual contradiction. For what “modern usage inclines to reject,” can hardly be the fashion in which any ideas “are usually expressed.” Besides, I may safely aver, that this is a kind of phraseology which all correct usage always did reject. It is not only a gross vulgarism, but a plain and palpable violation of the foregoing rule of syntax; and, as such it must be reputed, if the rule has any propriety at all. What “enumeration” has to do with it, is more than I can tell. But Dr. Webster once admired and commended this mode of speech, as one of the “wonderful proofs of ingenuity in the framers of language;” and laboured to defend it as being “correct upon principle;” that is, upon the principle that “the sum of” is understood to be the subject of the affirmation, when one says, “Two and two is four,” in stead of, “Two and two are four.”—See Webster’s Philosophical Gram., p. 153. This seems to me a “wonderful proof” of ignorance in a very learned man.

OBS. 8.—In Greek and Latin, the verb frequently agrees with the nearest nominative, and is understood to the rest; and this construction is sometimes imitated in English, especially if the nouns follow the verb: as, “Νυνὶ δὲ ΜΕΝΕΙ πίστις, ἐλπίς ἀγάπη, τὰ τρία ταῦτα.”—“Nunc vero manet fides, spes, charitas; tria hæc.”—“Now abideth faith, hope, charity; these three.”—1 Cor., xiii, 13. “And now abideth confession, prayer, and praise, these three; but the greatest of these is praise.”—ATTERBURY: Blair’s Rhet., p. 300. The propriety of this usage, so far as our language is concerned, I doubt. It seems to open a door for numerous deviations from the foregoing rule, and deviations of such a sort, that if they are to be considered exceptions, one can hardly tell why. The practice, however, is not uncommon, especially if there are more nouns than two, and each is emphatic; as, “Wonderful was the patience, fortitude, self-denial, and bravery of our ancestors.”—Webster’s Hist. of U. S., p. 118. “It is the very thing I would have you make out: for therein consists the form, and use, and nature of language.”—Berkley’s Alciphron, p. 161. “There is the proper noun, and the common noun. There is the singular noun, and the plural noun.”—Emmons’s Gram., p. 11. “From him proceeds power, sanctification, truth, grace, and every other blessing we can conceive.”—Calvin’s Institutes, B. i, Ch. 13. “To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country?”—Jer., vi, 20. “For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever.”—Matt., vi, 13. In all these instances, the plural verb might have been used; and yet perhaps the singular may be justified on the ground that there is a distinct and emphatic enumeration of the nouns. Thus, it would be proper to say, “Thine are the kingdom, the power, and the glory;” but this construction seems less emphatic than the preceding, which means, “For thine is the kingdom, thine is the power, and thine is the glory, forever;” and this repetition is still more emphatic, and perhaps more proper, than the elliptical form. The repetition of the conjunction “and,” in the original text as above, adds time and emphasis to the reading, and makes the singular verb more proper than it would otherwise be; for which reason, the following form, in which the Rev. Dr. Bullions has set the sentence down for bad English, is in some sort a perversion of the Scripture: “Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory.”—Bullions’s E. Gram., p. 141.

OBS. 9.—When the nominatives are of different persons, the verb agrees with the first person in preference to the second, and with the second in preference to the third; for thou and I, or he, thou, and I, are equivalent to we; and thou and he are equivalent to you: as, “Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? I have said, thou and Ziba divide the land.”—2 Sam., xix. 29. That is, “divide ye the land.” “And live thou and thy children of the rest.”—2 Kings, iv, 7. “That I and thy people have found grace in thy sight.”—Exodus, xxxiii, 16. “I and my kingdom are guiltless.”—2 Sam., iii, 28. “I, and you, and Piso perhaps too, are in a state of dissatisfaction.”—Zenobia, i, 114.

“Then I, and you, and all of us, fell down, Whilst bloody treason flourish’d over us.”—Shak., J. Cæsar.

OBS. 10.—When two or more nominatives connected by and are of the same form but distinguished by adjectives or possessives, one or more of them may be omitted by ellipsis, but the verb must be plural, and agree with them all; as, “A literary, a scientific, a wealthy, and a poor man, were assembled in one room.”—Peirce’s Gram., p. 263. Here four different men are clearly spoken of. “Else the rising and the falling emphasis are the same.”—Knowles’s Elocutionist, p. 33. Here the noun emphasis is understood after rising. “The singular and [the] plural form seem to be confounded.”—Louth’s Gram., p. 22. Here the noun form is presented to the mind twice; and therefore the article should have been repeated. See Obs. 15th on Rule 1st. “My farm and William’s are adjacent to each other.”—Peirce’s Gram., p. 220. Here the noun farm is understood after the possessive William’s, though the author of the sentence foolishly attempts to explain it otherwise. “Seth’s, Richard’s and Edmund’s farms are those which their fathers left them.”—Ib., p. 257. Here the noun farms is understood after Seth’s, and again after Richard’s; so that the sentence is written wrong, unless each man has more than one farm. “Was not Demosthenes’s style, and his master Plato’s, perfectly Attic; and yet none more lofty?”—Milnes’s Greek Gram., p. 241. Here style is understood after Plato’s; wherefore was should rather be were, or else and should be changed to as well as. But the text, as it stands, is not much unlike some of the exceptions noticed above. “The character of a fop, and of a rough warrior, are no where more successfully contrasted.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 236. Here the ellipsis is not very proper. Say, “the character of a fop, and that of a rough warrior,” &c. Again: “We may observe, that the eloquence of the bar, of the legislature, and of public assemblies, are seldom or ever found united to high perfection in the same person.”—J. Q. Adams’s Rhet., Vol. i, p. 256. Here the ellipsis cannot so well be avoided by means of the pronominal adjective that, and therefore it may be thought more excusable; but I should prefer a repetition of the nominative: as, “We may observe, that the eloquence of the bar, the eloquence of the legislature, and the eloquence of public assemblies, are seldom if ever found united, in any high degree, in the same person.”

OBS. 11.—The conjunction as, when it connects nominatives that are in apposition, or significant of the same person or thing, is commonly placed at the beginning of a sentence, so that the verb agrees with its proper nominative following the explanatory word: thus, “As a poet, he holds a high rank.”—Murray’s Sequel, p. 355. “As a poet, Addison claims a high praise.”—Ib., p. 304. “As a model of English prose, his writings merit the greatest praise.”—Ib., p. 305. But when this conjunction denotes a comparison between different persons or things signified by two nominatives, there must be two verbs expressed or understood, each agreeing with its own subject; as, “Such writers as he [is,] have no reputation worth any man’s envy.” *

“Such men as he [is] be never at heart’s ease
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves.”—Shakspeare.

OBS. 12.—When two nominatives are connected by as well as, but, or save, they must in fact have two verbs, though in most instances only one is expressed; as, “Such is the mutual dependence of words in sentences, that several others, as well as [is] the adjective, are not to be used alone.”—Dr. Wilson’s Essay, p. 99. “The Constitution was to be the one fundamental law of the land, to which all, as well States as people, should submit.”—W. I. BOWDITCH: Liberator, No. 984. “As well those which history, as those which experience offers to our reflection.”—Bolingbroke, on History, p. 85. Here the words “offers to our reflection” are understood after “history.” “None but He who discerns futurity, could have foretold and described all these things.”—Keith’s Evidences, p. 62. “That there was in those times no other writer, of any degree of eminence, save he himself.”—Pope’s Works, Vol. iii, p. 43.

“I do entreat you not a man depart,
Save I alone, till Antony have spoke.”—Shak., J. Cæsar.

OBS. 13.—Some grammarians say, that but and save, when they denote exception, should govern the objective case as prepositions. But this idea is, without doubt, contrary to the current usage of the best authors, either ancient or modern. Wherefore I think it evident that these grammarians err. The objective case of nouns being like the nominative, the point can be proved only by the pronouns; as, “There is none but he alone.”—Perkins’s Theology, 1608. “There is none other but he.”—Mark, xii, 32. (This text is good authority as regards the case, though it is incorrect in an other respect: it should have been, “There is none but he,” or else, “There is no other than he.”) “No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven.”—John, iii, 13. “Not that any man hath seen the father, save he which is of God.”—John, vi, 46. “Few can, save he and I.”—Byron’s Werner. “There is none justified, but he that is in measure sanctified.”—Isaac Penington. Save, as a conjunction, is nearly obsolete.

OBS. 14.—In Rev., ii, 17th, we read, “Which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it,” and again, xiii, 17th, “That no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark.” The following text is inaccurate, but not in the construction of the nominative they: “All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given.”—Matt., xix, 11. The version ought to have been, “Not all men can receive this saying, but they only to whom it is given:” i.e., “they only can receive it, to whom there is given power to receive it.” Of but with a nominative, examples may be multiplied indefinitely. The following are as good as any: “There is no God but He.”—Sale’s Koran, p. 27. “The former none but He could execute.”—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 317. “There was nobody at home but I.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 95. “A fact, of which as none but he could be conscious, [so] none but he could be the publisher of it.”—Pope’s Works, Vol. iii, p. 117. “Few but they who are involved in the vices, are involved in the irreligion of the times.”—Brown’s Estimate, i, 101.

* S. W. Clark, by reckoning “as” a “preposition,” perverts the construction of sentences like this, and inserts a wrong case after the conjunction. See Clark’s Practical Grammar, pp. 92 and 178; also this Syntax, Obs. 6 and Obs. 18, on Conjunctions.

"I claim my right. No Grecian prince but I
Has power this bow to grant, or to deny."—Pope, Odys., B. xxi, l. 272.

"Thus she, and none but she, the insulting rage
Of heretics oppos'd from age to age."—Dryden's Poems, p. 98.

In opposition to all these authorities, and many more that might be added, we have, with now and then a text of false syntax, the absurd opinion of perhaps a score or two of our grammarians; one of whom imagines he has found in the following couplet from Swift, an example to the purpose; but he forgets that the verb let governs the objective case:

"Let none but him who rules the thunder, Attempt to part these twain asunder."—Perley's Gram., p. 62.

OBS. 15.—It is truly a wonder, that so many professed critics should not see the absurdity of taking but and save for "prepositions," when this can be done only by condemning the current usage of nearly all good authors, as well as the common opinion of most grammarians; and the greater is the wonder, because they seem to do it innocently, or to teach it childishly, as not knowing that they cannot justify both sides, when the question lies between opposite and contradictory principles. By this sort of simplicity, which approves of errors, if much practised, and of opposites, or essential contraries, when authorities may be found for them, no work, perhaps, is more strikingly characterized, than the popular School Grammar of W. H. Wells. This author says, "The use of but as a preposition is approved by J. E. Worcester, John Walker, R. C. Smith, Picket, Hiley, Angus, Lynde, Hull, Powers, Spear, Farnum, Fowle, Goldsbury, Perley, Cobb, Badgley, Cooper, Jones, Davis, Beall, Hendrick, Hazen, and Goodenow."—School Gram., 1850, p. 178. But what if all these authors do prefer, "but him," and "save him," where ten times as many would say, "but he," "save he?" Is it therefore difficult to determine which party is right? Or is it proper for a grammarian to name sundry authorities on both sides, excite doubt in the mind of his reader, and leave the matter unsettled? "The use of but as a preposition," he also states, "is discountenanced by G. Brown, Sanborn, Murray, S. Oliver, and several other grammarians. (See also an able article in the Mass. Common School Journal, Vol. ii, p. 19.)"—School Gram., p. 178.

OBS. 16.—Wells passes no censure on the use of nominatives after but and save; does not intimate which case is fittest to follow these words; gives no false syntax under his rule for the regimen of prepositions; but inserts there the following brief remarks and examples:

"REM. 3.—The word save is frequently used to perform the office of a preposition; as, 'And all desisted, all save him alone.'—Wordsworth."

"REM. 4.—But is sometimes employed as a preposition, in the sense of except; as, 'The boy stood on the burning deck, Whence all but him had fled.'—Hemans."—Ib., p. 167.

Now, "BUT," says Worcester, as well as Tooke and others, was "originally bot, contracted from be out," and, if this notion of its etymology is just, it must certainly be followed by the nominative case, rather than by the objective; for the imperative be or be out governs no case, admits no additional term but a nominative—an obvious and important fact, quite overlooked by those who call but a preposition. According to Allen H. Weld, but and save "are commonly considered prepositions," but "are more commonly termed conjunctions!” This author repeats Wells’s examples of “save him,” and “but him,” as being right; and mixes them with opposite examples of “save he,” “but he,” “save I,” which he thinks to be more right!—Wells’s Gram., p. 187.

OBS. 17.—Professor Fowler, too, an other author remarkable for a facility of embracing incompatibles, contraries, or dubieties, not only condemns as “false syntax” the use of save for an exceptive conjunction. (§587. ¶28,) but cites approvingly from Latham the following very strange absurdity: “One and the same word, in one and the same sentence, may be a Conjunction or [a] Preposition, as the case may be: [as] All fled but John.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, § 555. This is equivalent to saying, that “one and the same sentence” may be two different sentences; may, without error, be understood in two different senses; may be rightly taken, resolved, and parsed in two different ways! Nay, it is equivalent to a denial of the old logical position, that “It is impossible for a thing to be and not be at the same time;” for it supposes “but,” in the instance given, to be at once both a conjunction and not a conjunction, both a preposition and not a preposition, “as the case may be!” It is true, that “one and the same word” may sometimes be differently parsed by different grammarians, and possibly even an adept may doubt who or what is right. But what ambiguity of construction, or what diversity of interpretation, proceeding from the same hand, can these admissions be supposed to warrant? The foregoing citation is a boyish attempt to justify different modes of parsing the same expression, on the ground that the expression itself is equivocal. “All fled but John,” is thought to mean equally well, “All fled but he,” and, “All fled but him,” while these latter expressions are erroneously presumed to be alike good English, and to have a difference of meaning corresponding to their difference of construction. Now, what is equivocal, or ambiguous, being therefore erroneous, is to be corrected, rather than parsed in any way. But I deny both the ambiguity and the difference of meaning which these critics profess to find among the said phrases. “John fled not, but all the rest fled,” is virtually what is told us in each of them; but, in the form, “All fled but him,” it is told ungrammatically; in the other two, correctly.

OBS. 18.—In Latin, cum with an ablative, sometimes has, or is supposed to have, the force of the conjunction et with a nominative; as, “Dux cum aliquot principibus capiuntur.”—LIVY: W. Allen’s Gram., p. 131. In imitation of this construction, some English writers have substituted with for and, and varied the verb accordingly; as, “A long course of time, with a variety of accidents and circumstances, are requisite to produce those revolutions.”—HUME: Allen’s Gram., p. 131; Ware’s, 12; Priestley’s, 186. This phraseology, though censured by Allen, was expressly approved by Priestley, who introduced the present example, as his proof text under the following observation: “It is not necessary that the two subjects of an affirmation should stand in the very same construction, to require the verb to be in the plural number. If one of them be made to depend upon the other by a connecting particle, it may, in some cases, have the same force, as if it were independent of it.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 186. Lindley Murray, on the contrary, condemns this doctrine, and after citing the same example with others, says: “It is however, proper to observe that these modes of expression do not appear to be warranted by the just principles of construction.”—Octavo Gram., p. 150. He then proceeds to prove his point, by alleging that the preposition governs the objective case in English, and the ablative in Latin, and that what is so governed, cannot be the nominative, or any part of it. All this is true enough, but still some men who know it perfectly well, will now and then write as if they did not believe it. And so it was with the writers of Latin and Greek. They sometimes wrote bad syntax; and the grammarians have not always seen and censured their errors as they ought. Since the preposition makes its object only an adjunct of the preceding noun, or of something else, I imagine that any construction which thus assumes two different cases as joint nominatives or joint antecedents, must needs be inherently faulty.

OBS. 19.—Dr. Adam simply remarks, “The plural is sometimes used after the preposition cum put for et; as, Remo cum fratre Quirinus jura dabunt. Virg.”—Latin and English Gram., p. 207; Gould’s Adam’s Latin Gram., p. 204; W. Allen’s English Gram., 131. This example is not fairly cited; though many have adopted the perversion, as if they knew no better. Alexander has it in a worse form still: “Quirinus, cum fratre, jura dabunt.”—Latin Gram., p. 47. Virgil’s words are, “Cana FIDES, et VESTA, Remo cum fratre Quirinus, Jura dabunt.”—Æneid, B. i, l. 296. Nor is cum here “put for et,” unless we suppose also an antiptosis of Remo fratre for Remus frater; and then what shall the literal meaning be, and how shall the rules of syntax be accommodated to such changes? Fair examples, that bear upon the point, may, however, be adduced from good authors, and in various languages; but the question is, are they correct in syntax? Thus Dr. Robertson: “The palace of Pizarro, together with the houses of several of his adherents, were pillaged by the soldiers.”—Hist. of Amer., Vol. ii, p. 133. To me, this appears plainly ungrammatical; and, certainly, there are ways enough in which it may be corrected. First, with the present connective retained, “were” ought to be was. Secondly, if were be retained, “together with” ought to be changed to and, or and also. Thirdly, we may well change both, and say, “The palace of Pizarro, as well as the houses of several of his adherents, was pillaged by the soldiers.” Again, in Mark, ix, 4th, we read: “And there appeared unto them Elias, with Moses; and they were talking with Jesus.” If this text meant that the three disciples were talking with Jesus, it would be right as it stands; but St. Matthew has it, “And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias, talking with him;” and our version in Luke is, “And, behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias.”—Chap. ix, 30. By these corresponding texts, then, we learn, that the pronoun they, which our translators inserted, was meant for “Elias with Moses,” but the Greek verb for “appeared,” as used by Mark, is singular, and agrees only with Elias. “Καὶ ὤφθη αὐτοῖς Ἠλίας σὺν Μωσέϊ · καὶ ἦσαν συλλαλοῦντες τῷ Ἰησοῦ.”—“Et apparuit illis Elias cum Mose, et erant colloquentes Jesu.”—Montanus. “Et visus est eis Elias cum Mose, qui colloquebantur cum Jesu.”—Beza. This is as discrepant as our version, though not so ambiguous. The French Bible avoids the incongruity: “Et iis virent paroître Moyse et Elie, qui s’entretenoient avec Jésus.” That is, “And there appeared to them Moses and Elias, who were talking with Jesus.” Perhaps the closest and best version of the Greek would be, “And there appeared to them Elias, with Moses;* and these two were talking with Jesus.” There is, in our Bible, an other instance of the construction now in question; but it has no support from the Septuagint, the Vulgate, or the French: to wit, “The second [lot came forth] to Gedaliah, who with his brethren and sons were twelve.”—1 Chron., xxv, 9. Better: “and he, his brethren, and his sons, were twelve.”

OBS. 20.—Cobbett, who, though he wrote several grammars, was but a very superficial grammarian, seems never to have doubted the propriety of putting with for and; and yet

---

* Murray gives us the following text for false grammar, under the head of Strength: “And Elias with Moses appeared to them.”—Exercises, 8vo, p. 135. This he corrects thus: “And there appeared to them Elias with Moses.”—Key, 8vo, p. 266. He omits the comma after Elias, which some copies of the Bible contain, and others do not. Whether he supposed the verb appeared to be singular or plural, I cannot tell; and he did not extend his quotation to the pronoun they, which immediately follows, and in which alone the incongruity lies.

he was confessedly not a little puzzled to find out when to use a singular, and when a plural verb, after a nominative with such “a sort of addition made to it.” The 246th paragraph of his English Grammar is a long and fruitless attempt to fix a rule for the guidance of the learner in this matter. After dashing off a culpable example, “Sidmouth, with Oliver the spye, have brought Brandreth to the block;” or, as his late editions have it, “The Tyrant, with the Spy, have brought Peter to the block.” He adds: “We hesitate which to employ, the singular or the plural verb; that is to say, has or have. The meaning must be our guide. If we mean, that the act has been done by the Tyrant himself, and that the spy has been a mere involuntary agent, then we ought to use the singular; but if we believe that the spy has been a co-operator, an associate, an accomplice, then we must use the plural verb.” Ay, truly; but must we not also, in the latter case, use and, and not with? After some further illustrations, he says: “When with means along with, together with, in Company with, and the like, it is nearly the same as and; and then the plural verb must be used: [as,] ‘He, with his brothers, are able to do much.’ Not, ‘is able to do much.’ If the pronoun be used instead of brothers, it will be in the objective case: ‘He, with them, are able to do much.’ But this is no impediment to the including of the noun (represented by them) in the nominative.” I wonder what would be an impediment to the absurdities of such a dogmatist! The following is his last example: “Zeal, with discretion, do much;’ and not ‘does much;’ for we mean, on the contrary, that it does nothing. It is the meaning that must determine which of the numbers we ought to employ.” This author’s examples are all fictions of his own, and such of them as here have a plural verb, are wrong. His rule is also wrong, and contrary to the best authority. St. Paul says to Timothy, “Godliness with contentment is great gain:”—1 Tim., vi, 6. This text is right; but Cobbett’s principle would go to prove it erroneous. Is he the only man who has ever had a right notion of its meaning? or is he not rather at fault in his interpretations?

OBS. 21.—There is one other apparent exception to Rule 16th, (or perhaps a real one,) in which there is either an ellipsis of the preposition with, or else the verb is made singular because the first noun only is its true subject, and the others are explanatory nominatives to which the same verb must be understood in the plural number; as, “A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour.”—ADDISON: in Johnson’s Dict., w. All. “Down comes the tree, nest, eagles, and all.”—See All, ibidem. Here goes and comes are necessarily made singular, the former agreeing with torch and the latter with tree; and, if the other nouns, which are like an explanatory parenthesis, are nominatives, as they appear to me to be, they must be subjects of go and come understood. Cobbett teaches us to say, “The bag, with the guineas and dollars in it, were stolen,” and not, was stolen. “For,” says he, “if we say was stolen, it is possible for us to mean, that the bag only was stolen,”—English Gram., ¶ 246. And I suppose he would say, “The bag, guineas, dollars, and all, were stolen,” and not, “was stolen;” for here a rule of syntax might be urged, in addition to his false argument from the sense. But the meaning of the former sentence is, “The bag was stolen, with the guineas and dollars in it;” and the meaning of the latter is, “The bag was stolen, guineas, dollars, and all.” Nor can there be any doubt about the meaning, place the words which way you will; and whatever, in either case, may be the true construction of the words in the parenthetical or explanatory phrase, they should not, I think, prevent the verb from agreeing with the first noun only. But if the other nouns intervene without affecting this concord, and without a preposition to govern them, it may be well to distinguish them in the punctuation; as, “The bag, (guineas, dollars, and all,) was stolen.”

NOTES TO RULE XVI.

NOTE I.—When the conjunction and between two nominatives appears to require a plural verb, but such form of the verb is not agreeable, it is better to reject or change the connective, that the verb may stand correctly in the singular number; as, “There is a peculiar force and beauty in this figure.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 224. Better: “There is a peculiar force, as well as a peculiar beauty, in this figure.” “What means this restless stir and commotion of mind?”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 242. Better: “What means this restless stir, this commotion of mind?”

NOTE II.—When two subjects or antecedents are connected, one of which is taken affirmatively, and the other negatively, they belong to different propositions; and the verb or pronoun must agree with the affirmative subject, and be understood to the other: as “Diligent industry, and not mean savings, produces honourable competence.”—“Not a loud voice but strong proofs bring conviction.”—“My poverty, but not my will, consents.”—Shakespeare.

NOTE III.—When two subjects or antecedents are connected by as well as, but, or save, they belong to different propositions; and, (unless one of them is preceded by the adverb not,) the verb and pronoun must agree with the former and be understood to the latter: as, “Veracity, as well as justice, is to be our rule of life.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 283. “The lowest mechanic, as well as the richest citizen, may boast that thousands of his fellow-creatures are employed for him.”—Percival’s Tales, ii, 177. “These principles, as well as every just rule of criticism, are founded upon the sensitive part of our nature.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. xxvi. “Nothing but wailings was heard.”—“None but thou can aid us.”—“No mortal man, save he,” &c., “had e’er survived to say he saw.”—Sir W. Scott.

NOTE IV.—When two or more subjects or antecedents are preceded by the adjective each, every, or no, they are taken separately; and, (except no be followed by a plural noun,) they require the verb and pronoun to be in the singular number: as, “No rank, no honour, no fortune, no condition in life, makes the guilty mind happy.”—“Every phrase and every figure which he uses, tends to render the picture more lively and complete.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 179.

“And every sense, and every heart, is joy.”—Thomson.

“Each beast, each insect, happy in its own.”—Pope.

NOTE V.—When any words or terms are to be taken conjointly as subjects or antecedents, the conjunction and, (in preference to with, or, nor, or any thing else,) must connect them. The following sentence is therefore inaccurate; with should be and; or else were should be was: “One of them, [the] wife of Thomas Cole, with her husband, were shot down, the others escaped.”—Hutchinson’s Hist., Vol. ii, p. 86. So, in the following couplet, or should be and, or else engines should be engine:

“What if the head, the eye, or ear repined,
To serve mere engines to the ruling mind?”—Pope.

NOTE VI.—Improper omissions must be supplied; but when there occurs a true ellipsis in the construction of joint nominatives or joint antecedents, the verb or pronoun must agree with them in the plural, just as if all the words were expressed: as, “The second and the third Epistle of John are each but one short chapter.”—“The metaphorical and the literal meaning are improperly mixed.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 339. “The Doctrine of Words, separately consider’d, and in a Sentence, are Things distinct enough.”—Brightland’s Gram., Pref., p. iv. Better perhaps: “The doctrine of words separately considered, and that of words in a sentence, are things distinct enough.”

“The Curii’s and the Camilli’s little field,
To vast extended territories yield.”—Rowe’s Lucan, B. i, l. 320.

NOTE VII.—Two or more distinct subject phrases connected by and, require a plural verb, and generally a plural noun too, if a nominative follow the verb; as, “To be wise in our own eyes, to be wise in the opinion of the world, and to be wise in the sight of our Creator, are three things so very different, as rarely to coincide.”—Blair. “‘This picture of my friend,’ and ‘This picture of my friend’s,’ suggest very different ideas.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 71; Murray’s, i, 178.

“Read of this burgess—on the stone appear,
How worthy he! how virtuous! and how dear!”—Crabbe.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XVI.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—THE VERB AFTER JOINT NOMINATIVES.

“So much ability and merit is seldom found.”—Murray’s Key, 12mo, p. 18; Merchant’s School Gram., p. 190.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the verb is is in the singular number, and does not correctly agree with its two nominatives, ability and merit, which are connected by and, and taken conjointly. But, according to Rule 16th, “When a verb has two or more nominatives connected by and, it must agree with them jointly in the plural, because they are taken together.” Therefore, is should be are; thus, “So much ability and merit are seldom found.” Or: “So much ability and so much merit are seldom found.”]

“The syntax and etymology of the language is thus spread before the learner.”—Bullions’s English Gram., 2d Edition, Rec., p. iii. “Dr. Johnson tells us, that in English poetry the accent and the quantity of syllables is the same thing.”—J. Q. Adams’s Rhet., ii, 213. “Their general scope and tendency, having never been clearly apprehended, is not remembered at all.”—Murray’s Gram., i, p. 126. “The soil and sovereignty was not purchased of the natives.”—Knapp’s Lect. on Amer. Lit., p. 55. “The boldness, freedom, and variety of our blank verse, is infinitely more favourable than rhyme, to all kinds of sublime poetry.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 40. “The vivacity and sensibility of the Greeks seems to have been much greater than ours.”—Ib., p. 253. “For sometimes the Mood and Tense is signified by the Verb, sometimes they are signified of the Verb by something else.”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 254. “The Verb and the Noun making a complete Sense, which the Participle and the Noun does not.”—Ib., p. 255. “The growth and decay of passions and emotions, traced through all their mazes, is a subject too extensive for an undertaking like the present.”—Kames El. of Crit., i, 108. “The true meaning and etymology of some of his words was lost.”—Knight, on the Greek Alph., p. 37. “When the force and direction of personal satire is no longer understood.”—Junius, p. 5. “The frame and condition of man admits of no other principle.”—Brown’s Estimate, ii, 54. “Some considerable time and care was necessary.”—Ib., ii 150. “In consequence of this idea, much ridicule and censure has been thrown upon Milton.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 428. “With rational beings, nature and reason is the same thing.”—Collier’s Antoninus, p. 111. “And the flax and the barley was smitten.”—Exod., ix, 31. “The colon, and semicolon, divides a period, this with, and that without a connective.”—J. Ware’s Gram., p. 27. “Consequently wherever space and time is found, there God must also be.”—Sir Isaac Newton. “As the past tense and perfect participle of love ends in ed, it is regular.”—Chandler’s Gram., p. 40; New Edition, p. 66. “But the usual arrangement and nomenclature prevents this from being readily seen.”—Butler’s Practical Gram., p. 3. “Do and did simply implies opposition or emphasis.”—Alex. Murray’s Gram., p. 41. “I and another make we, plural: Thou and another is as much as ye: He, she, or it and another make they”—Ib., p. 124. “I and another, is as much as (we) the first Person Plural; Thou and another, is as much as (ye) the second Person Plural; He, she, or it, and another, is as much as (they) the third Person Plural.”—British Gram., p. 193; Buchanan’s Syntax, p. 76. “God and thou art two, and thou and thy neighbour are two.”—The Love Conquest, p. 25. “Just as an and a has arisen out of the numeral one.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo. 1850, §200. “The tone and style of each of them, particularly the first and the last, is very different.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 246. “Even as the roebuck and the hart is eaten.”—Deut., xiii, 22. “Then I may conclude that two and three makes not five.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 354. “Which at sundry times thou and thy brethren hast received from us.”—Ib., i, 165. “Two and two is four, and one is five.”—POPE: Lives of the Poets, p. 490. “Humility and knowledge with poor apparel, excels pride and ignorance under costly array.”—Day’s Gram., Parsing Lesson, p. 100. “A page and a half has been added to the section on composition.”—Bullions’s E. Gram., 5th Ed., Pref., p. vii. “Accuracy and expertness in this exercise is an important acquisition.”—Ib., p. 71.

“Woods and groves are of thy dressing,
Hill and dale doth boast thy blessing.”—Milton’s Poems, p. 139.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—THE VERB BEFORE JOINT NOMINATIVES.

“There is a good and a bad, a right and a wrong in taste, as in other things.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 21. “Whence has arisen much stiffness and affectation.”—Ib., p. 133. “To this error is owing, in a great measure, that intricacy and harshness, in his figurative language, which I before remarked.”—Ib., p. 150; Jamieson’s Rhet., 157. “Hence, in his Night Thoughts, there prevails an obscurity and hardness in his style.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 150. “There is, however, in that work much good sense, and excellent criticism.”—Ib., p. 401. “There is too much low wit and scurrility in Plautus.”—Ib., p. 481. “There is too much reasoning and refinement; too much pomp and studied beauty in them.”—Ib., p. 468. “Hence arises the structure and characteristic expression of exclamation.”—Rush on the Voice, p. 229. “And such pilots is he and his brethren, according to their own confession.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 314. “Of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus: who concerning the truth have erred.”—2 Tim., ii, 17. “Of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander; whom I have delivered unto Satan.”—1 Tim., i, 20. “And so was James and John, the sons of Zebedee.”—Luke, v, 10. “Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing.”—James, iii, 10. “Out of the mouth of the Most High proceedeth not evil and good.”—Lam., iii, 38. “In which there is most plainly a right and a wrong.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 215. “In this sentence there is both an actor and an object.”—Smith’s Inductive Gram., p. 14. “In the breast-plate was placed the mysterious Urim and Thummim.”—Milman’s Jews, i, 88. “What is the gender, number, and person of those in the first?”—Smith’s Productive Gram., p. 19. “There seems to be a familiarity and want of dignity in it.”—Priestley’s Gram., p.

150. "It has been often asked, what is Latin and Greek?"—Literary Convention, p. 209. "For where does beauty and high wit But in your constellation meet?"—Hudibras, p. 134. "Thence to the land where flows Ganges and Indus."—Paradise Lost, B. ix, l. 81. "On these foundations seems to rest the midnight riot and dissipation of modern assemblies."—Brown's Estimate, ii, 46. "But what has disease, deformity, and filth, upon which the thoughts can be allured to dwell?"—Johnson's Life of Swift, p. 492. "How is the gender and number of the relative known?"—Bullions, Practical Lessons, p. 32.

"High rides the sun, thick rolls the dust,
And feebler speeds the blow and thrust."—Sir W. Scott.

UNDER NOTE I.—CHANGE THE CONNECTIVE.

"In every language there prevails a certain structure and analogy of parts, which is understood to give foundation to the most reputable usage."—Blair's Rhet., p. 90. "There runs through his whole manner, a stiffness and affectation, which renders him very unfit to be considered a general model."—Ib., p. 102. "But where declamation and improvement in speech is the sole aim"—Ib., p. 257. "For it is by these chiefly, that the train of thought, the course of reasoning, and the whole progress of the mind, in continued discourse of all kinds, is laid open."—Lowth's Gram., p. 103. "In all writing and discourse, the proper composition and structure of sentences is of the highest importance."—Blair's Rhet., p. 101. "Here the wishful look and expectation of the beggar naturally leads to a vivid conception of that which was the object of his thoughts."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 386. "Who say, that the outward naming of Christ, and signing of the cross, puts away devils."—Barclay's Works, i, 146. "By which an oath and penalty was to be imposed upon the members."—Junius, p. 6. "Light and knowledge, in what manner soever afforded us, is equally from God."—Butler's Analogy, p. 264. "For instance, sickness and untimely death is the consequence of intemperance."—Ib., p. 78. "When grief, and blood ill-tempered vexeth him."—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 256. "Does continuity and connexion create sympathy and relation in the parts of the body?"—Collier's Antoninus, p. 111. "His greatest concern, and highest enjoyment, was to be approved in the sight of his Creator."—Murray's Key, p. 224. "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"—2 Sam., iii, 38. "What is vice and wickedness? No rarity, you may depend on it."—Collier's Antoninus, p. 107. "There is also the fear and apprehension of it."—Butler's Analogy, p. 87. "The apostrophe and s, ('s) is an abbreviation for is, the termination of the old English genitive."—Bullions, E. Gram., p. 17. "Ti, ce, and ci, when followed by a vowel, usually has the sound of sh; as in partial, special, ocean."—Weld's Gram., p. 15.

"Bitter constraint and sad occasion dear Compels me to disturb your season due."—Milton's Lycidas.

"Debauches and excess, though with less noise,
As great a portion of mankind destroys."—Waller, p. 55.

UNDER NOTE II.—AFFIRMATION WITH NEGATION.

"Wisdom, and not wealth, procure esteem."—Brown's Inst., p. 156. "Prudence, and not pomp, are the basis of his fame."—Ib. "Not fear, but labour have overcome him."—Ib. "The decency, and not the abstinence, make the difference."—Ib. "Not her beauty, but her talents attracts attention."—Ib. "It is her talents, and not her beauty, that attracts attention."—Ib. "It is her beauty, and not her talents that attract attention."—Ib.

“His belly, not his brains, this impulse give:
He’ll grow immortal; for he cannot live.”—Young, to Pope.

UNDER NOTE III.—AS WELL AS, BUT, OR SAVE.

“Common sense as well as piety tell us these are proper.”—Family Commentary, p. 64. “For without it the critic, as well as the undertaker, ignorant of any rule, have nothing left but to abandon themselves to chance.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 42. “And accordingly hatred as well as love are extinguished by long absence.”—Ib., i, 113. “But at every turn the richest melody as well as the sublimest sentiments are conspicuous.”—Ib., ii, 121. “But it, as well as the lines immediately subsequent, defy all translation.”—Coleridge’s Introduction, p. 96. “But their religion, as well as their customs, and manners, were strangely misrepresented.”—BOLINGBROKE, ON HISTORY, p. 123; Priestley’s Gram., p. 192; Murray’s Exercises, p. 47. “But his jealous policy, as well as the fatal antipathy of Fonseca, were conspicuous.”—Robertson’s America, i, 191. “When their extent as well as their value were unknown.”—Ib., ii, 138. “The Etymology, as well as the Syntax, of the more difficult parts of speech are reserved for his attention [at a later period].”—Parker and Fox’s E. Gram., Part i, p. 3. “What I myself owe to him, no one but myself know.”—See Wright’s Athens, p. 96. “None, but thou, O mighty prince! canst avert the blow.”—Inst., p. 156. “Nothing, but frivolous amusements, please the indolent.”—Ib.

“Nought, save the gurglings of the rill, were heard.”—G. B.
“All songsters, save the hooting owl, was mute.”—G. B.

UNDER NOTE IV.—EACH, EVERY, OR NO.

“Give every word, and every member, their due weight and force.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 110. “And to one of these belong every noun, and every third person of every verb.”—Wilson’s Essay on Gram., p. 74. “No law, no restraint, no regulation, are required to keep him in bounds.”—Literary Convention, p. 260. “By that time, every window and every door in the street were full of heads.”—N. Y. Observer, No. 503. “Every system of religion, and every school of philosophy, stand back from this field, and leave Jesus Christ alone, the solitary example”—The Corner Stone, p. 17. “Each day, and each hour, bring their portion of duty.”—Inst., p. 156. “And every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented, gathered themselves unto him.”—1 Sam., xxii, 2. “Every private Christian and member of the church ought to read and peruse the Scriptures, that they may know their faith and belief founded upon them.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 340. “And every mountain and island were moved out of their places.”—Rev., vi, 14.

“No bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride,
No cavern’d hermit rest self-satisfied.”

UNDER NOTE V.—WITH, OR, &C. FOR AND.

“The side A, with the sides B and C, compose the triangle.”—Tobitt’s Gram., p. 48; Felch’s, 69; Ware’s, 12. “The stream, the rock, or the tree, must each of them stand forth, so as to make a figure in the imagination.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 390. “While this, with euphony, constitute, finally, the whole.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 293. “The bag, with the guineas and dollars in it, were stolen.”—Cobbett’s E. Gram., ¶246. “Sobriety, with great industry and talent, enable a man to perform great deeds.”—Ib., ¶245. “The it, together with the verb to be, express states of being.”—Ib., ¶190. “Where Leonidas the Spartan king, with his chosen band, fighting for their country, were cut off to the last man.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 203. “And Leah also, with her children, came near and bowed themselves.”—Gen., xxxiii, 7. “The First or Second will, either of them, by themselves coalesce with the Third, but not with each other.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 74. “The whole must centre in the query, whether Tragedy or Comedy are hurtful and dangerous representations?”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 215. “Grief as well as joy are infectious: the emotions they raise in the spectator resemble them perfectly.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 157. “But in all other words the Qu are both sounded.”—Ensell’s Gram., p. 16. “Qu (which are always together) have the sound of ku or k, as in queen, opaque.”—Goodenow’s Gram., p. 45. “In this selection the ai form distinct syllables.”—Walker’s Key, p. 290. “And a considerable village, with gardens, fields, &c., extend around on each side of the square.”—Liberator, Vol. ix, p. 140. “Affection, or interest, guide our notions and behaviour in the affairs of life; imagination and passion affect the sentiments that we entertain in matters of taste.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 171. “She heard none of those intimations of her defects, which envy, petulance, or anger, produce among children.”—Rambler, No. 189. “The King, with the Lords and Commons, constitute an excellent form of government.”—Crombie’s Treatise, p. 242. “If we say, ‘I am the man, who commands you,’ the relative clause, with the antecedent man, form the predicate.”—Ib., p. 266.

“The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue ethereal sky,
And spangled heav’ns, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim.”—Addison.

Murray’s Key, p. 174; Day’s Gram., p. 92; Farnum’s, 106.

UNDER NOTE VI.—ELLIPTICAL CONSTRUCTIONS.

“There is a reputable and a disreputable practice.”—Adams’s Rhet., Vol. i, p. 350. “This and this man was born in her.”—Milton’s Psalms, lxxxvii. “This and that man was born in her.”—Psal. lxxxvii, 5. “This and that man was born there.”—Hendrick’s Gram., p. 94. “Thus le in lēgo and lēgi seem to be sounded equally long.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 253; Gould’s, 243. “A distinct and an accurate articulation forms the groundwork of good delivery.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 25. “How is vocal and written language understood?”—C. W. Sanders, Spelling-Book, p. 7. “The good, the wise, and the learned man is an ornament to human society.”—Bartlett’s Reader. “On some points, the expression of song and speech is identical.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. 425. “To every room there was an open and secret passage.”—Johnson’s Rasselas, p. 13. “There iz such a thing az tru and false taste, and the latter az often directs fashion, az the former.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 401. “There is such a thing as a prudent and imprudent institution of life, with regard to our health and our affairs”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 210. “The lot of the outcasts of Israel and the dispersed of Judah, however different in one respect, have in another corresponded with wonderful exactness.”—Hope of Israel, p. 301. “On these final syllables the radical and vanishing movement is performed.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. 64. “To be young or old, good, just, or the contrary, are physical or moral events.”—SPURZHEIM: Felch’s Comp. Gram., p. 29. “The eloquence of George Whitfield and of John Wesley was of a very different character each from the other.”—Dr. Sharp. “The affinity of m for the series b, and of n for the series t, give occasion for other Euphonic changes.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., §77.

“Pylades’ soul and mad Orestes’, was
In these, if we believe Pythagoras”—Cowley’s Poems, p. 3.

UNDER NOTE VII.—DISTINCT SUBJECT PHRASES.

“To be moderate in our views, and to proceed temperately in the pursuit of them, is the best way to ensure success.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 206. “To be of any species, and to have a right to the name of that species, is all one.”—Locke’s Essay, p. 300. “With whom to will and to do is the same.”—Jamieson’s Sacred History, Vol. ii, p. 22. “To profess, and to possess, is very different things.”—Inst., p. 156. “To do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God, is duties of universal obligation.”—Ib. “To be round or square, to be solid or fluid, to be large or small, and to be moved swiftly or slowly, is all equally alien from the nature of thought.”—Ib. “The resolving of a sentence into its elements or parts of speech and stating the Accidents which belong to these, is called PARSING.”—Bullion’s Pract. Lessons, p. 9. “To spin and to weave, to knit and to sew, was once a girl’s employment; but now to dress and catch a beau, is all she calls enjoyment.”—Lynn News, Vol. 8, No. 1.

RULE XVII.—FINITE VERBS.

When a Verb has two or more nominatives connected by or or nor, it must agree with them singly, and not as if taken together: as, “Fear or jealousy affects him.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 133. “Nor eye, nor listening ear, an object finds: creation sleeps.”—Young. “Neither character nor dialogue was yet understood.”—L. Murray’s Gram., p. 151.

“The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks, Safest and seemliest by her husband stays.”—Milton, P. L., ix, 267.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XVII.

OBS. 1.—To this rule, so far as its application is practicable, there are properly no exceptions; for, or and nor being disjunctive conjunctions, the nominatives are of course to assume the verb separately, and as agreeing with each. Such agreement seems to be positively required by the alternativeness of the expression. Yet the ancient grammarians seldom, if at all, insisted on it. In Latin and Greek, a plural verb is often employed with singular nominatives thus connected; as,

“Tunc nec mens mini, nec color
Certa sede manent.”—HORACE. See W. Allen’s Gram., p. 133.

“Ἐὰν δε ἀδελφος ἢ ἀδελφὴ γυμνοὶ ὑπάρχωσι, καὶ λειπόμενοι ὥσι τῆς φημέρου τροφῆς.”—James, ii. 15. And the best scholars have sometimes improperly imitated this construction in English; as, “Neither Virgil nor Homer were deficient in any of the former beauties.”—DRYDEN’S PREFACE: Brit. Poets, Vol. iii, p. 168. “Neither Saxon nor Roman have availed to add any idea to his [Plato’s] categories.”—R. W. EMERSON: Liberator, No. 996.

“He comes—nor want nor cold his course delay:
Hide, blushing Glory! hide Pultowa’s day.”—Dr. Johnson.

“No monstrous height, or breadth, or length, appear,
The whole at once is bold and regular.”—Pope, on Crit., l. 250.

OBS. 2.—When two collective nouns of the singular form are connected by or or nor, the verb may agree with them in the plural number, because such agreement is adapted to each of them, according to Rule 15th; as, “Why mankind, or such a part of mankind, are placed in this condition.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 213. “But neither the Board of Control nor the Court of Directors have any scruples about sanctioning the abuses of which I have spoken.”—Glory and Shame of England, Vol. ii, p. 70.

OBS. 3.—When a verb has nominatives of different persons or numbers, connected by or or nor, an explicit concord with each is impossible; because the verb cannot be of different persons or numbers at the same time; nor is it so, even when its form is made the same in all the persons and numbers: thus, “I, thou, [or] he, may affirm; we, ye, or they, may affirm.”—Beattie’s Moral Science, p. 36. Respecting the proper management of the verb when its nominatives thus disagree, the views of our grammarians are not exactly coincident. Few however are ignorant enough, or rash enough, to deny that there may be an implicit or implied concord in such cases,—a zeugma of the verb in English, as well as of the verb or of the adjective in Latin or Greek. Of this, the following is a brief example: “But he nor I feel more.”—Dr. Young, Night iii, p. 35. And I shall by-and-by add others—enough, I hope, to confute those false critics who condemn all such phraseology.

OBS. 4.—W. Allen’s rule is this: “If the nominatives are of different numbers or persons, the verb agrees with the last; as, he or his brothers were there; neither you nor I am concerned.”—English Gram., p. 133. Lindley Murray, and others, say: (1.) “When singular pronouns, or a noun and pronoun, of different persons, are disjunctively connected, the verb must agree with that person which is placed nearest to it: as, ‘I or thou art to blame;’ ‘Thou or I am in fault;’ ‘I, or thou, or he, is the author of it;’ ‘George or I am the person.’ But it would be better to say; ‘Either I am to blame, or thou art,’ &c. (2.) When a disjunctive occurs between a singular noun, or pronoun, and a plural one, the verb is made to agree with the plural noun and pronoun: as, ‘Neither poverty nor riches were injurious to him;’ ‘I or they were offended by it.’ But in this case, the plural noun or pronoun, when it can conveniently be done, should be placed next to the verb.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 151; Smith’s New Gram., 128; Alger’s Gram., 54; Comly’s, 78 and 79; Merchant’s, 86; Picket’s, 175; and many more. There are other grammarians who teach, that the verb must agree with the nominative which is placed next to it, whether this be singular or plural; as, “Neither the servants nor the master is respected;”—“Neither the master nor the servants are respected.”—Alexander Murray’s Gram., p. 65. “But if neither the writings nor the author is in existence, the Imperfect should be used.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 107.

OBS. 5.—On this point, a new author has just given us the following precept and criticism: “Never connect by or, or nor, two or more names or substitutes that have the same asserter [i.e. verb] depending on them for sense, if when taken separately, they require different forms of the asserters. Examples. ‘Neither you nor I am concerned. Either he or thou wast there. Either they or he is faulty.’ These examples are as erroneous as it would be to say, ‘Neither you am concerned, nor am I.’ ‘Either he wast there, or thou wast.’ ‘Either they is faulty, or he is.’ The sentences should stand thus—‘Neither of us is concerned,’ or, ‘neither are you concerned, nor am I.’ ‘Either he was there, or thou wast.’ ‘Either they are faulty, or he is. They are, however, in all their impropriety, written according to the principles of Gould Brown’s grammar! and the theories of most of the former writers.”—Oliver B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 252. We shall see by-and-by who is right.

OBS. 6.—Cobbett also—while he approves of such English as, “He, with them, are able to do much,” for, “He and they are able to do much”—condemns expressly every possible example in which the verb has not a full and explicit concord with each of its nominatives, if they are connected by or or nor. His doctrine is this: “If nominatives of different numbers present themselves, we must not give them a verb which disagrees with either the one or the other. We must not say: 'Neither the halter nor the bayonets are sufficient to prevent us from obtaining our rights.' We must avoid this bad grammar by using a different form of words: as, 'We are to be prevented from obtaining our rights by neither the halter nor the bayonets.' And, why should we wish to write bad grammar, if we can express our meaning in good grammar?"—Cobbett's E. Gram., ¶ 242. This question would have more force, if the correction here offered did not convey a meaning widely different from that of the sentence corrected. But he goes on: "We cannot say, 'They or I am in fault; I, or they, or he, is the author of it; George or I am the person.' Mr. Lindley Murray says, that we may use these phrases; and that we have only to take care that the verb agree with that person which is placed nearest to it; but, he says also, that it would be better to avoid such phrases by giving a different turn to our words. I do not like to leave any thing to chance or to discretion, when we have a clear principle for our guide."—Ib., ¶ 243. This author's "clear principle" is merely his own confident assumption, that every form of figurative or implied agreement, every thing which the old grammarians denominated zeugma, is at once to be condemned as a solecism. He is however supported by an other late writer of much greater merit. See Churchill's New Gram., pp. 142 and 312.

OBS. 7.—If, in lieu of their fictitious examples, our grammarians would give us actual quotations from reputable authors, their instructions would doubtless gain something in accuracy, and still more in authority. "I or they were offended by it," and, "I, or thou, or he, is the author of it," are expressions that I shall not defend. They imply an egotistical speaker, who either does not know, or will not tell, whether he is offended or not,—whether he is the author or not! Again, there are expressions that are unobjectionable, and yet not conformable to any of the rules just quoted. That nominatives may be correctly connected by or or nor without an express agreement of the verb with each of them, is a point which can be proved to as full certainty as almost any other in grammar; Churchill, Cobbett, and Peirce to the contrary notwithstanding. But with which of the nominatives the verb shall expressly agree, or to which of them it may most properly be understood, is a matter not easy to be settled by any sure general rule. Nor is the lack of such a rule a very important defect, though the inculcation of a false or imperfect one may be. So judged at least the ancient grammarians, who noticed and named almost every possible form of the zeugma, without censuring any as being his English Grammar. In the Institutes of English Grammar, I noted first the usual form of this concord, and then the allowable exceptions; but a few late writers, we see, denounce every form of it, exceptions and all: and, standing alone in their notions of the figure, value their own authority more than that of all other critics together.

OBS. 8.—In English, as in other languages, when a verb has discordant nominatives connected disjunctively, it most commonly agrees expressly with that which is nearest, and only by implication, with the more remote; as, "When some word or words are dependent on the attribute."—Webster's Philos. Gram., p. 153. "To the first of these qualities, dulness or refinements are dangerous enemies."—Brown's Estimate, Vol. ii, p. 15. "He hazards his own life with that of his enemy, and one or both are very honorably murdered."—Webster's Essays, p. 235. "The consequence is, that they frown upon everyone whose faults or negligence interrupts or retards their lessons."—W. C. Woodbridge: Lit. Conv., p. 114. "Good intentions, or at least sincerity of purpose, was never denied her."—West's Letters, p. 43. "Yet this proves not that either he or we judge them to be the rule."—Barclay's Works, i, 157. "First clear yourselves of popery before you or thou dost throw it upon us."—Ib., i, 169. "Is the gospel or glad tidings of this salvation brought nigh unto all?”—Ib., i, 362. “Being persuaded, that either they, or their cause, is naught.”—Ib., i, 504. “And the reader may judge whether he or I do most fully acknowledge man’s fall.”—Ib., iii, 332. “To do justice to the Ministry, they have not yet pretended that any one, or any two, of the three Estates, have power to make a new law, without the concurrence of the third.”—Junius, Letter xvii. “The forest, or hunting-grounds, are deemed the property of the tribe.”—Robertson’s America, i, 313. “Birth or titles confer no preëminence.”—Ib., ii, 184. “Neither tobacco nor hides were imported from Caraccas into Spain.”—Ib., ii, 507. “The keys or seed-vessel of the maple has two large side-wings.”—The Friend, vii, 97. “An example or two are sufficient to illustrate the general observation.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of Lang., i, 58.

“Not thou, nor those thy factious arts engage,
Shall reap that harvest of rebellious rage.”—Dryden, p. 60.

OBS. 9.—But when the remoter nominative is the principal word, and the nearer one is expressed parenthetically, the verb agrees literally with the former, and only by implication, with the latter; as, “One example, (or ten,) says nothing against it.”—Leigh Hunt. “And we, (or future ages,) may possibly have a proof of it.”—Bp. Butler. So, when the alternative is merely in the words, not in the thought, the former term is sometimes considered the principal one, and is therefore allowed to control the verb; but there is always a harshness in this mixture of different numbers, and, to render such a construction tolerable, it is necessary to read the latter term like a parenthesis, and make the former emphatic: as, “A parenthesis, or brackets, consists of two angular strokes, or hooks, enclosing one or more words.”—Whiting’s Reader, p. 28. “To show us that our own schemes, or prudence, have no share in our advancements.”—Addison. “The Mexican figures, or picture-writing, represent things, not words; they exhibit images to the eye, not ideas to the understanding.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 243; English Reader, p. xiii. “At Travancore, Koprah, or dried cocoa-nut kernels, is monopolized by government.”—Maunder’s Gram., p. 12. “The Scriptures, or Bible, are the only authentic source.”—Bp. Tomline’s Evidences.

“Nor foes nor fortune take this power away;
 And is my Abelard less kind than they?”—Pope, p. 334.

OBS. 10.—The English adjective being indeclinable, we have no examples of some of the forms of zeugma which occur in Latin and Greek. But adjectives differing in number, are sometimes connected without a repetition of the noun; and, in the agreement of the verb, the noun which is understood, is less apt to be regarded than that which is expressed, though the latter be more remote; as, “There are one or two small irregularities to be noted.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 63. “There are one or two persons, and but one or two.”—Hazlitt’s Lectures. “There are one or two others.”—Crombie’s Treatise, p. 206. “There are one or two.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 319. “There are one or more seminaries in every province.”—H. E. Dwight: Lit. Conv., p. 133. “Whether one or more of the clauses are to be considered the nominative case.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 150. “So that, I believe, there is not more than one genuine example extant.”—Knight, on the Greek Alphabet, p. 10. “There is, properly, no more than one pause or rest in the sentence.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 329; Blair’s Rhet., p. 125. “Sometimes a small letter or two is added to the capital.”—Adam’s Lat. Gram., p. 223; Gould’s, 283. Among the examples in the seventh paragraph above, there is one like this last, but with a plural verb; and if either is objectionable, is should here be are. The preceding example, too, is such as I would not imitate. To L. Murray, the following sentence seemed false syntax, because one does not agree with persons: “He saw one or more persons enter the garden.”—Murray’s Exercises, Rule 8th, p. 54. In his Key, he has it thus: “He saw one person, or more than one, enter the garden.”—Oct. Gram., Vol. ii, p. 189. To me, this stiff correction, which many later grammarians have copied, seems worse than none. And the effect of the principle may be noticed in Murray’s style elsewhere; as, “When a semicolon, or more than one, have preceded.”—Octavo Gram., i, p. 277; Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 288. Here a ready writer would be very apt to prefer one of the following phrases: “When a semicolon or two have preceded,”—“When one or two semicolons have preceded,”—“When one or more semicolons have preceded.” It is better to write by guess, than to become systematically awkward in expression.

OBS. 11.—In Greek and Latin, the pronoun of the first person, according to our critics, is generally * placed first; as, “Εγὼ καὶ σὺ τα δίκαια ποιήσομεν. Xen.”—Milnes’s Gr. Gram., p. 120. That is, “Ego et tu justa faciemus.” Again: “Ego et Cicero valemus. Cic.”—Buchanan’s Pref., p. x; Adam’s Gram., 206; Gould’s, 203. “I and Cicero are well.”—Ib. But, in English, a modest speaker usually gives to others the precedence, and mentions himself last; as, “He, or thou, or I, must go.”—“Thou and I will do what is right.”—“Cicero and I are well.”—Dr. Adam.† Yet, in speaking of himself and his dependants, a person most commonly takes rank before them; as, “Your inestimable letters supported myself, my wife, and children, in adversity.”—Lucien Bonaparte, Charlemagne, p. v. “And I shall be destroyed, I and my house.”—Gen., xxxiv, 30. And in acknowledging a fault, misfortune, or censure, any speaker may assume the first place; as, “Both I and thou are in the fault.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 207. “Both I and you are in fault.”—Buchanan’s Syntax, p. ix. “Trusty did not do it; I and Robert did it.”—Edgeworth’s Stories.

“With critic scales, weighs out the partial wit,
What I, or you, or he, or no one writ.”—Lloyd’s Poems, p. 162.

OBS. 12.—According to the theory of this work, verbs themselves are not unfrequently connected, one to an other, by and, or, or nor; so that two or more of them, being properly in the same construction, may be parsed as agreeing with the same nominative: as, “So that the blind and dumb [man] both spake and saw.”—Matt., xii, 22. “That no one might buy or sell.”—Rev., xiii, 17. “Which see not, nor hear, nor know.”—Dan., v, 23. We have certainly very many examples like these, in which it is neither convenient nor necessary to suppose an ellipsis of the nominative before the latter verb, or before all but the first, as most of our grammarians do, whenever they find two or more finite verbs connected in this manner. It is true, the nominative may, in most instances, be repeated without injury to the sense; but this fact is no proof of such an ellipsis; because many a sentence which is not incomplete, may possibly take additional words without change of meaning. But these authors, (as I have already suggested under the head of conjunctions,) have not been very careful of their own consistency. If they teach, that, “Every finite verb has its own separate nominative, either expressed or implied,” which idea Murray and others seem to have gathered from Lowth; or if they say, that, “Conjunctions really unite sentences, when they appear to unite only words,” which notion they may have acquired from Harris; what room is there for that common assertion, that, “Conjunctions connect the same moods and tenses of verbs,” which is a part of Murray’s eighteenth rule, and found in most of our grammars? For no agreement is usually required between verbs that have separate nominatives; and if we supply a nominative wherever we do not find one for each verb, then in fact no two verbs will ever be connected by any conjunction.

* This order of the persons, is not universally maintained in those languages. The words of Mary to her son, “Thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing,” seem very properly to give the precedence to her husband; and this is their arrangement in St. Luke’s Greek, and in the Latin versions, as well as in others.

† The hackneyed example, “I and Cicero are well,”—“Ego et Cicero valemus”—which makes such a figure in the grammars, both Latin and English, and yet is ascribed to Cicero himself, deserves a word of explanation. Cicero the orator, having with him his young son Marcus Cicero at Athens, while his beloved daughter Tullia was with her mother in Italy, thus wrote to his wife, Terentia: “Si tu, et Tullia, lux nostra, valetix; ego, et suavissimus Cicero, valemus.”—EPIST. AD FAM. Lib. xiv, Ep. v. That is, “If thou, and Tullia, our joy, are well; I, and the sweet lad Cicero, are likewise well.” This literal translation is good English, and not to be amended by inversion; for a father is not expected to give precedence to his child. But, when I was a boy, the text and version of Dr. Adam puzzled me not a little; because I could not conceive how Cicero could ever have said, “I and Cicero are well.” The garbled citation is now much oftener read than the original. See it in Crombie’s Treatise, p. 243; McCulloch’s Gram., p. 158; and others.

OBS. 13.—What agreement there must be, between verbs that are in the same construction, it is not easy to determine with certainty. Some of the Latin grammarians tell us, that certain conjunctions connect “sometimes similar moods and tenses, and sometimes similar moods but different tenses.” See Prat’s Grammatica Latina, Octavo, Part ii, p. 95. Ruddiman, Adam, and Grant, omit the concord of tenses, and enumerate certain conjunctions which “couple like cases and moods.” But all of them acknowledge some exceptions to their rules. The instructions of Lindley Murray and others, on this point, may be summed up in the following canon: “When verbs are connected by a conjunction, they must either agree in mood, tense, and form, or have separate nominatives expressed.” This rule, (with a considerable exception to it, which other authors had not noticed.) was adopted by myself in the Institutes of English Grammar, and also retained in the Brief Abstract of that work, entitled, The First Lines of English Grammar. It there stands as the thirteenth in the series of principal rules; but, as there is no occasion to refer to it in the exercise of parsing, I now think, a less prominent place may suit it as well or better. The principle may be considered as being less certain and less important than most of the usual rules of syntax: I shall therefore both modify the expression of it, and place it among the notes of the present code. See Notes 5th and 6th below.

OBS. 14.—By the agreement of verbs with each other in form, it is meant, that the simple form and the compound, the familiar form and the solemn, the affirmative form and the negative, or the active form and the passive, are not to be connected without a repetition of the nominative. With respect to our language, this part of the rule is doubtless as important, and as true, as any other. A thorough agreement, then, in mood, tense, and form, is generally required, when verbs are connected by and, or, or nor; and, under each part of this concord, there may be cited certain errors which ought to be avoided, as will by-and-by be shown. But, at the same time, there seem to be many allowable violations of the rule, some or other of which may perhaps form exceptions to every part of it. For example, the tense may be varied, as it often is in Latin; thus, “As the general state of religion has been, is, or shall be, affected by them.”—Butlers Analogy, p. 241. “Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shall be, because thou hast judged thus.”—Rev., xvi, 5. In the former of these examples, a repetition of the nominative would not be agreeable; in the latter, it would perhaps be an improvement: as, “who art, and who wast, and who shalt be.” (I here change the pronoun, because the relative which is not now applied as above.) “This dedication may serve for almost any book, that has been, or shall be published.”—Campbell’s Rhet. p. 207; Murray’s Gram., p. 222. “It ought to be, ‘has been, is, or shall be, published.’”—Crombie’s Treatise, p. 383. “Truth and good sense are firm, and will establish themselves.”—Blair’s Rhet. p. 286. “Whereas Milton followed a different plan, and has given a tragic conclusion to a poem otherwise epic in its form.”—Ib., p. 428. “I am certain, that such are not, nor ever were, the tenets of the church of England.”—West’s Letters, p. 148. “They deserve, and will meet with, no regard.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 109.

“Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see,
Thinks what ne’er was, nor is, nor e’er shall be.”—Pope, on Crit.

OBS. 15.—So verbs differing in mood or form may sometimes agree with the same nominative, if the simplest verb be placed first—rarely, I think, if the words stand in any other order: as, “One may be free from affectation and not have merit”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 189. “There is, and can be, no other person.”—Murray’s Key. 8vo. p. 224. “To see what is, and is allowed to be, the plain natural rule.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 284. “This great experiment has worked, and is working, well, every way well”—BRADBURN: Liberator, ix. 162. “This edition of Mr. Murray’s works on English Grammar, deserves a place in Libraries, and will not fail to obtain it.”—BRITISH CRITIC: Murray’s Gram., 8vo, ii, 299.

“What nothing earthly gives, or can destroy.”—Pope.
“Some are, and must be, greater than the rest.”—Id.

OBS. 16.—Since most of the tenses of an English verb are composed of two or more words, to prevent a needless or disagreeable repetition of auxiliaries, participles, and principal verbs, those parts which are common to two or more verbs in the same sentence, are generally expressed to the first, and understood to the rest; or reserved, and put last, as the common supplement of each; as, “To which they do or can extend.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 77. “He may, as any one may, if he will, incur an infamous execution from the hands of civil justice.”—Ib., p. 82. “All that has usurped the name of virtue, and [has] deceived us by its semblance, must be a mockery and a delusion.”—Dr. Chalmers. “Human praise, and human eloquence, may acknowledge it, but the Discerner of the heart never will” [acknowledge it].—Id. “We use thee not so hardly, as prouder livers do” [use thee].—Shak. “Which they might have foreseen and [might have] avoided.”—Butler. “Every sincere endeavour to amend, shall be assisted, [shall be] accepted, and [shall be] rewarded.”—Carter. “Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me, and [will] stand and [will] call on the name of the Lord his God, and [will] strike his hand over the place, and [will] recover the leper.”—2 Kings, v, 11. “They mean to, and will, hear patiently.”—Salem Register. That is, “They mean to hear patiently, and they will hear patiently.” “He can create, and he destroy.”—Bible. That is,—“and he can destroy.”

“Virtue may be assail’d, but never hurt,
Surpris’d by unjust force, but not inthrall’d.”—Milton.

“Mortals whose pleasures are their only care,
First wish to be imposed on, and then are.”—Cowper.

OBS. 17.—From the foregoing examples, it may be seen, that the complex and divisible structure of the English moods and tenses, produces, when verbs are connected together, a striking peculiarity of construction in our language, as compared with the nearest corresponding construction in Latin or Greek. For we can connect different auxiliaries, participles, or principal verbs, without repeating, and apparently without connecting, the other parts of the mood or tense. And although it is commonly supposed that these parts are necessarily understood wherever they are not repeated, there are sentences, and those not a few, in which we cannot express them, without inserting also an additional nominative, and producing distinct clauses; as, “Should it not be taken up and pursued?”—Dr. Chalmers. “Where thieves do not break through nor steal.”—Matt., vi, 20. “None present could either read or explain the writing-.”—Wood’s Dict., Vol. i, p. 159. Thus we sometimes make a single auxiliary an index to the mood and tense of more than one verb.

OBS. 18.—The verb do, which is sometimes an auxiliary and sometimes a principal verb, is thought by some grammarians to be also fitly made a substitute for other verbs, as a pronoun is for nouns; but this doctrine has not been taught with accuracy, and the practice under it will in many instances be found to involve a solecism. In this kind of substitution, there must either be a true ellipsis of the principal verb, so that do is only an auxiliary; or else the verb do, with its object or adverb, if it need one, must exactly correspond to an action described before; so that to speak of doing this or thus, is merely the shortest way of repeating the idea: as, “He loves not plays, as thou dost. Antony.”—Shak. That is, “as thou dost love plays.” “This fellow is wise enough to play the fool; and, to do that well, craves a kind of wit.”—Id. Here, “to do that,” is, “to play the fool.” “I will not do it, if I find thirty there.”—Gen., xviii, 30. Do what? Destroy the city, as had been threatened. Where do is an auxiliary, there is no real substitution; and, in the other instances, it is not properly the verb do, that is the substitute, but rather the word that follows it—or perhaps, both. For, since every action consists in doing something or in doing somehow, this general verb do, with this, that, it, thus, or so, to identify the action, may assume the import of many a longer phrase. But care must be taken not to substitute this verb for any term to which it is not equivalent; as, “The a is certainly to be sounded as the English do.”—Walker’s Dict., w. A. Say, “as the English sound it,” for do is here absurd, and grossly solecistical. “The duke had not behaved with that loyalty with which he ought to have done.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 111; Murray’s, i, 212; Churchill’s, 355; Fisk’s, 137; Ingersoll’s, 269. Say, “with which he ought to have behaved,” for, to have done with loyalty is not what was meant—far from it. Clarendon wrote the text thus: “The Duke had not behaved with that loyalty, as he ought to have done.” This should have been corrected, not by changing “as” to “with which,” but by saying—“with that loyalty which he ought to have observed,” or, “which would have become him”.

OBS. 19.—It is little to the credit of our grammarians, to find so many of them thus concurring in the same obvious error, and even making bad English worse. The very examples which have hitherto been given to prove that do may be a substitute for other verbs, are none of them in point, and all of them have been constantly and shamefully misinterpreted. Thus: “They [do and did] sometimes also supply the place of another verb, and make the repetition of it, in the same or a subsequent sentence, unnecessary: as, ‘You attend not to your studies as he does,’ (i. e. as he attends, &c.) ‘I shall come if I can; but if I do not, please to excuse me;’ (i. e. if I come not.)”—L. Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 88; R. C. Smith’s, 88; Ingersoll’s, 135; Fisk’s, 78; A. Flint’s, 41; Hiley’s, 30. This remark, but not the examples, was taken from Lowth’s Gram., p. 41. Churchill varies it thus, and retains Lowth’s example: “It [i. e., do] is used also, to supply the place of another verb, in order to avoid the repetition of it: as, ‘He loves not plays, As thou dost, Antony.’ SHAKS.”—New Gram., p. 96. Greenleaf says, “To prevent the repetition of one or more verbs, in the same, or [a] following sentence, we frequently make use of do AND did; as, ‘Jack learns the English language as fast as Henry does,’ that is, ‘as fast as Henry learns.’ ‘I shall come if I can; but if I do not, please to excuse me;’ that is, ‘if I come not.’”—Gram. Simplified, p. 27. Sanborn says, “Do is also used instead of another verb, and not unfrequently instead of both the verb and its object; as, ‘he loves work as well as you do,’ that is, as well as you love work.”—Analyt. Gram., p. 112. Now all these interpretations are wrong; the word do, dost, or does, being simply an auxiliary, after which the principal verb (with its object where it has one) is understood. But the first example is bad English, and its explanation is still worse. For, “As he attends, &c.” means, “As he attends to your studies!” And what good sense is there in this? The sentence ought to have been, “You do not attend to your studies, as he does to his.” That is—“as he does attend to his studies.” This plainly shows that there is, in the text, no real substitution of does for attends. So of all other examples exhibited in our grammars, under this head: there is nothing to the purpose, in any of them; the common principle of ellipsis resolves them all. Yet, strange to say, in the latest and most learned of this sort of text-books, we find the same sham example, fictitious and solecistical as it is, still blindly repeated, to show that “does” is not in its own place, as an auxiliary, but “supplies the place of another verb.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo. 1850. p. 265.

NOTES TO RULE XVII.

NOTE I.—When a verb has nominatives of different persons or numbers,* connected by or or nor, it must agree with the nearest, (unless an other be the principal term,) and must be understood to the rest, in the person and number required; as, “Neither you nor I am concerned.”—W. Allen. “That neither they nor ye also die.”—Numb., xviii, 3.

“But neither god, nor shrine, nor mystic rite,
Their city, nor her walls, his soul delight.”—Rowe’s Lucan, B. x, l. 26.

NOTE II.—But, since all nominatives that require different forms of the verb, virtually produce separate clauses or propositions, it is better to complete the concord whenever we conveniently can, by expressing the verb or its auxiliary in connexion with each of them; as, “Either thou art to blame, or I am.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 78. “Neither were their numbers, nor was their destination, known.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 134. So in clauses connected by and: as, “But declamation is idle, and murmurs fruitless.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 82. Say,—“and murmurs are fruitless.”

NOTE III.—In English, the speaker should always mention himself last; unless his own superior dignity, or the confessional nature of the expression, warrant him in taking the precedence: as, “Thou or I must go.”—“He then addressed his discourse to my father and me.”—“Ellen and I will seek, apart, the refuge of some forest cell.”—Scott. See Obs. 11th above.

NOTE IV.—Two or more distinct subject phrases connected by or or nor, require a singular verb; and, if a nominative come after the verb, that must be singular also: as, “That a drunkard should be poor, or that a fop should be ignorant, is not strange.”—“To give an affront, or to take one tamely, is no mark of a great mind.” So, when the phrases are unconnected: as, “To spread suspicion, to invent calumnies, to propagate scandal, requires neither labour nor courage.”—Rambler, No. 183.

NOTE V.—In general, when verbs are connected by and, or, or nor, they must either agree in mood, tense, and form, or the simplest in form must be placed first; as, “So * Two singulars connected by and, when they form a part of such a disjunction, are still equivalent to a plural; and are to be treated as such, in the syntax of the verb. Hence the following construction appears to be inaccurate: “A single consonant or a mute and a liquid before an accented vowel, is joined to that vowel”—Dr. Bullions, Lat. Gram. p. xi.

---

Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.”—Isaiah, xxxvii, 37. “For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die.”—Acts, xxv, 11.

NOTE VI.—In stead of conjoining discordant verbs, it is in general better to repeat the nominative or insert a new one; as, “He was greatly heated, and [he] drank with avidity.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 201. “A person may be great or rich by chance; but cannot be wise or good, without taking pains for it.”—Ib., p. 200. Say,—“but no one can be wise or good, without taking pains for it.”

NOTE VII.—A mixture of the forms of the solemn style and the familiar, is inelegant, whether the verbs refer to the same nominative or have different ones expressed; as, “What appears tottering and in hazard of tumbling, produceth in the spectator the painful emotion of fear.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 356. “And the milkmaid singeth blithe, And the mower whets his sithe.”—Milton’s Allegro, l. 65 and 66.

NOTE VIII.—To use different moods under precisely the same circumstances, is improper, even if the verbs have separate nominatives; as, “Bating that one speak and an other answers, it is quite the same.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 368. Say,—“that one speaks,” for both the speaking and the answering are assumed as facts.

NOTE IX.—When two terms are connected, which involve different forms of the same verb, such parts of the compound tenses as are not common to both forms, should be inserted in full: except sometimes after the auxiliary do; as, “And then he falls, as I do.”—Shak. That is, “as I do fall.” The following sentences are therefore faulty: “I think myself highly obliged to make his fortune, as he has mine.”—Spect., No. 474. Say,—“as he has made mine.” “Every attempt to remove them, has, and likely will prove unsuccessful.”—Gay’s Prosodical Gram., p. 4. Say,—“has proved, and likely will prove, unsuccessful.”

NOTE X.—The verb do must never be substituted for any term to which its own meaning is not adapted; nor is there any use in putting it for a preceding verb that is equally short: as, “When we see how confidently men rest on groundless surmises in reference to their own souls, we cannot wonder that they do it in reference to others.”—Simeon. Better:—“that they so rest in reference to the souls of others;” for this repeats the idea with more exactness.

NOTE XI.—The preterit should not be employed to form the compound tenses of the verb; nor should the perfect participle be used for the preterit or confounded with the present. Thus: say, “To have gone,” not, “To have went,” and, “I did so,” not, “I done so;” or, “He saw them,” not, “He seen them.” Again: say not, “It was lift or hoist up;” but, “It was lifted or hoisted up.”

NOTE XII.—Care should be taken, to give every verb or participle its appropriate form, and not to confound those which resemble each other; as, to flee and to fly, to lay and to lie, to sit and to set, to fall and to fell, &c. Thus: say, “He lay by the fire;” not, “He laid by the fire;”—“He has become rich;” not, “He is become rich;”—“I would rather stay,” not, “I had rather stay.”

NOTE XIII.—In the syntax of words that express time, whether they be verbs, adverbs, or nouns, the order and fitness of time should be observed, that the tenses may be used according to their import. Thus: in stead of, “I have seen him last week,” say, “I saw him last week,”—and, in stead of, “I saw him this week,” say, “I have seen him this week.” So, in stead of, “I told you already,” or, “I have told you before,” say, “I have told you already,”—“I told you before.”

NOTE XIV.—Verbs of commanding, desiring, expecting, hoping, intending, permitting, and some others, in all their tenses, refer to actions or events, relatively present or future: one should therefore say, “I hoped you would come,” not, “I hoped you would have come,”—and, “I intended to do it,” not, “I intended to have done it;”—&c.

NOTE XV.—Propositions that are as true now as they ever were or will be, should generally be expressed in the present tense: as, “He seemed hardly to know, that two and two make four,” not, “made.”—Blair’s Gram., p. 65. “He will tell you, that whatever is, is right.” Sometimes the present tense is improper with the conjunction that, though it would be quite proper without it; as, “Others said, That it is Elias. And others said, That it is a prophet.”—Mark, vi, 15. Here That should be omitted, or else is should be was. The capital T is also improper.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XVII.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—NOMINATIVES CONNECTED BY OR.

“We do not know in what either reason or instinct consist.”—Rambler, No. 41.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the verb consist is of the plural number, and does not correctly agree with its two nominatives, reason and instinct, which are connected by or, and taken disjunctively. But, according to Rule 17th, “When a verb has two or more nominatives connected by or or nor, it must agree with them singly, and not as if taken together.” Therefore, consist should be consists; thus, “We do not know in what either reason or instinct consists.”]

“A noun or a pronoun joined with a participle, constitute a nominative case absolute.”—Bicknell’s Gram., Part ii, p. 50. “The relative will be of that case, which the verb or noun following, or the preposition going before, use to govern.”—Dr. Adam’s Gram., p. 203. “Which the verb or noun following, or the preposition going before, usually govern.”—Gould’s Adam’s Gram., p. 200.* “In the different modes of pronunciation which habit or caprice give rise to.”—Knight, on the Greek Alphabet, p. 14. “By which he, or his deputy, were authorized to cut down any trees in Whittlebury forest.”—Junius, p. 251. “Wherever objects were to be named, in which sound, noise, or motion were concerned, the imitation by words was abundantly obvious.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 55. “The pleasure or pain resulting from a train of perceptions in different circumstances, are a beautiful contrivance of nature for valuable purposes.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 262. “Because their foolish vanity or their criminal ambition represent the principles by which they are influenced, as absolutely perfect.”—Life of Madame De Stael, p. 2. “Hence naturally arise indifference or aversion between the parties.”—Brown’s Estimate, ii, 37. “A penitent unbeliever, or an impenitent believer, are characters no where to be found.”—Tract, No. 183. “Copying whatever is peculiar in the talk of all those whose birth or fortune entitle them to imitation.”—Rambler, No. 194. “Where love, hatred, fear, or contempt, are often of decisive influence.”—Duncan’s Cicero, p. 119. “A lucky anecdote, or an enlivening tale relieve the folio page.”—D’Israeli’s Curiosities, Vol. i, p. 15. “For outward matter or event, fashion not the character within.”—Book of Thoughts, p. 37. “Yet sometimes we have seen that wine, or chance, have warmed cold brains.”—Dryden’s Poems, p. 76. “Motion is a Genus; Flight, a Species; this Flight or that Flight are Individuals.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 38. “When et, aut, vel, sine, or nec, are joined to different members of the same sentence.”—Adam’s Lat. and Eng. Gram., p. 206; Gould’s Lat. Gram., 203; Grant’s, 266. “Wisdom or folly govern us.”—Fisk’s English Gram., 84. “A or an are styled indefinite articles.”—Folker’s Gram., p. 4. “A rusty nail, or a crooked pin, shoot up into prodigies.”—Spectator, No. 7. “Are either the subject or the predicate in the second sentence modified?”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, p. 578, §589.

* Murray the schoolmaster has it, “used to govern.”—English Gram., p. 64. He puts the verb in a wrong tense. Dr. Bullions has it, “usually governs.”—Lat. Gram., p. 202. This is right.—G. B.

“Praise from a friend, or censure from a foe,
Are lost on hearers that our merits know.”—Pope, Iliad, B. x, l. 293.

UNDER THE RULE ITSELF.—NOMINATIVES CONNECTED BY NOR.

“Neither he nor she have spoken to him.”—Perrin’s Gram., p. 237. “For want of a process of events, neither knowledge nor elegance preserve the reader from weariness.”—JOHNSON: in Crabb’s Syn., p. 511. “Neither history nor tradition furnish such information.”—Robertson’s Amer., Vol. i, p. 2. “Neither the form nor power of the liquids have varied materially.”—Knight, on the Greek Alph., p. 16. “Where neither noise nor motion are concerned.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 55. “Neither Charles nor his brother were qualified to support such a system.”—Junius, p. 250. “When, therefore, neither the liveliness of representation, nor the warmth of passion, serve, as it were, to cover the trespass, it is not safe to leave the beaten track.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 381. “In many countries called Christian, neither Christianity, nor its evidence, are fairly laid before men.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 269. “Neither the intellect nor the heart are capable of being driven.”—Abbott’s Teacher, p. 20. “Throughout this hymn, neither Apollo nor Diana are in any way connected with the Sun or Moon.”—Coleridge’s Introd., p. 199. “Of which, neither he, nor this Grammar, take any notice.”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 346. “Neither their solicitude nor their foresight extend so far.”—Robertson’s Amer., Vol. i, p. 287. “Neither Gomara, nor Oviedo, nor Herrera, consider Ojeda, or his companion Vespucci, as the first discoverers of the continent of America.”—Ib., Vol. i, p. 471. “Neither the general situation of our colonies, nor that particular distress which forced the inhabitants of Boston to take up arms, have been thought worthy of a moment’s consideration.”—Junius, p. 174.

“Nor War nor Wisdom yield our Jews delight,
They will not study, and they dare not fight.”—Crabbe’s Borough, p. 50.
“Nor time nor chance breed such confusions yet,
Nor are the mean so rais’d, nor sunk the great.”—Rowe’s Lucan, B. iii, l. 213.

UNDER NOTE I.—NOMINATIVES THAT DISAGREE.

“The definite article the, designates what particular thing or things is meant.”—Merchant’s School Gram., p. 23 and p. 33. “Sometimes a word or words necessary to complete the grammatical construction of a sentence, is not expressed, but omitted by ellipsis.”—Burr’s Gram., p. 26. “Ellipsis, or abbreviations, is the wheels of language.”—Maunder’s Gram., p. 12. “The conditions or tenor of none of them appear at this day.”—Hutchinson’s Hist. of Mass., Vol. i, p. 16. “Neither men nor money were wanting for the service.”—Ib., Vol. i, p. 279. “Either our own feelings, or the representation of those of others, require frequent emphatic distinction.”—Barber’s Exercises, p. 13. “Either Atoms and Chance, or Nature are uppermost: now I am for the latter part of the disjunction,”—Collier’s Antoninus, p. 181. “Their riches or poverty are generally proportioned to their activity or indolence.”—Ross Cox’s Narrative. “Concerning the other part of him, neither you nor he seem to have entertained an idea.”—Bp. Horne. “Whose earnings or income are so small.”—N. E. Discipline, p. 130. “Neither riches nor fame render a man happy.”—Day’s Gram., p. 71. “The references to the pages, always point to the first volume, unless the Exercises or Key are mentioned.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. ii, p. 283.

UNDER NOTE II.—COMPLETE THE CONCORD.

“My lord, you wrong my father; nor he nor I are capable of harbouring a thought against your peace.”—Walpole. “There was no division of acts; no pauses or interval between them; but the stage was continually full; occupied either by the actors, or the chorus.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 463. “Every word ending in B, P, F, as also many in V, are of this order.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of Lang., i, 73. “As proud as we are of human reason, nothing can be more absurd than the general system of human life and human knowledge.”—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 347. “By which the body of sin and death is done away, and we cleansed.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 165. “And those were already converted, and regeneration begun in them.”—Ib., iii, 433. “For I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years.”—Luke, i, 18. “Who is my mother, or my brethren?”—Mark, iii, 33. “Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, nor the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt-offering.”—Isaiah, xl, 16. “Information has been obtained, and some trials made.”—Society in America, i, 308. “It is as obvious, and its causes more easily understood.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 84. “All languages furnish examples of this kind, and the English as many as any other.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 157. “The winters are long, and the cold intense.”—Morse’s Geog., p. 39. “How have I hated instruction, and my heart despised reproof!”—Prov., v, 12. “The vestals were abolished by Theodosius the Great, and the fire of Vesta extinguished.”—Lempriere, w. Vestales. “Riches beget pride; pride, impatience.”—Bullions’s Practical Lessons, p. 89. “Grammar is not reasoning, any more than organization is thought, or letters sounds.”—Enclytica, p. 90. “Words are implements, and grammar a machine.”—Ib., p. 91.

UNDER NOTE III.—PLACE OF THE FIRST PERSON.

“I or thou art the person who must undertake the business proposed.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 184. “I and he were there.”—Dr. Ash’s Gram., p. 51. “And we dreamed a dream in one night, I and he.”—Gen., xli, 11. “If my views remain the same as mine and his were in 1833.”—GOODELL: Liberator, ix, 148. “I and my father were riding out.”—Inst., p. 158. “The premiums were given to me and George.”—Ib. “I and Jane are invited.”—Ib. “They ought to invite me and my sister.”—Ib. “I and you intend going.”—Guy’s Gram., p. 55. “I and John are going to Town.”—British Gram., p. 193. “I, and he are sick. I, and thou are well.”—James Brown’s American Gram., Boston Edition of 1841, p. 123. “I, and he is. I, and thou art. I, and he writes.”—Ib., p. 126. “I, and they are well. I, thou, and she were walking.”—Ib., p. 127.

UNDER NOTE IV.—DISTINCT SUBJECT PHRASES.

“To practise tale-bearing, or even to countenance it, are great injustice.”—Brown’s Inst., p. 159. “To reveal secrets, or to betray one’s friends, are contemptible perfidy.”—Ib. “To write all substantives with capital letters, or to exclude them from adjectives derived from proper names, may perhaps be thought offences too small for animadversion; but the evil of innovation is always something.”—Dr. Barrow’s Essays, p. 88. “To live in such families, or to have such servants, are blessings from God.”—Family Commentary, p. 64. “How they portioned out the country, what revolutions they experienced, or what wars they maintained, are utterly unknown.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, Vol. i, p. 4. “To speak or to write perspicuously and agreeably, are attainments of the utmost consequence to all who purpose, either by speech or writing, to address the public.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 11.

UNDER NOTE V.—MAKE THE VERBS AGREE.

“Doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray?”—Matt., xviii, 12. “Did he not fear the Lord, and besought the Lord, and the Lord repented him of the evil which he had pronounced?”—Jer., xxvi, 19. “And dost thou open thine eyes upon such an one, and bringest me into judgement with thee?”—Job, xiv, 3. “If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man’s religion is vain.”—James, i, 26. “If thou sell aught unto thy neighbour, or buyest aught of thy neighbour’s hand, ye shall not oppress one another.”—Leviticus, xxv, 14. “And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee, shall have become poor, and be sold to thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond servant.”—Webster’s Bible: Lev., xxv, 39. “If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee,” &c.—Matt., v, 23. “Anthea was content to call a coach, and crossed the brook.”—Rambler, No. 34. “It is either totally suppressed, or appears in its lowest and most imperfect form.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 23. “But if any man be a worshiper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth.”—John, ix, 31. “Whereby his righteousness and obedience, death and sufferings without, become profitable unto us, and is made ours.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 164. “Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had aught against me.”—Acts, xxiv, 19.

“Yes! thy proud lords, unpitied land, shall see
That man hath yet a soul, and dare be free.”—Campbell.

UNDER NOTE VI.—USE SEPARATE NOMINATIVES.

“H is only an aspiration or breathing; and sometimes at the beginning of a word is not sounded at all.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 4. “Man was made for society, and ought to extend his good will to all men.”—Ib., p. 12; Murray’s, i, 170. “There is, and must be, a supreme being, of infinite goodness, power, and wisdom, who created and supports them.”—Beattie’s Moral Science, p. 201. “Were you not affrighted, and mistook a spirit for a body?”—Watson’s Apology, p. 122. “The latter noun or pronoun is not governed by the conjunction than or as, but agrees with the verb, or is governed by the verb or the preposition, expressed or understood.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 214; Russell’s, 103; Bacon’s, 51; Alger’s, 71; R. C. Smith’s, 179. “He had mistaken his true interests, and found himself forsaken.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 201. “The amputation was exceedingly well performed, and saved the patient’s life.”—Ib., p. 191. “The intentions of some of these philosophers, nay, of many [,] might have been, and probably were good.”—Ib., p. 216. “This may be true, and yet will not justify the practice.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 33. “From the practice of those who have had a liberal education, and are therefore presumed to be best acquainted with men and things.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 161. “For those energies and bounties which created and preserve the universe.”—J. Q. Adams’s Rhet., i, 327. “I shall make it once for all and hope it will be afterwards remembered.”—Blair’s Lect., p. 45. “This consequence is drawn too abruptly, and needed more explanation.”—Ib., p. 229. “They must be used with more caution, and require more preparation.”—Ib., p. 153. “The apostrophe denotes the omission of an i, which was formerly inserted, and made an addition of a syllable to the word.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 67. “The succession may be rendered more various or more uniform, but in one shape or an other is unavoidable.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i. 253. “It excites neither terror nor compassion, nor is agreeable in any respect.”—Ib., ii, 277.

“Cheap vulgar arts, whose narrowness affords
No flight for thoughts, but poorly stick at words.”—Denham.

UNDER NOTE VII.—MIXTURE OF DIFFERENT STYLES.

“Let us read the living page, whose every character delighteth and instructs us.”—Maunder’s Gram., p. 5. “For if it be in any degree obscure, it puzzles, and doth not please.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 357. “When a speaker addresseth himself to the understanding, he proposes the instruction of his hearers.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 13. “As the wine which strengthens and refresheth the heart.”—H. Adams’s View, p. 221. “This truth he wrappeth in an allegory, and feigns that one of the goddesses had taken up her abode with the other.”—Pope’s Works, iii, 46. “God searcheth and understands the heart.”—Thomas à Kempis. “The grace of God, that brings salvation hath appeared to all men.”—Barclays Works, i, 366. “Also we speak not in the words, which man’s wisdom teaches; but which the Holy Ghost teacheth.”—Ib., i, 388. “But he hath an objection, which he urgeth, and by which he thinks to overturn all.”—Ib., iii, 327. “In that it gives them not that comfort and joy which it giveth unto them who love it.”—Ib., i, 142. “Thou here misunderstood the place and misappliedst it.”—Ib., iii, 38. “Like the barren heath in the desert, which knoweth not when good comes.”—Friends’ Extracts, p. 128; N. E. Discip., p. 75. “It speaketh of the time past, but shews that something was then doing, but not quite finished.”—E. Devis’s Gram., p. 42. “It subsists in spite of them; it advanceth unobserved.”—PASCAL: Addison’s Evidences, p. 17.

“But where is he, the Pilgrim of my song?—
Methinks he cometh late and tarries long.”—Byron, Cant. iv, St. 164.

UNDER NOTE VII.—CONFUSION OF MOODS.

“If a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them is gone astray, &c.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 227 with 197. “As a speaker advances in his discourse, especially if it be somewhat impassioned, and increases in energy and earnestness, a higher and louder tone will naturally steal upon him.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 68. “If one man esteem a day above another, and another esteemeth every day alike; let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 439. “If there be but one body of legislators, it is no better than a tyranny; if there are only two, there will want a casting voice.”—Addison, Spect., No. 287. “Should you come up this way, and I am still here, you need not be assured how glad I shall be to see you.”—Ld. Byron. “If he repent and becomes holy, let him enjoy God and heaven.”—Brownson’s Elwood, p. 248. “If thy fellow approach thee, naked and destitute, and thou shouldst say unto him, ‘Depart in peace; be you warmed and filled;’ and yet shouldst give him not those things that are needful to him, what benevolence is there in thy conduct?”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 108.

“Get on your nightgown, lost occasion calls us.
And show us to be watchers.”—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 278.
“But if it climb, with your assisting hands,
The Trojan walls, and in the city stands.”—Dryden’s Virgil, ii, 145.

—“Though Heaven’s king
 Ride on thy wings, and thou with thy compeers, Us’d to the yoke, draw’st his triumphant wheels.”—Milton, P. L., iv, l. 973.
 “Us’d to the yoke, draw’dst his triumphant wheels.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 106.

UNDER NOTE IX.—IMPROPER ELLIPSES.

“Indeed we have seriously wondered that Murray should leave some things as he has.”—Education Reporter. “Which they neither have nor can do.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 73. “The Lord hath, and doth, and will reveal his will to his people, and hath and doth raise up members of his body,” &c.—Ib., i, 484. “We see then, that the Lord hath, and doth give such.”—Ib., i, 484. “Towards those that have or do declare themselves members.”—Ib., i, 494. “For which we can, and have given our sufficient reasons.”—Ib., i, 507. “When we mention the several properties of the different words in sentences, in the same manner as we have those of William’s, above, what is the exercise called?”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 12. “It is, however to be doubted whether this peculiarity of the Greek idiom, ever has or will obtain extensively in the English.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 47. “Why did not the Greeks and Romans abound in auxiliary words as much as we?”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 111. “Who delivers his sentiments in earnest, as they ought to be in order to move and persuade.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 151.

UNDER NOTE X.—DO, USED AS A SUBSTITUTE.

“And I would avoid it altogether, if it could be done.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 36. “Such a sentiment from a man expiring of his wounds, is truly heroic, and must elevate the mind to the greatest height that can be done by a single expression.”—Ib., i, 204. “Successive images making thus deeper and deeper impressions, must elevate more than any single image can do.”—Ib., i, 205. “Besides making a deeper impression than can be done by cool reasoning.”—Ib., ii, 273. “Yet a poet, by the force of genius alone, can rise higher than a public speaker can do.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 338. “And the very same reason that has induced several grammarians to go so far as they have done, should have induced them to go farther.”—Priestley’s Gram., Pref., p. vii. “The pupil should commit the first section perfectly, before he does the second part of grammar.”—Bradley’s Gram., p. 77. “The Greek ch was pronounced hard, as we now do in chord.”—Booth’s Introd. to Dict., p. 61. “They pronounce the syllables in a different manner from what they do at other times.”—Murray’s Eng. Reader, p. xi. “And give him the formal cool reception that Simon had done.”—Dr. Scott, on Luke, vii. “I do not say, as some have done.”—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 271. “If he suppose the first, he may do the last.”—Barclay’s Works, ii, 406. “Who are now despising Christ in his inward appearance, as the Jews of old did him in his outward.”—Ib., i, 506. “That text of Revelations must not be understood, as he doth it.”—Ib., iii, 309. “Till the mode of parsing the noun is so familiar to him, that he can do it readily.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 13. “Perhaps it is running the same course which Rome had done before.”—Middleton’s Life of Cicero. “It ought even on this ground to be avoided; which may easily be done by a different construction.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 312. “These two languages are now pronounced in England as no other nation in Europe does besides.”—Creighton’s Dict., p. xi. “Germany ran the same risk that Italy had done.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 211: see Priestley’s Gram., p. 196.

UNDER NOTE XI.—PRETERITS AND PARTICIPLES.

“The Beggars themselves will be broke in a trice.”—Swift’s Poems, p. 347. “The hoop is hoist above his nose.”—Ib., p. 404. “My heart was lift up in the ways of the Lord. 2 CHRON.”—Joh. Dict., w. Lift. “Who sin so oft have mourned, Yet to temptation ran.”—Burns. “Who would not have let them appeared.”—Steele. “He would have had you sought for ease at the hands of Mr. Legality.”—Pilgrim’s Progress, p. 31. “From me his madding mind is start, And woos the widow’s daughter of the glen.”—SPENSER: Joh. Dict., w. Glen. “The man has spoke, and still speaks.”—Ash’s Gram., p. 54. “For you have but mistook me all this while.”—Beauties of Shak., p. 114. “And will you rent our ancient love asunder.”—Ib., p. 52. “Mr. Birney has plead the inexpediency of passing such resolutions.”—Liberator, Vol. xiii, p. 194. “Who have wore out their years in such most painful Labours.”—Littleton’s Dict., Pref. “And in the conclusion you were chose probationer.”—Spectator, No. 32.

“How she was lost, took captive, made a slave;
And how against him set that should her save.”—Bunyan.

UNDER NOTE XII.—VERBS CONFOUNDED.

“But Moses preferred to wile away his time.”—Parker’s English Composition, p. 15. “His face shown with the rays of the sun.”—Calvin’s Inst., 4to, p. 76. “Whom they had sat at defiance so lately.”—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 320. “And when he was set, his disciples came unto him.”—Matt., v, 1. “When he was set down on the judgement-seat.”—Ib., xxvii, 19. “And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them.”—Luke, xxii, 55. “So after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you?”—John, xiii, 12. “Even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.”—Rev., iii, 21. “We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens.”—Heb., viii, 1. “And is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.”—Ib., xii, 2.* “He sat on foot a furious persecution.”—Payne’s Geog., ii, 418. “There layeth an obligation upon the saints, to help such.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 389. “There let him lay.”—Byron’s Pilgrimage, C. iv, st. 180. “Nothing but moss, and shrubs, and stunted trees, can grow upon it.”—Morse’s Geog., p. 43. “Who had lain out considerable sums purely to distinguish themselves.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, i, 132. “Whereunto the righteous fly and are safe.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 146. “He raiseth from supper, and laid aside his garments.”—Ib., i, 438. “Whither—Oh! whither shall I fly?”—Murray’s English Reader, p. 123. “Flying from an adopted murderer.”—Ib., p. 122. “To you I fly for refuge.”—Ib., p. 124. “The sign that should warn his disciples to fly from approaching ruin.”—Keith’s Evidences, p. 62. “In one she sets as a prototype for exact imitation.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. xxiii. “In which some only bleat, bark, mew, winnow,

---

* The two verbs to sit and to set are in general quite different in their meaning; but the passive verb to be set sometimes comes pretty near to the sense of the former, which is for the most part neuter. Hence, we not only find the Latin word sedeo, to sit, used in the sense of being set, as, “Ingens coena sedet,” “A huge supper is set,” Juv., 2, 119; but, in the seven texts above, our translators have used is set, was set, &c., with reference to the personal posture of sitting. This, in the opinion of Dr. Lowth and some others, is erroneous. “Set,” says the Doctor, “can be no part of the verb to sit. If it belong to the verb to set, the translation in these passages is wrong. For to set, signifies to place, but without any designation of the posture of the person placed; which is a circumstance of importance, expressed by the original.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 53; Churchill’s, 265. These gentlemen cite three of these seven examples, and refer to the other four; but they do not tell us how they would amend any of them—except that they prefer sitten to sat, vainly endeavouring to restore an old participle which is certainly obsolete. If any critic dislike my version of the last two texts, because I use the present tense for what in the Greek is the first aorist; let him notice that this has been done in both by our translators, and in one by those of the Vulgate. In the preceding example, too, the same aorist is rendered, “am set,” and by Beza, “sedeo,” though Montanus and the Vulgate render it literally by “sedet,” as I do by sat. See Key to False Syntax, Rule XVII, Note xii.

and bray, a little better than others.”—Ib., p. 90. “Who represented to him the unreasonableness of being effected with such unmanly fears.”—Rollin’s Hist., ii, 106. “Thou sawedst every action.”—Guy’s School Gram., p. 46. “I taught, thou taughtedst, he or she taught.”—Coar’s Gram., p. 79. “Valerian is taken by Sapor and flead alive, A.D. 260.”—Lempriere’s Chron. Table, Dict., p. xix. “What a fine vehicle is it now become for all conceptions of the mind!”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 139. “What are become of so many productions?”—Volney’s Ruins, p. 8. “What are become of those ages of abundance and of life?”—Keith’s Evidences, p. 107. “The Spartan admiral was sailed to the Hellespont.”—Goldsmiths Greece, i, 150. “As soon as he was landed, the multitude thronged about him.”—Ib., i, 160. “Cyrus was arrived at Sardis.”—Ib., i, 161. “Whose year was expired.”—Ib., i, 162. “It had better have been, ‘that faction which.’”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 97. “This people is become a great nation.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 153; Ingersoll’s, 249. “And here we are got into the region of ornament.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 181. “The ungraceful parenthesis which follows, had far better have been avoided.”—Ib., p. 215. “Who forced him under water, and there held him until drowned.”—Indian Wars, p. 55.

“I had much rather be myself the slave,
And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.”—Cowper.

UNDER NOTE XIII.—WORDS THAT EXPRESS TIME.

“I had finished my letter before my brother arrived.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 139. “I had written before I received his letter.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 82. “From what has been formerly delivered.”—Ib., p. 182. “Arts were of late introduced among them.”—Ib., p. 245. “I am not of opinion that such rules can be of much use, unless persons saw them exemplified.”—Ib., p. 336. “If we use the noun itself, we should say, ‘This composition is John’s.’”—Murray’s Gram., p. 174. “But if the assertion referred to something, that is not always the same, or supposed to be so, the past tense must be applied.”—Ib., p. 191. “They told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.”—Luke, xviii, 37. “There is no particular intimation but that I continued to work, even to the present moment.”—R. W. Green’s Gram., p. 39. “Generally, as was observed already, it is but hinted in a single word or phrase.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 36. “The wittiness of the passage was already illustrated.”—Ib., p. 36. “As was observed already.”—Ib., p. 56. “It was said already in general.”—Ib., p. 95. “As I hinted already.”—Ib., p. 134. “What I believe was hinted once already.”—Ib., p. 148. “It is obvious, as hath been hinted formerly, that this is but an artificial and arbitrary connexion.”—Ib., p. 282. “They have done anciently a great deal of hurt.”—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 109. “Then said Paul, I knew not, brethren, that he is the High Priest.”—Dr. Webster’s Bible: Acts, xxiii, 5. “Most prepositions originally denote the relation of place, and have been thence transferred to denote by similitude other relations.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 65; Churchill’s, 116. “His gift was but a poor offering, when we consider his estate.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 194. “If he should succeed, and should obtain his end, he will not be the happier for it.”—Murray’s Gram., i, p. 207. “These are torrents that swell to-day, and have spent themselves by to-morrow.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 286. “Who have called that wheat to-day, which they have called tares to-morrow.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 168. “He thought it had been one of his tenants.”—Ib., i, 11. “But if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.”—Luke, xvi, 30. “Neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead.”—Ib., verse 31. “But it is while men slept that the archenemy has always sown his tares.”—The Friend, x, 351. “Crescens would not fail to have exposed him.”—Addison’s Evidences, p. 30.

“Bent was his bow, the Grecian hearts to wound;
Fierce as he mov’d, his silver shafts resound.”—Pope, Iliad, B. i, l. 64.

UNDER NOTE XIV.—VERBS OF COMMANDING, &C.

“Had I commanded you to have done this, you would have thought hard of it.”—G. B.
“I found him better than I expected to have found him.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 126. “There are several smaller faults, which I at first intended to have enumerated.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 246. “Antithesis, therefore, may, on many occasions, be employed to advantage, in order to strengthen the impression which we intend that any object should make.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 168. “The girl said, if her master would but have let her had money, she might have been well long ago.”—See Priestley’s Gram., p. 127. “Nor is there the least ground to fear, that we should be cramped here within too narrow limits.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 163; Murray’s Gram., i, 360. “The Romans, flushed with success, expected to have retaken it.”—Hooke’s Hist., p. 37. “I would not have let fallen an unseasonable pleasantry in the venerable presence of Misery, to be entitled to all the wit that ever Rabelais scattered.”—STERNE: Enfield’s Speaker, p. 54. “We expected that he would have arrived last night.”—Inst. p. 192. “Our friends intended to have met us.”—Ib. “We hoped to have seen you.”—Ib. “He would not have been allowed to have entered.”—Ib.

UNDER NOTE XV.—PERMANENT PROPOSITIONS.

“Cicero maintained that whatsoever was useful was good.”—“I observed that love constituted the whole moral character of God.”—Dwight. “Thinking that one gained nothing by being a good man.”—Voltaire. “I have already told you that I was a gentleman.”—Fontaine. “If I should ask, whether ice and water were two distinct species of things.”—Locke. “A stranger to the poem would not easily discover that this was verse.”—Murray’s Gram., 12mo, p. 260. “The doctor affirmed, that fever always produced thirst.”—Inst., p. 192. “The ancients asserted, that virtue was its own reward.”—Ib. “They should not have repeated the error, of insisting that the infinitive was a mere noun.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. i, p. 288. “It was observed in Chap. III. that the distinctive or had a double use.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 154. “Two young gentlemen, who have made a discovery that there was no God.”—Swift.

RULE XVIII.—INFINITIVES.

The Infinitive Mood is governed in general by the preposition TO, which commonly connects it to a finite verb: as, “I desire TO learn.”—Dr. Adam. “Of me the Roman people have many pledges, which I must strive, with my utmost endeavours, TO preserve, TO defend, TO confirm, and TO redeem.”—Duncan’s Cicero, p. 41.

“What if the foot, ordain’d the dust TO tread,
Or hand TO toil, aspir’d TO be the head?”—Pope.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XVIII.

OBS. 1.—No word is more variously explained by grammarians, than this word TO, which is put before the verb in the infinitive mood. Johnson, Walker, Scott, Todd, and some other lexicographers, call it an adverb; but, in explaining its use, they say it denotes certain relations, which it is not the office of an adverb to express. (See the word in Johnson’s Quarto Dictionary.) D. St. Quentin, in his Rudiments of General Grammar, says, “To, before a verb, is an adverb,” and yet his “Adverbs are words that are joined to verbs or adjectives, and express some circumstance or quality.” See pp. 33 and 39. Lowth, Priestley, Fisher, L. Murray, Webster, Wilson, S. W. Clark, Coar, Comly, Blair, Felch, Fisk, Greenleaf, Hart, Weld, Webber, and others, call it a preposition; and some of these ascribe to it the government of the verb, while others do not. Lowth says, “The preposition TO, placed before the verb, makes the infinitive mood.”—Short Gram., p. 42. “Now this,” says Horne Tooke, “is manifestly not so: for TO placed before the verb loveth, will not make the infinitive mood. He would have said more truly, that TO placed before some nouns, makes verbs.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. i, p. 287.

OBS. 2.—Skinner, in his Canones Etymologici, calls this TO “an equivocal article,”—Tooke, ib., i, 288. Nutting, a late American grammarian, says: “The sign TO is no other than the Greek article to; as, to agapan [, to love]; or, as some say, it is the Saxon do”—Practical Gram., p. 66. Thus, by suggesting two false and inconsistent derivations, though he uses not the name equivocal article, he first makes the word an article, and then equivocal—equivocal in etymology, and of course in meaning.* Nixon, in his English Parser, supposes it to be, unequivocally, the Greek article to, the. See the work, p. 83. D. Booth says, “To is, by us, applied to Verbs; but it was the neuter Article (the) among the Greeks.”—Introd. to Analyt. Dict., p. 60. According to Horne Tooke, “Minshew also distinguishes between the preposition TO, and the sign of the infinitive TO. Of the former he is silent, and of the latter he says: ‘To, as to make, to walk, to do, a Græco articulo τὸ.’” But Dr. Gregory Sharpe is persuaded, that our language has taken it from the Hebrew. And Vossius derives the correspondent Latin preposition AD from the same source.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. i, p. 293.

OBS. 3.—Tooke also says, “I observe, that Junius and Skinner and Johnson, have not chosen to give the slightest hint concerning the derivation of TO.”—Ibid. But, certainly, of his adverb TO, Johnson gives this hint: “TO, Saxon; te, Dutch.” And Webster, who calls it not an adverb, but a preposition, gives the same hint of the source from which it comes to us. This is as much as to say, it is etymologically the old Saxon preposition to—which, truly, it is—the very same word that, for a thousand years or more, has been used before * Nutting, I suppose, did not imagine the Greek article, τὸ, the, and the English or Saxon verb do, to be equivalent or kindred words. But there is no knowing what terms conjectural etymology may not contrive to identify, or at least to approximate and ally. The ingenious David Booth, if he does not actually identify do, with τὸ, the, has discovered synonyms and cognates that are altogether as unapparent to common observers: as, “It and the,” says he, “when Gender is not attended to, are synonymous. Each is expressive of Being in general, and when used Verbally, signifies to bring forth, or to add to what we already see. The, it, and, add, at, to, and do, are kindred words. They mark that an addition is made to some collected mass of existence. To, which literally signifies add, (like at and the Latin ad,) is merely a different pronunciation of do. It expresses the junction of an other thing, or circumstance, as appears more evidently from its varied orthography of too.”—Introd. to Analyt. Dict., p. 45. Horne Tooke, it seems, could not persuade this author into his notion of the derivation and meaning of the, it, to, or do. But Lindley Murray, and his followers, have been more tractable. They were ready to be led without looking. “To,” say they, “comes from Saxon and Gothic words, which signify action, effect, termination, to act, &c.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 183; Fisk’s, 92. What an admirable explanation is this! and how prettily the great Compiler says on the next leaf: “Etymology, when it is guided by judgment, and [when] proper limits are set to it, certainly merits great attention!”—Ib., p. 135. According to his own express rules for interpreting “a substantive without any article to limit it” and the “relative pronoun with a comma before it,” he must have meant, that “to comes from Saxon and Gothic words” of every sort, and that the words of these two languages “signify action, effect, termination, to act, &c.” The latter assertion is true enough: but, concerning the former, a man of sense may demur. Nor do I see how it is possible not to despise such etymology, be the interpretation of the words what it may. For, if to means action or to act, then our little infinitive phrase, to be, must mean, action be, or to act be; and what is this, but nonsense?

---

nouns and pronouns to govern the objective case. Tooke himself does not deny this; but, conceiving that almost all particles, whether English or any other, can be traced back to ancient verbs or nouns, he hunts for the root of this, in a remoter region, where he pretends to find that to has the same origin as do; and though he detects the former in a Gothic noun, he scruples not to identify it with an auxiliary verb! Yet he elsewhere expressly denies, “that any words change their nature by use, so as to belong sometimes to one part of speech, and sometimes to another.”—Div. of Pur., Vol. i, p. 68.

OBS 4.—From this, the fair inference is, that he will have both to and do to be “nouns substantive” still! “Do (the auxiliary verb, as it has been called) is derived from the same root, and is indeed the same word as TO.”—Ib., Vol. i, p. 290. “Since FROM means commencement or beginning, TO must mean end or termination.”—Ib., i, 283. “The preposition TO (in Dutch written TOE and TOT, a little nearer to the original) is the Gothic substantive [Gothic: tauī] or [Gothic: tauhts], i. e. act, effect, result, consummation. Which Gothic substantive is indeed itself no other than the past participle of the verb [Gothic: taujan], agere. And what is done, is terminated, ended, finished.”—Ib., i, 285. No wonder that Johnson, Skinner, and Junius, gave no hint of this derivation: it is not worth the ink it takes, if it cannot be made more sure. But in showing its bearing on the verb, the author not unjustly complains of our grammarians, that: “Of all the points which they endeavour to shuffle over, there is none in which they do it more grossly than in this of the infinitive.”—Ib., i, 287.

OBS. 5.—Many are content to call the word TO a prefix, a particle, a little word, a sign of the infinitive, a part of the infinitive, a part of the verb, and the like, without telling us whence it comes, how it differs from the preposition to, or to what part of speech it belongs. It certainly is not what we usually call a prefix, because we never join it to the verb; yet there are three instances in which it becomes such, before a noun: viz., to-day, to-night, to-morrow. If it is a “particle,” so is any other preposition, as well as every small and invariable word. If it is a “little word,” the whole bigness of a preposition is unquestionably found in it; and no “word” is so small but that it must belong to some one of the ten classes called parts of speech. If it is a “sign of the infinitive,” because it is used before no other mood; so is it a sign of the objective case, or of what in Latin is called the dative, because it precedes no other case. If we suppose it to be a “part of the infinitive,” or a “part of the verb,” it is certainly no necessary part of either; because there is no verb which may not, in several different ways, be properly used in the infinitive without it. But if it be a part of the infinitive, it must be a verb, and ought to be classed with the auxiliaries. Dr. Ash accordingly placed it among the auxiliaries; but he says, (inaccurately, however,) “The auxiliary sign seems to have the nature of adverbs.”—Grammatical Institutes, p. 33. “The auxiliary [signs] are, to, do, did, have, had, shall, will, may, can, must, might,” &c.—Ib., p. 31.

OBS. 6.—It is clear, as I have already shown, that the word to may be a sign of the infinitive, and yet not be a part of it. Dr. Ash supposes, it may even be a part of the mood, and yet not be a part of the verb. How this can be, I see not, unless the mood consists in something else than either the form or the parts of the verb. This grammarian says, “In parsing, every word should be considered as a distinct part of speech: for though two or more words may be united to form a mode, a tense, or a comparison; yet it seems quite improper to unite two or more words to make a noun, a verb, an adjective, &c.”—Gram. Inst., p. 28. All the auxiliaries, therefore, and the particle to among them, he parses separately; but he follows not his own advice, to make them distinct parts of speech; for he calls them all signs only, and signs are not one of his ten parts of speech. And the participle too, which is one of the ten, and which he declares to be “no part of the verb,” he parses separately; calling it a verb, and not a participle, as often as it accompanies any of his auxiliary signs. This is certainly a greater impropriety than there can be in supposing an auxiliary and a participle to constitute a verb; for the mood and tense are the properties of the compound, and ought not to be ascribed to the principal term only. Not so with the preposition to before the infinitive, any more than with the conjunction if before the subjunctive. These may well be parsed as separate parts of speech; for these moods are sometimes formed, and are completely distinguished in each of their tenses, without the adding of these signs.

OBS. 7.—After a careful examination of what others have taught respecting this disputed point in grammar, I have given, in the preceding rule, that explanation which I consider to be the most correct and the most simple, and also as well authorized as any. Who first parsed the infinitive in this manner, I know not; probably those who first called the to a preposition; among whom were Lowth and the author of the old British Grammar. The doctrine did not originate with me, or with Comly, or with any American author. In Coar’s English Grammar, published in London in 1796. the phrase to trample is parsed thus: “To—A preposition, serving for a sign of the infinitive mood to the verb Trample—A verb neuter, infinitive mood, present tense, governed by the preposition to before it. RULE. The preposition to before a verb, is the sign of the infinitive mood.” See the work, p. 263. This was written by a gentleman who speaks of his “long habit of teaching the Latin Tongue,” and who was certainly partial enough to the principles of Latin grammar, since he adopts in English the whole detail of Latin cases.

OBS. 8.—In Fisher’s English Grammar, London, 1800, (of which there had been many earlier editions,) we find the following rule of syntax: “When two principal Verbs come together, the latter of them expresses an unlimited Sense, with the Preposition to before it; as he loved to learn; I chose to dance: and is called the infinitive Verb, which may also follow a Name or Quality; as, a Time to sing; a Book delightful to read.” That this author supposed the infinitive to be governed by to, and not by the preceding verb, noun, or adjective, is plain from the following note, which he gives in his margin: “The Scholar will best understand this, by being told that infinite or invariable Verbs, having neither Number, Person, nor Nominative Word belonging to them, are known or governed by the Preposition to coming before them. The Sign to is often understood; as, Bid Robert and his company (to) tarry.”—Fisher’s New Gram., p. 95.

OBS. 9.—The forms of parsing, and also the rules, which are given in the early English grammars, are so very defective, that it is often impossible to say positively, what their authors did, or did not, intend to teach. Dr. Lowth’s specimen of “grammatical resolution” contains four infinitives. In his explanation of the first, the preposition and the verb are parsed separately, as above; except that he says nothing about government. In his account of the other three, the two words are taken together, and called a “verb, in the infinitive mode.” But as he elsewhere calls the particle to a preposition, and nowhere speaks of any thing else as governing the infinitive, it seems fair to infer, that he conceived the verb to be the regimen of this preposition.* If such was his idea, we have the learned

---

* So, from the following language of three modern authors, one cannot but infer, that they would parse the verb as governed by the preposition; but I do not perceive that they anywhere expressly say so:

Doctor's authority in opposition to that of his professed admirers and copyists. Of these, Lindley Murray is doubtless the most famous. But Murray's twelfth rule of syntax, while it expressly calls to before the infinitive a preposition, absurdly takes away from it this regimen, and leaves us a preposition that governs nothing, and has apparently nothing to do with the relation of the terms between which it occurs.

OBS. 10.—Many later grammarians, perceiving the absurdity of calling to before the infinitive a preposition without supposing it to govern the verb, have studiously avoided this name; and have either made the "little word" a supernumerary part of speech, or treated it as no part of speech at all. Among these, if I mistake not, are Allen, Lennie, Bullions, Alger, Guy, Churchill, Hiley, Nutting, Mulligan, Spencer, and Wells. Except Comly, the numerous modifiers of Murray's Grammar are none of them more consistent, on this point, than was Murray himself. Such of them as do not follow him literally, either deny, or forbear to affirm, that to before a verb is a preposition; and consequently either tell us not what it is, or tell us falsely; some calling it "a part of the verb," while they neither join it to the verb as a prefix, nor include it among the auxiliaries. Thus Kirkham: "To is not a preposition when joined to a verb in this mood; thus, to ride, to rule; but it should be parsed with the verb, and as a part of it."—Gram. in Familiar Lect., p. 137. So R. C. Smith: "This little word to when used before verbs in this manner, is not a preposition, but forms a part of the verb, and, in parsing, should be so considered."—Productive Gram., p. 65. How can that be "a part of the verb," which is a word used before it? or how is to "joined to the verb," or made a part of it, in the phrase, "to ride?" But Smith does not abide by his own doctrine; for, in an other part of his book, he adopts the phraseology of Murray, and makes to a preposition: saying, "The preposition TO, though generally used before the latter verb, is sometimes properly omitted; as, 'I heard him say it;' instead of 'to say it.'"—Productive Gram., p. 156. See Murray's Rule 12th.

OBS. 11.—Most English grammarians have considered the word to as a part of the infinitive, a part of the verb; and, like the teachers of Latin, have referred the government of this mood to a preceding verb. But the rule which they give, is partial, and often inapplicable; and their exceptions to it, or the heterogeneous parts into which some of them divide it, are both numerous and puzzling. They teach that at least half of the ten different parts of speech "frequently govern the infinitive:" if so, there should be a distinct rule for each; for why should the government of one part of speech be made an exception to that of an other? and, if this be done, with respect to the infinitive, why not also with respect to the objective case? In all instances to which their rule is applicable, the rule which I have given, amounts to the same thing; and it obviates the necessity for their numerous exceptions, and the embarrassment arising from other constructions of the infinitive not noticed in them. Why then is the simplest solution imaginable still so

---

(1.) "The Infinitive is the form of the supplemental verb that always has, or admits, the preposition TO before it; as, to move. Its general character is to represent the action in prospect, or to do; or in retrospect, as to have done. As a verb, it signifies to do the action; and as object of the preposition TO, it stands in the place of a noun for the doing of it. The infinitive verb and its prefix to are used much like a preposition and its noun object."—Felch's Comprehensive Gram., p. 62.

(2.) "The action or other signification of a verb may be expressed in its widest and most general sense, without any limitation by a person or agent, but merely as the end or purpose of some other action, state of being, quality, or thing; it is, from this want of limitation, said to be in the Infinitive mode; and is expressed by the verb with the preposition TO before it, to denote this relation of end or purpose; as, 'He came to see me;' 'The man is not fit die;' 'It was not right for him to do thus.'"—Dr. S. Webber's English Gram., p. 35.

(3.) "RULE 3. A verb in the Infinitive Mode, is the object of the preposition TO, expressed or understood."—S. W. Clark's Practical Gram., p. 127.

frequently rejected for so much complexity and inconsistency? Or how can the more common rule in question be suitable for a child, if its applicability depends on a relation between the two verbs, which the preposition to sometimes expresses, and sometimes does not?

OBS. 12.—All authors admit that in some instances, the sign to is “superfluous and improper,” the construction and government appearing complete without it; and the “Rev. Peter Bullions, D. D., Professor of Languages in the Albany Academy,” has recently published a grammar, in which he adopts the common rule, “One verb governs another in the infinitive mood; as, I desire to learn,” and then remarks, “The infinitive after a verb is governed by it only when the attribute expressed by the infinitive is either the subject or [the] object of the other verb. In such expressions as ‘I read to learn,’ the infinitive is not governed by ‘I read,’ but depends on the phrase ‘in order to’ understood.”—Bullions’s Prin. of E. Gram., p. 110. But, “I read ‘in order to’ to learn,” is not English; though it might be, if either to were any thing else than a preposition: as, “Now set to to learn your lesson.” This broad exception, therefore, which embraces well-nigh half the infinitives in the language, though it contains some obvious truth, is both carelessly stated, and badly resolved. The single particle to is quite sufficient, both to govern the infinitive, and to connect it to any antecedent term which can make sense with such an adjunct. But, in fact, the reverend author must have meant to use the “little word” but once; and also to deny that it is a preposition; for he elsewhere says expressly, though, beyond question, erroneously, “A preposition should never be used before the infinitive.”—Ib., p. 92. And he also says, “The Infinitive mood expresses a thing in a general manner, without distinction of number, person, or time, and commonly has TO before it.”—Ib., Second Edition, p. 35. Now if TO is “before” the mood, it is certainly not a part of it. And again, if this mood had no distinction of “time,” our author’s two tenses of it, and his own two special rules for their application, would be as absurd as is his notion of its government. See his Obs. 6 and 7, ib., p. 124.

OBS. 13.—Richard Hiley, too, a grammarian of perhaps more merit, is equally faulty in his explanation of the infinitive mood. In the first place, he absurdly says, “TO before the infinitive mood, is considered as forming part of the verb; but in every other situation it is a preposition.”—Hiley’s Gram., Third Edition, p. 28. To teach that a “part of the verb” stands “before the mood,” is an absurdity manifestly greater, than the very opposite notion of Dr. Ash, that what is not a part of the verb, may yet be included in the mood. There is no need of either of these false suppositions; or of the suggestion, doubly false, that to “in every other situation, is a preposition.” What does preposition mean? Is to a preposition when it is placed after a verb, and not a preposition when it is placed before it? For example: “I rise to shut to the door.”—See Luke, xiii, 25.

OBS. 14.—In his syntax, this author further says, “When two verbs come together, the latter must be in the infinitive mood, when it denotes the object of the former; as, ‘Study to improve.’” This is his Rule. Now look at his Notes. “1. When the latter verb does not express the object, but the end, or something remote, the word for, or the words in order to, are understood; as, ‘I read to learn,’ that is, ‘I read for to learn,’ or, ‘in order [TO] to learn.’ The word for, however, is never, in such instances, expressed in good language. 2. The infinitive is frequently governed by adjectives, substantives, and participles; but in this instance also, a preposition is understood, though never expressed; as, ‘Eager to learn,’ that is, ‘eager for to learn,’ or, ‘for learning;’ ‘A desire to improve,’ that is, ‘for to improve.’”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 89. Here we see the origin of some of Bullions’s blunders. To is so small a word, it slips through the fingers of these gentlemen. Words utterly needless, and worse than needless, they foist into our language, in instances beyond number, to explain infinitives that occur at almost every breath. Their students must see that, “I read to learn,” and, “I study to improve,” with countless other examples of either sort, are very different constructions, and not to be parsed by the same rule! And here the only government of the infinitive which Hiley affirms, is immediately contradicted by the supposition of a needless for “understood.”

OBS. 15.—In all such examples as, “I read to learn,”—“I strive to learn”—“Some eat to live,”—“Some live to eat,”—“She sings to cheer him,”—“I come to aid you,”—“I go to prepare a place for you,”—the action and its purpose are connected by the word to; and if, in the countless instances of this kind, the former verbs do not govern the latter, it is not because the phraseology is elliptical, or ever was elliptical,* but because in no case is there any such government, except in the construction of those verbs which take the infinitive after them without the preposition to. Professor Bullions will have the infinitive to be governed by a finite verb, “when the attribute expressed by the infinitive is the subject of the other verb.” An infinitive may be made the subject of a finite verb; but this grammarian has mistaken the established meaning of subject, as well as of attribute, and therefore written nonsense. Dr. Johnson defines his adverb TO, “A particle coming between two verbs, and noting the second as the object of the first.” But of all the words which, according to my opponents and their oracles, govern the infinitive, probably not more than a quarter are such verbs as usually have an object after them. Where then is the propriety of their notion of infinitive government? And what advantage has it, even where it is least objectionable?

OBS. 16.—Take for an example of this contrast the terms, “Strive to enter in—many will seek to enter in.”—Luke, xiii, 24. Why should it be thought more eligible to say, that the verb strive or will seek governs the infinitive verb to enter, than to say, that to is a preposition, showing the relation between strive and enter, or between will seek and enter, and governing the latter verb? (See the exact and only needful form for parsing any such term, in the Twelfth Praxis of this work.) None, I presume, will deny, that in the Greek or the Latin of these phrases, the finite verbs govern the infinitive; or that, in the French, the infinitive entrer is governed first by one preposition, and then by an other. “Contendite intrare—multi quærent intrare.”—Montanus. “Efforcez-vous d’entrer—plusieurs chercheront à y entrer.”—French Bible. In my opinion, to before a verb is as fairly a preposition as the French de or à; and it is the main design of these observations, while they candidly show the reader what others teach, to prove it so. The only construction which makes it any thing else, is that which puts it after a verb or a participle, in the sense of an adverbial supplement; as, “The infernal idol is bowed down to.”—Herald of Freedom. “Going to and fro.”—Bible. “At length he came to.”—“Tell him to heave to.”—“He was ready to set to.” With singular absurdness of opinion, some grammarians call to a preposition, when it thus follows a verb and governs nothing, who resolutely deny it that name, when it precedes

---

* Rufus Nutting, A. M., a grammarian of some skill, supposes that in all such sentences there was “anciently” an ellipsis, not of the phrase “in order to,” but of the preposition for. He says, “Considering this mode as merely a verbal noun, it might be observed, that the infinitive, when it expresses the object, is governed by a transitive verb; and, when it expresses the final cause, is governed by an intransitive verb, OR ANCIENTLY, BY A PREPOSITION UNDERSTOOD. Of the former kind—‘he learns to read.’ Of the latter—‘he reads to learn,’ i. e. ‘for to learn.’”—Practical Gram., p. 101. If for was anciently understood in examples of this sort, it is understood now, and to a still greater extent; because we do not now insert the word for, as our ancestors sometimes did; and an ellipsis can no otherwise grow obsolete, than by a continual use of what was once occasionally omitted.

the verb, and requires it to be in the infinitive mood, as in the last two examples. Now, if this is not government, what is? And if to, without government, is not an adverb, what is? See Obs. 2d on the List of Prepositions.

OBS. 17.—The infinitive thus admits a simpler solution in English, than in most other languages; because we less frequently use it without a preposition, and seldom, if ever, allow any variety in this connecting and governing particle. And yet in no other language has its construction given rise to a tenth part of that variety of absurd opinions, which the defender of its true syntax must refute in ours. In French, the infinitive, though frequently placed in immediate dependence on an other verb, may also be governed by several different prepositions, (as, à, de, pour, sans, après,) according to the sense.* In Spanish and Italian, the construction is similar. In Latin and Greek, the infinitive is, for the most part, immediately dependent on an other verb. But, according to the grammars, it may stand for a noun, in all the six cases; and many have called it an indeclinable noun. See the Port-Royal Latin and Greek grammars; in which several peculiar constructions of the infinitive are referred to the government of a preposition—constructions that occur frequently in Greek, and sometimes even in Latin.

OBS. 18.—It is from an improper extension of the principles of these “learned languages” to ours, that much of the false teaching which has so greatly and so long embarrassed this part of English grammar, has been, and continues to be, derived. A late author, who supposes every infinitive to be virtually a noun, and who thinks he finds in ours all the cases of an English noun, not excepting the possessive, gives the following account of its origin and nature: “This mood, with almost all its properties and uses, has been adopted into our language from the ancient Greek and Latin tongues. * * * The definite article τὸ [,] the, which they [the Greeks] used before the infinitive, to mark, in an especial manner, its nature of a substantive, is evidently the same word that we use before our infinitive; thus, ‘to write,’ signifies the writing; that is, the action of writing;—and when a verb governs an infinitive, it only governs it as in the objective case.”—Nixon’s English Parser, p. 83. But who will believe, that our old Saxon ancestors borrowed from Greek or Latin what is now our construction of the very root of the English verb, when, in all likelihood, they could not read a word in either of those languages, or scarcely knew

* (1.) “La préposition, est un mot indéclinable, placé devant les noms, les pronoms, et les verbes, qu’elle régit.”—“The preposition is an indeclinable word placed before the nouns, pronouns, and verbs which it governs.”—Perrin’s Grammar, p. 152.

(2.) “Every verb placed immediately after an other verb, or after a preposition, ought to be put in the infinitive; because it is then the regimen of the verb or preposition which precedes.”—See La Grammaire des Grammaires, par Girault Du Vivier, p. 774.

(3.) The American translator of the Elements of General Grammar, by the Baron De Sacy, is naturally led, in giving a version of his author’s method of analysis, to parse the English infinitive mood essentially as I do; calling the word to a preposition, and the exponent, or sign, of a relation between the verb which follows it, and some other word which is antecedent to it. Thus, in the phrase, “commanding them to use his power,” he says, that “‘to’ [is the] Exponent of a relation whose Antecedent is ‘commanding,’ and [whose] Consequent [is] ‘use.”—Fosdick’s De Sacy, p. 131. In short, he expounds the word to in this relation, just as he does when it stands before the objective case. For example, in the phrase, “belonging to him alone: ‘to,’ Exponent of a relation of which the Antecedent is ‘belonging,’ and the Consequent, ‘him alone.”—Ib., p. 126. My solution, in either case, differs from this in scarcely any thing else than the choice of words to express it.

(4.) It appears that, in sundry dialects of the north of Europe, the preposition at has been preferred for the governing of the infinitive: “The use of at for to, as the sign of the infinitive mode, is Norse, not Saxon. It is the regular prefix in Icelandic, Danish, Swedish, and Feroic. It is also found in the northern dialects of the Old English, and in the particular dialect of Westmoreland at the present day.”—Fowler, on the English Language, 8vo, 1850, p. 46.

the letters in their own, and while it is plain that they took not thence even the inflection of a single branch of any verb whatever?

OBS. 19.—The particle to, being a very common preposition in the Saxon tongue, has been generally used before the English infinitive, ever since the English language, or any thing like it, existed. And it has always governed the verb, not indeed “as in the objective case,” for no verb is ever declined by cases, but simply as the infinitive mood. In the Anglo-Saxon version of the Gospels, which was made as early as the eleventh century, the infinitive mood is sometimes expressed in this manner, and sometimes by the termination on without the preposition. Dr. Johnson’s History of the English Language, prefixed to his large Dictionary, contains, of this version, and of Wicliffe’s, the whole of the first chapter of Luke; except that the latter omits the first four verses, so that the numbers for reference do not correspond. Putting, for convenience, English characters for the Saxon, I shall cite here three examples from each; and these, if he will, the reader may compare with the 19th, the 77th, and the 79th verse, in our common Bible. SAXON: “And ic eom asend with the sprecan. and the this bodian.”—Lucæ, i, 19. WICKLIFFE: “And Y am sent to thee to speke and to evangelise to thee these thingis.”—Luk, i, 15. SAXON: “*To sylle*ne his folce hæle gewit on hyra synna forgyfnesse.”—Lucæ, i, 77. WICKLIFFE: “To geve science of heelth to his puple into remissioun of her synnes.”—Luk, i, 73. SAXON: “Onlyhtan tham the on thystrum and on deathes sceade sittath. ure fet to gereccenne on sibbe weg.”—Lucæ, i, 79. WICKLIFFE: “To geve light to them that sitten in derknessis, and in schadowe of deeth, to dresse oure feet into the weye of pees.”—Luk, i, 75. “In Anglo-Saxon,” says Dr. Latham, “the dative of the infinitive verb ended in -nne, and was preceded by the preposition to: as, To lufienne = ad amandum [= to loving, or to love]; To bærenne = ad urendum [= to burning, or to burn]; To sylanne = ad dandum [= to giving, or to give].”—Hand-Book, p. 205.

OBS. 20.—Such, then, has ever been the usual construction of the English infinitive mood; and a wilder interpretation than that which supposes to an article, and says, “to write signifies the writing,” cannot possibly be put upon it. On this supposition, “I am going to write a letter,” is a pure Grecism; meaning, “I am going the writing a letter,” which is utter nonsense. And further, the infinitive in Greek and Latin, as well as in Saxon and English, is always in fact governed as a mood, rather than as a case, notwithstanding that the Greek article in any of its four different cases may, in some instances, be put before it; for even with an article before it, the Greek infinitive usually retains its regimen as a verb, and is therefore not “a substantive,” or noun. I am well aware that some learned critics, conceiving that the essence of the verb consists in predication, have plainly denied that the infinitive is a verb; and, because it may be made the subject of a finite verb, or may be governed by a verb or a preposition, have chosen to call it “a mere noun substantive.” Among these is the erudite Richard Johnson, who, with so much ability and lost labour, exposed, in his Commentaries, the errors and defects of Lily’s Grammar and others. This author adduces several reasons for his opinion; one of which is the following: “Thirdly, it is found to have a Preposition set before it, an other sure sign of a Substantive; as, ‘Ille nihil præter loqui, et ipsum maledicere et malignè, didicit.’ Liv. l. 45, p. 888. [That is, “He learned nothing but to speak, and that slanderously and maliciously.”] ‘At si quis sibi beneficium dat, nihil interest inter dare et accipere.’ Seneca, de Ben. l. 5, c. 10.” [That is, “If any one bestows a benefit on himself, there is no difference between give and take;”]—or, “between bestowing and receiving.”]—See Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 342. But I deny that a preposition is a “sure sign of a substantive.” (See Obs. 2d on the Prepositions, and also Obs. 1st on the List of Prepositions, in the tenth chapter of Etymology.) And if we appeal to philological authorities, to determine whether infinitives are nouns or verbs, there will certainly be found more for the latter name, than the former; that is, more in number, if not in weight; though it must be confessed, that many of the old Latin grammarians did, as Priscian tells us, consider the infinitive a noun, calling it Nomen Verbi, the Name of the Verb.* If we appeal to reasons, there are more also of these;—or at least as many, and most of them better: as, 1. That the infinitive is often transitive; 2. That it has tenses; 3. That it is qualified by adverbs, rather than by adjectives; 4. That it is never declined like a noun; 5. That the action or state expressed by it, is not commonly abstract, though it may be so sometimes; 6. That in some languages it is the root from which all other parts of the verb are derived, as it is in English.

* Here is a literal version, in which two infinitives are governed by the preposition between; and though such a construction is uncommon, I know not why it should be thought less accurate in the one language

OBS. 21.—So far as I know, it has not yet been denied, that to before a participle is a preposition, or that a preposition before a participle governs it; though there are not a few who erroneously suppose that participles, by virtue of such government, are necessarily converted into nouns. Against this latter idea, there are many sufficient reasons; but let them now pass, because they belong not here. I am only going to prove, in this place, that to before the infinitive is just such a word as it is before the participle; and this can be done, call either of them what you will. It is plain, that if the infinitive and the participle are ever equivalent to each other, the same word to before them both must needs be equivalent to itself. Now I imagine there are some examples of each equivalence; as, “When we are habituated to doing [or to do] any thing wrong, we become blinded by it.”—Young Christian, p. 326. “The lyre, or harp, was best adapted to accompanying [or to accompany] their declamations.”—Music of Nature, p. 336. “The new beginner should be accustomed to than in the other. In some exceptive phrases, also, it seems not improper to put the infinitive after some other preposition than to; as, “What can she do besides sing?”—“What has she done, except rock herself?” But such expressions, if allowable, are too unfrequent to be noticed in any general Rule of syntax. In the following example, the word of pretty evidently governs the infinitive: “Intemperance characterizes our discussions, that is calculated to embitter in stead of conciliate.”—CINCINNATI HERALD: Liberator, No. 986.

---

* This doctrine has been lately revived in English by William B. Fowle, who quotes Dr. Rees, Beauzée, Harris, Tracy, and Crombie, as his authorities for it. He is right in supposing the English infinitive to be generally governed by the preposition to, but wrong in calling it a noun, or “the name of the verb,” except this phrase be used in the sense in which every verb may be the name of itself. It is an error too, to suppose with Beauzée, “that the infinitive never in any language refers to a subject or nominative;” or, as Harris has it, that infinitives “have no reference at all to persons or substances.” See Fowle’s True English Gram., Part ii, pp. 74 and 75. For though the infinitive verb never agrees with a subject or nominative, like a finite verb, it most commonly has a very obvious reference to something which is the subject of the being, action, or passion, which it expresses; and this reference is one of the chief points of difference between the infinitive and a noun. S. S. Greene, in a recent grammar, absurdly parses infinitives “as nouns,” and by the common rules for nouns, though he begins with calling them verbs. Thus: “Our honor is to be maintained. To be maintained, is a regular passive VERB, infinitive mode, present tense, and is used as a NOUN in the relation of predicate; according to Rule II. A noun or pronoun used with the copula to form the predicate, must be in the nominative case.”—Greene’s Gram., 1848. p. 93. (See the Rule, ib. p. 29.) This author admits, “The ‘to’ seems, like the preposition, to perform the office of a connective,” but then he ingeniously imagines, “The infinitive differs from the preposition and its object, in that the ‘to’ is the only preposition used with the verb.” And so he concludes, “The two [or more] parts of the infinitive are taken together, and, thus combined, may become a NOUN in any relation.”—Ib., 1st Edition, p. 87. S. S. Greene will also have the infinitive to make the verb before it transitive; for he says, “The only form [of phrase] used as the direct object of a transitive verb is the infinitive; as, ‘We intend (What?) to leave [town] to-day.’ ‘They tried (What?) to conceal their fears.’”—Ib., p. 99. One might as well find transitive verbs in these equivalents: “It is our purpose to leave town to-day.”—“They endeavoured to conceal their fears.” Or in this:—“They blustered to conceal their fears.”

giving [or to give] all the reasons for each part of speech.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 88. “Which, from infecting our religion and morals, fell to corrupt [say, to corrupting] our language.”—SWIFT: Blair’s Rhet., p. 108. Besides these instances of sameness in the particle, there are some cases of constructional ambiguity, the noun and the verb having the same form, and the to not determining which is meant: as, “He was inclined to sleep.”—“It must be a bitter experience, to be more accustomed to hate than to love.” Here are double doubts for the discriminators: their “sign of the infinitive” fails, or becomes uncertain; because they do not know it from a preposition. Cannot my opponents see in these examples an argument against the distinction which they attempt to draw between to and to? An other argument as good, is also afforded by the fact, that our ancestors often used the participle after to, in the very same texts in which we have since adopted the infinitive in its stead; as, “And if yee wolen resceyue, he is Elie that is to comynge.”—Matt., xi, 14. “Ihesu that delyueride us fro wraththe to comynge.”—1 Thes., i, 10. These, and seventeen other examples of the same kind, may be seen in Tooke’s Diversions of Purley, Vol. ii. pp. 457 and 458.

OBS. 22.—Dr. James P. Wilson, speaking of the English infinitive, says:—“But if the appellation of mode be denied it, it is then a verbal noun. This is indeed its truest character, because its idea ever represents an object of approach. To supplies the defect of a termination characteristic of the infinitive, precedes it, and marks it either as that, towards which the preceding verb is directed,* or it signifies act, and shows the word to import an action. When the infinitive is the expression of an immediate action, which it must be, after the verbs, bid, can, dare, do, feel, hear, let, make, may, must, need, see, shall, and will, the preposition TO is omitted.”—Essay on Grammar, p. 129. That the truest character of the infinitive is that of a verbal noun, is not to be conceded, in weak abandonment of all the reasons for a contrary opinion, until it can be shown that the action or being expressed by it, must needs assume a substantive character, in order to be “that towards which the preceding verb is directed.” But this character is manifestly not supposable of any of those infinitives which, according to the foregoing quotation, must follow other verbs without the intervention of the preposition to: as, “Bid him come,”—“He can walk.” And I see no reason to suppose it, where the relation of the infinitive to an other word is not “immediate” but marked by the preposition, as above described. For example: “And he laboured till the going-down of the sun TO deliver him.”—Dan., vi, 14. Here deliver is governed by to, and connected by it to the finite verb laboured; but to tell us, it is to be understood substantively rather than actively, is an assumption as false, as it is needless.

OBS. 23.—To deny to the infinitive the appellation of mood, no more makes it a verbal noun, than does the Doctor’s solecism about what “ITS IDEA ever represents.” “The infinitive therefore,” as Horne Tooke observes, “appears plainly to be what the Stoics called it, the very verb itself, pure and uncompounded.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. i, p. 286. Not indeed as including the particle to, or as it stands in the English perfect tense, but as it occurs in the simple root. But I cited Dr. Wilson, as above, not so much with a design of

---

* It is remarkable that the ingenious J. E. Worcester could discern nothing of the import of this particle before a verb. He expounds it, with very little consistency, thus: “Tò, or To, ad. A particle employed as the usual sign or prefix of the infinitive mood of the verb; and it might, in such use, be deemed a syllable of the verb. It is used merely as a sign of the infinitive, without having any distinct or separate meaning: as, ‘He loves to read.’”—Univ. and Crit. Dict. Now is it not plain, that the action expressed by “read” is “that towards which” the affection signified by “loves” is directed? It is only because we can use no other word in lieu of this to, that its meaning is not readily seen. For calling it “a syllable of the verb,” there is, I think, no reason or analogy whatever. There is absurdity in calling it even “a part of the verb.”

animadverting again on this point, as with reference to the import of the particle to; of which he furnishes a twofold explanation, leaving the reader to take which part he will of the contradiction. He at first conceives it to convey in general the idea of “towards,” and to mark the infinitive as a term “towards which” something else “is directed.” If this interpretation is the true one, it is plain that to before a verb is no other than the common preposition to; and this idea is confirmed by its ancient usage, and by all that is certainly known of its derivation. But if we take the second solution, and say, “it signifies act,” we make it not a preposition, but either a noun or a verb; and then the question arises, Which of these is it? Besides, what sense can there be, in supposing to go to mean act go, or to be equivalent to do go.*

* As there is no point of grammar on which our philologists are more at variance, so there seems to be none on which they are more at fault, than in their treatment of the infinitive mood, with its usual sign, or governing particle, to. For the information of the reader, I would gladly cite every explanation not consonant with my own, and show wherein it is objectionable; but so numerous are the forms of error under this head, that such as cannot be classed together, or are not likely to be repeated, must in general be left to run their course, exempt from any criticism of mine. Of these various forms of error, however, I may here add an example or two.

(1.) “What is the meaning of the word to? Ans. To means act. NOTE.—As our verbs and nouns are spelled in the same manner, it was formerly thought best to prefix the word TO, to words when used as verbs. For there is no difference between the NOUN, love; and the VERB, to love; but what is shown by the prefix TO, which signifies act; i. e. to act love.”—R. W. Greene’s Inductive Exercises in English Grammar, N. Y., 1829, p. 52. Now all this, positive as the words are, is not only fanciful, but false, utterly false. To no more “means act,” than from “means act.” And if it did, it could not be a sign of the infinitive, or of a verb at all; for, “act love,” is imperative, and makes the word “love” a noun; and so, “to act love,” (where “love” is also a noun,) must mean “act act love,” which is tautological nonsense. Our nouns and verbs are not, in general, spelled alike; nor are the latter, in general, preceded by to; nor could a particle which may govern either, have been specifically intended, at first, to mark their difference. By some, as we have seen, it is argued from the very sign, that the infinitive is always essentially a noun.

(2.) “The infinitive mode is the root or simple form of the verb, used to express an action or state indefinitely; as, to hear, to speak. It is generally distinguished by the sign to. When the particle to is employed in forming the infinitive, it is to be regarded as a part of the verb. In every other case it is a preposition.”—Wells’s School Grammar, 1st Ed., p. 80. “A Preposition is a word which is used to express the relation of a noun or pronoun depending upon it, to some other word in the sentence.”—Ib., pp. 46 and 108. “The passive form of a verb is sometimes used in connection with a preposition, forming a compound passive verb. Examples:—‘He was listened to without a murmur.’—A. H. EVERETT. ‘Nor is this enterprise to be scoffed at.’—CHANNING.”—Ib., p. 146. “A verb in the infinitive usually relates to some noun or pronoun. Thus, in the sentence, ‘He desires to improve,’ the verb to improve relates to the pronoun he while it is governed by desires.”—Ib., p. 150. “The agent to a verb in the infinitive mode must be in the objective case.”—NUTTING.”—Ib., p. 148. These citations from Wells, the last of which he quotes approvingly, by way of authority, are in many respects self-contradictory, and in nearly all respects untrue. How can the infinitive be only “the root or simple form of the verb,” and yet consist “generally” of two distinct words, and often of three, four, or five; as, “to hear,”—“to have heard,”—“to be listened to,”—“to have been listened to?” How can to be a “preposition” in the phrase, “He was listened to,” and not so at all in “to be listened to?” How does the infinitive “express an action or state indefinitely,” if it “usually relates to some noun or pronoun?” Why must its agent “be in the objective case,” if “to improve relates to the pronoun he?” Is to “in every other case a preposition,” and not such before a verb or a participle? Must every preposition govern some “noun or pronoun?” And yet are there some prepositions which govern nothing, precede nothing? “The door banged to behind him.”—BLACKWELL: Prose Edda, §2. What is to here?

(3.) “The preposition TO before a verb is the sign of the Infinitive.”—Weld’s E. Gram., 2d Ed., p. 74. “The preposition is a part of speech used to connect words, and show their relation.”—Ib., p. 42. “The perfect infinitive is formed of the perfect participle and the auxiliary HAVE preceded by the preposition TO.”—Ib., p. 96. “The infinitive mode follows a verb, noun, or adjective.”—Ib., pp. 75 and 166. “A verb in the Infinitive may follow: 1. Verbs or participles; 2. Nouns or pronouns; 3. Adjectives; 4. As or than; 5. Adverbs; 6. Prepositions; 7. The Infinitive is often used independently; 8. The Infinitive mode is often used in the office of a verbal noun, as the nominative case to the verb, and as the objective case after verbs and prepositions.”—Ib., p. 167. These last two counts are absurdly included among what “the Infinitive may follow,” and is it not

OBS. 24.—Though the infinitive is commonly made an adjunct to some finite verb, yet it may be connected to almost all the other parts of speech, or even to an other infinitive. The preposition to being its only and almost universal index, we seldom find any other preposition put before this; unless the word about, in such a situation, is a preposition, as I incline to think it is.* Anciently, the infinitive was sometimes preceded by for as well as to; as, “I went up to Jerusalem for to worship.”—Acts, xxiv, 11. “What went ye out for to see?”—Luke, vii, 26. “And stood up for to read.”—Luke, iv, 16. Here modern usage rejects the former preposition: the idiom is left to the uneducated. But it seems practicable to subjoin the infinitive to every one of the ten parts of speech, except the article: as,

1. To a noun; as, “If there is any precept to obtain felicity.”—Hawkesworth. “It is high time to awake out of sleep.”—Rom., xiii, 11. “To flee from the wrath to come.”—Matt., iii, 7.
2. To an adjective; as, “He seemed desirous to speak, yet unwilling to offend.”—Hawkesworth. “He who is the slowest to promise, is the quickest to perform.”—Art of Thinking, p. 35.
3. To a pronoun; as, “I discovered him to be a scholar.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 166. “Is it lawful for us to give tribute to Cæsar?”—Luke, xx, 22. “Let me desire you to reflect impartially.”—BLAIR: Murray’s Eng. Reader, p. 77. “Whom hast thou then or what t’accuse?”—Milton, P. L., iv, 67.
4. To a finite verb; as, “Then Peter began to rebuke him.”—Matt., xvi, 22. “The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.”—Luke, xix, 10.
5. To an other infinitive; as, “To go to enter into Egypt.”—Jer., xli, 17. “We are not often willing to wait to consider.”—J. Abbott. “For what had he to do to chide at me?”—Shak.
6. To a participle; as, “Still threatening to devour me.”—Milton. “Or as a thief bent to unhoard the cash of some rich burgher.”—Id.
7. To an adverb; as, “She is old enough to go to school.”—“I know not how to act.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 106. “Tell me when to come, and where to meet you.”—“He hath not where to lay his head.”
8. To a conjunction; as, “He knows better than to trust you.”—“It was so hot as to melt these ornaments.”—“Many who praise virtue, do no more than praise it.”—Dr. Johnson.
9. To a preposition; as, “I was about to write.”—Rev., x, 4. “Not for to hide it in a hedge.”—Burns’s Poems, p. 42. “Amatum iri, To be about to be loved.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 95.†

rather queer, that this mood should be found to “follow” every thing else, and not “the preposition TO,” which comes “before” it, and by which it is “preceded?” This author adopts also the following absurd and needless rule: “The Infinitive mode has an objective case before it when [the word] THAT is omitted: as, I believe the sun to be the centre of the solar system; I know him to be a man of veracity.”—Ib., p. 167; Abridged Ed., 124. (See Obs. 10th on Rule 2d, above.) “Sun” is here governed by “believe,” and “him,” by “know,” and “be,” in both instances, by “the preposition TO:” for this particle is not only “the sign of the Infinitive,” but its governing word, answering well to the definition of a preposition above cited from Weld.

* “The infinitive is sometimes governed by a preposition; as, ‘The shipmen were about to flee.’”—Wells’s School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 149; 3d Ed., p. 158. Wells has altered this, and for “preposition” put “adverb.”—Ed. of 1850, p. 163.

† Some grammatists, being predetermined that no preposition shall control the infinitive, avoid the conclusion by absurdly calling FOR, a conjunction; ABOUT, an adverb; and TO—no matter what—but generally, nothing. Thus: “The conjunction FOR, is inelegantly used before verbs in the infinitive mood; as, ‘He came for to study Latin.’”—Greenleaf’s Gram., p. 38. “The infinitive mood is sometimes governed by conjunctions or adverbs; as, ‘An object so high as to be invisible;’ ‘The army is about to march.’”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 188. This is a note to that extra rule which Kirkham proposes for our use, “if we reject the idea of government, as applied to the verb in this mood!”—Ib.

10. To an interjection; as, “O to forget her!”—Young’s Night Thoughts.

OBS. 25.—The infinitive is the mere verb, without affirmation, without person or number, and therefore without the agreement peculiar to a finite verb. (See Obs. 8th on Rule 2d.) But, in most instances, it is not without limitation of the being, action, or passion, to some particular person or persons, thing or things, that are said, supposed, or denied, to be, to act, or to be acted upon. Whenever it is not thus limited, it is taken abstractly, and has some resemblance to a noun: because it then suggests the being, action, or passion alone: though, even then, the active infinitive may still govern the objective case; and it may also be easy to imagine to whom or to what the being, action, or passion, naturally pertains. The uses of the infinitive are so many and various, that it is no easy matter to classify them accurately. The following are unquestionably the chief of the things for which it may stand:

1. For the supplement to an other verb, to complete the sense; as, “Loose him, and let him go.”—John, xi, 44. “They that go to seek mixed wine.”—Prov., xxiii, 30. “His hands refuse to labour.”—Ib., xxi, 25. “If you choose to have those terms.”—Tooke’s D. P., ii, 374. “How our old translators first struggled to express this.”—Ib., ii, 456. “To any one who will please to examine our language.”—Ib., ii, 444. “They are forced to give up at last.”—Ib., ii, 375. “Which ought to be done.”—Ib., ii, 451. “Which came to pass.”—Acts, xi, 28. “I dare engage to make it out.”—Swift.
2. For the purpose, or end, of that to which it is added; as, “Each has employed his time and pains to establish a criterion.”—Tooke’s D. P., ii, 374. “I shall not stop now, to assist in their elucidation.”—Ib., ii, 75. “Our purposes are not endowed with words to make them known.”—Ib., ii, 74. [A] “TOOL is some instrument taken up to work with.”—Ib., ii, 145. “Labour not to be rich.”—Prov., xxiii, 4. “I flee unto thee to hide me.”—Ps., cxliii, 9. “Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him.”—Ib., cxl, 11.
3. For the object of an affection or passion; as, “He loves to ride.”—“I desire to hear her speak again.”—Shak. “If we wish to avoid important error.”—Tooke’s D. P., ii, 3. “Who rejoice to do evil.”—Prov., ii, 14. “All agreeing in earnestness to see him.”—Shak. “Our curiosity is raised to know what lies beyond.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 335.
4. For the cause of an affection or passion; as, “I rejoice to hear it.”—“By which I hope to have laid a foundation,” &c.—Blair’s Rhet., p. 34. “For he made me mad, to see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet.”—Beauties of Shak., p. 118. “Thou didst eat strange flesh, which some did die to look on.”—Ib., p. 182. “They grieved to see their best allies at variance.”—Rev. W. Allen’s Gram., p. 165.
5. For the subject of a proposition, or the chief term in such subject; as, “To steal is sinful.”—“To do justice and judgement, is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice.”—Prov., xxi, 3. “To do RIGHT, is, to do that which is ordered to be done.”—Tooke’s D. P., ii, 7. “To go to law to plague a neighbour, has in it more of malice, than of love to justice.”—Seattle’s Mor. Sci., i, 177.
6. For the predicate of a proposition, or the chief term in such predicate; as, “To enjoy is to obey.”—Pope. “The property of rain is to wet, and fire, to burn.”—Beauties of Shak., p. 15. “To die is to be banished from myself.”—Ib., p. 82. “The best way is, to slander Valentine.”—Ib., p. 83. “The highway of the upright is to depart from evil.”—Prov., xvi, 17.
7. For a coming event, or what will be; as, “A mutilated structure soon to fall.”—Cowper. “He being dead, and I speedily to follow him.”—Tooke’s D. P., ii, 111. “She shall rejoice in time to come.”—Prov., xxxi, 25. “Things present, or things to come.”—1 Cor., iii, 22.

8. For a necessary event, or what ought to be; as, "It is to be remembered."—"It is never to be forgotten."—Tooke's D. P., ii, 2. "An oversight much to be deplored."—Ib., ii, 460. "The sign is not to be used by itself, or to stand alone; but is to be joined to some other term."—Ib., ii, 372. "The Lord's name is to be praised."—Ps., cxiii, 3.
9. For what is previously suggested by another word; as, "I have faith to believe."—"The glossarist did well here not to yield to his inclination."—Tooke's D. P., ii, 329. "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord."—Ps., xcii, 1. "It is as sport to a fool to do mischief."—Prov., x, 23. "They have the gift to know it."—Shak. "We have no remaining occupation but to take care of the public."—Art of Thinking, p. 52.
10. For a term of comparison or measure; as, "He was so much affected as to weep."—"Who could do no less than furnish him."—Tooke's D. P., ii, 408. "I shall venture no farther than to explain the nature and convenience of these abbreviations."—Ib., ii, 439. "I have already said enough to show what sort of operation that is."—Ib., ii, 358.

OBS. 26.—After dismissing all the examples which may fairly be referred to one or other of the ten heads above enumerated, an observant reader may yet find other uses of the infinitive, and those so dissimilar that they can hardly be reduced to any one head or rule; except that all are governed by the preposition to, which points towards or to the verb; as, "A great altar to see to."—Joshua, xxii, 10. "Βωμὸν μέγαν τοῦ ἰδεῖν."—Septuagint. That is, "An altar great to behold." "Altare infinitæ magnitudinis."—Vulgate. "Un fort grand autel."—French Bible. "Easy to be entreated."—Jos., iii, 17. "There was none to help."—Ps., cvii, 12. "He had rained down manna upon them to eat."—Ps., lxxviii, 24. "Remember his commandments to do them."—Ps., viii, 18. "Preserve thou those that are appointed to die."—Ps., lxxix, 11. "As coals to burning coals, and as wood to fire; so is a contentious man to kindle strife."—Prov., xxvi, 21. "These are far beyond the reach and power of any kings to do away."—Tooke's D. P., ii, 126. "I know not indeed what to do with those words."—Ib., ii, 441. "They will be as little able to justify their innovation."—Ib., ii, 448. "I leave you to compare them."—Ib., ii, 458. "There is no occasion to attribute it."—Ib., ii, 375. "There is no day for me to look upon."—Beauties of Shak., p. 82. "Having no external thing to lose."—Ib., p. 100. "I'll never be a gosling to obey instinct."—Ib., p. 200. "Whereto serves mercy, but to confront the visage of offence?"—Ib., p. 233. "If things do not go to suit him."—Liberator, ix, 182. "And, to be plain, I think there is not half a kiss to choose, who loves an other best."—Shak., p. 91. "But to return to R. Johnson's instance of good man."—Tooke's D. P., ii, 370. Our common Bibles have this text: "And a certain woman cast a piece of a millstone upon Abimelech's head, and all to break his skull."—Judges, ix, 53. Perhaps the interpretation of this may be, "and so as completely to break his skull." The octavo edition stereotyped by "the Bible Association of Friends in America," has it, "and all-to brake his skull." This, most probably, was supposed by the editors to mean, "and completely broke his skull;" but all-to is no proper compound word, and therefore the change is a perversion. The Septuagint, the Vulgate, and the common French version, all accord with the simple indicative construction, "and broke his skull."

OBS. 27.—According to Lindley Murray, "The infinitive mood is often made absolute, or used independently on [say of] the rest of the sentence, supplying the place of the conjunction that with the potential mood: as, 'To confess the truth, I was in fault;' 'To begin with the first;' 'To proceed;' 'To conclude;' that is, 'That I may confess,' &c."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 184; Ingersoll's Gram., p. 244. Some other compilers have adopted the same doctrine. But on what ground the substitution of one mood for the other is imagined, I see not. The reader will observe that this potential mood is here just as much “made absolute,” as is the infinitive; for there is nothing expressed to which the conjunction that connects the one phrase, or the preposition to the other. But possibly, in either case, there may be an ellipsis of some antecedent term; and surely, if we imagine the construction to be complete without any such term, we make the conjunction the more anomalous word of the two. Confession of the truth, is here the aim of speaking, but not of what is spoken. The whole sentence may be, “In order to confess the truth, I admit that I was in fault.” Or, “In order that I may confess the truth, I admit that I was in fault.” I do not deny, that the infinitive, or a phrase of which the infinitive is a part, is sometimes put absolute; for, if it is not so in any of the foregoing examples, it appears to be so in the following: “For every object has several faces, so to speak, by which it may be presented to us.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 41. “To declare a thing shall be, long before it is in being, and then to bring about the accomplishment of that very thing, according to the same declaration; this, or nothing, is the work of God.”—Justin Martyr.

“To be, or not to be;—that is the question.”—Shakspeare.

“To die;—to sleep;—To sleep! perchance, to dream!”—Id., Hamlet.

OBS. 28.—The infinitive usually follows the word on which it depends, or to which the particle to connects it; but this order is sometimes reversed: as, “To beg I am ashamed.”—Luke, xvi, 3. “To keep them no longer in suspense, [I say plainly,] Sir Roger de Coverly is dead.”—Addison. “To suffer, as to do, Our strength is equal.”—Milton.

“To catch your vivid scenes, too gross her hand.”—Thomson.

OBS. 29.—Though, in respect to its syntax, the infinitive is oftener connected with a verb, a participle, or an adjective, than with a noun or a pronoun, it should never be so placed that the reader will be liable to mistake the person to whom, or the thing to which, the being, action, or passion, pertains. Examples of error: “This system will require a long time to be executed as it should be.”—Journal of N. Y. Lit. Convention, 1830, p. 91. It is not the time, that is to be executed; therefore say, “This system, to be executed as it should be, will require a long time.” “He spoke in a manner distinct enough to be heard by the whole assembly.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 192. This implies that the orator’s manner was heard! But the grammarian interprets his own meaning, by the following alternative: “Or—He spoke distinctly enough to be heard by the whole assembly.”—Ibid. This suggests that the man himself was heard. “When they hit upon a figure that pleases them, they are loth to part with it, and frequently continue it so long, as to become tedious and intricate.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 341. Is it the authors, or their figure, that becomes tedious and intricate? If the latter, strike out, “so long, as to become,” and say, “till it becomes.” “Facts are always of the greatest consequence to be remembered during the course of the pleading.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 272. The rhetorician here meant: “The facts stated in an argument, are always those parts of it, which it is most important that the hearers should be made to remember.”

OBS. 30.—According to some grammarians, “The Infinitive of the verb to be, is often understood; as, ‘I considered it [to be] necessary to send the dispatches.’”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 166. In this example, as in thousands more, of various forms, the verb to be may be inserted without affecting the sense; but I doubt the necessity of supposing an ellipsis in such sentences. The adjective or participle that follows, always relates to the preceding objective; and if a noun is used, it is but an other objective in apposition with the former: as, “I considered it an imposition.” The verb to be, with the perfect participle, forms the passive infinitive; and the supposition of such an ellipsis, extensively affects one's mode of parsing. Thus, "He considered himself insulted," "I will suppose the work accomplished," and many similar sentences, might be supposed to contain passive infinitives. Allen says, "In the following construction, the words in italics are (elliptically) passive infinitives; I saw the bird caught, and the hare killed; we heard the letters read."—W. Allen's Gram., p. 168. Dr. Priestley observes, "There is a remarkable ambiguity in the use of the participle preterite, as the same word may express a thing either doing, or done; as, I went to see the child dressed."—Priestley's Gram., p. 125. If the Doctor's participle is ambiguous, I imagine that Allen's infinitives are just as much so. "The participle which we denominate past, often means an action whilst performing: thus, I saw the battle fought, and the standard lowered."—Wilson's Essay, p. 158. Sometimes, especially in familiar conversation, an infinitive verb is suppressed, and the sign of it retained; as, "They might have aided us; they ought to" [have aided us].—Herald of Freedom. "We have tried to like it, but it's hard to."—Lynn News.

OBS. 31.—After the verb make, some writers insert the verb be, and suppress the preposition to; as, "He must make every syllable, and even every letter, in the word which he pronounces, be heard distinctly."—Blair's Rhet., p. 329; Murray's E. Reader, p. 9. "You must make yourself be heard with pleasure and attention."—Duncan's Cicero, p. 84. "To make himself be heard by all."—Blair's Rhet., p. 328. "To make ourselves be heard by one."—Ibid. "Clear enough to make me be understood."—Locke, on Ed., p. 198. In my opinion, it would be better, either to insert the to, or to use the participle only; as, "The information which he possessed, made his company to be courted."—Dr. M'Rie. "Which will both show the importance of this rule, and make the application of it to be understood."—Blair's Rhet., p. 103. Or, as in these brief forms: "To make himself heard by all."—"Clear enough to make me understood."

OBS. 32.—In those languages in which the infinitive is distinguished as such by its termination, this part of the verb may be used alone as the subject of a finite verb; but in English it is always necessary to retain the sign to before an abstract infinitive, because there is nothing else to distinguish the verb from a noun. Here we may see a difference between our language and the French, although it has been shown, that in their government of the infinitive they are in some degree analogous:—"HAÏR est un tourment; AIMER est un besoin de l'âme."—M. de Ségur. "To hate is a torment; to love is a requisite of the soul." If from this any will argue that to is not here a preposition, the same argument will be as good, to prove that for is not a preposition when it governs the objective case; because that also may be used without any antecedent term of relation: as, "They are by no means points of equal importance, for me to be deprived of your affections, and for him to be defeated in his prosecution."—Anon., in W. Allen's Gram., p. 166. I said, the sign to must always be put before an abstract infinitive: but possibly a repetition of this sign may not always be necessary, when several such infinitives occur in the same construction: as, "But, to fill a heart with joy, restore content to the afflicted, or relieve the necessitous, these fall not within the reach of their five senses."—Art of Thinking, p. 66. It may be too much to affirm, that this is positively ungrammatical; yet it would be as well or better, to express it thus: "But to relieve the necessitous, to restore content to the afflicted, and to fill a heart with joy, these fall not within the reach of their five senses."

OBS. 33.—In the use of the English infinitive, as well as of the participle in ing, the distinction of voice is often disregarded; the active form being used in what, with respect to the noun before it, is a passive sense: as, "There's no time to waste."—W. Allen's Gram.,

p. 82. "You are to blame."—Ib. "The humming-bird is delightful to look upon."—Ib. "What pain it was to drown."—Shak. "The thing's to do."—Id. "When deed of danger was to do."—Scott. "The evil I bring upon myself, is the hardest to bear."—Home's Art of Thinking, p. 27. "Pride is worse to bear than cruelty."—Ib., p. 37. These are in fact active verbs, and not passive. We may suggest agents for them, if we please; as, "There is no time for us to waste." That the simple participle in ing may be used passively, has been proved elsewhere. It seems sometimes to have no distinction of voice; as, "What is worth doing, is worth doing well."—Com. Maxim. This is certainly much more agreeable, than to say, "What is worth being done, is worth being done well." In respect to the voice of the infinitive, and of this participle, many of our grammarians are obviously hypercritical. For example: "The active voice should not be used for the passive; as, I have work to do: a house to sell, to let, instead of to be done, to be sold, to be let."—Sanborn's Gram., p. 220. "Active verbs are often used improperly with a passive signification, as, 'the house is building, lodgings to let, he has a house to sell, nothing is wanting;' in stead of 'the house is being built, lodgings to be lett, he has a house to be sold, nothing is wanted.'"—Blair's Gram., p. 64. In punctuation, orthography, and the use of capitals, here are more errors than it is worth while to particularize. With regard to such phraseology as, "The house is being built," see, in Part II, sundry Observations on the Compound Form of Conjugation. To say, "I have work to do,"—"He has a house to sell,"—or, "We have lodgings to let," is just as good English, as to say, "I have meat to eat."—John, iv, 32. And who, but some sciolist in grammar, would, in all such instances, prefer the passive voice?

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XVIII.

INFINITIVES DEMANDING THE PARTICLE TO.

"William, please hand me that pencil."—R. C. Smith's New Gram., p. 12.

[FORMULE—Not proper, because the infinitive verb hand is not preceded by the preposition to. But, according to Rule 18th, "The preposition to governs the infinitive mood, and commonly connects it to a finite verb." Therefore, to should be here inserted; thus, "William, please to hand me that pencil."]

"Please insert points so as to make sense."—Davis's Gram., p. 123. "I have known Lords abbreviate almost the half of their words."—Cobbett's English Gram., ¶ 153. "We shall find the practice perfectly accord with the theory."—Knight, on the Greek Alphabet, p. 23. "But it would tend to obscure, rather than elucidate the subject."—L. Murray's Gram., p. 95. "Please divide it for them as it should be."—Willett's Arith., p. 193. "So as neither to embarrass, nor weaken the sentence."—Blair's Rhet., p. 116; Murray's Gram., 322. "Carry her to his table, to view his poor fare,* and hear his heavenly discourse."—SHERLOCK: Blair's Rhet., p. 157; Murray's Gram., 347. "That we need not be surprised to find this hold in eloquence."—Blair's Rhet., p. 174. "Where he has no occasion either to divide or explain."—Ib., p. 305. "And they will find their pupils improve by hasty and pleasant steps."—Russell's Gram., Pref., p. 4. "The teacher however will please observe," &c.—Infant School Gram., p. 8. "Please attend to a few rules in what is called syntax."—Ib., p. 128. "They may dispense with the laws to favor their friends, or secure their office."—Webster's Essays, p. 39. "To take back a gift, or break a contract, is a wanton abuse."—Ib., p. 41.

* After the word "fare," Murray put a semicolon, which shows that he misunderstood the mood of the verb "hear." It is not always necessary to repeat the particle to, when two or more infinitives are connected; and this fact is an other good argument against calling the preposition to "a part of the verb." But in this example, and some others here exhibited, the repetition is requisite.—G. B.

“The legislature has nothing to do, but let it bear its own price.”—Ib., p. 315. “He is not to form, but copy characters.”—Rambler, No. 122. “I have known a woman make use of a shoeing-horn.”—Spect., No. 536. “Finding this experiment answer, in every respect, their wishes.”—Sandford and Merton, p. 51. “In fine let him cause his argument conclude in the term of the question.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. iii, p. 443.

“That he permitted not the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly.”—Shakspeare, Hamlet.

RULE XIX.—INFINITIVES.

The active verbs, bid, dare, feel, hear, let, make, need, see, and their participles, usually take the Infinitive after them without the preposition to: as, “If he bade thee depart, how darest thou stay?”—“I dare not let my mind be idle as I walk in the streets.”—Cotton Mather.

“Thy Hector, wrapt in everlasting sleep,
Shall neither hear thee sigh, nor see thee weep.”—Pope’s Homer.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XIX.

OBS. 1.—Respecting the syntax of the infinitive mood when the particle to is not expressed before it, our grammarians are almost as much at variance, as I have shown them to be, when they find the particle employed. Concerning verbs governed by verbs, Lindley Murray, and some others, are the most clear and positive, where their doctrine is the most obviously wrong; and, where they might have affirmed with truth, that the former verb governs the latter, they only tell us that “the preposition TO is sometimes properly omitted,”—or that such and such verbs “have commonly other verbs following them without the sign TO.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 183; Alger’s, 63; W. Allen’s, 167, and others. If these authors meant, that the preposition to is omitted by ellipsis, they ought to have said so. Then the many admirers and remodellers of Murray’s Grammar might at least have understood him alike. Then, too, any proper definition of ellipsis must have proved both them and him to be clearly wrong about this construction also. If the word to is really “understood,” whenever it is omitted after bid, dare, feel, &c., as some authors, affirm, then is it here the governing word, if anywhere; and this nineteenth rule, however common, is useless to the parser.* Then, too, does no English verb ever govern the infinitive without governing also a preposition, “expressed or understood.” Whatever is omitted by ellipsis, and truly “understood,” really belongs to the grammatical construction; and therefore, if inserted, it cannot be actually improper, though it may be unnecessary. But all our grammarians admit, that to before the infinitive is sometimes “superfluous and improper.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 183. I imagine, there cannot be any proper ellipsis of to before the infinitive, except in some forms of comparison; because, wherever else it is necessary, either to the sense or to the construction, it ought to be inserted. And wherever the to is rightly used, it is properly the governing word; but where it cannot be inserted without impropriety, it is absurd to say, that it is “understood.” The infinitive that is put after such a verb or participle as excludes the preposition to, is governed by this verb or participle, if it is governed by any thing: as,

* “The Infinitive Mood is not confined to a trunk or nominative, and is always preceded by to, expressed or implied.”—S. Barrett’s Gram., 1854, p. 43.

"To make them do, undo, eat, drink, stand, move, Talk, think, and feel, exactly as he chose."—Pollok, p. 69.

OBS. 2.—Ingersoll, who converted Murray's Grammar into "Conversations," says, "I will just remark to you that the verbs in the infinitive mood, that follow make, need, see, bid, dare, feel, hear, let, and their participles, are always GOVERNED by them."—Conv. on Eng. Gram., p. 120. Kirkham, who pretended to turn the same book into "Familiar Lectures," says, "To, the sign of the infinitive mood, is often understood before the verb; as, 'Let me proceed;' that is, Let me to proceed."—Gram. in Fam. Lect., p. 137. The lecturer, however, does not suppose the infinitive to be here governed by the preposition to, or the verb let, but rather by the pronoun me. For, in an other place, he avers, that the infinitive may be governed by a noun or a pronoun; as, "Let him do it."—Ib., p. 187. Now if the government of the infinitive is to be referred to the objective noun or pronoun that intervenes, none of those verbs that take the infinitive after them without the preposition, will usually be found to govern it, except dare and need; and if need, in such a case, is an auxiliary, no government pertains to that. R. C. Smith, an other modifier of Murray, having the same false notion of ellipsis, says, "To, the usual sign of this mood, is sometimes understood; as, 'Let me go,' instead of, 'Let me to go.'"—Smith's New Gram., p. 65. According to Murray, whom these men profess to follow, let, in all these examples, is an auxiliary, and the verb that follows it, is not in the infinitive mood, but in the imperative. So they severally contradict their oracle, and all are wrong, both he and they! The disciples pretend to correct their master, by supposing "Let me to go," and "Let me to proceed," good English!

OBS. 3.—It is often impossible to say by what the infinitive is governed, according to the instructions of Murray, or according to any author who does not parse it as I do. Nutting says, "The infinitive mode sometimes follows the comparative conjunctions, as, than, and how, WITHOUT GOVERNMENT."—Practical Gram., p. 106. Murray's uncertainty* may * Lindley Murray, and several of his pretended improvers, say, "The infinitive sometimes follows the word AS: thus, 'An object so high as to be invisible.' The infinitive occasionally follows THAN after a comparison; as, 'He desired nothing more than to know his own imperfections.'"—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 184; Fisk's, 125; Alger's, 63; Merchant's, 92. See this second example in Weld's Gram., p. 167; Abridg., 124. Merchant, not relishing the latter example, changes it thus: "I wish nothing more, than to know his fate." He puts a comma after more, and probably means, "I wish nothing else than to know his fate." So does Fisk, in the other version: and probably means, "He desired nothing else than to know his own imperfections." But Murray, Alger, and Weld, accord in punctuation, and their meaning seems rather to be, "He desired nothing more heartily than [he desired] to know his own imperfections." And so is this or a similar text interpreted by both Ingersoll and Weld, who suppose this infinitive to be "governed by another verb, understood: as, 'He desired nothing more than to see his friends;' that is, 'than he desired to see,' &c."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 244; Weld's Abridged, 124. But obvious as is the ambiguity of this fictitious example, in all its forms, not one of these five critics perceived the fault at all. Again, in their remark above cited, Ingersoll, Fisk, and Merchant, put a comma before the preposition "after," and thus make the phrase, "after a comparison," describe the place of the infinitive. But Murray and Alger probably meant that this phrase should denote the place of the conjunction "than." The great "Compiler" seems to me to have misused the phrase "a comparison," for, "an adjective or adverb of the comparative degree;" and the rest, I suppose, have blindly copied him, without thinking or knowing what he ought to have said, or meant to say. Either this, or a worse error, is here apparent. Five learned grammarians severally represent either "than" or "the infinitive," as being AFTER "a comparison," of which one is the copula, and the other but the beginning of the latter term! Palpable as is the absurdity, no one of the five perceives it! And, besides, no one of them says any thing about the government of this infinitive, except Ingersoll, and he supplies a verb. "Than and as," says Greenleaf, "sometimes appear to govern the infinitive mood; as, 'Nothing makes a man suspect much more, than to know little;' 'An object so high as to be invisible.'"—Gram. Simp., p. 38. Here is an other fictitious and ambiguous example, in which the phrase, "to know little," is the subject of makes understood. Nixon have led to some part of this notion, but the idea that how is a “comparative conjunction,” is a blunder entirely new. Kirkham is so puzzled by “the language of that eminent philologist,” that he bolts outright from the course of his guide, and runs he knows not whither; feigning that other able writers have well contended, “that this mood IS NOT GOVERNED by any particular word.” Accordingly he leaves his pupils at liberty to “reject the idea of government, as applied to the verb in this mood;” and even frames a rule which refers it always “To some noun or pronoun, as its subject or actor.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 188. Murray teaches that the object of the active verb sometimes governs the infinitive that follows it: as, “They have a desire to improve.”—Octavo Gram., p. 184. To what extent, in practice, he would carry this doctrine, nobody can tell; probably to every sentence in which this object is the antecedent term to the preposition to, and perhaps further: as, “I have a house to sell”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 106. “I feel a desire to excel.” “I felt my heart within me die.”—Merrick.

OBS. 4.—Nutting supposes that the objective case before the infinitive always governs it wherever it denotes the agent of the infinitive action; as, “He commands me to write a letter.”—Practical Gram., p. 96. Nixon, on the contrary, contends, that the finite verb, in such a sentence, can govern only one object, and that this object is the infinitive. “The objective case preceding it,” he says, “is the subject or agent of that infinitive, and not governed by the preceding verb.” His example is, “Let them go.”—English Parser, p. 97. “In the examples, ‘He is endeavouring to persuade them to learn,’—‘It is pleasant to see the sun,’—the pronoun them, the adjective pleasant, and the participle endeavouring, I consider as governing the following verb in the infinitive mode.”—Cooper’s Plain and Pract. Gram., p. 144. “Some erroneously say that pronouns govern the infinitive mode in such examples as this: ‘I expected him to be present.’ We will change the expression: ‘He was expected to be present.’ All will admit that to be is governed by was expected. The same verb that governs it in the passive voice, governs it in the active.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 144. So do our professed grammarians differ about the government of the infinitive, even in the most common constructions of it! Often, however, it makes but little difference in regard to the sense, which of the two words is considered the governing or antecedent term; but where the preposition is excluded, the construction seems to imply some immediate influence of the finite verb upon the infinitive.

OBS. 5.—The extent of this influence, or of such government, has never yet been clearly determined. “This irregularity,” says Murray, “extends only to active or neuter verbs: [‘active and neuter verbs,’ says Fisk:] for all the verbs above mentioned, when made passive, require the preposition to before the following verb: as, ‘He was seen to go;’ ‘He was heard to speak;’ ‘They were bidden to be upon their guard.’”—Murray’s Gram., p. 183. Fisk adds with no great accuracy “In the past and future tenses of the active voice also, these verbs generally require the sign to, to be prefixed to the following verbs; as, ‘You have dared to proceed without authority;’ ‘They will not dare to attack you.’”—Gram. Simplified, p. 125. What these gentlemen here call “neuter verbs,” are only the two words dare and need, which are, in most cases, active, though not always transitive; unless the infinitive itself can make them so—an inconsistent doctrine of theirs which I have elsewhere refuted. (See Obs. 3rd on Rule 5th.) These two verbs take the infinitive after them without the preposition, only when they are intransitive; while all the rest seem to have this power, only when they are transitive. If there are any exceptions, they shall supposes the infinitive phrase after as to be always the subject of a finite verb understood after it; as, “An object so high as to be invisible is or, implies.” See English Parser, p. 100.

---

presently be considered. A more particular examination of the construction proper for the infinitive after each of these eight verbs, seems necessary for a right understanding of the rule.

OBS. 6.—Of the verb BID. This verb, in any of its tenses, when it commands an action, usually governs an object and also an infinitive, which come together; as, “Thou bidst the world adore.”—Thomson. “If the prophet had bid thee do some great thing.”—2 Kings, v, 13. But when it means, to promise or offer, the infinitive that follows, must be introduced by the preposition to; as, “He bids fair to excel them all”—“Perhaps no person under heaven bids more unlikely to be saved.”—Brown’s Divinity, p. vii. “And each bade high to win him.”—GRANVILLE: Joh. Dict. After the compound forbid, the preposition is also necessary; as, “Where honeysuckles forbid the sun to enter.”—Beauties of Shak. p. 57. In poetry, if the measure happens to require it, the word to is sometimes allowed after the simple verb bid, denoting a command; as,

“Bid me to strike my dearest brother dead,
To bring my aged father’s hoary head.”—Rowe’s Lucan, B. i, l. 677.

OBS. 7.—Of the verb DARE. This verb, when used intransitively, and its irregular preterit durst, which is never transitive, usually take the infinitive after them without to; as, “I dare do all that may become a man: Who dares do more, is none.”—Shakspeare. “If he durst steal any thing adventurously.”—Id. “Who durst defy th’ Omnipotent to arms.”—Milton. “Like one who durst his destiny control.”—Dryden. In these examples, the former verbs have some resemblance to auxiliaries, and the insertion of the preposition to would be improper. But when we take away this resemblance, by giving dare or dared, an objective case, the preposition is requisite before the infinitive; as, “Time! I dare thee to discover Such a youth or such a lover.”—Dryden. “He dares me to enter the lists.”—Fisk’s Gram., p. 125. So when dare itself is in the infinitive mood, or is put after an auxiliary, the preposition is not improper; as, “And let a private man dare to say that it will.”—Brown’s Estimate, ii, 147. “Would its compiler dare to affront the Deity?”—West’s Letters, p. 151. “What power so great, to dare to disobey?”—Pope’s Homer. “Some would even dare to die.”—Bible. “What would dare to molest him?”—Dr. Johnson. “Do you dare to prosecute such a creature as Vaughan?”—Junius, Let. xxxiii. Perhaps these examples might be considered good English, either with or without the to; but the last one would be still better thus: “Dare you prosecute such a creature as Vaughan?” Dr. Priestley thinks the following sentence would have been better with the preposition inserted: “Who have dared defy the worst.”—HARRIS: Priestley’s Gram., p. 132. To is sometimes used after the simple verb, in the present tense; as, “Those whose words no one dares to repeat.”—Opie, on Lying, p. 147.

“Dare I to leave of humble prose the shore?”—Young, p. 377.

“Against heaven’s endless mercies pour’d, how dar’st thou to rebel?”—Id., p. 380.

“The man who dares to be a wretch, deserves still greater pain.”—Id., p. 381.

OBS. 8.—Of the verb FEEL. This verb, in any of its tenses, may govern the infinitive without the sign to; but it does this, only when it is used transitively, and that in regard to a bodily perception: as, “I feel it move.”—“I felt something sting me.” If we speak of feeling any mental affection, or if we use the verb intransitively, the infinitive that follows, requires the preposition; as, “I feel it to be my duty.”—“I felt ashamed to ask.”—“I feel afraid to go alone.”—“I felt about, to find the door.” One may say of what is painful to the body, “I feel it to be severe.”

OBS. 9.—Of the verb HEAR. This verb is often intransitive, but it is usually followed by an objective case when it governs the infinitive; as, “To hear a bird sing.”—Webster. “You have never heard me say so.” For this reason, I am inclined to think that those sentences in which it appears to govern the infinitive alone, are elliptical; as, “I have heard tell of such things.”—“And I have heard say of thee, that thou canst understand a dream to interpret it.”—Gen, xli, 15. Such examples may be the same as, “I have heard people tell,”—“I have heard men say,” &c.

OBS. 10.—Of the verb LET. By many grammarians this verb has been erroneously called an auxiliary of the optative mood; or, as Dr. Johnson terms it, “a sign of the optative mood:” though none deny, that it is sometimes also a principal verb. It is, in fact, always a principal verb; because, as we now apply it, it is always transitive. It commonly governs an objective noun or pronoun, and also an infinitive without the sign to; as, “Rise up, let us go.”—Mark. “Thou shalt let it rest.”—Exodus. But sometimes the infinitive coalesces with it more nearly than the objective, so that the latter is placed after both verbs; as, “The solution lets go the mercury.”—Newton. “One lets slip out of his account a good part of that duration.”—Locke. “Back! on your lives; let be, said he, my prey.”—Dryden. The phrase, let go, is sometimes spoken for, let go your hold; and let be, for let him be, let it be, &c. In such instances, therefore, the verb let is not really intransitive. This verb, even in the passive form, may have the infinitive after it without the preposition to; as, “Nothing is let slip.”—Walker’s English Particles, p. 165. “They were let go in peace.”—Acts, xv, 33. “The stage was never empty, nor the curtain let fall.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 459. “The pye’s question was wisely let fall without a reply.”—L’Estrange. With respect to other passives, Murray and Fisk appear to be right; and sometimes the preposition is used after this one: as, “There’s a letter for you, sir, if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.”—Shakspeare. Let, when used intransitively, required the preposition to before the following infinitive; as, “He would not let [i. e. forbear] to counsel the king.”—Bacon. But this use of let is now obsolete.

OBS. 11.—Of the verb MAKE. This verb, like most of the others, never immediately governs an infinitive, unless it also governs a noun or a pronoun which is the immediate subject of such infinitive; as, “You make me blush.”—“This only made the youngster laugh”—Webster’s Spelling-Book. “Which soon made the young chap hasten down.”—Ib. But in very many instances it is quite proper to insert the preposition where this verb is transitive; as, “He maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak.”—Mark, vii, 37. “He makes the excellency of a sentence to consist in four things.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 122; Jamieson’s, 124. “It is this that makes the observance of the dramatic unities to be of consequence.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 464. “In making some tenses of the English verb to consist of principal and auxiliary.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 76. “When make is intransitive, it has some qualifying word after it, besides the sign of the infinitive; as,—I think he will make out to pay his debts.” Formerly, the preposition to was almost always inserted to govern the infinitive after make or made; as, “Lest I make my brother to offend.”—1 Cor., viii, 13. “He made many to fall.”—Jer., xlvi, 16. Yet, in the following text, it is omitted, even where the verb is meant to be passive: “And it was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man.”—Dan., vii, 4. This construction is improper, and not free from ambiguity; because stand may be a noun, and made, an active verb governing it. There may also be uncertainty in the meaning, where the insertion of the preposition leaves none in the construction; for made may signify either created or compelled, and the infinitive after it, may denote either the purpose of creation, or the effect of any temporary compulsion: as, “We are made to be serviceable to others.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 167. “Man was made to mourn.”—Burns. “Taste was never made to cater for vanity.”—Blair. The primitive word make seldom, if ever, produces a construction that is thus equivocal. The infinitive following it without to, always denotes the effect of the making, and not the purpose of the maker; as, “He made his son Skjöld be received there as king.”—North. Antiq., p. 81. But the same meaning may be conveyed when the to is used; as,

“The fear of God is freedom, joy, and peace;
And makes all ills that vex us here to cease.”—Waller, p. 56.

OBS. 12.—Of the verb NEED. I incline to think, that the word need, whenever it is rightly followed by the infinitive without to, is, in reality an auxiliary of the potential mood; and that, like may, can, and must, it may properly be used, in both the present and the perfect tense, without personal inflection: as, “He need not go, He need not have gone,” where, if need is a principal verb, and governs the infinitive without to, the expressions must be, “He needs not go, He needed not go, or, He has not needed go.” But none of these three forms is agreeable; and the last two are never used. Wherefore, in stead of placing in my code of false syntax the numerous examples of the former kind, with which the style of our grammarians and critics has furnished me, I have exhibited many of them, in contrast with others, in the eighth and ninth observations on the Conjugation of Verbs; in which observations, the reader may see what reasons there are for supposing the word need to be sometimes an auxiliary and sometimes a principal verb. Because no other author has yet intentionally recognized the propriety of this distinction, I have gone no farther than to show on what grounds, and with what authority from usage, it might be acknowledged. If we adopt this distinction, perhaps it will be found that the regular or principal verb need always requires, or, at least, always admits, the preposition to before the following infinitive; as, “They need not to be specially indicated.”—Adams’s Rhet., i, 302. “We need only to remark.”—Ib., ii, 224. “A young man needed only to ask himself,” &c.—Ib., i, 117. “Nor is it conceivable to me, that the lightning of a Demosthenes could need to be sped upon the wings of a semiquaver.”—Ib., ii, 226. “But these people need to be informed.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 220. “No man needed less to be informed.”—Ib., p. 175. “We need only to mention the difficulty that arises.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 362. “Can there need to be argument to prove so plain a point?”—Graham’s Lect. “Moral instruction needs to have a more prominent place.”—Dr. Weeks. “Pride, ambition, and selfishness, need to be restrained.”—Id. “Articles are sometimes omitted, where they need to be used.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 197. “Whose power needs not to be dreaded.”—Wilson’s Hebrew Gram., p. 93. “A workman that needeth not to be ashamed.”—2 Tim., ii, 15. “The small boys may have needed to be managed according to the school system.”—T. D. Woolsey. “The difficulty of making variety consistent, needs not to disturb him.”—Rambler, No. 122. “A more cogent proof needs not to be introduced.”—Wright’s Gram., p. 66. “No person needs to be informed, that you is used in addressing a single person.”—Wilcox’s Gram., p. 19. “I hope I need not to advise you further.”—Shak., All’s Well.

“Nor me, nor other god, thou needst to fear,
For thou to all the heavenly host art dear.”—Congreve.

OBS. 13.—If need is ever an auxiliary, the essential difference between an auxiliary and a principal verb, will very well account for the otherwise puzzling fact, that good writers sometimes inflect this verb, and sometimes do not; and that they sometimes use to after it, and sometimes do not. Nor do I see in what other way a grammarian can treat it, without condemning as bad English a great number of very common phrases which he cannot change for the better. On this principle, such examples as, “He need not proceed,” and “He needs not to proceed,” may be perfectly right in either form; though Murray, Crombie,* Fisk, Ingersoll, Smith, C. Adams, and many others, pronounce both these forms to be wrong; and unanimously, (though contrary to what is perhaps the best usage,) prefer, “He needs not proceed.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 180.

OBS. 14.—On questions of grammar, the practice of authors ought to be of more weight, than the dogmatism of grammarians; but it is often difficult to decide well by either; because errors and contradictions abound in both. For example: Dr. Blair says, (in speaking of the persons represented by I and thou,) “Their sex needs not be marked.”—Rhet., p. 79. Jamieson abridges the work, and says, “needs not to be marked.”—Gram. of Rhet., p. 28. Dr. Lowth also says, “needs not be marked.”—Gram., p. 21. Churchill enlarges the work, and says, “needs not to be marked.”—New Gram., p. 72. Lindley Murray copies Lowth, and says, “needs not be marked.”—Gram., 12mo, 2d Ed., p. 39; 23d Ed., p. 51; and perhaps all other editions. He afterwards enlarges his own work, and says, “needs not to be marked.”—Octavo Gram., p. 51. But, according to Greenleaf they all express the idea ungrammatically; the only true form being, “Their sex need not be marked.” See Gram. Simplified, p. 48. In the two places in which the etymology and the syntax of this verb are examined, I have cited from proper sources more than twenty examples in which to is used after it, and more than twenty others in which the verb is not inflected in the third person singular. In the latter, need is treated as an auxiliary; in the former, it is a principal verb, of the regular construction. If the principal verb need can also govern the infinitive without to, as all our grammarians have supposed, then there is a third form which is unobjectionable, and my pupils may take their choice of the three. But still there is a fourth form which nobody approves, though the hands of some great men have furnished us with examples of it: as, “A figure of thought need not to detort the words from their literal sense.”—J. Q. Adams’s Lectures, Vol. ii, p. 254. “Which a man need only to appeal to his own feelings immediately to evince.”—Clarkson’s Prize-Essay on Slavery, p. 106.

OBS. 15.—Webster and Greenleaf seem inclined to justify the use of dare, as well as of need, for the third person singular. Their doctrine is this: “In popular practice it is used in the third person, without the personal termination. Thus, instead of saying, ‘He dares not do it;’ We generally say, ‘He dare not do it.’ In like manner, need, when an active verb, is regular in its inflections; as, ‘A man needs more prudence.’ But when intransitive, it drops the personal terminations in the present tense, and is followed by a verb without the prefix to; as, ‘A man need not be uneasy.’—Greenleaf’s Grammar Simplified, p. 38; Webster’s Philosophical Gram., p. 178; Improved Gram., 127. Each part of this explanation appears to me erroneous. In popular practice, one shall oftener hear, “He dares n’t do it,” or even, “You dares n’t do it,” than, “He dare not do it.” But it is only in the trained practice of the schools, that he shall ever hear, “He needs n’t do it,” or, “He needs not do it.” If need is sometimes used without inflection, this peculiarity, or the disuse of to before the subsequent infinitive, is not a necessary result of its “intransitive” character. And as to their latent nominative, “whereof there is no account,” or, “whereof there needs no account,” their fact, of which “there is no evidence,” or of which “there needs no evidence,” I judge it a remarkable phenomenon, that authors of so high pretensions, could find, in these transpositions, a nominative to “is,” but none to “needs!” See a marginal note under Rule 14th, at p. 570.

---

* Dr. Crombie, after copying the substance of Campbell’s second Canon, that, “In doubtful cases analogy should be regarded,” remarks: “For the same reason, ‘it needs’ and ‘he dares,’ are better than ‘he need’ and ‘he dare.”—On Etym. and Synt., p. 326. Dr. Campbell’s language is somewhat stronger: “In the verbs to dare and to need, many say, in the third person present singular, dare and need, as ‘he need not go: he dare not do it.’ Others say, dares and needs. As the first usage is exceedingly irregular, hardly any thing less than uniform practice could authorize it.”—Philosophy of Rhet., p. 175. Dare for dares I suppose to be wrong; but if need is an auxiliary of the potential mood, to use it without inflection, is neither “irregular,” nor at all inconsistent with the foregoing canon. But the former critic notices these verbs a second time, thus: “‘He dare not,’ ‘he need not,’ may be justly pronounced solecisms, for ‘he dares,’ ‘he needs.”—Crombie, on Etym. and Synt., p. 378. He also says, “The verbs bid, dare, need, make, see, hear, feel, let, are not followed by the sign of the infinitive.”—Ib., p. 277. And yet he writes thus: “These are truths, of which, I am persuaded, the author, to whom I allude, needs not to be reminded.”—Ib., p. 123. So Dr. Bullions declares against need in the singular, by putting down the following example as bad English: “He need not be in so much haste.”—Bullions’s E. Gram., p. 134. Yet he himself writes thus: “A name more appropriate than the term neuter, need not be desired.”—Ib., p. 196. A school-boy may see the inconsistency of this.

OBS. 16.—Of the verb SEE. This verb, whenever it governs the infinitive without to, governs also an objective noun or pronoun; as, “See me do it.”—“I saw him do it.”—Murray. Whenever it is intransitive, the following infinitive must be governed by to; as, “I will see to have it done.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 98; Greenleaf’s, 38. “How could he see to do them?”—Beauties of Shak., p. 43. In the following text, see is transitive, and governs the infinitive; but the two verbs are put so far apart, that it requires some skill in the reader to make their relation apparent: “When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place,” &c.—Matt., xxiv, 15. An other scripturist uses the participle, and says—“standing where it ought not,” &c.—Mark, xiii, 14. The Greek word is the same in both; it is a participle, agreeing with the noun for abomination. Sometimes the preposition to seems to be admitted on purpose to protract the expression: as,

“Tranio, I saw her coral lips to move,
And with her breath she did perfume the air.”—Shak.

OBS. 17.—A few other verbs, besides the eight which are mentioned in the foregoing rule and remarks, sometimes have the infinitive after them without to. W. Allen teaches, that, “The sign to is generally omitted,” not only after these eight, but also after eight others; namely, “find, have, help, mark, observe, perceive, watch, and the old preterit gan, for began; and sometimes after behold and know.”—Elements of Gram., p. 167. Perhaps he may have found some instances of the omission of the preposition after all these, but in my opinion his rule gives a very unwarrantable extension to this “irregularity,” as Murray calls it. The usage belongs only to particular verbs, and to them not in all their applications. Other verbs of the same import do not in general admit the same idiom. But, by a license for the most part peculiar to the poets, the preposition to is occasionally omitted, especially after verbs equivalent to those which exclude it; as, “And force them sit.”—Couper’s Task, p. 46. That is, “And make them sit.” According to Churchill, “To use ought or cause in this manner, is a Scotticism: [as,] ‘Won’t you cause them remove the hares?’—‘You ought not walk.’ SHAK.”—New Gram., p. 317. The verbs, behold, view, observe, mark, watch, and spy, are only other words for see; as, “There might you behold one joy crown an other.”—Shak. “There I sat, viewing the silver stream glide silently towards the tempestuous sea.”—Walton. “I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven.”—Luke, x, 18.

“Thy drowsy nurse hath sworn she did them spy
Come tripping to the room where thou didst lie.”—Milton.

———“Nor with less dread the loud Ethereal trumpet from on high ‘gan blow.”—Id., P. L., vi, 60.

OBS. 18.—After have, help, and find, the infinitive sometimes occurs without the preposition to, but much oftener with it; as, “When enumerating objects which we wish to have appear distinct.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 222. “Certainly, it is heaven upon earth, to have a man’s mind move in charity, rest in Providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.”—Ld. Bacon. “What wilt thou have me to do?”—Acts, ix, 6. “He will have us to acknowledge him.”—Scougal, p. 102. “I had to walk all the way.”—Lennie’s Gram., p. 85. “Would you have them let go then? No.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 248. According to Allen’s rule, this question is ambiguous; but the learned author explains it in Latin thus: “Placet igitur eos dimitti? Minimé.” That is, “Would you have them dismissed then? No.” Had he meant, “Would you have them to let go then?” he would doubtless have said so. Kirkham, by adding help to Murray’s list, enumerates nine verbs which he will have to exclude the sign of the infinitive; as, “Help me do it.”—Gram., p. 188. But good writers sometimes use the particle to after this verb; as, “And Danby’s matchless impudence helped to support the knave.”—DRYDEN: Joh. Dict., w. Help. Dr. Priestley says, “It must, I suppose, be according to the Scotch idiom that Mrs. Macaulay omits it after the verb help: ‘To help carry on the new measures of the court.’ History, Vol. iv, p. 150.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 133. “You will find the difficulty disappear in a short time.”—Cobbett’s English Gram., ¶ 16. “We shall always find this distinction obtain.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 245. Here the preposition to might have been inserted with propriety. Without it, a plural noun will render the construction equivocal. The sentence, “You will find the difficulties disappear in a short time,” will probably be understood to mean, “You will find that the difficulties disappear in a short time.” “I do not find him reject his authority.”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 167. Here too the preposition might as well have been inserted. But, as this use of the infinitive is a sort of Latinism, some critics would choose to say, “I do not find that he rejects his authority.” “Cyrus was extremely glad to find them have such sentiments of religion.”—Rollin, ii, 117. Here the infinitive may be varied either by the participle or by the indicative; as, “to find them having,” or, “to find they had.” Of the three expressions, the last, I think, is rather the best.

OBS. 19.—When two or more infinitives are connected in the same construction, one preposition sometimes governs them both or all; a repetition of the particle not being always necessary, unless we mean to make the terms severally emphatical. This fact is one evidence that to is not a necessary part of each infinitive verb, as some will have it to be. Examples: “Lord, suffer me first TO go and bury my father.”—Matt., viii, 21. “To shut the door, means, TO throw or cast the door to.”—Tooke’s D. P., ii, 105. “Most authors expect the printer TO spell, point, and digest their copy, that it may be intelligible to the reader.”—Printer’s Grammar.

“I’ll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
 To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield.”—Shak.

OBS. 20.—An infinitive that explains an other, may sometimes be introduced without the preposition to; because, the former having it, the construction of the latter is made the same by this kind of apposition: as, “The most accomplished way of using books at present is, TO serve them as some do lords; learn their titles, and, then brag of their acquaintance.”—SWIFT: Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 166.

OBS. 21.—After than or as, the sign of the infinitive is sometimes required, and sometimes excluded; and in some instances we can either insert it or not, as we please. The latter term of a comparison is almost always more or less elliptical; and as the nature of its ellipsis depends on the structure of the former term, so does the necessity of inserting or of omitting the sign of the infinitive. Examples: “No desire is more universal than [is the desire] to be exalted and honoured.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 197. “The difficulty is not so great to die for a friend, as [is the difficulty] to find a friend worth dying for.”—Id., Art of Thinking, p. 42. “It is no more in one’s power to love or not to love, than [it is in one’s power] to be in health or out of order.”—Ib., p. 45. “Men are more likely to be praised into virtue, than [they are likely] to be railed out of vice.”—Ib., p. 48. “It is more tolerable to be always alone, than [it is tolerable] never to be so.”—Ib., p. 26. “Nothing [is] more easy than to do mischief [is easy]: nothing [is] more difficult than to suffer without complaining” [is difficult].—Ib., p. 46. Or: “than [it is easy] to do mischief:” &c., “than [it is difficult] to suffer,” &c. “It is more agreeable to the nature of most men to follow than [it is agreeable to their nature] to lead.”—Ib., p. 55. In all these examples, the preposition to is very properly inserted; but what excludes it from the former term of a comparison, will exclude it from the latter, if such governing verb be understood there: as, “You no more heard me say those words, than [you heard me] talk Greek.” It may be equally proper to say, “We choose rather to lead than follow,” or, “We choose rather to lead than to follow.”—Art of Thinking, p. 37. The meaning in either case is, “We choose to lead rather than we choose to follow.” In the following example, there is perhaps an ellipsis of to before cite: “I need do nothing more than simply cite the explicit declarations,” &c.—Gurney’s Peculiarities, p. 4. So in these: “Nature did no more than furnish the power and means.”—Sheridan’s Elocution, p. 147.

“To beg, than work, he better understands;
Or we perhaps might take him off thy hands.”—Pope’s Odyssey, xvii, 260.

OBS. 22.—It has been stated, in Obs. 16th on Rule 17th, that good writers are apt to shun a repetition of any part common to two or more verbs in the same sentence; and among the examples there cited is this: “They mean to, and will, hear patiently.”—Salem Register. So one might say, “Can a man arrive at excellence, who has no desire to?”—“I do not wish to go, nor expect to.”—“Open the door, if you are going to.” Answer: “We want to, and try to, but can’t.” Such ellipses of the infinitive after to, are by no means uncommon, especially in conversation; nor do they appear to me to be always reprehensible, since they prevent repetition, and may contribute to brevity without obscurity. But Dr. Bullions has lately thought proper to condemn them; for such is presumed to have been the design of the following note: “To, the sign of the infinitive, should never be used for the infinitive itself. Thus, ‘I have not written, and I do not intend to,’ is a colloquial vulgarism for, ‘I have not written, and I do not intend to write.’”—Bullions’s Analyt. and Pract. Gram., p. 179. His “Exercises to be corrected,” here, are these: “Be sure to write yourself and tell him to. And live as God designed me to.”—Ib., 1st Ed., p. 180. It being manifest, that to cannot “be used for”—(that is, in place of—)what is implied after it, this is certainly a very awkward way of hinting “there should never be an ellipsis of the infinitive after to.” But, from the false syntax furnished, this appears to have been the meaning intended. The examples are severally faulty, but not for the reason suggested—not because “to” is used for “write” or “live”—not, indeed, for any one reason common to the three—but because, in the first, “to write” and “have not written,” have nothing in common which we can omit; in the second, the mood of “tell” is doubtful, and, without a comma after “yourself,” we cannot precisely know the meaning; in the third, the mood, the person, and the number of “live,” are all unknown. See Note 9th to Rule 17th, above; and Note 2d to the General Rule, below.

OBS. 23.—Of some infinitives, it is hard to say whether they are transitive or intransitive; as, “Well, then, let us proceed; we have other forced marches to make; other enemies to subdue; more laurels to acquire; and more injuries to avenge.”—BONAPARTE: Columbian Orator, p. 136. These, without ellipsis, are intransitive; but relatives may be inserted.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XIX.

INFINITIVES AFTER BID, DARE, FEEL, HEAR, LET, &C.

“I dare not to proceed so hastily, lest I should give offence.”—Murray’s Exercises, p. 63.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the preposition to is inserted before proceed, which follows the active verb dare. But, according to Rule 19th, “The active verbs, bid, dare, feel, hear, let, make, need, see, and their participles, usually take the infinitive after them without the preposition to,” and this is an instance in which the finite verb should immediately govern the infinitive. Therefore, the to should be omitted; thus, “I dare not proceed so hastily,” &c.]

“Their character is formed, and made appear.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 115.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the preposition to is not inserted between made and appear, the verb is made being passive. But, according to Obs. 5th and 10th on Rule 19th, those verbs which in the active form govern the infinitive without to, do not so govern it when they are made passive, except the verb let. Therefore, to should be here inserted; thus, “Their character is formed, and made to appear.”]

“Let there be but matter and opportunity offered, and you shall see them quickly to revive again.”—Wisdom of the Ancients, p. 53. “It has been made appear, that there is no presumption against a revelation.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 252. “MANIFEST, v. t. To reveal; to make to appear; to show plainly.”—Webster’s American Dict. “Let him to reign like unto good Aurelius, or let him to bleed like unto Socrates.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 169. “To sing I could not; to complain I durst not.”—S. Fothergill. “If T. M. be not so frequently heard pray by them.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 132. “How many of your own church members were never heard pray?”—Ib., iii, 133. “Yea, we are bidden pray one for another.”—Ib., iii, 145. “He was made believe that neither the king’s death, nor imprisonment would help him.”—Sheffield’s Works, ii, 281. “I felt a chilling sensation to creep over me.”—Inst., p. 188. “I dare to say he has not got home yet.”—Ib. “We sometimes see bad men to be honoured.”—Ib. “I saw him to move.”—Felch’s Comprehensive Gram., p. 62. “For see thou, ah! see thou a hostile world to raise its terrors.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 167. “But that he make him to rehearse so.”—Lily’s Gram., p. xv. “Let us to rise.”—Fowle’s True Eng. Gram., p. 41.

“Scripture, you know, exhorts us to it;
Bids us to ‘seek peace, and ensue it.’”—Swift’s Poems, p. 336.

“Who bade the mud from Dives’ wheel
To spurn the rags of Lazarus?”

Come, brother, in that dust we'll kneel,
Confessing Heaven that ruled it thus.”—Christmas Book.

CHAPTER VII—PARTICIPLES.

The true or regular syntax of the English Participle, as a part of speech distinct from the verb, and not converted into a noun or an adjective, is twofold; being sometimes that of simple relation to a noun or a pronoun that precedes it, and sometimes that of government, or the state of being governed by a preposition. In the former construction, the participle resembles an adjective; in the latter, it is more like a noun, or like the infinitive mood: for the participle after a preposition is governed as a participle, and not as a case.* To these two constructions, some add three others less regular, using the participle sometimes as the subject of a finite verb, sometimes as the object of a transitive verb, and sometimes as a nominative after a neuter verb. Of these five constructions, the first two, are the legitimate uses of this part of speech; the others are occasional, modern, and of doubtful propriety.

RULE XX.—PARTICIPLES.

Participles relate to nouns or pronouns, or else are governed by prepositions: as, “Elizabeth’s tutor, at one time paying her a visit, found her employed in reading Plato.”—Hume. “I have no more pleasure in hearing a man attempting wit and failing, than in seeing a man trying to leap over a ditch and tumbling into it.”—Dr. Johnson.

“Now, rais’d on Tyre’s sad ruins, Pharaoh’s pride Soar’d high, his legions threat’ning far and wide.”—Dryden.

EXCEPTION FIRST.

A participle sometimes relates to a preceding phrase or sentence, of which it forms no part; as, “I then quit the society; to withdraw and leave them to themselves, APPEARING to me a duty.”—“It is almost exclusively on the ground we have mentioned, that we have heard his being continued in office DEFENDED.”—Professors’ Reasons, p. 23. (Better, “his continuance in office,” or, “the continuing of him in office.” See Obs. 18th on Rule 4th.)

“But ever to do ill our sole delight,
As being the contrary to his high will.”—Milton.

EXCEPTION SECOND.

With an infinitive denoting being or action in the abstract, a participle is sometimes also taken abstractly; (that is, without reference to any particular noun, pronoun, or other subject;) as, “To seem compelled, is disagreeable.”—“To keep always praying aloud, is

---

* Some modern grammarians will have it, that a participle governed by a preposition is a “participial noun,” and yet, when they come to parse an adverb or an objective following, their “noun” becomes a “participle” again, and not a “noun.” To allow words thus to dodge from one class to another, is not only unphilosophical, but ridiculously absurd. Among those who thus treat this construction of the participle, the chief, I think, are Butler, Hurt, Weld, Wells, and S. S. Greene.

plainly impossible.”—“It must be disagreeable to be left pausing* on a word which does not, by itself, produce any idea.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 323.

“To praise him is to serve him, and fulfill,
Doing and suffering, his unquestion’d will.”—Cowper, Vol. i, p. 88.

EXCEPTION THIRD.

The participle is often used irregularly in English, as a substitute for the infinitive mood, to which it is sometimes equivalent without irregularity; as, “I saw him enter, or entering”—Grant’s Lat. Gram., p. 230. “He is afraid of trying, or to try.”—Ibid. Examples irregular: “Sir, said I, if the case stands thus, ‘tis dangerous drinking,” i.e., to drink.—Collier’s Tablet of Cebes. “It will be but ill venturing thy soul upon that,” i.e., to venture.—Bunyan’s Law and Grace, p. 27. “Describing a past event as present, has a fine effect in language,” i.e., to describe.—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 93. “In English likewise it deserves remarking,” i.e., to be remarked.—Harris’s Hermes, p. 232. “Bishop Atterbury deserves being particularly mentioned,” i.e., to be particularly mentioned.—Blair’s Rhet., p. 291. “This, however, is in effect no more than enjoying the sweet that predominates,” i.e., to enjoy.—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 43.

“Habits are soon assum’d; but when we strive
To strip them off, ‘tis being flay’d alive.”—Cowper, Vol. i, p. 44

EXCEPTION FOURTH.

An other frequent irregularity in the construction of participles, is the practice of treating them essentially as nouns, without taking from them the regimen and adjuncts of participles; as, “Your having been well educated will be a great recommendation.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 171. (Better: “Your excellent education”—or, “That you have been well educated, will be,” &c.) “It arises from sublimity’s expressing grandeur in its highest degree.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 29. “Concerning the separating by a circumstance, words intimately connected.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. ii, p. 104. “As long as there is any hope of their keeping pace with them.”—Literary Convention, p. 114. “Which could only arise from his knowing the secrets of all hearts.”—West’s Letters to a Young Lady, p. 180. “But this again is talking quite at random.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 146.

“My being here it is, that holds thee hence.”—Shak.

“Such, but by foils, the clearest lustre see,
And deem aspersing others, praising thee.”—Savage, to Walpole.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XX.

OBS. 1.—To this rule, I incline to think, there are properly no other exceptions than the first two above; or, at least, that we ought to avoid, when we can, any additional anomalies. Yet, not to condemn with unbecoming positiveness what others receive for good English, I have subjoined two items more, which include certain other irregularities now very common, that, when examples of a like form occur, the reader may parse them

---

* Dr. Blair, to whom Murray ought to have acknowledged himself indebted for this sentence, introduced a noun, to which, in his work, this infinitive and these participles refer: thus, “It is disagreeable for the mind to be left pausing on a word which does not, by itself, produce any idea.”—Blair’s Rhetoric, p. 118. See Obs. 10th and 11th on Rule 14th.

as exceptions, if he does not choose to censure them as errors. The mixed construction in which participles are made to govern the possessive case, has already been largely considered in the observations on Rule 4th. Murray, Allen, Churchill, and many other grammarians, great and small, admit that participles may be made the subjects or the objects of verbs, while they retain the nature, government, and adjuncts, of participles; as, “Not attending to this rule, is the cause of a very common error.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 200; Comly’s Gram., 188; Weld’s Gram., 2d Ed., 170. “Polite is employed to signify their being highly civilized.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 219. “One abhors being in debt.”—Ib., p. 98; Jamieson’s Rhet., 71; Murray’s Gram., 144. “Who affected being a fine gentleman so unmercifully.”—Spect., No. 496. “The minister’s being attached to the project, prolonged their debate.”—Nixon’s Parser, p. 78. “It finds [i.e., the mind finds,] that acting thus would gratify one passion; not acting, or acting otherwise, would gratify another.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 109. “But further, cavilling and objecting upon any subject is much easier than clearing up difficulties.”—Bp. Butler’s Charge to the Clergy of Durham, 1751.

OBS. 2.—W. Allen observes, “The use of the participle as a nominative, is one of the peculiarities of our language.”—Elements of Gram., p. 171. He might have added, that the use of the participle as an objective governed by a verb, as a nominative after a verb neuter, or as a word governing the possessive, is also one of the peculiarities of our language, or at least an idiom adopted by no few of its recent writers. But whether any one of these four modern departures from General Grammar ought to be countenanced by us, as an idiom that is either elegant or advantageous, I very much doubt. They are all however sufficiently common in the style of reputable authors; and, however questionable their character, some of our grammarians seem mightily attached to them all. It becomes me therefore to object with submission. These mixed and irregular constructions of the participle, ought, in my opinion, to be generally condemned as false syntax; and for this simple reason, that the ideas conveyed by them may generally, if not always, be expressed more briefly, and more elegantly, by other phraseology that is in no respect anomalous. Thus, for the examples above: “Inattention to this rule, is the cause of a very common error.”—“Polite is employed to signify a high degree of civilization,” or, “that they are highly civilized.”—“One abhors debt.”—“Who affected the fine gentleman so unmercifully.”—“The minister’s partiality to the project, prolonged their debate.”—“It finds [i.e., the mind finds,] that to act thus, would gratify one passion; and that not to act, or to act otherwise, would gratify another.”—“But further, to cavil and object, upon any subject, is much easier than to clear up difficulties.” Are not these expressions much better English than the foregoing quotations? And if so, have we not reason to conclude that the adoption of participles in such instances is erroneous and ungrammatical?

OBS. 3.—In Obs. 17th on Rule 4th, it was suggested, that in English the participle, without governing the possessive case, is turned to a greater number and variety of uses, than in any other language. This remark applies mainly to the participle in ing. Whether it is expedient to make so much of one sort of derivative, and endeavour to justify every possible use of it which can be plausibly defended, is a question well worthy of consideration. We have already converted this participle to such a multiplicity of purposes, and into so many different parts of speech, that one can well-nigh write a chapter in it, without any other words. This practice may have added something to the copiousness and flexibility of the language, but it certainly has a tendency to impair its strength and clearness. Not every use of participles is good, for which there may be found precedents in good authors. One may run to great excess in the adoption of such derivatives, without becoming absolutely unintelligible, and without violating any rule of our common grammars. For example, I may say of somebody, "This very superficial grammarist, supposing empty criticism about the adoption of proper phraseology to be a show of extraordinary erudition, was displaying, in spite of ridicule, a very boastful turgid argument concerning the correction of false syntax, and about the detection of false logic in debate." Now, in what other language than ours, can a string of words anything like the following, come so near to a fair and literal translation of this long sentence? "This exceeding trifling witling, considering ranting criticising concerning adopting fitting wording being exhibiting transcending learning, was displaying, notwithstanding ridiculing, surpassing boasting swelling reasoning, respecting correcting erring writing, and touching detecting deceiving arguing during debating." Here are not all the uses to which our writers apply the participle in ing, but there would seem to be enough, without adding others that are less proper.

OBS. 4.—The active participles, admitting, allowing, considering, granting, speaking, supposing, and the like, are frequently used in discourse so independently, that they either relate to nothing, or to the pronoun I or we understood; as, "Granting this to be true, what is to be inferred from it?"—Murray's Gram., p. 195. This may be supposed to mean, "I, granting this to be true, ask what is to be inferred from it?" "The very chin was, modestly speaking, as long as my whole face."—Addison. Here the meaning may be, "I, modestly speaking, say." So of the following examples: "Properly speaking, there is no such thing as chance."—W. Allen's Gram., p. 172. "Because, generally speaking, the figurative sense of a word is derived from its proper sense."—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 190. "But, admitting that two or three of these offend less in their morals than in their writings, must poverty make nonsense sacred?"—Pope's Works, Vol. iii, p. 7. Some grammarians suppose such participles to be put absolute in themselves, so as to have no reference to any noun or pronoun; others, among whom are L. Murray and Dr. James P. Wilson, suppose them to be put absolute with a pronoun understood. On the former supposition, they form an other exception to the foregoing rule; on the latter, they do not: the participle relates to the pronoun, though both be independent of the rest of the sentence. If we supply the ellipsis as above, there is nothing put absolute.

OBS. 5.—Participles are almost always placed after the words on which their construction depends, and are distinguished from adjectives by this position; but when other words depend on the participle, or when several participles have the same construction, the whole phrase may come before the noun or pronoun: as, "Leaning my head upon my hand, I began to figure to myself the miseries of confinement."—Sterne.

"Immured in cypress shades, a sorcerer dwells."—Milton.

"Brib'd, bought, and bound, they banish shame and fear;
Tell you they're stanch, and have a soul sincere."—Crabbe.

OBS. 6.—When participles are compounded with something that does not belong to the verb, they become adjectives; and, as such, they cannot govern an object after them. The following construction is therefore inaccurate: "When Caius did any thing unbecoming his dignity."—Jones's Church History, i, 87. "Costly and gaudy attire, unbecoming godliness."—Extracts, p. 185. Such errors are to be corrected by Note 15th to Rule 9th, or by changing the particle un to not: as, "Unbecoming to his dignity;" or, "Not becoming his dignity."

OBS. 7.—An imperfect or a preperfect participle, preceded by an article, an adjective, or a noun or pronoun of the possessive case, becomes a verbal or participial noun; and, as such, it cannot with strict propriety, govern an object after it. A word which may be the object of the participle in its proper construction, requires the preposition of, to connect it with the verbal noun; as, 1. THE PARTICIPLE: “Worshiping idols, the Jews sinned.”—“Thus worshiping idols,—In worshiping idols,—or, By worshiping idols, they sinned.” 2. THE VERBAL NOUN: “The worshiping of idols,—Such worshiping of idols,—or, Their worshiping of idols, was sinful.”—“In the worshiping of idols, there is sin.”

OBS. 8.—It is commonly supposed that these two modes of expression are, in very many instances, equivalent to each other in meaning, and consequently interchangeable. How far they really are so, is a question to be considered. Example: “But if candour be a confounding of the distinctions between sin and holiness, a depreciating of the excellence of the latter, and at the same time a diminishing of the evil of the former; then it must be something openly at variance with the letter and the spirit of revelation.”—The Friend, iv, 108. Here the nouns, distinctions, excellence, and evil, though governed by of, represent the objects of the forenamed actions; and therefore they might well be governed by confounding, depreciating, and diminishing, if these were participles. But if, to make them such, we remove the article and the preposition, the construction forsakes our meaning; for be confounding, (be) depreciating, and (be) diminishing, seem rather to be verbs of the compound form; and our uncertain nominatives after be, thus disappear in the shadow of a false sense. But some sensible critics tell us, that this preposition of should refer rather to the agent of the preceding action, than to its passive object; so that such a phrase as, “the teaching of boys,” should signify rather the instruction which boys give, than that which they receive. If, for the sake of this principle, or for any other reason, we wish to avoid the foregoing phraseology, the meaning may be expressed thus: “But if your candour confound the distinctions between sin and holiness; if it depreciate the excellence of the latter, and at the same time diminish the evil of the former; then it must be something openly at variance with the letter and the spirit of revelation.”

OBS. 9.—When the use of the preposition produces ambiguity or harshness, let a better expression be sought. Thus the sentence, “He mentions Newton’s writing of a commentary,” is not entirely free from either of these faults. If the preposition be omitted, the word writing will have a double construction, which is inadmissible, or at least objectionable. Some would say, “He mentions Newton writing a commentary.” This, though not uncommon, is still more objectionable because it makes the leading word in sense the adjunct in construction. The meaning may be correctly expressed thus: “He mentions that Newton wrote a commentary.” “Mr. Dryden makes a very handsome observation on Ovid’s writing a letter from Dido to Æneas.”—Spect., No. 62; Campbell’s Rhet., p. 265; Murray’s Key, ii, 253. Here the word writing is partly a noun and partly a participle. If we make it wholly a noun, by saying, “on Ovid’s writing of a letter,” or wholly a participle, by saying, “on Ovid writing a letter;” it may be doubted, whether we have effected any improvement. And again, if we adopt Dr. Lowth’s advice, “Let it be either the one or the other, and abide by its proper construction;” we must make some change; and therefore ought perhaps to say; “on Ovid’s conceit of writing a letter from Dido to Æneas.” This is apparently what Addison meant, and what Dryden remarked upon; the latter did not speak of the letter itself, else the former would have said, “on Ovid’s letter from Dido to Æneas.”

OBS. 10.—When a needless possessive, or a needless article, is put before the participle, the correction is to be made, not by inserting of, but by expunging the article, according to Note 16th to Rule 1st, or the possessive, according to Note 5th to Rule 4th. Example: “By his studying the Scriptures he became wise.”—Lennie’s Gram., p. 91. Here his serves only to render the sentence incorrect; yet this spurious example is presented by Lennie to prove that a participle may take the possessive case before it, when the preposition of is not admissible after it. So, in stead of expunging one useless word, our grammarians often add an other and call the twofold error a correction; as, “For his avoiding of that precipice, he is indebted to his friend’s care.”—Murray’s Key, ii, 201. Or worse yet: “It was from our misunderstanding of the directions that we lost our way.”—Ibid. Here, not our and of only, but four other words, are worse than useless. Again: “By the exercising of our judgment, it is improved. Or thus: By exercising our judgment, it is improved.”—Comly’s Key in his Gram., 12th Ed., p. 188. Each of these pretended corrections is wrong in more respects than one. Say, “By exercising our judgement, we improve it” Or, “Our judgement is improved by being exercised” Again: “The loving of our enemies is a divine command; Or, loving our enemies [is a divine command].”—Ibid. Both of these are also wrong. Say, “‘Love your enemies,’ is a divine command.” Or, “We are divinely commanded to love our enemies.” Some are apt to jumble together the active voice and the passive, and thus destroy the unity even of a short sentence; as, “By exercising our memories, they are improved.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 226 and 195. “The error might have been avoided by repeating the substantive.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 172. “By admitting such violations of established grammatical distinctions, confusion would be introduced.”—Ib., p. 187. In these instances, we have an active participle without an agent; and this, by the preposition by, is made an adjunct to a passive verb. Even the participial noun of this form, though it actually drops the distinction of voice, is awkward and apparently incongruous in such a relation.

OBS. 11.—When the verbal noun necessarily retains any adjunct of the verb or participle, it seems proper that the two words be made a compound by means of the hyphen: as, “Their hope shall be as the giving-up of the ghost.”—Job, xi, 20. “For if the casting-away of them be the reconciling of the world.”—Rom., xi, 15. “And the gathering-together of the waters called he seas.”—Gen., i, 10. “If he should offer to stop the runnings-out of his justice.”—Law and Grace, p. 26. “The stopping-short before the usual pause in the melody, aids the impression that is made by the description of the stone’s stopping-short.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 106. I do not find these words united in the places referred to, but this is nevertheless their true figure. Our authors and printers are lamentably careless, as well as ignorant, respecting the figure of words: for which part of grammar, see the whole of the third chapter, in Part First of this work; also observations on the fourth rule of syntax, from the 30th to the 35th. As certain other compounds may sometimes be broken by tmesis, so may some of these; as, “Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is.”—Heb., x, 23. Adverbs may relate to participles, but nouns require adjectives. The following phrase is therefore inaccurate: “For the more easily reading of large numbers.” Yet if we say, “For reading large numbers the more easily,” the construction is different, and not inaccurate. Some calculator, I think, has it, “For the more easily reading large numbers.” But Hutton says, “For the more easy reading of large numbers.”—Hutton’s Arith., p. 5; so Babcock’s, p. 12. It would be quite as well to say, “For the greater ease in reading large numbers.”

OBS. 12.—Many words of a participial form are used directly as nouns, without any article, adjective, or possessive case before them, and without any object or adjunct after them. Such is commonly the construction of the words spelling, reading, writing, ciphering, surveying, drawing, parsing, and many other such names of actions or exercises. They are rightly put by Johnson among “nouns derived from verbs,” for, “The [name of the] action is the same with the participle present, as loving, frighting, fighting, striking.”—Dr. Johnson’s Gram., p. 10. Thus: “I like writing.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 171. “He supposed, with them, that affirming and denying were operations of the mind.”—Tooke’s Diversions, i, 35. “‘Not rendering,’ said Polycarp the disciple of John, ‘evil for evil, or railing for railing, or striking for striking, or cursing for cursing.”—Dymond, on War. Against this practice, there is seldom any objection; the words are wholly nouns, both in sense and construction. We call them participial nouns, only because they resemble participles in their derivation; or if we call them verbal nouns, it is because they are derived from verbs. But we too frequently find those which retain the government and the adjuncts of participles, used as nouns before or after verbs; or, more properly speaking, used as mongrels and nondescripts, a doubtful species, for which there is seldom any necessity, since the infinitive, the verbal or some other noun, or a clause introduced by the conjunction that, will generally express the idea in a better manner: as, “Exciting such disturbances, is unlawful.” Say rather, “To excite such disturbances,—The exciting of such disturbances,—The excitation of such disturbances,—or, That one should excite such disturbances, is unlawful.”

OBS. 13.—Murray says, “The word the, before the active participle, in the following sentence, and in all others of a similar construction, is improper, and should be omitted: ‘The advising, or the attempting, to excite such disturbances, is unlawful.’ It should be, ‘Advising or attempting to excite disturbances.’”—Octavo Gram., p. 195. But, by his own showing, “the present participle, with the definite article the before it, becomes a substantive.”—Ib., p. 192. And substantives, or nouns, by an other of his notes, can govern the infinitive mood, just as well as participles; or just as well as the verbs which he thinks would be very proper here; namely, “To advise or attempt to excite such disturbances.”—Ib., p. 196. It would be right to say, “Any advice, or attempt, to excite such disturbances, is unlawful.” And I see not that he has improved the text at all, by expunging the article. Advising and attempting, being disjunct nominatives to is, are nothing but nouns, whether the article be used or not; though they are rather less obviously such without it, and therefore the change is for the worse.

OBS. 14.—Lennie observes, “When a preposition”—(he should have said, When an other preposition—) “follows the participle, of is inadmissible; as, His depending on promises proved his ruin. His neglecting to study when young, rendered him ignorant all his life.”—Prin. of E. Gram., 5th Ed., p. 65; 13th Ed., 91. Here on and to, of course, exclude of; but the latter may be changed to of, which will turn the infinitive into a noun: as, “His neglecting of study,” &c. “Depending” and “neglecting,” being equivalent to dependence and neglect, are participial nouns, and not “participles.” Professor Bullions, too, has the same faulty remark, examples and all; (for his book, of the same title, is little else than a gross plagiarism from Lennie’s;) though he here forgets his other erroneous doctrines, that, “A preposition should never be used before the infinitive,” and that, “Active verbs do not admit a preposition after them.” See Bullions’s Prin. of E. Gram., pp. 91, 92, and 107.

OBS. 15.—The participle in ing is, on many occasions, equivalent to the infinitive verb, so that the speaker or writer may adopt either, just as he pleases: as, “So their gerunds are sometimes found having [or to have] an absolute or apparently neuter signification.”—Grant’s Lat. Gram., p. 234. “With tears that ceas’d not flowing” [or to flow].—Milton. “I would willingly have him producing [produce, or to produce] his credentials.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 273. There are also instances, and according to my notion not a few, in which the one is put improperly for the other. The participle however is erroneously used for the infinitive much oftener than the infinitive for the participle. The lawful uses of both are exceedingly numerous; though the syntax of the participle, strictly speaking, does not include its various conversions into other parts of speech. The principal instances of regular equivalence between infinitives and participles, may be reduced to the following heads:

1. After the verbs see, hear, and feel, the participle in ing, relating to the objective, is often equivalent to the infinitive governed by the verb; as, “I saw him running”—“I heard it howling.”—W. Allen. “I feel the wind blowing.” Here the verbs, run, howl, and blow, might be substituted. 2. After intransitive verbs signifying to begin or to continue, the participle in ing, relating to the nominative, may be used in stead of the infinitive connected to the verb; as, “The ass began galloping with all his might.”—Sandford and Merton. “It commenced raining very hard.”—Silliman. “The steamboats commenced running on Saturday.”—Daily Advertiser. “It is now above three years since he began printing.”—Dr. Adam’s Pref. to Rom. Antiq. “So when they continued asking him.”—John, viii, 7. Greek, “Ὡς δὲ ἐπέμενον ἐρωτῶντες αὐτὸν.” Latin, “Cum ergo perseverarent interrogantes eum.”—Vulgate. “Cum autem perseverarent eum interrogare.”—Beza. “Then shall ye continue following the Lord your God.”—1 Sam., xii, 14. “Eritis sequentes Dominum Deum vestrum.”—Vulgate. “As she continued praying before the Lord.”—1 Sam., i, 12. “Cum ilia multiplicaret preces coram Domino.”—Vulgate. “And they went on beating down one another.”—2 Sam., xiv, 16. “Make the members of them go on rising and growing in their importance.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 116. “Why do you keep teasing me?”

3. After for, in, of, or to, and perhaps some other prepositions, the participle may in most cases be varied by the infinitive, which is governed by to only; as, “We are better fitted for receiving the tenets and obeying the precepts of that faith which will make us wise unto salvation.”—West’s Letters, p. 51. That is—“to receive the tenets and obey the precepts.” “Men fit for fighting, practised in fighting, proud of fighting, accustomed to fighting.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 172. That is, “fit to fight,” &c. “What is the right path, few take the trouble of inquiring.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo. ii, 235. Better, perhaps:—“few take the trouble to inquire.”

OBS. 16.—One of our best grammarians says, “The infinitive, in the following sentences, should be exchanged for the participle: ‘I am weary to bear them.’ Is. i, 14. ‘Hast thou, spirit, perform’d to point the tempest?’ Shak.”—Allen’s Gram., p. 172. This suggestion implies, that the participle would be here not only equivalent to the infinitive in sense, but better in expression. It is true, the preposition to does not well express the relation between weary and bear; and, doubtless, some regard should be had to the meaning of this particle, whenever it is any thing more than an index of the mood. But the critic ought to have told us how he would make these corrections. For in neither case does the participle alone appear to be a fit substitute for the infinitive, either with or without the to; and the latter text will scarcely bear the participle at all, unless we change the former verb; as, “Hast thou, spirit, done pointing the tempest?” The true meaning of the other example seems somewhat uncertain. The Vulgate has it, “Laboravi sustinens,” “I have laboured bearing them;” the French Bible, “Je suis las de les souffrir,” “I am tired of bearing them;” the Septuagint, “Οὐκέτι ἀνήσω τὰς ἀμαρτίας ὑμῶν,” “I will no more forgive your sins.”

OBS. 17.—In the following text, the infinitive is used improperly, nor would the participle in its stead make pure English: “I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices or thy burnt-offerings, to have been continually before me.”—Ps. 1. 8. According to the French version, “to have been” should be “which are,” but the Septuagint and the Vulgate take the preceding noun for the nominative, thus: “I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices, but thy burnt-offerings are continually before me.”

OBS. 18.—As the preposition to before the infinitive shows the latter to be “that towards which the preceding verb is directed,” verbs of desisting, omitting, preventing, and avoiding, are generally found to take the participle after them, and not the infinitive; because, in such instances, the direction of effort seems not to be so properly to, or towards, as from the action.* Where the preposition from is inserted, (as it most commonly is, after some of these verbs.) there is no irregularity in the construction of the participle; but where the participle immediately follows the verb, it is perhaps questionable whether it ought to be considered the object of the verb, or a mere participle relating to the nominative which precedes. If we suppose the latter, the participle may be parsed by the common rule; if the former, it must be referred to the third exception above. For example:

1. After verbs of DESISTING; as, “The Cryer used to proclaim, DIXERUNT, i. e. They have done speaking.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 132. “A friend is advised to put off making love to Lalage.”—Philological Museum, i, 446. “He forbore doing so, on the ground of expediency.”—The Friend, iv, 35. “And yet architects never give over attempting to reconcile these two incompatibles.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 338. “Never to give over seeking and praying for it.”—N. Y. Observer. “Do not leave off seeking.”—President Edwards. “Then Satan hath done flattering and comforting.”—Baxter. “The princes refrained talking.”—Job, xxix, 9. “Principes cessabant loqui.”—Vulgate. Here it would be better to say, “The princes refrained from talking.” But Murray says, “From seems to be superfluous after forbear: as, ‘He could not forbear from appointing the pope,’ &c.”—Octavo Gram., p. 203. But “forbear to appoint” would be a better correction; for this verb is often followed by the infinitive; as, “Forbear to insinuate.”—West’s Letters, p. 62. “And he forbare to go forth.”—1 Sam., xxiii, 13. The reader will observe, that, “never to give over” or “not to leave off,” is in fact the same thing as to continue; and I have shown by the analogy of other languages, that after verbs of continuing the participle is not an object of government; though possibly it may be so, in these instances, which are somewhat different.
2. After verbs of OMITTING; as, “He omits giving an account of them.”—Tooke’s Diversions of Purley, i, 251. I question the propriety of this construction; and yet, “omits to give” seems still more objectionable. Better, “He omits all account of them.” Or, “He neglects to give, or forbears to give, any account of them.” L. Murray twice speaks of apologizing, “for the use he has made of his predecessors’ labours, and for omitting to insert their names.”—Octavo Gram., Pref., p. vii; and Note, p. 73. The phrase, “omitting to insert,” appears to me a downright solecism; and the pronoun their is ambiguous, because there are well-known names both for the men and for their labours, and he

* The perfect contrast between from and to, when the former governs the participle and the latter the infinitive, is an other proof that this to is the common preposition to. For example, “These are the four spirits of the heavens, which go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth.”—Zech., vi, 5. Now if this were rendered “which go forth to stand,” &c., it is plain that these prepositions would express quite opposite relations. Yet, probably from some obscurity in the original, the Greek version has been made to mean, “going forth to stand,” and the Latin, “which go forth, that they may stand,” while the French text conveys nearly the same sense as ours,—“which go forth from the place where they stood.”

- ought not to have omitted either species wholly, as he did. "Yet they absolutely refuse doing so, one with another."—Harris's Hermes, p. 264. Better, "refuse to do so." "I had as repeatedly declined going."—Leigh Hunt's Byron, p. 15.
3. After verbs of PREVENTING; as, "Our sex are happily prevented from engaging in these turbulent scenes."—West's Letters to a Lady, p. 74. "To prevent our frail natures from deviating into bye paths [write by-paths] of error."—Ib., p. 100. "Prudence, prevents our speaking or acting improperly."—Blair's Rhet., p. 99; Murray's Gram., p. 303; Jamieson's Rhet., p. 72. This construction, though very common, is palpably wrong: because its most natural interpretation is, "Prudence improperly prevents our speech or action." These critics ought to have known enough to say, "Prudence prevents us from speaking or acting improperly." "This, however, doth not hinder pronunciation to borrow from singing."—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 70. Here the infinitive is used, merely because it does not sound well to say, "from borrowing from singing;" but the expression might very well be changed thus, "from being indebted to singing." "This by no means hinders the book to be a useful one."—Geddes. It should be, "from being."—Churchill's Gram., p. 318.
4. After verbs of AVOIDING: as, "He might have avoided treating of the origin of ideas."—Tooke's Diversions, i, 28. "We may avoid talking nonsense on these subjects."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 281. "But carefully avoid being at any time ostentatious and affected."—Blair's Rhet., p. 233. "Here I cannot avoid mentioning * the assistance I have received."—Churchill's Gram., p. iv. "It is our duty to avoid leading others into temptation,"—West's Letters, p. 33. "Nay, such a garden should in some measure avoid imitating nature."—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 251. "I can promise no entertainment to those who shun thinking."—Ib., i, 36. "We cannot help being of opinion."—ENCYC. BRIT. Murray's Gram., p. 76. "I cannot help being of opinion."—Blair's Rhet., p. 311. "I cannot help mentioning here one character more."—Hughes. Spect., No. 554. "These would sometimes very narrowly miss being caught away."—Steele. "Carleton very narrowly escaped being taken."—Grimshaw's Hist., p. 111. Better, "escaped from being taken;"—or, "escaped capture."

OBS. 19.—In sentences like the following, the participle seems to be improperly made the object of the verb: "I intend doing it."—"I remember meeting him." Better, "I intend to do it."—"I remember to have met him." According to my notion, it is an error to suppose that verbs in general may govern participles. If there are any proper instances of such government, they would seem to be chiefly among verbs of quitting or avoiding. And even here the analogy of General Grammar gives countenance to a different solution; as, "They left beating of Paul."—Acts, xxi, 32. Better, "They left beating Paul;"—or, "They quit beating Paul." Greek, "Ἐπαύσαντο τύποντες τὸν Παῦλον." Latin, "Cessaverunt percutientes Paulum."—Montanus. "Cessarunt coedere Paulum."—Beza. "Cessaverunt percutere Paulum."—Vulgate. It is true, the English participle in ing differs in some respects from that which usually corresponds to it in Latin or Greek; it has more of a substantive character, and is commonly put for the Latin gerund. If this difference does not destroy the argument from analogy, the opinion is still just, that left and quit are here intransitive, and that the participle beating relates to the pronoun they. Such is unequivocally the construction of the Greek text, and also of the literal Latin of Arias Montanus. But, to the mere English grammarian, this method of parsing will not be apt to suggest itself:

* Cannot, with a verb of avoiding, or with the negative but, is equivalent to must. Such examples may therefore be varied thus: "I cannot but mention:" i.e., "I must mention."—"I cannot help exhorting him to assume courage."—Knox. That is, "I cannot but exhort him."

because, at first sight, the verbs appear to be transitive, and the participle in ing has nothing to prove it an adjunct of the nominative, and not the object of the verb—unless, indeed, the mere fact that it is a participle, is proof of this.

OBS. 20.—Our great Compiler, Murray, not understanding this construction, or not observing what verbs admit of it, or require it, has very unskillfully laid it down as a rule, that, “The participle with its adjuncts, may be considered as a substantive phrase in the objective case, governed by the preposition or verb, expressed or understood: as, ‘By promising much and performing but little, we become despicable.’ ‘He studied to avoid expressing himself too severely.’”—Octavo Gram., p. 194.* This very popular author seems never to have known that participles, as such, may be governed in English by prepositions. And yet he knew, and said, that “prepositions do not, like articles and pronouns, convert the participle itself into the nature of a substantive.”—Ibid. This he avouches in the same breath in which he gives that “nature” to a participle and its adverb! For, by a false comma after much, he cuts his first “substantive phrase” absurdly in two; and doubtless supposes a false ellipsis of by before the participle performing. Of his method of resolving the second example, some notice has already been taken, in Observations 4th and 5th on Rule 5th. Though he pretends that the whole phrase is in the objective case, “the truth is, the assertion grammatically affects the first word only;” which in one aspect he regards as a noun, and in an other as a participle: whereas he himself, on the preceding page, had adopted from Lowth a different doctrine, and cautioned the learner against treating words in ing, “as if they were of an amphibious species, partly nouns and partly verbs,” that is, “partly nouns and partly participles,” for, according to Murray, Lowth, and many others, participles are verbs. The term, “substantive phrase,” itself a solecism, was invented merely to cloak this otherwise bald inconsistency. Copying Lowth again, the great Compiler defines a phrase to be “two or more words rightly put together;” and, surely, if we have a well-digested system of grammar, whatsoever words are rightly put together, may be regularly parsed by it. But how can one indivisible word be consistently made two different parts of speech at once? And is not this the situation of every transitive participle that is made either the subject or the object of a verb? Adjuncts never alter either the nature or the construction of the words on which they depend; and participial nouns differ from participles in both. The former express actions as things; the latter generally attribute them to their agents or recipients.

OBS. 21.—The Latin gerund is “a kind of verbal noun, partaking of the nature of a participle.”—Webster’s Dict. “A gerund is a participial noun, of the neuter gender, and singular-number, declinable like a substantive, having no vocative, construed like a substantive, and governing the case of its verb.”—Grant’s Lat. Gram., p. 70. In the Latin gerund thus defined, there is an appearance of ancient classical authority for that “amphibious species” of words of which so much notice has already been taken. Our participle in ing, when governed by a preposition, undoubtedly corresponds very nearly, both in sense and construction, to this Latin gerund; the principal difference being, that the one is declined, like a noun, and the other is not. The analogy, however, is but lamely maintained, when we come to those irregular constructions in which the participle is made a half-noun in English. It is true, the gerund of the nominative case may be made the subject of a verb in Latin; but we do not translate it by the English participle, but rather by the infinitive, or still oftener by the verb with the auxiliary must: as, “Vivendum est mihi rectè, I must live well.”—Grant’s L. Gram., p. 232. This is better English than the nearer version, “Living correctly is necessary for me;” and the exact imitation, “Living is to me correctly,” is nonsense. Nor does the Latin gerund often govern the genitive like a noun, or ever stand as the direct object of a transitive verb, except in some few doubtful instances about which the grammarians dispute. For, in fact, to explain this species of words, has puzzled the Latin grammarians about as much as the English; though the former do not appear to have fallen into those palpable self-contradictions which embarrass the instructions of the latter.

---

* See the same thing in Kirkham’s Gram. p. 189; in Ingersoll’s, p. 200; in Smith’s New Grammar, p. 162; and in other modifications and mutilations of Murray’s work. Kirkham, in an other place, adopts the doctrine, that, “Participles frequently govern nouns and pronouns in the possessive case; as, ‘In case of his majesty’s dying without issue, &c.; Upon God’s having ended all his works, &c.; I remember its being reckoned a great exploit; At my coming in he said, &c.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 181. None of these examples are written according to my notion of elegance, or of accuracy. Better: “In case his Majesty die without issue.”—“God having ended all his works.”—“I remember it was reckoned a great exploit.”—“At my entrance, he said,” &c.

OBS. 22.—Dr. Adam says, “The gerund in English becomes a substantive, by prefixing the article to it, and then it is always to be construed with the preposition of; as, ‘He is employed in writing letters,’ or, ‘in the writing of letters:’ but it is improper to say, ‘in the writing letters,’ or, ‘in writing of letters.”—Latin and English Gram., p. 184. This doctrine is also taught by Lowth, Priestley, Murray, Comly, Chandler, and many others; most of whom extend the principle to all participles that govern the possessive case; and they might as well have added all such as are made either the subjects or the objects of verbs, and such as are put for nominatives after verbs neuter. But Crombie, Allen, Churchill, S. S. Greene, Hiley, Wells, Weld, and some others, teach that participles may perform these several offices of a substantive, without dropping the regimen and adjuncts of participles. This doctrine, too, Murray and his copyists absurdly endeavour to reconcile with the other, by resorting to the idle fiction of “substantive phrases” endued with all these powers: as, “His being at enmity with Cæsar was the cause of perpetual discord.”—Crombie’s Treatise, p. 237; Churchill’s Gram., p. 141. “Another fault is allowing it to supersede the use of a point.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 372. “To be sure there is a possibility of some ignorant reader’s confounding the two vowels in pronunciation.”—Ib., p. 375. It is much better to avoid all such English as this. Say, rather, “His enmity with Cæsar was the cause of perpetual discord.”—“An other fault is the allowing of it to supersede the use of a point.”—“To be sure, there is a possibility that some ignorant reader may confound the two vowels, in pronunciation.”

OBS. 23.—In French, the infinitive is governed by several different prepositions, and the gerundive by one only, the preposition en,—which, however, is sometimes suppressed; as, “en passant, en faisant,—il alloit courant.”—Traité des Participes, p. 2. In English, the gerundive is governed by several different prepositions, and the infinitive by one only, the preposition to,—which, in like manner, is sometimes suppressed; as, “to pass, to do,—I saw him run.” The difficulties in the syntax of the French participle in ant, which corresponds to ours in ing, are apparently as great in themselves, as those which the syntax of the English word presents; but they result from entirely different causes, and chiefly from the liability there is of confounding the participle with the verbal adjective, which is formed from it. The confounding of it with the gerundive is now, in either language, of little or no consequence, since in modern French, as well as in English, both are indeclinable. For this reason, I have framed the syntactical rule for participles so as to include under that name the gerund, or gerundive, which is a participle governed by a preposition. The great difficulty with us, is, to determine whether the participle ought, or ought not, to be allowed to assume other characteristics of a noun, without dropping those of a participle, and without becoming wholly a noun. The liability of confounding the English participle with the verbal or participial adjective, amounts to nothing more than the occasional misnaming of a word in parsing; or perhaps an occasional ambiguity in the style of some writer, as in the following citation: "I am resolved, 'let the newspapers say what they please of canvassing beauties, haranguing toasts, and mobbing demireps,' not to believe one syllable."—Jane West's Letters to a Young Lady, p. 74. From these words, it is scarcely possible to find out, even with the help of the context whether these three sorts of ladies are spoken of as the canvassers, haranguers, and mobbers, or as being canvassed, harangued, and mobbed. If the prolixity and multiplicity of these observations transcend the reader's patience, let him consider that the questions at issue cannot be settled by the brief enunciation of loose individual opinions, but must be examined in the light of all the analogies and facts that bear upon them. So considerable are the difficulties of properly distinguishing the participle from the verbal adjective in French, that that indefatigable grammarian, Girault Du Vivier, after completing his Grammaire des Grammaires in two large octavo volumes, thought proper to enlarge his instructions on this head, and to publish them in a separate book, (Traité des Participes,) though we have it on his own authority, that the rule for participles had already given rise to a greater number of dissertations and particular treatises than any other point in French grammar.

OBS. 24.—A participle construed after the nominative or the objective case, is not in general equivalent to a verbal noun governing the possessive. There is sometimes a nice distinction to be observed in the application of these two constructions. For the leading word in sense, should not be made the adjunct in construction. The following sentences exhibit a disregard to this principle, and are both inaccurate: "He felt his strength's declining."—"He was sensible of his strength declining." In the former sentence, the noun strength should be in the objective case, governed by felt; and in the latter, it should rather be in the possessive, governed by declining. Thus: "He felt his strength declining;" i.e., "felt it decline."—"He was sensible of his strength's declining;" i.e., "of its decline." These two sentences state the same fact, but, in construction, they are very different; nor does it appear, that where there is no difference of meaning, the two constructions are properly interchangeable. This point has already been briefly noticed in Obs. 12th and 13th on Rule 4th. But the false and discordant instructions which our grammarians deliver respecting possessives before participles; their strange neglect of this plain principle of reason, that the leading word in sense ought to be made the leading or governing word in the construction; and the difficulties which they and other writers are continually falling into, by talking their choice between two errors, in stead of avoiding both: these, as well as their suggestions of sameness or difference of import between the participle and the participial noun, require some farther extension of my observations in this place.

OBS. 25.—Upon the classification of words, as parts of speech, distinguished according to their natures and uses, depends the whole scheme of grammatical science. And it is plain, that a bad distribution, or a confounding of such things as ought to be separated, must necessarily be attended with inconveniences to the student, for which no skill or learning in the expounder of such a system can ever compensate. The absurdity of supposing with Horne Tooke, that the same word can never be used so differently as to belong to different parts of speech, I have already alluded to more than once. The absolute necessity of classing words, not according to their derivation merely, but rather according to their sense and construction, is too evident to require any proof. Yet, different as are the natures and the uses of verbs, participles, and nouns, it is no uncommon thing to find these three parts of speech confounded together; and that too to a very great extent, and by some of our very best grammarians, without even an attempt on their part to distinguish them. For instances of this glaring fault and perplexing inconsistency, the reader may turn to the books of W. Allen and T. O. Churchill, two of the best authors that have ever written on English grammar. Of the participle the latter gives no formal definition, but he represents it as “a form, in which the action denoted by the verb is capable of being joined to a noun as its quality, or accident.”—Churchill's New Gram., p. 85. Again he says, “That the participle is a mere mode of the verb is manifest, if our definition of a verb be admitted.”—Ib., p. 242. While he thus identifies the participle with the verb, this author scruples not to make what he calls the imperfect participle perform all the offices of a noun: saying, “Frequently too it is used as a noun, admits a preposition or an article before it, becomes a plural by taking s at the end, and governs a possessive case: as, ‘He who has the comings in of a prince, may be ruined by his own gaming, or his wife's squandering.’”—Ib., p. 144. The plural here exhibited, if rightly written, would have the s, not at the end, but in the middle; for comings-in, (an obsolete expression for revenues,) is not two words, but one. Nor are gaming and squandering, to be here called participles, but nouns. Yet, among all his rules and annotations, I do not find that Churchill any where teaches that participles become nouns when they are used substantively. The following example he exhibits for the express purpose of showing that the nominatives to “is” and “may be” are not nouns, but participles: “Walking is the best exercise, though riding may be more pleasant.”—Ib., p. 141. And, what is far worse, though his book is professedly an amplification of Lowth's brief grammar, he so completely annuls the advice of Lowth concerning the distinguishing of participles from participial nouns, that he not only misnames the latter when they are used correctly, but approves and adopts well-nigh all the various forms of error, with which the mixed and irregular construction of participles has filled our language: of these forms, there are, I think, not fewer than a dozen.

OBS. 26.—Allen's account of the participle is no better than Churchill's—and no worse than what the reader may find in many an English Grammar now in use. This author's fault is not so much a lack of learning or of comprehension, as of order and discrimination. We see in him, that it is possible for a man to be well acquainted with English authors, ancient as well as modern, and to read Greek and Latin, French and Saxon, and yet to falter miserably in describing the nature and uses of the English participle. Like many others, he does not acknowledge this sort of words to be one of the parts of speech; but commences his account of it by the following absurdity: “The participles are adjectives derived from the verb; as, pursuing, pursued, having pursued.”—Elements of E. Gram., p. 62. This definition not only confounds the participle with the participial adjective, but merges the whole of the former species in a part of speech of which he had not even recognized the latter as a subdivision: “An adjective shows the quality of a thing. Adjectives may be reduced to five classes: 1. Common—2. Proper—3. Numeral—4. Pronominal—5. Compound.”—Ib., p. 47. Now, if “participles are adjectives,” to which of these five classes do they belong? But there are participial or verbal adjectives, very many; a sixth class, without which this distribution is false and incomplete: as, “a loving father; an approved copy.” The participle differs from these, as much as it does from a noun. But says our author, “Participles, as simple adjectives, belong to a noun; as, a loving father; an approved copy;—as parts of the verb, they have the same government as their verbs have; as, his father, recalling the pleasures of past years, joined their party.”—Ib., p. 170. What confusion is this! a complete jumble of adjectives, participles, and “parts of verbs!” Again: “Present participles are often construed as substantives; as, early rising is conducive to health; I like writing; we depend on seeing you.”—Ib., p. 171. Here rising and writing are nouns; but seeing is a participle, because it is active and governs you. Compare this second jumble with the definition above. Again he proceeds: “To participles thus used, many of our best authors prefix the article; as, ‘The being chosen did not prevent disorderly behaviour.’ Bp. Tomline. ‘The not knowing how to pass our vacant hours.’ Seed.”—Ib., p. 171. These examples I take to be bad English. Say rather, “The state of election did not prevent disorderly behaviour.”—“The want of some entertainment for our vacant hours.” The author again proceeds: “If a noun limits the meaning of a participle thus used, that noun is put in the genitive; as, your father’s coming was unexpected.”—Ib., p. 171. Here coming is a noun, and no participle at all. But the author has a marginal note, “A possessive pronoun is equivalent to a genitive;” (ibid.;) and he means to approve of possessives before active participles: as, “Some of these irregularities arise from our having received the words through a French medium.”—Ib., p. 116. This brings us again to that difficult and apparently unresolvable problem, whether participles as such, by virtue of their mixed gerundive character, can, or cannot, govern the possessive case; a question, about which, the more a man examines it, the more he may doubt.

OBS. 27.—But, before we say any thing more about the government of this case, let us look at our author’s next paragraph on participles: “An active participle, preceded by an article or by a genitive, is elegantly followed by the preposition of, before the substantive which follows it; as, the compiling of that book occupied several years; his quitting of the army was unexpected.”—Allen’s Gram., p. 171. Here the participial nouns compiling and quitting are improperly called active participles, from which they are certainly as fairly distinguished by the construction, as they can be by any means whatever. And this complete distinction the author considers at least an elegance, if not an absolute requisite, in English composition. And he immediately adds: “When this construction produces ambiguity, the expression must be varied.”—Ib., p. 171. This suggestion is left without illustration; but it doubtless refers to one of Murray’s remarks, in which it is said: “A phrase in which the article precedes the present participle and the possessive preposition follows it, will not, in every instance, convey the same meaning as would be conveyed by the participle without the article and preposition. ‘He expressed the pleasure he had in the hearing of the philosopher,’ is capable of a different sense from, ‘He expressed the pleasure he had in hearing the philosopher.’”—Murray’s Octavo Gram., p. 193; R. C. Smith’s Gram., 161; Ingersoll’s, 199; and others. Here may be seen a manifest difference between the verbal or participial noun, and the participle or gerund; but Murray, in both instances, absurdly calls the word hearing a “present participle;” and, having robbed the former sentence of a needful comma, still more absurdly supposes it ambiguous: whereas the phrase, “in the hearing of the philosopher,” means only, “in the philosopher’s hearing;” and not, “in hearing the philosopher,” or, “in hearing of the philosopher.” But the true question is, would it be right to say, “He expressed the pleasure he had in the philosopher’s hearing him?” For here it would be equivocal to say, “in the philosopher’s hearing of him;” and some aver, that of would be wrong, in any such instance, even if the sense were clear. But let us recur to the mixed example from Allen, and compare it with his own doctrines. To say, “from our having received of the words through a French medium,” would certainly be no elegance; and if it be not an ambiguity, it is something worse. The expression, then, “must be varied.” But varied how? Is it right without the of, though contrary to the author’s rule for elegance?

OBS. 28.—The observations which have been made on this point, under the rule for the possessive case, while they show, to some extent, the inconsistencies in doctrine, and the improprieties of practice, into which the difficulties of the mixed participle have betrayed some of our principal grammarians, bring likewise the weight of much authority and reason against the custom of blending without distinction the characteristics of nouns and participles in the same word or words; but still they may not be thought sufficient to prove this custom to be altogether wrong; nor do they pretend to have fully established the dogma, that such a construction is in no instance admissible. They show, however, that possessives before participles are seldom to be approved; and perhaps, in the present instance, the meaning might be quite as well expressed by a common substantive, or the regular participial noun: as, “Some of these irregularities arise from our reception of the words—or our receiving of the words—through a French medium.” But there are some examples which it is not easy to amend, either in this way, or in any other; as, “The miscarriages of youth have very much proceeded from their being imprudently indulged, or left to themselves.”—Friends’ N. E. Discipline, p. 13. And there are instances too, of a similar character, in which the possessive case cannot be used. For example: “Nobody will doubt of this being a sufficient proof.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 66. “But instead of this being the fact of the case, &c.”—Butlers Analogy, p. 137. “There is express historical or traditional evidence, as ancient as history, of the system of religion being taught mankind by revelation.”—Ibid. “From things in it appearing to men foolishness.”—Ib., p. 175. “As to the consistency of the members of our society joining themselves to those called free-masons.”—N. E. Discip., p. 51. “In either of these cases happening, the person charging is at liberty to bring the matter before the church, who are the only judges now remaining.”—Ib., p. 36; Extracts, p. 57. “Deriving its efficacy from the power of God fulfilling his purpose.”—Religious World, Vol. ii, p. 235. “We have no idea of any certain portion of time intervening between the time of the action and the time of speaking of it.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 33; Murray’s, i, 70; Emmons’s, 41; and others. The following example therefore, however the participle may seem to be the leading word in sense, is unquestionably wrong; and that in more respects than one: “The reason and time of the Son of God’s becoming man.”—Brown’s Divinity, p. xxii. Many writers would here be satisfied with merely omitting the possessive sign; as does Churchill, in the following example: “The chief cause of this appears to me to lie in grammarians having considered them solely as the signs of tense.”—New Gram., p. 243. But this sort of construction, too, whenever the noun before the participle is not the leading word in sense, is ungrammatical. In stead, therefore, of stickling for choice between two such errors, we ought to adopt some better expression; as, “The reason and time of the Saviour’s incarnation.”—“The chief cause of this appears to me to be, that grammarians have considered them solely as signs of tense.”

OBS. 29.—It is certain that the noun or pronoun which “limits the meaning of a participle,” cannot always be “put in the genitive” or possessive case; for the sense intended sometimes positively forbids such a construction, and requires the objective: as, “A syllable consists of one or more letters forming one sound.”—Allen’s Gram., p. 29. The word representing or denoting would here be better than forming, because the letters do not, strictly speaking, form the sound. But chiefly let it be noticed, that the word letters could not with any propriety have been put in the possessive case. Nor is it always necessary or proper, to prefer that case, where the sense may be supposed to admit it; as, “The example which Mr. Seyer has adduced, of the gerund governing the genitive of the agent.’ Dr. Crombie.”—Grant’s Lat. Gram., p. 237. “Which possibly might have been prevented by parents doing their duty.”—N. E. Discipline, p. 187. “As to the seeming contradiction of One being Three, and Three One.”—Religious World, Vol. ii, p. 113. “You have watched them climbing from chair to chair.”—PIERPONT: Liberator, Vol. x, p. 22.

“Whether the world came into being as it is, by an intelligent Agent forming it thus, or not.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 129. “In the farther supposition of necessary agents being thus rewarded and punished.”—Ib., p. 140. “He grievously punished the Israelites murmuring for want of water.”—Leslie, on Tythes, p. 21. Here too the words, gerund, parents, One, Three, them, Agent, agents, and Israelites, are rightly put in the objective case; yet doubtless some will think, though I do not, that they might as well have been put in the possessive. Respectable writers sometimes use the latter case, where the former would convey the same meaning, and be more regular; as, “Which is used, as active verbs often are, without its regimen’s being expressed.”—Grant’s Lat. Gram., p. 302. Omit the apostrophe and s; and, if you please, the word being also. “The daily instances of men’s dying around us.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 113. Say rather,—“of men dying around us.” “To prevent our rashly engaging in arduous or dangerous enterprises.”—Brown’s Divinity, p. 17. Say, “To prevent us from,” &c. The following example is manifestly inconsistent with itself; and, in my opinion, the three possessives are all wrong: “The kitchen too now begins to give ‘dreadful note of preparation;’ not from armourers accomplishing the knights, but from the shop maid’s chopping force meat, the apprentice’s cleaning knives, and the journeyman’s receiving a practical lesson in the art of waiting at table.”—West’s Letters to a Lady, p. 66. It should be—“not from armorers accomplishing the knights, but from the shopmaid chopping forcemeat, the apprentice cleaning knives, and the journeyman receiving,” &c. The nouns are the principal words, and the participles are adjuncts. They might be separated by commas, if semicolons were put where the commas now are.

OBS. 30.—Our authors, good and bad, critics and no critics, with few exceptions, write sometimes the objective case before the participle, and sometimes the possessive, under precisely the same circumstances; as, “We should, presently, be sensible of the melody suffering.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 122. “We should, presently, be sensible of the melody’s suffering.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 327. “We shall presently be sensible of the melody suffering.”—Murray’s Exercises, 8vo, p. 60. “We shall presently be sensible of the melody’s suffering.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 195. “And I explain what is meant by the nominative case governing the verb, and by the verb agreeing with its nominative case.”—Rand’s Gram., p. 31. “Take the verb study, and speak of John’s studying his lesson, at different times.”—Ib., p. 53. “The following are examples of the nominative case being used instead of the objective.”—J. M. Putnam’s Gram., p. 112. “The following are examples of an adverb’s qualifying a whole sentence.”—Ib., p. 128. “Where the noun is the name of a person, the cases may also be distinguished by the nominative’s answering to WHO, and the objective to WHOM.”—Hart’s Gram., p. 46. “This depends chiefly on their being more or less emphatic; and on the vowel sound being long or short.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 182. “When they speak of a monosyllable having the grave or the acute accent.”—Walker’s Key, p. 328. Here some would erroneously prefer the possessive case before “having,” but, if any amendment can be effected it is only by inserting as there. “The event of Maria’s loving her brother.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 55. “Between that and the man being on it.”—Ib., p. 59. “The fact of James placing himself.”—Ib., p. 166. “The event of the persons’ going.”—Ib., p. 165. Here persons’ is carelessly put for person’s, i.e., James’s: the author was parsing the puerile text, “James went into a store and placed himself beside Horatio.”—Ib., p. 164. And I may observe, in passing, that Murray and Blair are both wrong in using commas with the adverb presently above.

OBS. 31.—It would be easy to fill a page with instances of these two cases, the objective and the possessive, used, as I may say, indiscriminately; nor is there any other principle by which we can determine which of them is right, or which preferable, than that the leading word in sense ought not to be made the adjunct in the construction, and that the participle, if it remain such, ought rather to relate to its noun, as being the adjunct, than to govern it in the possessive, as being the principal term. To what extent either of these cases may properly be used before the participle, or in what instances either of them may be preferable to the other, it is not very easy to determine. Both are used a great deal too often, filling with blemishes the style of many authors: the possessive, because the participle is not the name of any thing that can be possessed; the objective, because no construction can be right in which the relation of the terms is not formed according to the sense. The former usage I have already criticised to a great extent. Let one example suffice here: “There can be no objection to a syllable’s being long, on the ground of its not being so long, or so much protracted, as some other long syllables are.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 242. Some would here prefer syllable to syllable’s, but none would be apt to put it for its, without some other change. The sentence may be amended thus: “There can be no objection to a syllable as being long, on the ground that it is not so long as some other syllables.”

OBS. 32.—It should be observed, that the use of as between the participle and the noun is very often better than either the adoption of the possessive sign, or the immediate connexion of the two words; as, “Another point constantly brought into the investigation now, is that of military success as forming a claim to civil position.”—Boston Daily Advertiser. Concerning examples like the following, it may be questioned, whether the objective is proper or not; whether the possessive would be preferable or not; or whether a better construction than either may not be found: “There is scarce an instance of any one being chosen for a pattern.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. ii, p. 338. “Instead of its authenticity being shaken, it has been rendered more sure than ever.”—West’s Letters, p. 197. “When there is no longer a possibility of a proper candidate being nominated by either party.”—Liberator, Vol. x. p. 9. “On the first stone being thrown, it was returned by a fire of musketry.”—Ib., p. 16. “To raise a cry about an innocent person being circumvented by bribery.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 276. “Whose principles forbid them taking part in the administration of the government.”—Liberator, Vol. x, p. 15. “It can have no other ground than some such imagination, as that of our gross bodies being ourselves.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 150. “In consequence of this revelation being made.”—Ib., p. 162. If such relations between the participle and the objective be disapproved, the substitution of the possessive case is liable to still stronger objections; but both may be avoided, by the use of the nominative or otherwise: thus, “Scarcely is any one ever chosen for a pattern.”—“Its authenticity, in stead of being shaken, has been rendered more sure than ever.”—“When there is no longer a possibility that a proper candidate will be nominated by either party.”—“As soon as the first stone was thrown, there was returned a fire of musketry.”—“To raise a cry, as if an innocent person had been circumvented by bribery.”—“Whose principles forbid them to take part in the administration of the government.”—“It can have no other ground than some such imagination, as that our gross bodies are ourselves.”—“In consequence of this revelation which is made.”

OBS. 33.—A recent grammarian quotes Dr. Crombie thus: “Some late writers have discarded a phraseology which appears unobjectionable, and substituted one that seems less correct; and instead of saying, ‘Lady Macbeth’s walking in her sleep is an incident full of tragic horror,’ would say, ‘Lady Macbeth walking in her sleep is an incident full of tragic horror.’ This seems to me an idle affectation of the Latin idiom, less precise than the common mode of expression, and less consonant with the genius of our language; for, ask what was an incident full of tragic horror, and, according to this phraseology, the answer must be, Lady Macbeth; whereas the meaning is, not that Lady Macbeth, but her walking in her sleep, is an incident full of tragic horror. This phraseology also, in many instances, conveys not the intended idea; for, as Priestley remarks, if it is said, ‘What think you of my horse’s running to-day?’ it is implied that the horse did actually run. If it is said, ‘What think you of my horse running to-day?’ it is intended to ask whether it be proper for my horse to run to-day. This distinction, though frequently neglected, deserves attention; for it is obvious that ambiguity may arise from using the latter only of these phraseologies to express both meanings.”—Maunder’s Compendious Eng. Gram., p. 15. (See Crombie’s Treatise, p. 288-290.) To this, before any comment is offered, let me add an other quotation: “RULE. A noun before the present participle is put in the possessive case; as, Much will depend on the pupil’s composing frequently. Sometimes, however, the sense forbids it to be put in the possessive case; thus, What do you think of my horse running to-day? means, Do you think I should let him run? but, What do you think of my horse’s running? means, he has run, do you think he ran well?”—Lennie’s Gram., p. 91; Brace’s Gram., 94. See Bullions’s Gram., p. 107; Hiley’s, 94; Murray’s, 8vo. 195; Ingersoll’s, 201; and many others.

OBS. 34.—Any phraseology that conveys not the intended idea, or that involves such an absurdity as that of calling a lady an “incident” is doubtless sufficiently reprehensible; but, compared with a rule of grammar so ill-devised as to mislead the learner nine times in ten, an occasional ambiguity or solecism is a mere trifle. The word walking, preceded by a possessive and followed by a preposition, as above, is clearly a noun, and not a participle; but these authors probably intend to justify the use of possessives before participles, and even to hold all phraseology of this kind “unobjectionable.” If such is not their design, they write as badly as they reason; and if it is, their doctrine is both false and inconsistent. That a verbal noun may govern the possessive case, is certainly no proof that a participle may do so too; and, if these parts of speech are to be kept distinct the latter position must be disallowed: each must “abide by its own construction,” as says Lowth. But the practice which these authors speak of, as an innovation of “some late writers,” and “an idle affectation of the Latin idiom,” is in fact a practice as different from the blunder which they quote, or feign, as their just correction of that blunder is different from the thousand errors or irregularities which they intend to shelter under it. To call a lady an “incident,” is just as far from any Latin idiom, as it is from good English; whereas the very thing which they thus object to at first, they afterwards approve in this text: “What think you of my horse running to-day?” This phraseology corresponds with “the Latin idiom,” and it is this, that, in fact, they begin with pronouncing to be “less correct” than, “What think you of my horse’s running to-day?”

OBS. 35.—Between these expressions, too, they pretend to fix a distinction of signification; as, if “the horse’s running to-day,” must needs imply a past action, though, (they suppose,) “the pupil’s composing frequently,” or, “the horse running to-day,” signifies a future one. This distinction of time is altogether imaginary; and the notion, that to prefer the possessive case before participles, is merely to withstand an error of “some late writers,” is altogether false. The instructions above cited, therefore, determine nothing rightly, except the inaccuracy of one very uncommon form of expression. For, according to our best grammarians, the simple mode of correction there adopted will scarcely be found applicable to any other text. It will not be right where the participle happens to be transitive, or even where it is qualified by an adverb. From their subsequent examples, it is plain that these gentlemen think otherwise; but still, who can understand what they mean by “the common mode of expression?” What, for instance, would they substitute for the following very inaccurate expression from the critical belles-lettres of Dr. Blair? “A mother accusing her son, and accusing him of such actions, as having first bribed judges to condemn her husband, and having afterwards poisoned him, were circumstances that naturally raised strong prejudices against Cicero’s client.”—Blair’s Lectures, p. 274. Would they say. “A mother’s accusing her son, &c., were circumstances,” &c.? Is this their “common mode of expression?” and if it is, do they not make “common” what is no better English than the Doctor’s? If, to accuse a son, and to accuse him greatly, can be considered different circumstances of the same prosecution, the sentence may be corrected thus: “A mother’s accusing of her son, and her charging of him with such actions, as those of having first bribed judges to condemn her husband, and having afterwards poisoned him, were circumstances that naturally raised strong prejudices against Cicero’s client.”

OBS. 36.—On several occasions, as in the tenth and twelfth observations on Rule 4th, and in certain parts of the present series, some notice has been taken of the equivalence or difference of meaning, real or supposed, between the construction of the possessive, and that of an other case, before the participle; or between the participial and the substantive use of words in ing. Dr. Priestley, to whom, as well as to Dr. Lowth, most of our grammarians are indebted for some of their doctrines respecting this sort of derivatives, pretends to distinguish them, both as constituting different parts of speech, and as conveying different meanings. In one place, he says, “When a word ending in ing is preceded by an article, it seems to be used as a noun; and therefore ought not to govern an other word, without the intervention of a preposition.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 157. And in an other: “Many nouns are derived from verbs, and end in ing, like participles of the present tense. The difference between these nouns and participles is often overlooked, and the accurate distinction of the two senses not attended to. If I say, What think you of my horse’s running to-day, I use the NOUN running, and suppose the horse to have actually run; for it is the same thing as if I had said, What think you of the running of my horse. But if I say, What think you of my horse running to-day, I use the PARTICIPLE, and I mean to ask, whether it be proper that my horse should run or not: which, therefore, supposes that he had not then run.”—Ib., p. 122. Whatever our other critics say about the horse running or the horse’s running, they have in general borrowed from Priestley, with whom the remark originated, as it here stands. It appears that Crombie, Murray, Maunder, Lennie, Bullions, Ingersoll, Barnard, Hiley, and others, approve the doctrine thus taught, or at least some part of it; though some of them, if not all, thereby contradict themselves.

ODS. 37.—By the two examples here contrasted, Priestley designed to establish a distinction, not for these texts only, but for all similar expressions—a distinction both of the noun from the participle, and of the different senses which he supposed these two constructions to exhibit. In all this, there is a complete failure. Yet with what remarkable ductility and implicitness do other professed critics take for granted what this superficial philologer so hastily prescribes! By acknowledging with reference to such an application of them, that the two constructions above are both good English, our grammarians do but the more puzzle their disciples respecting the choice between them; just as Priestley himself was puzzled, when he said, “So we may either say, I remember it being reckoned, a great exploit; or, perhaps more elegantly, I remember its being reckoned, &c.”—Gram., p. 70. Murray and others omit this “perhaps,” and while they allow both forms to be good, decidedly prefer the latter; but neither Priestley, nor any of the rest, ever pretended to discern in these a difference of signification, or even of parts of speech. For my part, in stead of approving either of these readings about the “great exploit,” I have rejected both, for reasons which have already been given; and now as to the first two forms of the horserace question, so far as they may strictly be taken for models, I cannot but condemn them also, and for the same reasons: to which reasons may be joined the additional one, that neither expression is well adapted to the sense which the author himself gives to it in his interpretation. If the Doctor designed to ask, “Do you think my horse ran well to-day?” or, “Do you think it proper for my horse to run to-day?” he ought to have used one or the other of these unequivocal and unobjectionable expressions. There is in fact between the others, no such difference of meaning as he imagines; nor does he well distinguish “the NOUN running” from the PARTICIPLE running; because he apparently allows the word, in both instances, to be qualified by the adverb to-day.*

OBS. 38.—It is clear, that the participle in ing partakes sometimes the nature of its verb and an adjective; so that it relates to a noun, like an adjective, and yet implies time, and, if transitive, governs an object, like a verb: as, “Horses running a race.” Hence, by dropping what here distinguishes it as a participle, the word may become an adjective, and stand before its noun; as, “A running brook.” So, too, this participle sometimes partakes the nature of its verb and a noun; so that it may be governed by a preposition, like a noun, though in itself it has no cases or numbers, but is indeclinable: as “In running a race.” Hence, again, by dropping what distinguishes it as a participle, it may become a noun; as, “Running is a safer sport than wrestling.” Now, if to a participle we prefix something which makes it an adjective, we also take away its regimen, by inserting a preposition; as, “A doctrine undeserving of praise,”—“A man uncompromising in his

---

* We have seen that Priestley’s doctrine, as well as Lowth’s, is, that when a participle is taken substantively, “it ought not to govern another word;” and, for the same reason, it ought not to have an adverb relating to it. But many of our modern grammarians disregard these principles, and do not restrict their “participial nouns” to the construction of nouns, in either of these respects. For example: Because one may say, “To read superficially, is useless,” Barnard supposes it right to say, “Reading superficially is useless.” “But the participle,” says he, “will also take the adjective; as, ‘Superficial reading is useless.’”—Analytic Gram., p. 212. In my opinion, this last construction ought to be preferred; and the second, which is both irregular and unnecessary, rejected. Again, this author says: “We have laid it down as a rule, that the possessive case belongs, like an adjective, to a noun. What shall be said of the following? ‘Since the days of Samson, there has been no instance of a man’s accomplishing a task so stupendous.’ The entire clause following man’s, is taken as a noun. ‘Of a man’s success in a task so stupendous.’ would present no difficulty. A part of a sentence, or even a single participle, thus often stands for a noun. ‘My going will depend on my father’s giving his consent,’ or ‘on my father’s consenting.’ A participle thus used as a noun, may be called a PARTICIPIAL NOUN.”—Ib., p. 131. I dislike this doctrine also. In the first example, man may well be made the leading word in sense; and, as such, it must be in the objective case; thus: “There has been no instance of a man accomplishing a task so stupendous.” It is also proper to say. “My going will depend on my father’s consenting,” or, “on my father’s consent.” But an action possessed by the agent, ought not to be transitive. If, therefore, you make this the leading idea, insert of: thus, “There has been no instance of a man’s accomplishing of a task so stupendous.” “My going will depend on my father’s giving of his consent.”—“My brother’s acquiring [of] the French language will be a useful preparation for his travels.”—Barnard’s Gram., p. 227. If participial nouns retain the power of participles, why is it wrong to say, “A superficial reading books is useless?” Again, Barnard approves of the question, “What do you think of my horse’s running to-day?” and adds, “Between this form of expression and the following, ‘What do you think of my horse running to-day?’ it is sometimes said, that we should make a distinction; because the former implies that the horse had actually run, and the latter, that it is in contemplation to have him do so. The difference of meaning certainly exists; but it would seem more judicious to treat the latter as an improper mode of speaking. What can be more uncouth than to say, ‘What do you think of me going to Niagara?’ We should say my going, notwithstanding the ambiguity. We ought, therefore, to introduce something explanatory; as, ‘What do you think of the propriety of my going to Niagara?’—Analytic Gram., p. 227. The propriety of a past action is as proper a subject of remark as that of a future one; the explanatory phrase here introduced has therefore nothing to do with Priestley’s distinction, or with the alleged ambiguity. Nor does the uncouthness of an objective pronoun with the leading word in sense improperly taken as an adjunct, prove that a participle may properly take to itself a possessive adjunct, and still retain the active nature of a participle.

principles.” So, if we put before it an article, an adjective, or a possessive, and thus give to the participle a substantive character or relation, there is reason to think, that we ought, in like manner, to take away its regimen, and its adverb too, if it have any, and be careful also to distinguish this noun from the participial adjective; as, “The running of a race,”—“No racing of horses,”—“Your deserving of praise.”—“A man’s compromising of his principles.” With respect to the articles, or any adjectives, it seems now to be generally conceded, that these are signs of substantives; and that, if added to participles, they must cause them to be taken, in all respects, substantively. But with respect to possessives before participles, the common practice of our writers very extensively indulges the mixed construction of which I have said so much, and concerning the propriety of which, the opinions of our grammarians are so various, so confused, and so self-contradictory.

OBS. 39.—Though the participle with a nominative or an objective before it, is not in general, equivalent to the verbal noun or the mixed participle with a possessive before it; and though the significations of the two phrases are often so widely different as to make it palpably absurd to put either for the other; yet the instances are not few in which it makes little or no difference to the sense, which of the two forms we prefer, and therefore, in these instances, I would certainly choose the more simple and regular construction; or, where a better than either can readily be found, reject both. It is also proper to have some regard to the structure of other languages, and to the analogy of General Grammar. If there be “some late writers” who are chargeable with “an idle affectation of the Latin idiom,” there are perhaps more who as idly affect what they suppose “consonant with the genius of our language.” I allude to those who would prefer the possessive case in a text like the following: “Wherefore is this noise of the city being in an uproar?”—1 Kings, i, 41. “Quid sibi vult clamor civitatis tumultuantis?”—Vulgate. “Τὸς ἡ φωνὴ τῆς πόλεως ἤχουσης;”—Septuagint. Literally: “What [means] the clamour of the city resounding?” “Que veut dire ce bruit de la ville qui est ainsi émue?”—French Bible. Literally: “What means this noise of the city which is so moved?” Better English: “What means this noise with which the city rings?” In the following example, there is a seeming imitation of the foregoing Latin or Greek construction; but it may well be doubted whether it would be any improvement to put the word “disciples” in the possessive case; nor is it easy to find a third form which would be better than these: “Their difficulties will not be increased by the intended disciples having ever resided in a Christian country.”—West’s Letters, p. 119.

OBS. 40.—It may be observed of these different relations between participles and other words, that nouns are much more apt to be put in the nominative or the objective case, than are pronouns. For example: “There is no more of moral principle in the way of abolitionists nominating their own candidates, than in that of their voting for those nominated by others.”—GERRIT SMITH: Liberator, Vol. X, p. 17. Indeed, a pronoun of the nominative or the objective case is hardly ever used in such a relation, unless it be so obviously the leading word in sense, as to preclude all question about the construction.*

* The following is an example, but it is not very intelligible, nor would it be at all amended, if the pronoun were put in the possessive case: “I sympathize with my sable brethren, when I hear of them being spared even one lash of the cart-whip.”—REV. DR. THOMPSON: Garrison, on Colonization, p. 80. And this is an other, in which the possessive pronoun would not be better: “But, if the slaves wish, to return to slavery, let them do so; not an abolitionist will turn out to stop them going back.”—Antislavery Reporter, Vol. IV, p. 223. Yet it might be more accurate to say—“to stop them from going back.” In the following example from the pen of Priestley, the objective is correctly used with as, where some would be apt to adopt the possessive: “It gives us an idea of him, as being the only person to whom it can be applied.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 151. Is not this better English than to say, “of his being the only person?” The following is from the pen of a good

And this fact seems to make it the more doubtful, whether it be proper to use nouns in that manner. But it may safely be held, that if the noun can well be considered the leading word in sense, we are at least under no necessity of subjecting it to the government of a mere participle. If it be thought desirable to vary the foregoing example, it may easily be done, thus: “There is no more of moral principle to prevent abolitionists from nominating their own candidates, than to prevent them from voting for those nominated by others.” The following example is much like the preceding, but less justifiable: “We see comfort, security, strength, pleasure, wealth, and prosperity, all flowing from men combining together; and misery, weakness, and poverty, ensuing from their acting separately or in opposition to each other.”—West’s Letters, p. 133. Say rather,—“from men’s combining-together,” or, “from the just combination of men in society,” and,—“from their separate action, or their opposition to one another.” Take an other example: “If illorum be governed here of negotii, it must be in this order, gratia negotii illorum videndi; and this is, for the sake of their business being seen, and not, for the sake of them being seen.”—Johnson’s Grammatical Commentaries, p. 352. Here the learned critic, in disputing Perizonius’s resolution of the phrase, “illorum videndi gratiā” has written disputable English. But, had he affected the Latin idiom, a nearer imitation of it would have been,—“for the sake of their business’s being seen, and not for the sake of their being seen.” Or nearer still,—“for the sake of seeing of their business, and not, for the sake of seeing of them.” An elegant writer would be apt to avoid all these forms, and say,—“for the sake of seeing their business,” and,—“for the sake of seeing them,” though the former phrase, being but a version of bad Latin, makes no very good sense in any way.

OBS. 41.—Idioms, or peculiarities of expression, are never to be approved or valued, but according to their convenience, utility, or elegance. By this rule, some phrases that are not positively barbarous, may yet be ungrammatical, and a construction that is sometimes allowable, may yet be quite unworthy to be made or reckoned, “the common mode of expression.” Thus, in Latin, the infinitive verb is occasionally put for a noun, and taken to signify a property possessed; as, “Tuum scire, [thy to know,] the same as tua scientia, thy knowledge. Pers.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 153. So, in English, the participle in ing is often taken substantively, when it does not actually become a substantive or noun; as, “Thy knowing this,”—“Our doing so.”—West. Such forms of speech, because they are idiomatical, seldom admit of any literal translation, and are never naturalized by any transfer from one language or dialect into an other; nor is it proper for grammarians to justify them, in vernacular speech, except as figures or anomalies that ought not to be generally imitated. It cannot be truly affirmed, that the genius of our language ever requires that participles, as such, should assume the relations of a noun, or govern the possessive case; nor, on the other hand, can it be truly denied, that very excellent and learned writers do sometimes make use of such phraseology. Without disrespect to the many users and approvers of these anomalies, I set down for bad English every mixed construction of the participle, for which the language can furnish an equivalent expression that is more simple and more elegant. The extent to which these comparative barbarisms now abound in English books, and the ridiculous fondness for them, which has been shown by some writers on English grammar, in stead of amounting to any argument in scholar: “This made me remember the discourse we had together, at my house, about me drawing constitutions, not as proposals, but as if fixed to the hand.”—WILLIAM PENN: Letter to Algernon Sidney, Oct. 13th, 1681. Here, if me is objectionable, my without of would be no less so. It might be better grammar to say, “about my drawing of constitutions.”

---

their favour, are in fact, plain proofs of the necessity of an endeavour to arrest so obvious and so pernicious an innovation.

OBS. 42.—A late author observes as follows: “That the English gerund, participle, or verbal noun, in ing, has both an active and a passive signification, there can be little doubt.* Whether the Latin gerund has precisely a similar import, or whether it is only active, it may be difficult, and, indeed, after all, it is not of much moment, to ascertain.”—Grant’s Latin Gram., p. 234. The gerund in Latin most commonly governs the case of its own verb, as does the active participle, both in Latin and English: as, “Efferor studio patres vestros videndi. Cic. de sen. 23.”—Lily’s Gram., p. 96. That is, “I am transported, with a desire of seeing your fathers.” But sometimes we find the gerund taken substantively and made to govern the genitive. Or,—to adopt the language of an old grammarian:—“Interdum non invenustè additur gerundiis in di etiam genitivus pluralis: ut, ‘Quum illorum videndi gratiâ me in forum contulissem.’—Novarum [qui] spectandi faciunt copiam.’ Ter. Heaut. prol. 29.”—Lily’s Gram., p. 97. That is, “To gerunds in di there is sometimes not inelegantly added a genitive plural: as, ‘When, for the sake of seeing of them, I went into the forum.’—‘Who present an opportunity of attending of new ones:’ i.e., new comedies.” Here the of which is inserted after the participle to mark the genitive case which is added, forms rather an error than an elegance, though some English writers do now and then adopt this idiom. The gerund thus governing the genitive, is not analogous to our participle governing the possessive; because this genitive stands, not for the subject of the being or action, but for what would otherwise be the object of the gerund, or of the participle, as may be seen above. The objection to the participle as governing the possessive, is, that it retains its object or its adverb; for when it does not, it becomes fairly a noun, and the objection is removed. R. Johnson, like many others, erroneously thinks it a noun, even when it governs an objective, and has merely a preposition before it; as, “For the sake of seeing them. Where seeing (says he) is a Substantive.”—Gram. Com., p. 353.

OBS. 43.—If the Latin gerund were made to govern the genitive of the agent, and allowed at the same time to retain its government as a gerund, it would then correspond in every thing but declension, to the English participle when made to govern both the possessive case and the objective. But I have before observed that no such analogy appears. The following example has been quoted by Seyer, as a proof that the gerund may govern the genitive of the agent: “Cujus autem in dicendo aliquid reprehensum est—Cic.”—Grant’s Lat. Gram., p. 236. That is, (as I understand it,) “But in whose speaking something is reprehended.” This seems to me a case in point; though Crombie and Grant will not allow it to be so. But a single example is not sufficient. If the doctrine is true, there must be others. In this solitary instance, it would be easier to doubt the accuracy even of Cicero, than to approve the notion of these two critics, that cujus is here governed by aliquid, and not by the gerund. “Here,” says Grant, “I am inclined to concur in opinion with Dr. Crombie, whose words I take the liberty to use, ‘That, for the sake of euphony, the gerund is sometimes found governing the genitive of the patient, or subject [say object] of the action, is unquestionable: thus, studio videndi patrum vestrorum. [That is, literally, By a desire of seeing of your fathers.] But I recollect no example, where the gerund is joined * Sometimes the passive form is adopted, when there is no real need of it, and when perhaps the active would be better, because it is simpler; as, “Those portions of the grammar are worth the trouble of being committed to memory.”—Dr. Barrow’s Essays, p. 109. Better, perhaps:—“worth the trouble of committing to memory:” or,—“worth the trouble committing them to memory.” Again: “What is worth being uttered at all, is worth being spoken in a proper manner.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 68. Better, perhaps: “What is worth uttering at all, is worth uttering in a proper manner.”—G. BROWN.

---

with a possessive adjective, or genitive of a noun substantive, where the person is not the patient, but the agent; as, dicendum meum, ejus dicendum, cujus dicendum. [That is, my speaking, his speaking, whose speaking.] In truth, these phraseologies appear to me, not only repugnant to the idiom of the language, but also unfavourable to precision and perspicuity.”—Grant’s Latin Gram., 8vo, p. 236.

OBS. 44.—Of that particular distinction between the participle and the participial noun, which depends on the insertion or omission of the article and the preposition of, a recent grammarian of considerable merit adopts the following views: “This double nature of the participle has led to much irregularity in its use. Thus we find, ‘indulging which,’ ‘indulging of which,’ ‘the indulging which,’ and ‘the indulging of which,’ used indiscriminately. Lowth very properly instructs us, either to use both the article and the preposition with the participle; as, ‘the indulging of which:’ or to reject both; as, ‘indulging which:’ thus keeping the verbal and substantive forms distinct. But he is wrong, as Dr. Crombie justly remarks, in considering these two modes of expression as perfectly similar. Suppose I am told, ‘Bloomfield spoke warmly of the pleasure he had in hearing Fawcet:’ I understand at once, that the eloquence of Fawcet gave Bloomfield great pleasure. But were it said, ‘Bloomfield spoke warmly of the pleasure he had in the hearing of Fawcet:’ I should be led to conclude merely that the orator was within hearing, when the poet spoke of the pleasure he felt from something, about which I have no information. Accordingly Dr. Crombie suggests as a general rule, conducive at least to perspicuity, and perhaps to elegance; that, when the noun connected with the participle is active, or doing something, the article should be inserted before the participle, and the preposition after it; and, when the noun is passive, or represents the object of an action, both the article and the preposition should be omitted:” agreeably to the examples just adduced. It is true, that when the noun following the participle denotes something incapable of the action the participle expresses, no mistake can arise from using either form: as, ‘The middle condition seems to be the most advantageously situate for the gaining of wisdom. Poverty turns our thoughts too much upon the supplying of our wants; and riches, upon enjoying our superfluities.’ Addison, Spect., 464. Yet I cannot think it by any means a commendable practice, thus to jumble together different forms; and indeed it is certainly better, as the two modes of expression have different significations, to confine each to its distinct and proper use, agreeably to Dr. Crombie’s rule, even when no mistake could arise from interchanging them.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 319.

OBS. 45.—The two modes of expression which these grammarians would thus apply constantly to different uses, on the supposition that they have always different significations, are the same that Lindley Murray and his copyists suppose to be generally equivalent, and concerning which it is merely admitted by the latter, that they do “not in every instance convey the same meaning.” (See Obs. 27th above.) If Dr. Lowth considered them “as perfectly similar,” he was undoubtedly very wrong in this matter: though not more so than these gentlemen, who resolve to interpret them as being perfectly and constantly dissimilar. Dr. Adam says, “There are, both in Latin and [in] English, substantives derived from the verb, which so much resemble the Gerund in their signification, that frequently they may be substituted in its place. They are generally used, * “RULE.—When the participle expresses something of which the noun following is the DOER, it should have the article and preposition; as, ‘It was said in the hearing of the witness.’ When it expresses something of which the noun following is not the doer, but the OBJECT, both should be omitted; as, ‘The court spent some time in hearing the witness.’”—BULLIONS, Prin. of E. Gram., p. 108; Analyt. and Pract. Gram., 181.

---

however, in a more undetermined sense than the Gerund, and in English, have the article always * prefixed to them. Thus, with the gerund, Detector legendo Ciceronem, I am delighted with reading Cicero. But with the substantive, Delector lectione Ciceronis, I am delighted with the reading of Cicero.”—Lat. and Eng. Gram., p. 142. “Gerunds are so called because they, as it were, signify the thing in gerendo, (anciently written gerundo,) in doing; and, along with the action, convey an idea of the agent.”—Grant’s Lat. Gram., p. 70; Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 353. “The reading of Cicero,” does not necessarily signify an action of which Cicero is the agent, as Crombie, Churchill, and Hiley choose to expound it; and, since the gerundive construction of words in ing ought to have a definite reference to the agent or subject of the action or being, one may perhaps amend even some of their own phraseology above, by preferring the participial noun: as, “No mistake can arise from the using of either form.”—“And riches [turn our thoughts too much] upon the enjoying of our superfluities.”—“Even when no mistake could arise from the interchanging of them.” Where the agent of the action plainly appears, the gerundive form is to be preferred on account of its brevity; as, “By the observing of truth, you will command respect;” or, “By observing truth, &c.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 189. Here the latter phraseology is greatly preferable, though this author did not perceive it. “I thought nothing was to be done by me before the giving of you thanks.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 63. Say,—“before giving you thanks;” for otherwise the word thanks has no proper construction, the pronoun alone being governed by of—and here again is an error; for “you” ought to be the object of to.

OBS. 46.—In Hiley’s Treatise, a work far more comprehensive than the generality of grammars, “the established principles and best usages of the English” Participle are so adroitly summed up, as to occupy only two pages, one in Etymology, and an other in Syntax. The author shows how the participle differs from a verb, and how from an adjective; yet he neither makes it a separate part of speech, nor tells us with what other it ought to be included. In lieu of a general rule for the parsing of all participles, he presents the remark, “Active transitive participles, like their verbs, govern the objective case; as, ‘I am desirous of hearing him;’ ‘Having praised them, he sat down.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 93. This is a rule by which one may parse the few objectives which are governed by participles; but, for the usual construction of participles themselves, it is no rule at all; neither does the grammar, full as it is, contain any. “Hearing” is here governed by of, and “Having praised” relates to he; but this author teaches neither of these facts, and the former he expressly contradicts by his false definition of a preposition. In his first note, is exhibited, in two parts, the false and ill-written rule which Churchill quotes from Crombie. (1.) “When the noun, connected with the participle, is active or doing something, the participle must have an article before it, and the preposition of after it; as, ‘In the hearing of the philosopher;’ or, ‘In the philosopher’s hearing;’ ‘By the preaching of Christ;’ or, ‘By Christ’s preaching.’ In these instances,” says Hiley, “the words hearing and preaching are substantives.” If so, he ought to have corrected this rule, which twice calls them participles; but, in stead of doing that, he blindly adds, by way of alternative, two examples which expressly contradict what the rule asserts. (2.) “But when the noun represents the object of an action, the article and the preposition of must be omitted; as, ‘In hearing the philosopher.”—Ib., p. 94. If this principle is right, my second note below, and most of the corrections under it, are wrong. But I am persuaded that the adopters of this rule did not observe how common is the phraseology which it condemns; as, “For if the casting-away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?”—Rom., xi, 15. Finally, this author rejects the of which most critics insert when a possessive precedes the verbal noun; justifies and prefers the mixed or double construction of the participle; and, consequently, neither wishes nor attempts to distinguish the participle from the verbal noun. Yet he does not fail to repeat, with some additional inaccuracy, the notion, that, “What do you think of my horse’s running? is different to [say from,] What do you think of my horse running?”—Ib., p. 94.

* This doctrine is far from being true. See Obs. 12th, in this series, above.—G. B.

OBS. 47.—That English books in general, and the style of even our best writers, should seldom be found exempt from errors in the construction of participles, will not be thought wonderful, when we consider the multiplicity of uses to which words of this sort are put, and the strange inconsistencies into which all our grammarians have fallen in treating this part of syntax. It is useless, and worse than useless, to teach for grammar any thing that is not true; and no doctrine can be true of which one part palpably oversets an other. What has been taught on the present topic, has led me into a multitude of critical remarks, designed both for the refutation of the principles which I reject, and for the elucidation and defence of those which are presently to be summed up in notes, or special rules, for the correction of false syntax. If my decisions do not agree with the teaching of our common grammarians, it is chiefly because these authors contradict themselves. Of this sort of teaching I shall here offer but one example more, and then bring these strictures to a close: “When present participles are preceded by an article, or pronoun adjective, they become nouns, and must not be followed by objective pronouns, or nouns without a preposition; as, the reading of many books wastes the health. But such nouns, like all others, may be used without an article, being sufficiently discovered by the following preposition; as, he was sent to prepare the way, by preaching of repentance. Also an article, or pronoun adjective, may precede a clause, used as a noun, and commencing with a participle; as, his teaching children was necessary.”—Dr. Wilson’s Syllabus of English Gram., p. xxx. Here the last position of the learned doctor, if it be true, completely annuls the first; or, if the first be true, the last must needs be false. And, according to Lowth, L. Murray, and many others, the second is as bad as either. The bishop says, concerning this very example, that by the use of the preposition of after the participle preaching, “the phrase is rendered obscure and ambiguous: for the obvious meaning of it, in its present form, is, ‘by preaching concerning repentance, or on that subject;’ whereas the sense intended is, ‘by publishing the covenant of repentance, and declaring repentance to be a condition of acceptance with God.’”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 82. “It ought to be, ‘by the preaching of repentance;’ or, by preaching repentance.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 193.

NOTES TO RULE XX.

NOTE I.—Active participles have the same government as the verbs from which they are derived; the preposition of, therefore, should never be used after the participle, when the verb does not require it. Thus, in phrases like the following, of is improper: “Keeping of one day in seven;”—“By preaching of repentance;”—“They left beating of Paul.”

NOTE II.—When a transitive participle is converted into a noun, of must be inserted to govern the object following; as, “So that there was no withstanding of him.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 252. “The cause of their salvation doth not so much arise from their embracing of mercy, as from God’s exercising of it”—Penington’s Works, Vol. ii, p. 91. “Faith is the receiving of Christ with the whole soul.”—Baxter. “In thy pouring-out of thy fury upon Jerusalem.”—Ezekiel, ix, 8.

NOTE III.—When the insertion of the word of, to complete the conversion of the transitive participle into a noun, produces ambiguity or harshness, some better phraseology must be chosen. Example: “Because the action took place prior to the taking place of the other past action.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 140. Here the words prior and place have no regular construction; and if we say, “prior to the taking of place of the other,” we make the jumble still worse. Say therefore, “Because the action took place before the other past action;”—or, “Because the action took place previously to the other past action.”

NOTE IV.—When participles become nouns, their adverbs should either become adjectives, or be taken as parts of such nouns, written as compound words: or, if neither of these methods be agreeable, a greater change should be made. Examples of error: 1. “Rightly understanding a sentence, depends very much on a knowledge of its grammatical construction.”—Comly’s Gram., 12th Ed., p. 8. Say, “The right understanding of a sentence,” &c. 2. “Elopement is a running away, or private departure.”—Webster’s El. Spelling-Book. p. 102. Write “running-away” as one word. 3. “If they [Milton’s descriptions] have any faults, it is their alluding too frequently to matters of learning, and to fables of antiquity.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 451. Say, “If they have any fault, it is that they allude too frequently,” &c.

NOTE V.—When the participle is followed by an adjective, its conversion into a noun appears to be improper; because the construction of the adjective becomes anomalous, and its relation doubtful: as, “When we speak of ‘ambition’s being restless’ or, ‘a disease’s being deceitful.’”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 346; Kirkham’s, p. 224. This ought to be, “When we speak of ambition as being restless, or a disease as being deceitful;” but Dr. Blair, from whom the text originally came, appears to have written it thus: “When we speak of ambition’s being restless, or a disease being deceitful.”—LECT. xvi, p. 155. This is inconsistent with itself; for one noun is possessive, and the other, objective.

NOTE VI.—When a compound participle is converted into a noun, the hyphen seems to be necessary, to prevent ambiguity; but such compound nouns are never elegant, and it is in general better to avoid them, by some change in the expression. Example: “Even as the being healed of a wound, presupposeth the plaster or salve: but not, on the contrary; for the application of the plaster presupposeth not the being healed.”—Barclays Works, Vol. i, p. 143. The phrase, “the being healed” ought to mean only, the creature healed; and not, the being-healed, or the healing received, which is what the writer intended. But the simple word healing might have been used in the latter sense; for, in participial nouns, the distinction of voice and of tense are commonly disregarded.

NOTE VII.—A participle should not be used where the infinitive mood, the verbal noun, a common substantive, or a phrase equivalent, will better express the meaning. Examples: 1. “But placing an accent on the second syllable of these words, would entirely derange them.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i, p. 239. Say rather, “But, to place an accent—But the placing of an accent—or, But an accent placed on the second syllable of these words, would entirely derange them.” 2. “To require their being in that case.”—Ib., Vol. ii, p. 21. Say, “To require them to be in that case.” 3. “She regrets not having read it.”—West’s Letters, p. 216. Say, “She regrets that she has not read it.” Or, “She does not regret that she has read it.” For the text is equivocal, and admits either of these senses.

NOTE VIII.—A participle used for a nominative after be, is, was, &c., produces a construction which is more naturally understood to be a compound form of the verb; and which is therefore not well adapted to the sense intended, when one tells what something is, was, or may be. Examples: 1. "Whose business is shoeing animals."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 365. Say, "Whose business it is, to shoe animals;"—or, "Whose business is the shoeing of animals." 2. "This was in fact converting the deposite to his own use."—Murray's Key, ii, p. 200. Say rather, "This was in fact a converting of the deposite to his own use."—Ib.

NOTE IX.—Verbs of preventing should be made to govern, not the participle in ing, nor what are called substantive phrases, but the objective case of a noun or pronoun; and if a participle follow, it ought to be governed by the preposition from: as, "But the admiration due to so eminent a poet, must not prevent us from remarking some other particulars in which he has failed."—Blair's Rhet., p. 438. Examples of error: 1. "I endeavoured to prevent letting him escape"—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 150. Say,—"to prevent his escape." 2. "To prevent its being connected with the nearest noun."—Churchill's Gram., p. 367. Say, "To prevent it from being connected," &c. 3. "To prevent it bursting out with open violence."—Robertson's America, Vol. ii, p. 146. Say, "To prevent it from bursting out," &c. 4. "To prevent their injuring or murdering of others."—Brown's Divinity, p. 26. Say rather, "To prevent them from injuring or murdering others."

NOTE X.—In the use of participles and of verbal nouns, the leading word in sense should always be made the leading or governing word in the construction; and where there is reason to doubt whether the possessive case or some other ought to come before the participle, it is better to reject both, and vary the expression. Examples: "Any person may easily convince himself of the truth of this, by listening to foreigners conversing in a language [which] he does not understand."—Churchill's Gram., p. 361. "It is a relic of the ancient style abounding with negatives."—Ib., p. 367. These forms are right; though the latter might be varied, by the insertion of "which abounds" for "abounding." But the celebrated examples before cited, about the "lady holding up her train," or the "lady's holding up her train,"—the "person dismissing his servant," or the "person's dismissing his servant,"—the "horse running to-day," or the "horse's running to-day,"—and many others which some grammarians suppose to be interchangeable, are equally bad in both forms.

NOTE XI.—Participles, in general, however construed, should have a clear reference to the proper subject of the being, action, or passion. The following sentence is therefore faulty: "By establishing good laws, our peace is secured."—Russell's Gram., p. 88; Folker's, p. 27. Peace not being the establisher of the laws, these authors should have said, "By establishing good laws, we secure our peace." "There will be no danger of spoiling their faces, or of gaining converts."—Murray's Key, ii, p. 201. This sentence is to me utterly unintelligible. If the context were known, there might possibly be some sense in saying, "They will be in no danger of spoiling their faces," &c. "The law is annulled, in the very act of its being made."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 267. "The act of MAKING a law," is a phrase intelligible; but, "the act of its BEING MADE," is a downright solecism—a positive absurdity.

NOTE XII.—A needless or indiscriminate use of participles for nouns, or of nouns for participles, is inelegant, if not improper, and ought therefore to be avoided. Examples: "Of denotes possession or belonging."—Murray's Gram., Vol. i, p. 118; Ingersoll's, 71. "The preposition of, frequently implies possession, property, or belonging to."—Cooper's Pl. and Pr. Gram., p. 137. Say, "Of frequently denotes possession, or the relation of property." "England perceives the folly of the denying of such concessions."—Nixon's Parser, p. 149. Expunge the and the last of, that denying may stand as a participle.

NOTE XIII.—Perfect participles being variously formed, care should be taken to express them agreeably to the best usage, and also to distinguish them from the preterits of their verbs, where there is any difference of form. Example: “It would be well, if all writers who endeavour to be accurate, would be careful to avoid a corruption at present so prevalent, of saying, it was wrote, for, it was written; he was drove, for, he was driven; I have went, for, I have gone, &c., in all which instances a verb is absurdly used to supply the proper participle, without any necessity from the want of such word.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 186.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XX.

EXAMPLES UNDER NOTE I.—EXPUNGE OF.

“In forming of his sentences, he was very exact.”—Error noticed by Murray, Vol. i, p. 194.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the preposition of is used after the participle forming, whose verb does not require it. But, according to Note 1st under Rule 20th, “Active participles have the same government as the verbs from which they are derived; the preposition of, therefore, should not be used after the participle, when the verb does not require it.” Therefore, of should be omitted; thus, “In forming his sentences, he was very exact.”]

“For not believing of which I condemn them”—Barclay’s Works, iii. 354. “To prohibit his hearers from reading of that book.”—Ib., i, 223. “You will please them exceedingly, in crying down of ordinances.”—MITCHELL: ib., i, 219. “The war-wolf subsequently became an engine for casting of stones.”—Constable’s Miscellany, xxi, 117. “The art of dressing of hides and working in leather was practised.”—Ib., xxi, 101. “In the choice they had made of him, for restoring of order.”—Rollin’s Hist., ii, 37. “The Arabians exercised themselves by composing of orations and poems.”—Sale’s Koran, p. 17. “Behold, the widow-woman was there gathering of sticks.”—1 Kings, xvii, 10. “The priests were busied in offering of burnt-offerings.”—2 Chron., xxxv, 14. “But Asahel would not turn aside from following of him.”—2 Sam., ii, 21. “He left off building of Ramah, and dwelt in Tirzah.”—1 Kings, xv, 21. “Those who accuse us of denying of it, belie us.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 280. “And breaking of bread from house to house.”—Ib., i, 192. “Those that set about repairing of the walls.”—Ib., i, 459. “And secretly begetting of divisions.”—Ib., i, 521. “Whom he had made use of in gathering of his church.”—Ib., i, 535. “In defining and distinguishing of the acceptations and uses of those particles.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 12.

“In punishing of this, we overthrow
The laws of nations, and of nature too.”—Dryden, p. 92.

UNDER NOTE II.—ARTICLES REQUIRE OF.

“The mixing them makes a miserable jumble of truth and fiction.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 357. “The same objection lies against the employing statues.”—Ib., ii, 358. “More efficacious than the venting opulence upon the Fine Arts.”—Ib., Vol. i, p. viii. “It is the giving different names to the same object.”—Ib., ii, 19. “When we have in view the erecting a column.”—Ib., ii, 56. “The straining an elevated subject beyond due bounds, is a vice not so frequent.”—Ib., i, 206. “The cutting evergreens in the shape of animals is very ancient.”—Ib., ii, 327. “The keeping juries, without meet, drink or fire, can be accounted for only on the same idea.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 301. “The writing the verbs at length on his slate, will be a very useful exercise.”—Beck’s Gram., p. 20. “The avoiding them is not an object of any moment.”—Sheridan’s Lect., p. 180. “Comparison is the increasing or decreasing the Signification of a Word by degrees.”—British Gram., p. 97. “Comparison is the Increasing or Decreasing the Quality by Degrees.”—Buchanan’s English Syntax, p. 27. “The placing a Circumstance before the Word with which it is connected, is the easiest of all Inversion.”—Ib., p. 140. “What is emphasis? It is the emitting a stronger and fuller sound of voice,” &c.—Bradley’s Gram., p. 108. “Besides, the varying the terms will render the use of them more familiar.”—Alex. Murray’s Gram., p. 25. “And yet the confining themselves to this true principle, has misled them!”—Horne Tooke’s Diversions, Vol. i, p. 15. “What is here commanded, is merely the relieving his misery.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 417. “The accumulating too great a quantity of knowledge at random, overloads the mind instead of adorning it.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 5. “For the compassing his point.”—Rollin’s Hist., ii, 35. “To the introducing such an inverted order of things.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 95. “Which require only the doing an external action.”—Ib., p. 185. “The imprisoning my body is to satisfy your wills.”—GEO. FOX: Sewel’s Hist., p. 47. “Who oppose the conferring such extensive command on one person.”—Duncan’s Cicero, p. 130. “Luxury contributed not a little to the enervating their forces.”—Sale’s Koran, p. 49. “The keeping one day of the week for a sabbath.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 202. “The doing a thing is contrary to the forbearing of it.”—Ib., i, 527. “The doubling the Sigma is, however, sometimes regular.”—Knight, on the Greek Alphabet, p. 29. “The inserting the common aspirate too, is improper.”—Ib., p. 134. “But in Spenser’s time the pronouncing the ed seems already to have been something of an archaism.”—Philological Museum, Vol. i, p. 656. “And to the reconciling the effect of their verses on the eye.”—Ib., i, 659. “When it was not in their power to hinder the taking the whole.”—Brown’s Estimate, ii, 155. “He had indeed given the orders himself for the shutting the gates.”—Ibid. “So his whole life was a doing the will of the Father.”—Penington, iv, 99. “It signifies the suffering or receiving the action expressed.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 37. “The pretended crime therefore was the declaring himself to be the Son of God.”—West’s Letters, p. 210. “Parsing is the resolving a sentence into its different parts of speech.”—Beck’s Gram., p. 26.

UNDER NOTE II.—ADJECTIVES REQUIRE OF.

“There is no expecting the admiration of beholders.”—Baxter. “There is no hiding you in the house.”—Shakspeare. “For the better regulating government in the province of Massachusetts.”—British Parliament. “The precise marking the shadowy boundaries of a complex government.”—J. Q. Adams’s Rhet., Vol. ii, p. 6. “[This state of discipline] requires the voluntary foregoing many things which we desire, and setting ourselves to what we have no inclination to.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 115. “This amounts to an active setting themselves against religion.”—Ib., p. 264. “Which engaged our ancient friends to the orderly establishing our Christian discipline.”—N. E. Discip., p. 117. “Some men are so unjust that there is no securing our own property or life, but by opposing force to force.”—Brown’s Divinity, p. 26. “An Act for the better securing the Rights and Liberties of the Subject.”—Geo. III, 31st. “Miraculous curing the sick is discontinued.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 137. “It would have been no transgressing the apostle’s rule.”—Ib., p. 146. “As far as consistent with the proper conducting the business of the House.”—Elmore, in Congress, 1839. “Because he would have no quarrelling at the just condemning them at that day.”—Law and Grace, p. 42. “That transferring this natural manner—will ensure propriety.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. 372. “If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old turning the key.”—Macbeth, Act ii, Sc. 3.

UNDER NOTE II.—POSSESSIVES REQUIRE OF.

“So very simple a thing as a man’s wounding himself.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 97; Murray’s Gram., p. 317. “Or with that man’s avowing his designs.”—Blair, p. 104; Murray, p. 308; Parker and Fox, Part III, p. 88. “On his putting the question.”—Adams’s Rhet., Vol. ii, p. 111. “The importance of teachers’ requiring their pupils to read each section many times over.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 169. “Politeness is a kind of forgetting one’s self in order to be agreeable to others.”—Ramsay’s Cyrus. “Much, therefore, of the merit, and the agreeableness of epistolary writing, will depend on its introducing us into some acquaintance with the writer.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 370; Mack’s Dissertation in his Gram., p. 175. “Richard’s restoration to respectability, depends on his paying his debts.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 176. “Their supplying ellipses where none ever existed; their parsing words of sentences already full and perfect, as though depending on words understood.”—Ib., p. 375. “Her veiling herself and shedding tears,” &c., “her upbraiding Paris for his cowardice,” &c.—Blair’s Rhet., p. 433. “A preposition may be known by its admitting after it a personal pronoun, in the objective case.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 28; Alger’s, 14; Bacon’s, 10; Merchant’s, 18; and others. “But this forms no just objection to its denoting time.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 65. “Of men’s violating or disregarding the relations which God has placed them in here.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 164. “Success, indeed, no more decides for the right, than a man’s killing his antagonist in a duel.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 295. “His reminding them.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 123. “This mistake was corrected by his preceptor’s causing him to plant some beans.”—Ib., p. 235. “Their neglecting this was ruinous.”—Frost’s El. of Gram., p. 82. “That he was serious, appears from his distinguishing the others as ‘finite.’”—Felch’s Gram., p. 10. “His hearers are not at all sensible of his doing it.”—Sheridan’s Elocution, p. 119.

UNDER NOTE III.—CHANGE THE EXPRESSION.

“An allegory is the saying one thing, and meaning another; a double-meaning or dilogy is the saying only one thing, but having two in view.”—Philological Museum, Vol. i, p. 461. “A verb may generally be distinguished, by its making sense with any of the personal pronouns, or the word to before it.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 28; Alger’s, 13; Bacon’s, 10; Comly’s, and many others. “A noun may, in general, be distinguished by its taking an article before it, or by its making sense of itself.”—Merchant’s Gram., p. 17; Murray’s, 27; &c. “An Adjective may usually be known by its making sense with the addition of the word thing: as, a good thing; a bad thing.”—Same Authors. “It is seen in the objective case, from its denoting the object affected by the act of leaving.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 44. “It is seen in the possessive case, from its denoting the possessor of something.”—Ibid. “The name man is caused by the adname whatever to be twofold subjective case, from its denoting, of itself, one person as the subject of the two remarks.”—Ib., p. 56. “When, as used in the last line, is a connective, from its joining that line to the other part of the sentence.”—Ib., p. 59. “From their denoting reciprocation.”—Ib., p. 64. “To allow them the making use of that liberty.”—Sale’s Koran, p. 116. “The worst effect of it is, the fixing on your mind a habit of indecision.”—Todd’s Student’s Manual, p. 60. “And you groan the more deeply, as you reflect that there is no shaking it off.”—Ib., p. 47. “I know of nothing that can justify the having recourse to a Latin translation of a Greek writer.”—Coleridge’s Introduction, p. 16. “Humour is the making others act or talk absurdly.”—Hazlitt’s Lectures. “There are remarkable instances of their not affecting each other.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 150. “The leaving Cæsar out of the commission was not from any slight.”—Life of Cicero, p. 44. “Of the receiving this toleration thankfully I shall say no more.”—Dryden’s Works, p. 88. “Henrietta was delighted with Julia’s working lace so very well.”—O. B.

Peirce's Gram., p. 255. "And it is from their representing each two different words that the confusion has arisen."—Booth's Introd., p. 42. "Æschylus died of a fracture of his skull, caused by an eagle's letting fall a tortoise on his head."—Biog. Dict. "He doubted their having it."—Felch's Comp. Gram., p. 81. "The making ourselves clearly understood, is the chief end of speech."—Sheridan's Elocution, p. 68. "There is no discovering in their countenances, any signs which are the natural concomitants of the feelings of the heart."—Ib., p. 165. "Nothing can be more common or less proper than to speak of a river's emptying itself."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 186. "Our not using the former expression, is owing to this."—Bullions's E. Gram., p. 59.

UNDER NOTE IV.—DISPOSAL OF ADVERBS.

"To this generally succeeds the division, or the laying down the method of the discourse."—Blair's Rhet., p. 311. "To the pulling down of strong holds."—2 Cor., x, 4. "Can a mere buckling on a military weapon infuse courage?"—Brown's Estimate, i, 62. "Living expensively and luxuriously destroys health."—Murray's Gram., i, 234. "By living frugally and temperately, health is preserved."—Ibid. "By living temperately, our health is promoted."—Ib., p. 227. "By the doing away of the necessity."—The Friend, xiii, 157. "He recommended to them, however, the immediately calling of the whole community to the church."—Gregory's Dict., w. Ventriloquism. "The separation of large numbers in this manner certainly facilitates the reading them rightly."—Churchill's Gram., p. 303. "From their merely admitting of a twofold grammatical construction."—Philol. Museum, i, 403. "His gravely lecturing his friend about it."—Ib., i, 478. "For the blotting out of sin."—Gurney's Evidences, p. 140. "From the not using of water."—Barclay's Works, i, 189. "By the gentle dropping in of a pebble."—Sheridan's Elocution, p. 125. "To the carrying on a great part of that general course of nature."—Butler's Analogy, p. 127. "Then the not interposing is so far from being a ground of complaint."—Ib., p. 147. "The bare omission, or rather the not employing of what is used."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 180; Jamieson's, 48. "Bringing together incongruous adverbs is a very common fault."—Churchill's Gram., p. 329. "This is a presumptive proof of its not proceeding from them."—Butler's Analogy, p. 186. "It represents him in a character to which the acting unjustly is peculiarly unsuitable."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 372. "They will aim at something higher than merely the dealing out of harmonious sounds."—Kirkham's Elocution, p. 65. "This is intelligible and sufficient; and going farther seems beyond the reach of our faculties."—Butler's Analogy, p. 147. "Apostrophe is a turning off from the regular course of the subject."—Murray's Gram., p. 348; Jamieson's Rhet., 185. "Even Isabella was finally prevailed upon to assent to the sending out a commission to investigate his conduct."—Life of Columbus. "For the turning away of the simple shall slay them."—Prov., i, 32.

"Thick fingers always should command
Without the stretching out the hand."—King's Poems, p. 585.

UNDER NOTE V.—PARTICIPLES WITH ADJECTIVES.

"Is there any Scripture speaks of the light's being inward?"—Barclay's Works, i, 367. "For I believe not the being positive therein essential to salvation."—Ib., iii, 330. "Our not being able to act an uniform right part without some thought and care."—Butler's Analogy, p. 122. "Upon supposition of its being reconcileable with the constitution of nature."—Ib., p. 128. "Upon account of its not being discoverable by reason or experience."—Ib., p. 170. "Upon account of their being unlike the known course of nature."—Ib., p. 171. "Our being able to discern reasons for them, gives a positive credibility to the history of them."—Ib., p.

174. "From its not being universal."—Ib., p. 175. "That they may be turned into the passive participle in dus is no decisive argument in favour of their being passive."—Grant's Lat. Gram., p. 233. "With the implied idea of St. Paul's being then absent from the Corinthians."—Kirkham's Elocution, p. 123. "On account of its becoming gradually weaker, until it finally dies away into silence."—Ib., p. 32. "Not without the author's being fully aware."—Ib., p. 84. "Being witty out of season, is one sort of folly."—Sheffield's Works, ii. 172. "Its being generally susceptible of a much stronger evidence."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 102. "At least their being such rarely enhanceth our opinion, either of their abilities or of their virtues."—Ib., p. 162. "Which were the ground of our being one."—Barclay's Works, i, 513. "But they may be distinguished from it by their being intransitive."—Murray's Gram., i, 60. "To distinguish the higher degree of our persuasion of a thing's being possible."—Churchill's Gram., p. 234.

"His being idle, and dishonest too,
Was that which caus'd his utter overthrow."—Tobitt's Gram., p. 61.

UNDER NOTE VI.—COMPOUND VERBAL NOUNS.

"When it denotes being subjected to the exertion of another."—Booth's Introd., p. 37. "In a passive sense, it signifies being subjected to the influence of the action."—Felch's Comp. Gram., p. 60. "The being abandoned by our friends is very deplorable."—Goldsmith's Greece, i, 181. "Without waiting for their being attacked by the Macedonians."—Ib., ii, 97. "In progress of time, words were wanted to express men's being connected with certain conditions of fortune."—Blair's Rhet., p. 135. "Our being made acquainted with pain and sorrow, has a tendency to bring us to a settled moderation."—Butler's Analogy, p. 121. "The chancellor's being attached to the king secured his crown; The general's having failed in this enterprise occasioned his disgrace; John's having been writing a long time had wearied him."—Murray's Gram., p. 66; Sanborn's, 171; Cooper's, 96; Ingersoll's, 46; Fisk's, 83; and others. "The sentence should be, 'John's having been writing a long time has wearied him.'"—Wright's Gram., p. 186. "Much depends on this rule's being observed."—Murray's Key, ii, 195. "He mentioned a boy's having been corrected for his faults; The boy's having been corrected is shameful to him."—Alger's Gram., p. 65; Merchant's, 93. "The greater the difficulty of remembrance is, and the more important the being remembered is to the attainment of the ultimate end."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 90. "If the parts in the composition of similar objects were always in equal quantity, their being compounded would make no odds."—Ib., p. 65. "Circumstances, not of such importance as that the scope of the relation is affected by their being known."—Ib., p. 379. "A passive verb expresses the receiving of an action or the being acted upon; as, 'John is beaten'"—Frost's El. of Gram., p. 16. "So our Language has another great Advantage, namely its not being diversified by Genders."—Buchanan's Gram., p. 20. "The having been slandered is no fault of Peter."—Frost's El. of Gram., p. 82. "Without being Christ's friends, there is no being justified."—William Penn. "Being accustomed to danger, begets intrepidity, i.e. lessens fear."—Butler's Analogy, p. 112. "It is, not being affected so and so, but acting, which forms those habits."—Ib., p. 113. "In order to our being satisfied of the truth of the apparent paradox."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 164. "Tropes consist in a word's being employed to signify something that is different from its original and primitive meaning."—Blair's Rhet., p. 132; Jamieson's, 140; Murray's Gram., 337; Kirkham's, 222. "A Trope consists in a word's being employed," &c.—Hiley's Gram., p. 133. "The scriptural view of our being saved from punishment."—Gurney's Evidences, p. 124. "To submit and obey, is not a renouncing a being led by the Spirit."—Barclay's Works, i, 542.

UNDER NOTE VII.—PARTICIPLES FOR INFINITIVES, &amp;C.

“Teaching little children is a pleasant employment.”—Bartlett’s School Manual, ii, 68. “Denying or compromising principles of truth is virtually denying their divine Author.”—Reformer, i, 34. “A severe critic might point out some expressions that would bear being retrenched.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 206. “Never attempt prolonging the pathetic too much.”—Ib., p. 323. “I now recollect having mentioned a report of that nature.”—Whiting’s Reader, p. 132. “Nor of the necessity which there is for their being restrained in them.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 116. “But doing what God commands, because he commands it, is obedience, though it proceeds from hope or fear.”—Ib., p. 124. “Simply closing the nostrils does not so entirely prevent resonance.”—Music of Nature, p. 484. “Yet they absolutely refuse doing so.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 264. “But Artaxerxes could not refuse pardoning him.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, i, 173. “Doing them in the best manner is signified by the name of these arts.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. 360. “Behaving well for the time to come, may be insufficient.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 198. “The compiler proposed publishing that part by itself.”—Dr. Adam, Rom. Antiq., p. v. “To smile upon those we should censure, is bringing guilt upon ourselves.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 108. “But it would be doing great injustice to that illustrious orator to bring his genius down to the same level.”—Ib., p. 28. “Doubting things go ill, often hurts more than to be sure they do.”—Beauties of Shak., p. 203. “This is called straining a metaphor.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 150; Murray’s Gram., i, 341. “This is what Aristotle calls giving manners to the poem.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 427. “The painter’s being entirely confined to that part of time which he has chosen, deprives him of the power of exhibiting various stages of the same action.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 195. “It imports retrenching all superfluities, and pruning the expression.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 94; Jamieson’s, 64; Murray’s Gram., p. 301; Kirkham’s, 220. “The necessity for our being thus exempted is further apparent.”—West’s Letters, p. 40. “Her situation in life does not allow of her being genteel in every thing.”—Ib., p. 57. “Provided you do not dislike being dirty when you are invisible.”—Ib., p. 58. “There is now an imperious necessity for her being acquainted with her title to eternity.”—Ib., p. 120. “Discarding the restraints of virtue, is misnamed ingenuousness.”—Ib., p. 105. “The legislature prohibits opening shop of a Sunday.”—Ib., p. 66. “To attempt proving that any thing is right.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 256. “The comma directs making a pause of a second in duration, or less.”—Ib., p. 280. “The rule which directs putting other words into the place of it, is wrong.”—Ib., p. 326. “They direct calling the specifying adjectives or adnames adjective pronouns.”—Ib., p. 338. “William dislikes attending court.”—Frost’s El. of Gram., p. 82. “It may perhaps be worth while remarking that Milton makes a distinction.”—Philological Museum, i, 659. “Professing regard, and acting differently, discover a base mind.”—Murray’s Key, p. 206; Bullions’s E. Gram., pp. 82 and 112; Lennie’s, 58. “Professing regard and acting indifferently, discover a base mind.”—Weld’s Gram., Improved Edition, p. 59. “You have proved beyond contradiction, that acting thus is the sure way to procure such an object.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 92.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—PARTICIPLES AFTER BE, IS, &amp;C.

“Irony is expressing ourselves in a manner contrary to our thoughts.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 353; Kirkham’s, 225; Goldsbury’s, 90. “Irony is saying one thing and meaning the reverse of what that expression would represent.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 303. “An Irony is dissembling or changing the proper signification of a word or sentence to quite the contrary.”—Fisher’s Gram., p. 151. “Irony is expressing ourselves contrary to what we mean.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 280. “This is in a great Measure delivering their own Compositions.”—Buchanan’s Gram., p. xxvi. “But purity is using rightly the words of the language.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 59. “But the most important object is settling the English quantity.”—Walker’s Key, p. 17. “When there is no affinity, the transition from one meaning to another is taking a very wide step.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 293. “It would be losing time to attempt further to illustrate it.”—Ib., p. 79. “This is leaving the sentence too bare, and making it to be, if not nonsense, hardly sense.”—Cobbett’s Gram., ¶220. “This is requiring more labours from every private member.”—West’s Letters, p. 120. “Is not this using one measure for our neighbours, and another for ourselves?”—Ib., p. 200. “Is it not charging God foolishly, when we give these dark colourings to human nature?”—Ib., p. 171. “This is not enduring the cross as a disciple of Jesus Christ, but snatching at it like a partizan of Swift’s Jack.”—Ib., p. 175. “What is Spelling? It is combining letters to form syllables and words.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 18. “It is choosing such letters to compose words,” &c.—Ibid. “What is Parsing? (1.) It is describing the nature, use, and powers of words.”—Ib., pp. 22 and 192. (2.) “For parsing is describing the words of a sentence as they are used.”—Ib., p. 10. (3.) “Parsing is only describing the nature and relations of words as they are used.”—Ib., p. 11. (4.) “Parsing, let the pupil understand and remember, is describing facts concerning words; or representing them in their offices and relations as they are.”—Ib., p. 34. (5.) “Parsing is resolving and explaining words according to the rules of grammar.”—Ib., p. 326. (6.) “Parsing a word, remember, is enumerating and describing its various relations and qualities, and its grammatical relations to other words in the sentence.”—Ib., p. 325. (7.) “For parsing a word is enumerating and describing its various properties and relations to the sentence.”—Ib., p. 326. (8.) “Parsing a noun is telling of what person, number, gender, and case, it is; and also telling all its grammatical relations in a sentence with respect to other words.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 16. (9.) “Parsing any part of speech is telling all its properties and relations.”—Ibid. (10.) “Parsing is resolving a sentence into its elements.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 1850, §588. “The highway of the righteous is, departing from evil.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 168. “Besides, the first step towards exhibiting truth should be removing the veil of error.”—Ib., p. 377. “Punctuation is dividing sentences and the words of sentences, by pauses.”—Ib., p. 280. “Another fault is using the preterimperfect shook instead of the participle shaken”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 259. “Her employment is drawing maps.”—Alger’s Gram., p. 65. “Going to the play, according to his notion, is leading a sensual life, and exposing ones self to the strongest temptations. This is begging the question, and therefor requires no answer.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 217. “It is overvaluing ourselves to reduce every thing to the narrow measure of our capacities.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 193; Ingersoll’s, 199. “What is vocal language? It is speaking; or expressing ideas by the human voice.”—Sanders, Spelling-Book, p. 7.

UNDER NOTE IX.—VERBS OF PREVENTING.

“The annulling power of the constitution prevented that enactment’s becoming a law.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 267. “Which prevents the manner’s being brief.”—Ib., p. 365. “This close prevents their bearing forward as nominatives.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. 153. “Because this prevents its growing drowzy.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 5. “Yet this does not prevent his being great.”—Ib., p. 27. “To prevent its being insipid.”—Ib., p. 112. “Or whose interruptions did not prevent its being continued.”—Ib., p. 167. “This by no means prevents their being also punishments.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 123. “This hinders not their being also, in the strictest sense, punishments.”—Ibid., “The noise made by the rain and wind prevented their being heard.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, Vol. i, p. 118. “He endeavoured to prevent its taking effect.”—Ib., i, 128. “So sequestered as to prevent their being explored.”—West's Letters, p. 62. “Who prevented her making a more pleasant party.”—Ib., p. 65. “To prevent our being tossed about by every wind of doctrine.”—Ib., p. 123. “After the infirmities of age prevented his bearing his part of official duty.”—Religious World, ii, 193. “To prevent splendid trifles passing for matters of importance.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 310. “Which prevents his exerting himself to any good purpose.”—Beattie's Moral Science, i, 146. “The want of the observance of this rule, very frequently prevents our being punctual in our duties.”—Student's Manual, p. 65. “Nothing will prevent his being a student, and his possessing the means of study.”—Ib., p. 127. “Does the present accident hinder your being honest and brave?”—Collier's Antoninus, p. 51. “The e is omitted to prevent two es coming together.”—Fowle's Gram., p. 34. “A pronoun is used for or in place of a noun.—to prevent repeating the noun.”—Sanborn's Gram., p. 13. “Diversity in the style relieves the ear, and prevents it being tired with the too frequent recurrence of the rhymes.”—Campbell's Rhet., p. 166. “Diversity in the style relieves the ear, and prevents its being tired,” &c.—Murray's Gram., i, p. 362. “Timidity and false shame prevent our opposing vicious customs.”—Murray's Key, ii, 236; Sanborn's Gram., 171; Merchant's, 205. “To prevent their being moved by such.”—Campbell's Rhet., p. 155. “Some obstacle or impediment, that prevents its taking place.”—Priestley's Gram., p. 38. “Which prevents our making a progress towards perfection.”—Sheridan's Elocution, p. 4. “This method of distinguishing words, must prevent any regular proportion of time being settled.”—Ib., p. 67. “That nothing but affectation can prevent its always taking place.”—Ib., p. 78. “This did not prevent John's being acknowledged and solemnly inaugurated Duke of Normandy.”—HENRY: Webster's Philos. Gram., p. 182; his Improved Gram., 130; Sanborn's Gram., 189; Fowler's, 8vo, 1850, p. 541.

UNDER NOTE X.—THE LEADING WORD IN SENSE.

“This would preclude the possibility of a nouns’ or any other word’s ever being in the possessive case.”—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 338. “A great part of our pleasure arises from the plan or story being well conducted.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 18, “And we have no reason to wonder at this being the case.”—Ib., p. 249. “She objected only, as Cicero says, to Oppianicus having two sons by his present wife.”—Ib., p. 274. “The Britons being subdued by the Saxons, was a necessary consequence of their having called in these Saxons, to their assistance.”—Ib., p. 329. “What he had there said, concerning the Saxons expelling the Britons, and changing the customs, the religion, and the language of the country, is a clear and good reason for our present language being Saxon rather than British.”—Ib., p. 230. “The only material difference between them, besides the one being short and the other being prolonged, is, that a metaphor always explains itself by the words that are connected with it.”—Ib., p. 151; Murray's Gram., p. 342. “The description of Death’s advancing to meet Satan, on his arrival.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. 156. “Is not the bare fact of God being the witness of it, sufficient ground for its credibility to rest upon?”—Chalmers, Sermon, p. 288. “As in the case of one entering upon a new study.”—Beattie's Moral Science, i, 77. “The manner of these affecting the copula is called the imperative mode.”—BP. WILKINS: Lowth's Gram., p. 43. “We are freed from the trouble, by our nouns having no diversity of endings.”—Buchanan's Syntax, p. 20. “The Verb is rather indicative of the actions being doing, or done, than the time when, but indeed the ideas are undistinguishable.”—Booth's Introd., p. 69. “Nobody would doubt of this being a sufficient proof.”—Campbell's Rhet., p. 66. “Against the doctrine here maintained, of conscience being, as well as reason, a natural faculty.”—Beattie's M. Sci., i, 263. “It is one cause of the Greek and English languages being much more easy to learn, than the Latin.”—Bucke's Classical Gram., p. 25. “I have not been able to make out a solitary instance of such being the fact.”—Liberator, x, 40. “An angel’s forming the appearance of a hand, and writing the king’s condemnation on the wall, checked their mirth, and filled them with terror.”—Wood’s Dict., w. Belshazzar. “The prisoners’ having attempted to escape, aroused the keepers.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 357. “I doubt not, in the least, of this having been one cause of the multiplication of divinities in the heathen world.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 155. “From the general rule he lays down, of the verbs being the parent word of all language.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. i, p. 227. “He was accused of himself being idle.”—Felch’s Comp. Gram., p. 52. “Our meeting is generally dissatisfied with him so removing.”—Wm. Edmondson. “The spectacle is too rare of men’s deserving solid fame while not seeking it.”—Prof. Bush’s Lecture on Swedenborg. “What further need was there of an other priest rising?”—See Key.

UNDER NOTE XI.—REFERENCE OF PARTICIPLES.

“Viewing them separately, different emotions are produced.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 344. “But leaving this doubtful, another objection occurs.”—Ib., ii, 358. “Proceeding from one particular to another, the subject grew under his hand.”—Ib., i, 27. “But this is still an interruption, and a link of the chain broken.”—Ib., ii, 314. “After some days hunting, Cyrus communicated his design to his officers.”—Rollin, ii, 66. “But it is made, without the appearance of making it in form.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 358. “These would have had a better effect disjoined thus.”—Ib., p. 119; Murray’s Gram., i, 309. “An improper diphthong has but one of the vowels sounded.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 9; Alger’s, 12; Merchant’s, 9; Smith’s, 118; Ingersoll’s, 4. “And being led to think of both together, my view is rendered unsteady.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 95; Murray’s Gram., 302; Jamieson’s Rhet., 66. “By often doing the same thing, it becomes habitual.”—Murray’s Key, p. 257. “They remain with us in our dark and solitary hours, no less than when surrounded with friends and cheerful society.”—Ib., p. 238. “Besides shewing what is right, the matter may be further explained by pointing out what is wrong.”—Louth’s Gram., Pref., p. viii. “The former teaches the true pronunciation of words, comprising accent, quantity, emphasis, pause, and tone.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol., i, p. 235. “Persons may be reprov’d for their negligence, by saying; ‘You have taken great care indeed.’”—Ib., i, 354. “The words preceding and following it, are in apposition to each other.”—Ib., ii, p. 22. “Having finished his speech, the assembly dispersed.”—Cooper’s Pract. Gram., p. 97. “Were the voice to fall at the close of the last line, as many a reader is in the habit of doing.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 101. “The misfortunes of his countrymen were but negatively the effects of his wrath, by depriving them of his assistance.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 299. “Taking them as nouns, this construction may be explained thus.”—Grant’s Latin Gram., p. 233. “These have an active signification, those which come from neuter verbs being excepted.”—Ib., p. 233. “From the evidence of it not being universal.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 84. “And this faith will continually grow, by acquainting ourselves with our own nature.”—Channing’s Self-Culture, p. 33. “Monosyllables ending with any consonant but f, l, or s, and preceded by a single vowel, never double the final consonant; excepting add, ebb,” &c.—Murray’s Gram., p. 23; Picket’s, 10; Merchant’s, 13; Ingersoll’s, 8; Fisk’s, 44; Blair’s, 7. “The relation of being the object of the action is expressed by the change of the Noun Maria to Mariam”—Booth’s Introd., p. 38. “In analyzing a proposition, it is first to be divided into its logical subject and predicate.”—Andrews and Stoddard’s Latin Gram., p. 254. “In analyzing a simple sentence, it should first be resolved into its logical subject and logical predicate.”—Wells’s School Gram., 113th Ed., p. 189.

UNDER NOTE XII.—OF PARTICIPLES AND NOUNS.

“The discovering passions instantly at their birth, is essential to our well being.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 352. “I am now to enter on considering the sources of the pleasures of taste.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 28. “The varieties in using them are, indeed many.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 319. “Changing times and seasons, removing and setting up kings, belong to Providence alone.”—Ib., Key, ii, p. 200. “Adhering to the partitions seemed the cause of France, accepting the will that of the house of Bourbon.”—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 246. “Another source of darkness in composing is, the injudicious introduction of technical words and phrases.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 247. “These are the rules of grammar, by the observing of which, you may avoid mistakes.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 192; Merchant’s, 93; Fisk’s, 135; Ingersoll’s, 198. “By the observing of the rules you may avoid mistakes.”—Alger’s Gram., p. 65. “By the observing of these rules he succeeded.”—Frost’s El. of Gram., p. 82. “Being praised was his ruin.”—Ibid. “Deceiving is not convincing.”—Ibid. “He never feared losing a friend.”—Ibid. “Making books is his amusement.”—Alger’s Gram., p. 65. “We call it declining a noun.”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 22. “Washington, however, pursued the same policy of neutrality, and opposed firmly, taking any part in the wars of Europe.”—Hall and Baker’s School Hist., p. 294. “The following is a note of Interrogation, or asking a question (?).”—Infant School Gram., p. 132. “The following is a note of Admiration, or expressing wonder (!).”—Ib. “Omitting or using the article a forms a nice distinction in the sense.”—Murray’s Gram., ii, 284. “Placing the preposition before the word it governs is more graceful.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 150. “Assistance is absolutely necessary to their recovery, and retrieving their affairs.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 197. “Which termination, [ish,] when added to adjectives, imports diminution, or lessening the quality.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 131; Kirkham’s, 172. “After what is said, will it be thought refining too much to suggest, that the different orders are qualified for different purposes?”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 114. “Who has nothing to think of but killing time.”—West’s Letters, p. 58. “It requires no nicety of ear, as in the distinguishing of tones, or measuring time.”—Sheridan’s Elocution, p. 65. “The Possessive Case denotes possession, or belonging to.”—Hall’s Gram., p. 7.

UNDER NOTE XIII.—PERFECT PARTICIPLES.

“Garcilasso was master of the language spoke by the Incas.”—Robertson’s Amer., ii, 459. “When an interesting story is broke off in the middle.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 244. “Speaking of Hannibal’s elephants drove back by the enemy.”—Ib., ii, 32. “If Du Ryer had not wrote for bread, he would have equalled them.”—Formey’s Belles-Lettres, p. 166. “Pope describes a rock broke off from a mountain, and hurling to the plain.”—Kames, ii, 106. “I have wrote or have written, Thou hast wrote or hast written. He hath or has wrote, or hath or has written;” &c.—Dr. Ash’s Gram., p. 47; Maltby’s, 47. “This was spoke by a pagan.”—Webster’s Improved Gram., p. 174. “But I have chose to follow the common arrangement.”—Ib., p. 10. “The language spoke in Bengal.”—Ib., p. 78. “And sound Sleep thus broke off, with suddain Alarms, is apt enough to discompose any one.”—Locke, on Ed., p. 32. “This is not only the Case of those Open Sinners, before spoke of.”—Right of Tythes, p. 26. “Some Grammarians have wrote a very perplexed and difficult doctrine on Punctuation.”—Ensell’s Gram., p. 340. “There hath a pity arose in me towards thee.”—Sewel’s Hist., fol., p. 324. “Abel is the only man that has underwent the awful change of death.”—Juvenile Theatre, p. 4.

“Meantime, on Afric’s glowing sands,
Smote with keen heat, the Trav’ler stands.”—Union Poems, p. 88.

CHAPTER VIII.—ADVERBS.

The syntax of an Adverb consists in its simple relation to a verb, a participle, an adjective, or whatever else it qualifies; just as the syntax of an English Adjective, (except in a few instances,) consists in its simple relation to a noun or a pronoun.

RULE XXI.—ADVERBS.

Adverbs relate to verbs, participles, adjectives, or other adverbs: as, “Any passion that habitually discomposes our temper, or unfits us for properly discharging the duties of life, has most certainly gained a very dangerous ascendancy.”—Blair.

“How bless’d this happy hour, should he appear,
Dear to us all, to me supremely dear!”—Pope’s Homer.

EXCEPTION FIRST.

The adverbs yes, ay, and yea, expressing a simple affirmation, and the adverbs no and nay, expressing a simple negation, are always independent. They generally answer a question, and are equivalent to a whole sentence. Is it clear, that they ought to be called adverbs? No. “Can honour set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honour hath no skill in surgery then? No.”—SHAK.: First Part of Hen. IV, Act v, 1.

EXCEPTION SECOND.

The word amen, which is commonly called an adverb, is often used independently at the beginning or end of a declaration or a prayer; and is itself a prayer, meaning, So let it be: as, “Surely, I come quickly. Amen: Even so, come Lord Jesus.”—Rev., xxii, 20. When it does not stand thus alone, it seems in general to be used substantively; as, “The strangers among them stood on Gerizim, and echoed amen to the blessings.”—Wood’s Dict. “These things saith the Amen.”—Rev., iii, 14

EXCEPTION THIRD.

An adverb before a preposition seems sometimes to relate to the latter, rather than to the verb or participle to which the preposition connects its object; as, “This mode of pronunciation runs considerably beyond ordinary discourse.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 334. “Yea, all along the times of the apostasy, this was the thing that preserved the witnesses.”—Penington’s Works, Vol. iv, p. 12. [See Obs. 8th on Rule 7th.]

“Right against the eastern gate,
Where the great sun begins his state.”—Milton, L’Allegro.

EXCEPTION FOURTH.

The words much, little, far, and all, being originally adjectives, are sometimes preceded by the negative not, or (except the last) by such an adverb as too, how, thus, so, or as, when they are taken substantively; as, “Not all that glitters, is gold.”—“Too much should not be offered at once.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 140. “Thus far is consistent.”—Ib., p. 161. “Thus far is right.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 101.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XXI.

OBS. 1.—On this rule of syntax, Dr. Adam remarks, “Adverbs sometimes likewise qualify substantives,” and gives Latin examples of the following import: “Homer plainly an orator:”—“Truly Metellus;”—“To-morrow morning.” But this doctrine is not well proved by such imperfect phrases, nor can it ever be very consistently admitted, because it destroys the characteristic difference between an adjective and an adverb. To-morrow is here an adjective; and as for truly and plainly, they are not such words as can make sense with nouns. I therefore imagine the phrases to be elliptical: “Verè Metellus,” may mean, “This is truly Metellus,” and “Homerus planè orator,” “Homer was plainly an orator.” So, in the example, “Behold an Israelite indeed,” the true construction seems to be, “Behold, here is indeed an Israelite;” for, in the Greek or Latin, the word Israelite is a nominative, thus: “Ecce verè Israēlita.”—Beza; also Montanus. “Ἴδε ἀληθῶς Ἰσραηλίτης.”—Greek Testament. Behold appears to be here an interjection, like Ecce. If we make it a transitive verb, the reading should be, “Behold a true Israelite;” for the text does not mean, “Behold indeed an Israelite.” At least, this is not the meaning in our version. W. H. Wells, citing as authorities for the doctrine, “Bullions, Allen and Cornwell, Brace, Butler, and Webber,” has the following remark: “There are, however, certain forms of expression in which adverbs bear a special relation to nouns or pronouns; as, ‘Behold I, even I, do bring a flood of waters.’—Gen. 6: 17. ‘For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power.’—1 Thes. 1: 5.”—Wells’s School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 156; late Ed., 168. And again, in his Punctuation, we find this: “When, however, the intervening word is an adverb, the comma is more commonly omitted; as, ‘It is labor only which gives a relish to pleasure.’”—Ib., p. 176. From all this, the doctrine receives no better support than from Adam’s suggestion above considered. The word “only” is often an adjective, and wherever its “special relation” is to a noun or a pronoun, it can be nothing else. “Even,” when it introduces a word repeated with emphasis, is a conjunction.

OBS. 2.—When participles become nouns, their adverbs are not unfrequently left standing with them in their original relation; as, “For the fall and rising again of many in Israel.”—Luke, ii, 34. “To denote the carrying forward of the action.”—Barnard’s Gram., p. 52. But in instances like these, the hyphen seems to be necessary. This mark would make the terms rising-again and carrying-forward compound nouns, and not participial nouns with adverbs relating to them.

“There is no flying hence, nor tarrying here.”—Shak., Macbeth.

“What! in ill thoughts again? men must endure
Their going hence, ev’n as their coming hither.”—Id.

OBS. 3.—Whenever any of those words which are commonly used adverbially, are made to relate directly to nouns or pronouns, they must be reckoned adjectives, and parsed by Rule 9th. Examples: “The above verbs.”—Dr. Adam. “To the above remarks.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 318. “The above instance.”—Ib., p. 442. “After the above partial illustration.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of Lang., ii, 62. “The above explanation.”—Cobbett’s Gram., ¶ 22. “For very age.”—Zech., viii, 4. “From its very greatness.”—Phil. Museum, i, 431. “In his then situation.”—Johnson’s Life of Goldsmith. “This was the then state of Popery.”—Id., Life of Dryden, p. 185. “The servant becomes the master of his once master.”—Shillitoe. “Time when is put in the ablative, time how long is put in the accusative.”—Adam’s Lat. Gram., p. 201; Gould’s, 198. “Nouns signifying the time when or how long, may be put in the objective case without a preposition.”—Wilbur and Livingston's Gram., p. 24. "I hear the far-off curfew sound."—Milton. "Far on the thither side."—Book of Thoughts, p. 58. "My hither way."—"Since my here remain in England."—Shak. "But short and seldom truce."—Fell. "An exceeding knave."—Pope. "According to my sometime promise."—Zenobia, i, 176. "Thine often infirmities."—Bible. "A far country."—Ib. "No wine,"—"No new thing,"—"No greater joy."—Ib. "Nothing else."—Blair. "Tomorrow noon."—Scott. "Calamity enough."—Tr. Sallust. "For thou only art holy."—Rev., xv, 4.

OBS. 4.—It is not my design to justify any uncouth substitution of adverbs for adjectives; nor do I affirm that all the foregoing examples are indisputably good English, though most of them are so; but merely, that the words, when they are thus used, are adjectives, and not adverbs. Lindley Murray, and his copyists, strongly condemn some of these expressions, and, by implication, most or all of them; but both he and they, as well as others, have repeatedly employed at least one of the very models they censure. They are too severe on all those which they specify. Their objections stand thus; "Such expressions as the following, though not destitute of authority, are very inelegant, and do not suit the idiom of our language; 'The then ministry,' for, 'the ministry of that time;' 'The above discourse,' for, 'the preceding discourse.'"—Murray's Gram., i, p. 198; Crombie's, 294; Ingersoll's, 206. "The following phrases are also exceptionable: 'The then ministry;' 'The above argument.'"—Kirkham's Gram., p. 190. "Adverbs used as adjectives, as, 'The above statement;' 'The then administration;' should be avoided."—Barnard's Gram., p. 285. "When and then must not be used for nouns and pronouns; thus, 'Since when,' 'since then,' 'the then ministry,' ought to be, 'Since which time,' 'since that time,' 'the ministry of that period.'"—Hiley's Gram., p. 96. Dr. Priestley, from whom Murray derived many of his critical remarks, noticed these expressions; and, (as I suppose,) approvingly; thus, "Adverbs are often put for adjectives, agreeably to the idiom of the Greek tongue: [as,] 'The action was amiss.'"—"The then ministry.'"—"The idea is alike in both."—Addison. "The above discourse."—Harris."—Priestley's Gram., p. 135. Dr. Johnson, as may be seen above, thought it not amiss to use then as Priestley here cites it; and for such a use of above, we may quote the objectors themselves: "To support the above construction."—Murray's Gram., i, p. 149; Ingersoll's, p. 238. "In all the above instances."—Mur., p. 202; Ing., 230. "To the above rule."—Mur., p. 270; Ing., 283. "The same as the above."—Mur., p. 66; Ing., 46. "In such instances as the above."—Mur., p. 24; Ing., 9; Kirkham, 23.*

OBS. 5.—When words of an adverbial character are used after the manner of nouns, they must be parsed as nouns, and not as adverbs; as, "The Son of God—was not yea and no, but in him was yea."—Bible. "For a great while to come."—Ib. "On this perhaps, this peradventure infamous for lies."—Young. "From the extremest upward of thine head."—Shak. "There are upwards of fifteen millions of inhabitants."—Murray's Key, 8vo, p. 266. "Information has been derived from upwards of two hundred volumes."—Worcester's Hist., p. v. "An eternal now does always last"—Cowley. "Discourse requires an animated no."—Cowper. "Their hearts no proud hereafter swelled."—Sprague. An adverb after a preposition is used substantively, and governed by the preposition; though perhaps it is not necessary to call it a common noun: as, “For upwards of thirteen years.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. xvi. “That thou mayst curse me them from thence.”—Numb., xxiii, 27. “Yet for once we’ll try.”—Dr. Franklin. But many take such terms together, calling them “adverbial phrases.” Allen says, “Two adverbs sometimes come together; as, ‘Thou hast kept the good wine until now.’”—Gram., p. 174. But until is here more properly a preposition, governing now.

* "Dr. Webster considers the use of then and above as ADNOUNS, [i. e., adjectives,] to be 'well authorized and very convenient;' as, the then ministry; the above remarks."—Felch's Comp. Gram., p. 108. Dr. Webster's remark is in the following words: "Then and above are often used as ATTRIBUTES: [i. e., adjectives; as,] the then ministry; the above remarks; nor would I prescribe this use. It is well authorized and very convenient."—Philos. Gram., p. 245; Improved Gram., p. 176. Of this use of then, Dr. Crombie has expressed a very different opinion: "Here then," says he, "the adverb equivalent to at that time, is solecistically employed as an adjective, agreeing with ministry. This error seems to gain ground; it should therefore be vigilantly opposed, and carefully avoided."—On Etym. and Synt., p. 405.

OBS. 6.—It is plain, that when words of an adverbial form are used either adjectively or substantively, they cannot be parsed by the foregoing rule, or explained as having the ordinary relation of adverbs; and if the unusual relation or character which they thus assume, be not thought sufficient to fix them in the rank of adjectives or nouns, the parser may describe them as adverbs used adjectively, or substantively, and apply the rule which their assumed construction requires. But let it be remembered, that adverbs, as such, neither relate to nouns, nor assume the nature of cases: but express the time, place, degree, or manner, of actions or qualities. In some instances in which their construction may seem not to be reconcilable with the common rule, there may be supposed an ellipsis of a verb or a participle:* as, “From Monday to Saturday inclusively.”—Webster’s Dict. Here, the Doctor ought to have used a comma after Saturday; for the adverb relates, not to that noun, but to the word reckoned, understood. “It was well said by Roscommon, ‘too faithfully is pedantically.’”—Com. Sch. Journal, i, 167. This saying I suppose to mean, “To do a thing too faithfully, is, to do it pedantically.” “And, [I say] truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned.”—Heb., xi, 15.

OBS. 7.—To abbreviate expressions, and give them vivacity, verbs of self-motion (such as go, come, rise, get, &c.) are sometimes suppressed, being suggested to the mind by an emphatic adverb, which seems to be put for the verb, but does in fact relate to it understood; as,

“I’ll hence to London, on a serious matter.”—Shak. Supply “go.”

“I’ll in. I’ll in. Follow your friend’s counsel. I’ll in”—Id. Supply “get.”

“Away, old man; give me thy hand; away.”—Id. Supply “come.”

“Love hath wings, and will away”—Waller. Supply “fly.”

“Up, up, Glentarkin! rouse thee, ho!”—Scott. Supply “spring.”

“Henry the Fifth is crowned; up, vanity!” Supply “stand.”

“Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence!”—Shak. Supply “fall,” and “get you.”

“But up, and enter now into full bliss.”—Milton. Supply “rise.”

OBS. 8.—We have, on some occasions, a singular way of expressing a transitive action imperatively, or emphatically, by adding the preposition with to an adverb of direction; as, up with it, down with it, in with it, out with it, over with it, away with it, and the like; in which construction, the adverb seems to be used elliptically as above, though the insertion of the verb would totally enervate or greatly alter the expression. Examples: “She up with her fist, and took him on the face.”—Sydney, in Joh. Dictionary. “Away with him!”—Acts, xxi, 36. “Away with such a fellow from the earth.”—Ib., xxii, 22. “The calling of assemblies I cannot away with”—Isaiah, i, 13. “Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse.”—Milton’s Comus. Ingersoll says, “Sometimes a whole phrase is used as an interjection, and we call such interjectional phrases: as, out upon him!—away with him!—Alas, what wonder! &c.”—Conversations on Gram., p. 79. This method of lumping together several different parts of speech under the notion of one, and calling the whole an “adverbial phrase,” a “substantive phrase,” or an “interjectional phrase,” is but a forced put, by which some grammarians would dodge certain difficulties which they know not how to meet. It is directly repugnant to the idea of parsing; for the parser ever deals with the parts of speech as such, and not with whole phrases in the lump. The foregoing adverbs when used imperatively, have some resemblance to interjections; but, in some of the examples above cited, they certainly are not used in this manner.

---

* W. Allen supposes, “An adverb sometimes qualifies a whole sentence: as, Unfortunately for the lovers of antiquity, no remains of Grecian paintings have been preserved.”—Elements of Eng. Gram., p. 173. But this example may be resolved thus: “It happens unfortunately for the lovers of antiquity, that no remains of Grecian paintings have been preserved.”

OBS. 9.—A conjunctive adverb usually relates to two verbs at the same time, and thus connects two clauses of a compound sentence; as, “And the rest will I set in order when I come,”—1 Cor., xi, 34. Here when is a conjunctive adverb of time, and relates to the two verbs will set and come; the meaning being, “And the rest will I set in order at the time at which I come.” This adverb when is often used erroneously in lieu of a nominative after is, to which construction of the word, such an interpretation as the foregoing would not be applicable; because the person means to tell, not when, but what, the thing is, of which he speaks: as, “Another cause of obscurity is when the structure of the sentence is too much complicated, or too artificial; or when the sense is too long suspended by parentheses.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 246. Here the conjunction that would be much better than when, but the sentence might advantageously spare them both; thus, “An other cause of obscurity is too much complication, too artificial a structure of the sentence, or too long a suspension of the sense by parenthesis.”

OBS. 10.—For the placing of adverbs, no definite general rule can be given; yet is there no other part of speech so liable to be misplaced. Those which relate to adjectives, or to other adverbs, with very few exceptions, immediately precede them; and those which belong to compound verbs, are commonly placed after the first auxiliary; or, if they be emphatical, after the whole verb. Those which relate to simple verbs, or to simple participles, are placed sometimes before and sometimes after them. Examples are so very common, I shall cite but one: “A man may, in respect to grammatical purity, speak unexceptionably, and yet speak obscurely, or ambiguously; and though we cannot say, that a man may speak properly, and at the same time speak unintelligibly, yet this last case falls more naturally to be considered as an offence against perspicuity, than as a violation of propriety.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 239.

OBS. 11.—Of the infinitive verb and its preposition to, some grammarians say, that they must never be separated by an adverb. It is true, that the adverb is, in general, more elegantly placed before the preposition than after it; but, possibly, the latter position of it may sometimes contribute to perspicuity, which is more essential than elegance: as, “If any man refuse so to implore, and to so receive pardon, let him die the death.”—Fuller, on the Gospel, p. 209. The latter word so, if placed like the former, might possibly be understood in a different sense from what it now bears. But perhaps it would be better to say, “If any man refuse so to implore, and on such terms to receive pardon, let him die the death.” “Honour teaches us properly to respect ourselves.”—Murray’s Key, ii, 252. Here it is not quite clear, to which verb the adverb “properly” relates. Some change of the expression is therefore needful. The right to place an adverb sometimes between to and its verb, should, I think, be conceded to the poets: as,

“Who dared to nobly stem tyrannic pride.”—BURNS: C. Sat. N.

OBS. 12.—The adverb no is used independently, only when it is equivalent to a whole sentence. This word is sometimes an adverb of degree; and as such it has this peculiarity, that it can relate only to comparatives: as, “No more,”—“No better,”—“No greater,”—“No sooner.” When no is set before a noun, it is clearly an adjective, corresponding to the Latin nullus; as, “No clouds, no vapours intervene.”—Dyer. Dr. Johnson, with no great accuracy, remarks, “It seems an adjective in these phrases, no longer, no more, no where; though sometimes it may be so commodiously changed to not, that it seems an adverb; as, ‘The days are yet no shorter.’”—Quarto Dict. And his first example of what he calls the “adverb NO” is this: “‘Our courteous Antony, Whom ne’er the word of no woman heard speak.’ SHAKESPEARE.”—Ibid. Dr. Webster says, “When it precedes where, as in no where, it may be considered as adverbial, though originally an adjective.”—Octavo Dict. The truth is, that no is an adverb, whenever it relates to an adjective; an adjective, whenever it relates to a noun; and a noun, whenever it takes the relation of a case. Thus, in what Johnson cites from Shakspeare, it is a noun, and not an adverb; for the meaning is, that a woman never heard Antony speak the word of no—that is, of negation. And there ought to be a comma after this word, to make the text intelligible. To read it thus: “the word of no woman,” makes no an adjective. So, to say, “There are no abler critics than these,” is a very different thing from saying, “There are critics no abler than these;” because no is an adjective in the former sentence, and an adverb in the latter. Somewhere, nowhere, anywhere, else-where, and everywhere, are adverbs of place, each of which is composed of the noun where and an adjective; and it is absurd to write a part of them as compound words, and the rest as phrases, as many authors do.

OBS. 13.—In some languages, the more negatives one crowds into a sentence, the stronger is the negation; and this appears to have been formerly the case in English, or in what was anciently the language of Britain: as, “He never yet no vilanie ne sayde in alle his lif unto no manere wight.”—Chaucer. “Ne I ne wol non reherce, yef that I may.”—Id. “Give not me counsel; nor let no comforter delight mine ear.”—Shakspeare. “She cannot love, nor take no shape nor project of affection.”—Id. Among people of education, this manner of expression has now become wholly obsolete; though it still prevails, to some extent, in the conversation of the vulgar. It is to be observed, however, that the repetition of an independent negative word or clause yet strengthens the negation; as, “No, no, no.”—“No, never.”—“No, not for an hour.”—Gal., ii, 5. “There is none righteous, no, not one.”—Rom., iii, 10. But two negatives in the same clause, if they have any bearing on each other, destroy the negation, and render the meaning weakly affirmative; as, “Nor did they not perceive their evil plight.”—Milton. That is, they did perceive it. “His language, though inelegant, is not ungrammatical,” that is, it is grammatical.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 198. The term not only, or not merely, being a correspondent to but or but also, may be followed by an other negative without this effect, because the two negative words have no immediate bearing on each other; as, “Your brother is not only not present, and not assisting in prosecuting your injuries, but is now actually with Verres.”—Duncan’s Cicero, p. 19. “In the latter we have not merely nothing, to denote what the point should be; but no indication, that any point at all is wanting.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 373. So the word nothing, when taken positively for nonentity, or that which does not exist, may be followed by an other negative; as,

“First, seat him somewhere, and derive his race,
Or else conclude that nothing has no place.”—Dryden, p. 95.

OBS. 14.—The common rule of our grammars, “Two negatives, in English, destroy each other, or are equivalent to an affirmative,” is far from being true of all possible examples. A sort of informal exception to it, (which is mostly confined to conversation,) is made by a familiar transfer of the word neither from the beginning of the clause to the end of it; as, “But here is no notice taken of that neither”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 336. That is, “But neither is any notice here taken of that.” Indeed a negation may be repeated, by the same word or others, as often as we please, if no two of the terms in particular contradict each other; as, “He will never consent, not he, no, never, nor I neither.” “He will not have time, no, nor capacity neither.”—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 103. “Many terms and idioms may be common, which, nevertheless, have not the general sanction, no, nor even the sanction of those that use them.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 160; Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 358. And as to the equivalence spoken of in the same rule, such an expression as, “He did not say nothing,” is in fact only a vulgar solecism, take it as you will; whether for, “He did not say anything,” or for, “He did say something.” The latter indeed is what the contradiction amounts to; but double negatives must be shunned, whenever they seem like blunders. The following examples have, for this reason, been thought objectionable; though Allen says, “Two negatives destroy each other, or elegantly form an affirmation.”—Gram., p. 174.

—————“Nor knew I not To be both will and deed created free.”—Milton, P. L., B. v., l. 548.
“Nor doth the moon no nourishment exhale
From her moist continent to higher orbs.”—Ib., B. v, l. 421.

OBS. 15.—Under the head of double negatives, there appears in our grammars a dispute of some importance, concerning the adoption of or or nor, when any other negative than neither or nor occurs in the preceding clause or phrase: as, “We will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image.”—Dan., iii., 18. “Ye have no portion, nor right, nor memorial in Jerusalem.”—Neh., ii, 20. “There is no painsworthy difficulty nor dispute about them.”—Horne Tooke, Div., Vol. i, p. 43. “So as not to cloud that principal object, nor to bury it.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 115; Murray’s Gram., p. 322. “He did not mention Leonora, nor her father’s death.”—Murray’s Key, p. 264. “Thou canst not tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth.”—Ib., p. 215. The form of this text, in John iii, 8th. is—“But canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth;” which Murray inserted in his exercises as bad English. I do not see that the copulative and is here ungrammatical; but if we prefer a disjunctive, ought it not to be or rather than nor? It appears to be the opinion of some, that in ail these examples, and in similar instances innumerable, nor only is proper. Others suppose, that or only is justifiable; and others again, that either or or nor is perfectly correct. Thus grammar, or what should be grammar, differs in the hands of different men! The principle to be settled here, must determine the correctness or incorrectness of a vast number of very common expressions. I imagine that none of these opinions is warrantable, if taken in all that extent to which each of them has been, or may be, carried.

OBS. 16.—It was observed by Priestley, and after him by Lindley Murray, from whom others again have copied the remark: “Sometimes the particles or and nor, may, either of them, be used with nearly equal propriety; [as,] ‘The king, whose character was not sufficiently vigorous, nor decisive, assented to the measure.’—Hume. Or would perhaps have been better, but nor seems to repeat the negation in the former part of the sentence, and therefore gives more emphasis to the expression.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 138; Murray’s, i, 212; Ingersoll’s, 268; R. C. Smith’s, 177. The conjunction or might doubtless have been used in this sentence, but not with the same meaning that is now conveyed; for, if that connective had been employed, the adjective decisive would have been qualified by the adverb sufficiently, and would have seemed only an alternative for the former epithet, vigorous. As the text now stands, it not only implies a distinction between vigour of character and decision of character, but denies the latter to the king absolutely, the former, with qualification. If the author had meant to suggest such a distinction, and also to qualify his denial of both, he ought to have said—“not sufficiently vigorous, nor sufficiently decisive.” With this meaning, however, he might have used neither for not; or with the former, he might have used or for nor, had he transposed the terms—“was not decisive, or sufficiently vigorous.”

OBS. 17.—In the tenth edition of John Burn’s Practical Grammar, published at Glasgow, in 1810, are the following suggestions: “It is not uncommon to find the conjunctions or and nor used indiscriminately; but if there be any real distinction in the proper application of them, it is to be wished that it were settled. It is attempted thus:—Let the conjunction or be used simply to connect the members of a sentence, or to mark distribution, opposition, or choice, without any preceding negative particle; and nor to mark the subsequent part of a negative sentence, with some negative particle in the preceding part of it. Examples of OR: ‘Recreation of one kind or other is absolutely necessary to relieve the body or mind from too constant attention to labour or study.’—‘After this life, succeeds a state of rewards or punishments.’—‘Shall I come to you with a rod, or in love?’ Examples of NOR: ‘Let no man be too confident, nor too diffident of his own abilities.’—‘Never calumniate any man, nor give the least encouragement to calumniators.’—‘There is not a Christian duty to which providence has not annexed a blessing, nor any affliction for which a remedy is not provided.’ If the above distinction be just, the following passage seems to be faulty:

‘Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of ev’n or morn,
Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer’s rose,
Or flocks, or herds, or human face divine.’

Milton, P. L., B. iii, l. 40.”—Burn’s Gr., p. 108.

OBS. 18.—T. O. Churchill, whose Grammar first appeared in London in 1823, treats this matter thus: “As or answers to either, nor, a compound of not or [ne or] by contraction, answers to neither, a similar compound of not either [ne either]. The latter however does not constitute that double use of the negative, in which one, agreeably to the principles of philosophical grammar, destroys the other; for a part of the first word, neither, cannot be understood before the second, nor: and for the same reason a part of it could not be understood before or, which is sometimes improperly used in the second clause; while the whole of it, neither, would be obviously improper before or. On the other hand, when not is used in the first clause, nor is improper in the second; since it would involve the impropriety of understanding not before a compound of not [or ne] with or. ‘I shall not attempt to convince, nor to persuade you.—What will you not attempt?—To convince, nor to persuade you.’ The impropriety of nor in this answer is clear: but the answer should certainly repeat the words not heard, or not understood.”—Churchill’s New Gram., p. 330.

OBS. 19.—“It is probable, that the use of nor after not has been introduced, in consequence of such improprieties as the following: ‘The injustice of inflicting death for crimes, when not of the most heinous nature, or attended with extenuating circumstances.’ Here it is obviously not the intention of the writer, to understand the negative in the last clause: and, if this were good English, it would be not merely allowable to employ nor after not, to show the subsequent clause to be negative as well as the preceding, but it would always be necessary. In fact, however, the sentence quoted is faulty, in not repeating the adverb when in the last clause; ‘or when attended:’ which would preclude the negative from being understood in it; for, if an adverb, conjunction, or auxiliary verb, preceding a negative, be understood in the succeeding clause, the negative is understood also; if it be repeated, the negative must be repeated likewise, or the clause becomes affirmative.”—Ib., p. 330.

OBS. 20.—This author, proceeding with his remarks, suggests forms of correction for several other common modes of expression, which he conceives to be erroneous. For the information of the student, I shall briefly notice a little further the chief points of his criticism, though he teaches some principles which I have not thought it necessary always to observe in writing. “And seemed not to understand ceremony, or to despise it.’ Goldsmith. Here either ought to be inserted before not. ‘It is not the business of virtue, to extirpate the affections of the mind, but to regulate them.’ Addison. The sentence ought to have been: ‘It is the business of virtue, not to extirpate the affections of the mind, but to regulate them.’ ‘I do not think, that he was averse to the office; nor do I believe, that it was unsuited to him.’ How much better to say: ‘I do not think, that he was averse to the office, or that it was unsuited to him!’ For the same reason nor cannot follow never, the negative in the first clause affecting all the rest.”—Ib. p. 332. “Nor is sometimes used improperly after no: [as,] ‘I humbly however trust in God, that I have hazarded no conjecture, nor have given any explanation of obscure points, inconsistent with the general sense of Scripture, which must be our guide in all dubious passages.’ Gilpin. It ought to be: ‘and have given no explanation;’ or, ‘I have neither hazarded any conjecture, nor given any explanation.’ The use of or after neither is as common, as that of nor after no or not.* ‘Neither the pencil or poetry are adequate.’ Coxe. Properly, ‘Neither the pencil nor poetry is adequate.’ ‘The vow of poverty allowed the Jesuits individually, to have no idea of wealth.’ Dornford. We cannot allow a nonentity. It should be: ‘did not allow, to have any idea.’”—Ib., p. 333.

OBS. 21.—Thus we see that Churchill wholly and positively condemns nor after not, no, or never, while Burn totally disapproves of or, under the same circumstances. Both of these critics are wrong, because each carries his point too far; and yet it may not be right, to suppose both particles to be often equally good. Undoubtedly, a negation may be repeated in English without impropriety, and that in several different ways: as, “There is no living, none, if Bertram be away.”—Beauties of Shak., p. 3. “Great men are not always wise, neither do the aged [always] understand judgement.”—Job, xxxii, 9. “Will he esteem thy riches? no, not gold, nor all the forces of strength.”—Job, xxxiv. 19. Some sentences, too, require or, and others nor, even when a negative occurs in a preceding clause; as, “There was none of you that convinced Job, or that answered his words.”—Job, xxxii, 12. “How much less to him that accepteth not the persons of princes nor regardeth the rich

---

* This assertion of Churchill’s is very far from the truth. I am confident that the latter construction occurs, even among reputable authors, ten times as often as the former can be found in any English books.—G. BROWN.

more than the poor.”—Job, xxxiv, 19. “This day is holy unto the Lord your God; mourn not, nor weep.”—Neh., viii, 9. “Men’s behaviour should be like their apparel, not too straight or point-de-vise, but free for exercise.”—Ld. Bacon. Again, the mere repetition of a simple negative is, on some occasions, more agreeable than the insertion of any connective; as, “There is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves.”—Job, xxxiv, 22. Better: “There is no darkness, no shadow of death, wherein the workers of iniquity may hide themselves.” “No place nor any object appears to him void of beauty.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 255. Better: “No place, no object, appears to him void of beauty.” That passage from Milton which Burn supposes to be faulty, and that expression of Addison’s which Churchill dislikes, are, in my opinion, not incorrect as they stand; though, doubtless, the latter admits of the variation proposed. In the former, too, or may twice be changed to nor, where the following nouns are nominatives; but to change it throughout, would not be well, because the other nouns are objectives governed by of:

“Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, nor the sweet approach of ev’n or morn,
Nor sight of vernal bloom, or summer’s rose,
Or flocks, or herds, or human face divine.”

OBS. 22.—Ever and never are directly opposite to each other in sense, and yet they are very frequently confounded and misapplied, and that by highly respectable writers; as, “Seldom, or never can we expect,” &c.—Blair’s Lectures, p. 305. “And seldom, or ever, did any one rise, &c.”—Ib., p. 272. “Seldom, or never, is* there more than one accented syllable in any English word.”—Ib., p. 329. “Which that of the present seldom or ever is understood to be.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of Lang., Vol. ii, p. 120. Here never is right, and ever is wrong. It is time, that is here spoken of; and the affirmative ever, meaning always, or at any time, in stead of being a fit alternative for seldom, makes nonsense of the sentence, and violates the rule respecting the order and fitness of time: unless we change or to if, and say, “seldom, if ever.” But in sentences like the following, the adverb appears to express, not time, but degree; and for the latter sense ever is preferable to never, because the degree ought to be possible, rather than impossible: “Ever so little of the spirit of martyrdom is always a more favourable indication to civilization, than ever so much dexterity of party management, or ever so turbulent protestation of immaculate patriotism.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 411. “Now let man reflect but never so little on himself.”—Burlamaqui, on Law, p. 29. “Which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely.”—Ps., lviii, 5. The phrase ever so, (which ought, I think, to be written as one word,) is now a very common expression to signify in whatsoever degree; as, “*evers*o little,”—“*evers*o much,”—“*evers*o wise,”—“*evers*o wisely.” And it is manifestly this, and not time, that is intended by the false phraseology above;—“a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accused, I think with justice, of solecism. * * * It can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis.”—Johnson’s Dict., w. Never.

OBS. 23.—Dr. Lowth seconds this opinion of Johnson, respecting the phrase, “never so wisely,” and says, “It should be, ‘ever so wisely;’ that is, ‘how wisely soever.’” To which he adds an other example somewhat different: “‘Besides, a slave would not have been admitted into that society, had he had never such opportunities.’ Bentley.”—Lowth’s * Should not the Doctor have said, “are there more,” since “more than one” must needs be plural? See Obs. 10th on Rule 17th.

Gram., p. 109. This should be, “had he had everso excellent opportunities.” But Churchill, mistaking the common explanation of the meaning of everso for the manner of parsing or resolving it, questions the propriety of the term, and thinks it easier to defend the old phrase never so; in which he supposes never to be an adverb of time, and not to relate to so, which is an adverb of degree; saying, “Be it never so true,’ is resolvable into, ‘Be it so true, as never any thing was.’ * ‘I have had never so much trouble on this occasion,’ may be resolved into, ‘I have never had so much trouble, as on this occasion:’ while, ‘I have had ever so much trouble on this occasion, cannot be resolved, without supplying some very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis indeed.”—New Gram., p. 337. Why not? I see no occasion at all for supposing any ellipsis. Ever is here an adverb of degree, and relates to so; or, if we take everso as one word, this too is an adverb of degree, and relates to much: because the meaning is—“everso much trouble.” But the other phraseology, even as it stands in Churchill’s explanations, is a solecism still; nor can any resolution which supposes never to be here an adverb of time, be otherwise. We cannot call that a grammatical resolution, which makes a different sense from that which the writer intended: as, “A slave would not have been admitted into that society, had he never had such opportunities.” This would be Churchill’s interpretation, but it is very unlike what Bentley says above. So, ‘I have never had so much trouble,’ and, ‘I have had everso much trouble,’ are very different assertions.

OBS. 24.—On the word never, Dr. Johnson remarks thus: “It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective, [meaning,] not any; but in reality it is not ever. [as,] ‘He answered him to never a word.’ MATTHEW, xxvii, 14.”—Quarto Dict. This mode of expression was formerly very common, and a contracted form of it is still frequently heard among the vulgar: as, “Because he’d ne’er an other tub.”—Hudibras, p. 102. That is, “Because he had no other tub.” “Letter nor line know I never a one.”—Scott’s Lay of L. M., p. 27. This is what the common people pronounce “ne’er a one,” and use in stead of neither or no one. In like manner they contract ever a one into “e’er a one,” by which they mean either or any one. These phrases are the same that somebody—(I believe it is Smith, in his Inductive Grammar—) has ignorantly written “ary one” and “nary one” calling them vulgarisms.† Under this mode of spelling, the critic had an undoubted right to think the terms

* This degree of truth is impossible, and therefore not justly supposable. We have also a late American grammarian who gives a similar interpretation: “‘Though never so justly deserving of it.’ Comber. Never is here an emphatic adverb; as if it were said, so justly as was never. Though well authorized, it is disapproved by most grammarians of the present day; and the word ever is used instead of never.”—Felch’s Comp. Gram., p. 107. The text here cited is not necessarily bad English as it stands; but, if the commenter has not mistaken its meaning, as well as its construction, it ought certainly to be, “Though everso justly deserving of it.”—“So justly as was never,” is a positive degree that is not imaginable; and what is this but an absurdity?

† Since this remark was written, I have read an other grammar, (that of the “Rev. Charles Adams,”) in which the author sets down among “the more frequent improprieties committed, in conversation, ‘Ary one’ for either, and ‘nary one’ for neither.”—Adams’s System of Gram., p. 116. Eli Gilbert too betrays the same ignorance. Among his “Improper Pronunciations” he puts down “Nary” and “Ary” and for “Corrections” of them, gives “neither” and “either.”—Gilbert’s Catechetical Gram., p. 128. But these latter terms, either and neither, are applicable only to one of two things, and cannot be used where many are spoken of; as, “Stealing her soul with many vows of faith, And ne’er a true one.”—Shakspeare.

What sense would there be in expounding this to mean, “And neither a true one?” So some men both write and interpret their mother tongue erroneously through ignorance. But these authors condemn the errors which they here falsely suppose to be common. What is yet more strange, no less a critic than Prof. William C. Fowler, has lately exhibited, without disapprobation, one of these literary blunders, with sundry localisms, (often descending to slang,) which, he says, are mentioned by “Mr. Bartlett, in his valuable dictionary [Dictionary] of Americanisms.” The brief example, which may doubtless be understood to speak for both phrases and both authors, is this: “ARY = either.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, N. Y., 1850, p. 92.

unauthorized! In the compounds of whoever or whoe'er, whichever or whiche'er, whatever or whate'er, the word ever or e'er, which formerly stood separate, appears to be an adjective, rather than an adverb; though, by becoming part of the pronoun, it has now technically ceased to be either.

OBS. 25.—The same may be said of soever or soe'er, which is considered as only a part of an other word even when it is written separately; as, “On which side soever I cast my eyes.” In Mark, iii, 28th, wherewithsoever is commonly printed as two words; but Alger, in his Pronouncing Bible, more properly makes it one. Dr. Webster, in his grammars, calls soever a word; but, in his dictionaries, he does not define it as such. “The word soever may be interposed between the attribute and the name; ‘how clear soever this idea of infinity,’—‘how remote soever it may seem.’—LOCKE.”—Webster’s Philosophical Gram., p. 154; Improved Gram., p. 107. “SOEVER, so and ever, found in compounds, as in whosoever, whatsoever, wheresoever. See these words.”—Webster’s Dict., 8vo.

OBS. 26.—The word only, (i.e., onely, or onelike,) when it relates to a noun or a pronoun, is a definitive adjective, meaning single, alone, exclusive of others; as, “The only man,”—“The only men,”—“Man only,”—“Men only,”—“He only,”—“They only.” When it relates to a verb or a participle, it is an adverb of manner, and means simply, singly, merely, barely; as, “We fancy that we hate flattery, when we only hate the manner of it.”—Art of Thinking, p. 38. “A disinterested love of one’s country can only subsist in small republics.”—Ib., p. 56. When it stands at the head of a clause, it is commonly a connective word, equivalent to but, or except that; in which sense, it must be called a conjunction, or at least a conjunctive adverb, which is nearly the same thing; as, “Only they would that we should remember the poor.”—Gal., ii, 10. “For these signs are prepositions, only they are of more constant use than the rest.”—Ward’s Gram., p. 129.

OBS. 27.—Among our grammarians, the word “only” often passes for an adverb, when it is in fact an adjective. Such a mistake in this single word, has led Churchill to say of the adverb in general, “It’s place is for the most part before adjectives, after nouns, and after verbs;” &c.—New Gram., p. 147. But, properly, the placing of adverbs has nothing to do with “nouns,” because adverbs do not relate to nouns. In this author’s example, “His arm only was bare,” there is no adverb; and, where he afterwards speaks of the latitude allowable in the placing of adverbs, alleging, “It is indifferent whether we say, ‘He bared his arm only,’ or, ‘He bared only his arm,’” the word only is an adjective, in one instance, if not in both. With this writer, and some others, the syntax of an adverb centres mainly in the suggestion, that, “It’s propriety and force depend on it’s position.”—Ib., p. 147. Illustration: “Thus people commonly say; ‘I only spoke three words:’ which properly implies, that I, and no other person, spoke three words: when the intention of the speaker requires: ‘I spoke only three words; that is, no more than three words.”—Ib., p. 327. One might just as well say, “I spoke three words only.” But the interpretation above is hypercritical, and contrary to that which the author himself gives in his note on the other example, thus: “Any other situation of the adverb would make a difference. ‘He only bared his arm;’ would imply, that he did nothing more than bare his arm. ‘Only he bared his arm;’ must refer to a preceding part of the sentence, stating something, to which the act of baring his arm was an exception; as, ‘He did it in the same manner, only he bared his arm.’ If only were placed immediately before arm; as, ‘He bared his only arm,’ it would be an adjective, and signify, that he had but one arm.”—Ib., p. 328. Now are not, “I only spoke three words,” and, “He only bared his arm,” analogous expressions? Is not the former as good English as the latter? Only, in both, is most naturally conceived to belong to the verb; but either may be read in such a manner as to make it an adjective belonging to the pronoun.

OBS. 28.—The term not but is equivalent to two negatives that make an affirmative; as, “Not but that it is a wide place.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 89. “Non quo non latus locus sit.”—Cic. Ac., iv, 12. It has already been stated, that cannot but is equal to must; as, “It is an affection which cannot but be productive of some distress.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 461. It seems questionable, whether but is not here an adverb, rather than a conjunction. However this may be, by the customary (but faulty) omission of the negative before but, in some other sentences, that conjunction has acquired the adverbial sense of only; and it may, when used with that signification, be called an adverb. Thus, the text, “He hath not grieved me but in part.” (2 Cor., ii, 5,) might drop the negative not, and still convey the same meaning: “He hath grieved me but in part,” i.e., “only in part.” In the following examples, too, but appears to be an adverb, like only: “Things but slightly connected should not be crowded into one sentence.”—Murray’s Octavo Gram., Index. “The assertion, however, serves but to show their ignorance.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 96.

“Reason itself but gives it edge and power.”—Pope.

“Born but to die, and reasoning but to err.”—Id.

OBS. 29.—In some constructions of the word but, there is a remarkable ambiguity; as, “There cannot be but one capital musical pause in a line.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 92. “A line admits but one capital pause.”—Ibid. Thus does a great critic, in the same paragraph, palpably contradict himself, and not perceive it. Both expressions are equivocal. He ought rather to have said: “A line admits no more than one capital pause.”—“There cannot be more than one capital musical pause in a line.” Some would say—“admits only one”—“there can be only one.” But here, too, is some ambiguity; because only may relate either to one, or to the preceding verb. The use of only for but or except that, is not noticed by our lexicographers; nor is it, in my opinion, a practice much to be commended, though often adopted by men that pretend to write grammatically: as, “Interrogative pronouns are the same as relative, ONLY their antecedents cannot be determined till the answer is given to the question.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 16. “A diphthong is always long; as, Aurum, Cæsar, &c. ONLY præ, in composition before a vowel is commonly short.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 254; Gould’s, 246.

OBS. 30.—It is said by some grammarians, that, “The adverb there is often used as an expletive, or as a word that adds nothing to the sense; in which case, it precedes the verb and the nominative; as, ‘There is a person at the door.’”—Murray’s Gram., p. 197; Ingersoll’s, 205; Greenleaf’s, 33; Nixon’s Parser, p. 53. It is true, that in our language the word there is thus used idiomatically, as an introductory term, when we tell what is taking, or has taken, place; but still it is a regular adverb of place, and relates to the verb agreeably to the common rule for adverbs. In some instances it is even repeated in the same sentence, because, in its introductory sense, it is always unemphatical; as, “Because there was pasture there for their flocks.”—1 Chron., iv, 41. “If there be indistinctness or disorder there, we can have no success.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 271. “There, there are schools adapted to every age.”—Woodbridge, Lit. Conv., p. 78. The import of the word is more definite, when emphasis is laid upon it; but this is no good reason for saying, with Dr. Webster, that it is “without signification,” when it is without emphasis; or, with Dr.

Priestley, that it “seems to have no meaning whatever, except it be thought to give a small degree of emphasis.”—Rudiments of E. Gram., p. 135.

OBS. 31.—The noun place itself is just as loose and variable in its meaning as the adverb there. For example; “There is never any difference,” i.e., “No difference ever takes place.” Shall we say that “place,” in this sense, is not a noun of place? To take place, is, to occur somewhere, or anywhere; and the unemphatic word there is but as indefinite in respect to place, as these other adverbs of place, or as the noun itself. S. B. Goodenow accounts it a great error, to say that there is an adverb of place, when it is thus indefinite; and he chooses to call it an “indefinite pronoun,” as, “What is there here?”—“There is no peace.”—“What need was there of it?” See his Gram., p. 3 and p. 11. In treating of the various classes of adverbs, I have admitted and shown, that here, there, and where, have sometimes the nature of pronouns, especially in such compounds as hereof, thereof, whereof; but in this instance, I see not what advantage there is in calling there a “pronoun:” we have just as much reason to call here and where pronouns—and that, perhaps, on all occasions. Barnard says, “In the sentence, ‘There is one glory of the sun,’ &c., the adverb there qualifies the verb is, and seems to have the force of an affirmation, like truly”—Analytical Gram., p. 234. But an adverb of the latter kind may be used with the word there, and I perceive no particular similarity between them: as, “Verily there is a reward for the righteous.”—Psal., lviii, 11. “Truly there is a glory of the sun.”

OBS. 32.—There is a vulgar error of substituting the adverb most for almost, as in the phrases, “most all,”—“most anywhere,”—“most every day,”—which we sometimes hear for “almost all,”—“almost anywhere,”—“almost every day.” The fault is gross, and chiefly colloquial, but it is sometimes met with in books; as, “But thinking he had replied most too rashly, he said, ‘I won’t answer your question.’”—Wagstaff’s History of Friends, Vol. i, p. 207.

NOTES TO RULE XXI.

NOTE I.—Adverbs must be placed in that position which will render the sentence the most perspicuous and agreeable. Example of error: “We are in no hazard of mistaking the sense of the author, though every word which he uses be not precise and exact.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 95; Jamieson’s, 66. Murray says,—“though every word which he uses is not precise and exact.”—Octavo Gram., p. 302. Better:—“though not every word which he uses, is precise and exact.”

NOTE II.—Adverbs should not be needlessly used for adjectives; nor should they be employed when quality is to be expressed, and not manner: as, “That the now copies of the original text are entire.”—S. Fisher. Say, “the present copies,” or, “the existing copies.” “The arrows of calumny fall harmlessly at the feet of virtue.”—Murray’s Key, p. 167; Merchant’s Gram., 186; Ingersoll’s, 10; Kirkham’s, 24. Say, “fall harmless,” as in this example: “The impending black cloud, which is regarded with so much dread, may pass by harmless.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 262.

NOTE III.—With a verb of motion, most grammarians prefer hither, thither, and whither, to here, there, and where, which are in common use, and perhaps allowable, though not so good; as, “Come hither, Charles,”—or, “Come here.”

NOTE IV.—“To the adverbs hence, thence, and whence, the preposition from is frequently (though not with strict propriety) prefixed; as, from hence, from whence.”—See W. Allen’s Gram., p. 174. Some critics, however, think this construction allowable, notwithstanding the former word is implied in the latter. See Priestley’s Gram., p. 134; and L. Murray’s, p. 198. It is seldom elegant to use any word needlessly.

NOTE V.—The adverb how should not be used before the conjunction that, nor in stead of it; as, “He said how he would go.”—“Ye see how that not many wise men are called.” Expunge how. This is a vulgar error. Somewhat similar is the use of how for lest or that not; as, “Be cautious how you offend him, i.e., that you do not offend him.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 175.

NOTE VI.—The adverb when, while, or where, is not fit to follow the verb is in a definition, or to introduce a clause taken substantively; because it expresses identity, not of being, but of time or place: as, “Concord, is when one word agrees with another in some accidents.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 151; Gould’s, 155. Say, “Concord is the agreement of one word with an other in some accident or accidents.”

NOTE VII.—The adverb no should not be used with reference to a verb or a participle. Such expressions as, “Tell me whether you will go or no,” are therefore improper: no should be not; because the verb go is understood after it. The meaning is, “Tell me whether you will go or will not go,” but nobody would think of saying, “Whether you will go or no go.”

NOTE VIII.—A negation, in English, admits but one negative word; because two negatives in the same clause, usually contradict each other, and make the meaning affirmative. The following example is therefore ungrammatical: “For my part, I love him not, nor hate him not.”—Beauties of Shakspeare, p. 16. Expunge the last not, or else change nor to and.

NOTE IX.—The words ever and never should be carefully distinguished according to their sense, and not confounded with each other in their application. Example: “The Lord reigneth, be the earth never so unquiet.”—Experience of St. Paul, p. 195. Here, I suppose, the sense to require eversó, an adverb of degree: “Be the earth eversó unquiet.” That is,—“unquiet in whatever degree.”

NOTE X.—Adverbs that end in ly, are in general preferable to those forms which, for want of this distinction, may seem like adjectives misapplied. Example: “There would be scarce any such thing in nature as a folio.”—Addison. Better:—“scarcely.”

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XXI.

EXAMPLES UNDER NOTE I.—THE PLACING OF ADVERBS.

“All that is favoured by good use, is not proper to be retained.”—Murray’s Gram., ii, p. 296.

[FORMULE.—Not proper, because the adverb not is not put in the most suitable place. But, according to Note 1st under Rule 21st, “Adverbs must be placed in that position which will render the sentence the most perspicuous and agreeable.” The sentence will be improved by placing not before all; thus, “Not all that is favoured by good use, is proper to be retained.”]

“Every thing favoured by good use, [is] not on that account worthy to be retained.”—Ib., i, 369; Campbell’s Rhet., p. 179. “Most men dream, but all do not.”—Beattie’s Moral Science, i, 72. “By hasty composition, we shall acquire certainly a very bad style.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 191. “The comparisons are short, touching on one point only of resemblance.”—Ib., p. 416. “Having had once some considerable object set before us.”—Ib., p. 116. “The positive seems improperly to be called a degree.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 69; Gould’s, 68. “In some phrases the genitive is only used.”—Adam, 159; Gould, 161. “This blunder is said actually to have occurred.”—Smith’s Inductive Gram., p. 5. “But every man is not called James, nor every woman Mary.”—Buchanan’s Gram., p. 15. “Crotchets are employed for the same purpose nearly as the parenthesis.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 167. “There is still a greater impropriety in a double comparative.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 78. “We have often occasion to speak of time.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 39. “The following sentence cannot be possibly understood.”—Ib., p. 104. “The words must be generally separated from the context.”—Comly’s Gram., p. 155. “Words ending in ator have the accent generally on the penultimate.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 239. “The learned languages, with respect to voices, moods, and tenses, are, in general, differently constructed from the English tongue.”—Ib., i, 101. “Adverbs seem originally to have been contrived to express compendiously in one word, what must otherwise have required two or more.”—Ib., i, 114. “But it is only so, when the expression can be converted into the regular form of the possessive case.”—Ib., i, 174. “Enter, (says he) boldly, for here too there are gods.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 8. “For none work for ever so little a pittance that some cannot be found to work for less.”—Sedgwick’s Economy, p. 190. “For sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again.”—Luke, vi, 34. “They must be viewed exactly in the same light.”—Murray’s Gram., ii, 24. “If he does but speak to display his abilities, he is unworthy of attention.”—Ib., Key, ii, 207.

UNDER NOTE II.—ADVERBS FOR ADJECTIVES.

“Motion upwards is commonly more agreeable than motion downwards.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 48. “There are but two ways possibly of justification before God.”—Dr. Cox, on Quakerism, p. 413. “This construction sounds rather harshly.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 194; Ingersoll’s, 199. “A clear conception in the mind of the learner, of regularly and well-formed letters.”—Com. School Journal, i, 66. “He was a great hearer of * * * Attalus, Sotion, Papirius, Fabianus, of whom he makes often mention.”—Seneca’s Morals, p. 11. “It is only the Often doing of a thing that makes it a Custom.”—Divine Right of Tythes, p. 72. “Because W. R. takes oft occasion to insinuate his jealousies of persons and things.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 570. “Yet often touching will wear gold.”—Beauties of Shak., p. 18. “Uneducated persons frequently use an adjective, when they ought to use an adverb: as, ‘The country looks beautiful,’ instead of beautifully.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 84. “The adjective is put absolutely, or without its substantive.”—Ash’s Gram., p. 57. “A noun or pronoun in the second person, may be put absolutely in the nominative case.”—Harrison’s Gram., p. 45. “A noun or pronoun, when put absolutely with a participle,” &c.—Ib., p. 44; Jaudon’s Gram., 108. “A verb in the infinitive mood absolute, stands independently of the remaining part of the sentence.”—Wilbur and Livingston’s Gram., p. 24. “At my return lately into England, I met a book intituled: ‘The Iron Age.’”—Cowley’s Preface, p. v. “But he can discover no better foundation for any of them, than the practice merely of Homer and Virgil.”—Kames, El. of Criticism, Introd., p. xxv.

UNDER NOTE III—HERE FOR HITHER, &amp;C.

“It is reported that the governour will come here to-morrow.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 196. “It has been reported that the governour will come here to-morrow.”—ib., Key, p. 227. “To catch a prospect of that lovely land where his steps are tending.”—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 244. “Plautus makes one of his characters ask another where he is going with that Vulcan shut up in a horn; that is, with a lanthorn in his hand.”—Adams’s Rhet. ii, 331. “When we left Cambridge, we intended to return there in a few days.”—Anonym. “Duncan comes here to-night.”—Shak., Macbeth. “They talked of returning here last week.”—J. M. Putnam’s Gram., p. 116.

UNDER NOTE IV.—FROM HENCE, &amp;C.

“From hence he concludes that no inference can be drawn from the meaning of the word, that a constitution has a higher authority than a law or statute.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 67. “From whence we may likewise date the period of this event.”—Murray’s Key, ii, p. 202. “From hence it becomes evident, that LANGUAGE, taken in the most comprehensive view, implies certain Sounds, having certain Meanings.”—Harris’s Hermes, p. 315. “They returned to the city from whence they came out.”—Alex. Murray’s Gram., p. 135. “Respecting ellipses, some grammarians differ strangely in their ideas; and from thence has arisen a very whimsical diversity in their systems of grammar.”—Author. “What am I and from whence? i.e. what am I, and from whence am I?”—Jaudon’s Gram., p. 171.

UNDER NOTE V.—THE ADVERB HOW.

“It is strange how a writer, so accurate as Dean Swift, should have stumbled on so improper an application of this particle.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 112. “Ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us,” &c.—Acts, xv, 7. “Let us take care how we sin; i.e. that we do not sin.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 135. “We see by these instances, how prepositions may be necessary to connect those words, which in their signification are not naturally connected.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 118. “Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?”—2 Cor., xiii, 5. “That thou mayest know how that the earth is the Lord’s.”—Exod., ix, 29.

UNDER NOTE VI.—WHEN, WHILE, OR WHERE.

“Ellipsis is when one or more words are wanting, to complete the sense.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 235; Gould’s, p. 229; B. F. Fisk’s Greek Gram. 184. “Pleonasm is when a word more is added than is absolutely necessary to express the sense.”—Same works. “Hysteron protëron is when that is put in the former part of the sentence, which, according to the sense, should be in the latter.”—Adam, p. 237; Gould, 230. “Hysteron proteron, n. A rhetorical figure when that is said last which was done first.”—Webster’s Dict. “A Barbarism is when a foreign or strange word is made use of.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 242; Gould’s, 234. “A Solecism is when the rules of Syntax are transgressed.”—idem, ib. “An Idiotism is when the manner of expression peculiar to one language is used in another.”—id., ib. “Tautology is when we either uselessly repeat the same words, or repeat the same sense in different words.”—Adam, p. 243; Gould, 238. “Bombast is when high sounding words are used without meaning, or upon a trifling occasion.”—id., ib. “Amphibology is when, by the ambiguity of the construction, the meaning may be taken in two different senses.”—id., ib. “Irony is when one means the contrary of what is said.”—Adam, p. 247; Gould, 237. “The Periphrasis, or Circumlocution, is when several words are employed to express what might be expressed in fewer.”—id., ib. “Hyperbole is when a thing is magnified above the truth,”—Adam, p. 249; Gould, 240. “Personification is when we ascribe life, sentiments, or actions, to inanimate beings, or to abstract qualities.”—Iid., ib. “Apostrophe, or Address, is when the speaker breaks off from the series of his discourse, and addresses himself to some person present or absent, living or dead, or to inanimate nature, as if endowed with sense and reason.”—Iid., ib. “A Simile or Comparison is when the resemblance between two objects, whether real or imaginary, is expressed in form.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 223. “Simile, or Comparison, is when one thing is illustrated or heightened by comparing it to another.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 250; Gould’s, 240. “Antithesis, or Opposition, is when things contrary or different are contrasted, to make them appear in the more striking light.”—Iid., ib. “Description, or Imagery, [is] when any thing is painted in a lively manner, as if done before our eyes.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 250. “Emphasis is when a particular stress is laid on some word in a sentence.”—Ib. “Epanorthosis, or Correction, is when the speaker either recalls or corrects what he had last said.”—Ib. “Paralepsis, or Omission, is when one pretends to omit or pass by, what he at the same time declares.”—Ib. “Incrementum, or Climax in sense, is when one member rises above another to the highest.”—Ib., p. 251. “A Metonymy is where the cause is put for the effect, or the effect for the cause; the container for the thing contained; or the sign for the thing signified.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 223. “Agreement is when one word is like another in number, case, gender, or person.”—Frost’s Gram., p. 43; Greenleaf’s, 32. “Government is when one word causes another to be in some particular number, person, or case.”—Webster’s Imp. Gram., p. 89; Greenleaf’s, 32; Frost’s, 43. “Fusion is while some solid substance is converted into a fluid by heat.”—B. “A Proper Diphthong is where both the Vowels are sounded together; as, oi in Voice, ou in House.”—Fisher’s Gram., p. 10. “An Improper Diphthong is where the Sound of but one of the two Vowels is heard; as e in People.”—Ib., p. 11.

UNDER NOTE VII.—THE ADVERB NO FOR NOT.

“An adverb is joined to a verb to show how, or whether or no, or when, or where one is, does, or suffers.”—Buchanan’s Syntax, p. 62. “We must be immortal, whether we will or no.”—Maturin’s Sermons, p. 33. “He cares not whether the world was made for Cæsar or no.”—American Quarterly Review. “I do not know whether they are out or no.”—Byron’s Letters. “Whether it can be proved or no, is not the thing.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 84. “Whether or no he makes use of the means commanded by God.”—Ib., p. 164. “Whether it pleases the world or no, the care is taken.”—L’Estrange’s Seneca, p. 5. “How comes this to be never heard of nor in the least questioned, whether the Law was undoubtedly of Moses’s writing or no?”—Bp. Tomline’s Evidences, p. 44. “Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not.”—John, ix, 25. “Can I make men live, whether they will or no?”—Shak.

“Can hearts, not free, be try’d whether they serve Willing or no, who will but what they must?”—Milton, P. L.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—OF DOUBLE NEGATIVES.

“We need not, nor do not, confine the purposes of God.”—Bentley. “I cannot by no means allow him that.”—Idem. “We must try whether or no we cannot increase the Attention by the Help of the Senses.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. 263. “There is nothing more admirable nor more useful.”—Horne Tooke, Vol. i, p. 20. “And what in no time to come he can never be said to have done, he can never be supposed to do.”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 345. “No skill could obviate, nor no remedy dispel, the terrible infection.”—Goldsmith’s Greece, i, 114. “Prudery cannot be an indication neither of sense nor of taste.”—

Spurzheim, on Education, p. 21. "But that scripture, nor no other, speaks not of imperfect faith."—Barclay's Works, i, 172. "But this scripture, nor none other, proves not that faith was or is always accompanied with doubting."—Ibid. "The light of Christ is not nor cannot be darkness."—Ib., p. 252. "Doth not the Scripture, which cannot lie, give none of the saints this testimony?"—Ib., p. 379. "Which do not continue, nor are not binding."—Ib., Vol. iii. p. 79. "It not being perceived directly no more than the air."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 331. "Let's be no Stoics, nor no stocks, I pray."—Shak., Shrew. "Where there is no marked nor peculiar character in the style."—Blair's Rhet., p. 175. "There can be no rules laid down, nor no manner recommended."—Sheridan's Lect., p. 163.

"Bates. 'He hath not told his thought to the king?'
K. Henry. 'No; nor it is not meet he should.'"—Shak.

UNDER NOTE IX.—EVER AND NEVER.

"The prayer of Christ is more than sufficient both to strengthen us, be we never so weak; and to overthrow all adversary power, be it never so strong."—Hooker. "He is like to have no share in it, or to be ever the better for it."—Law and Grace, p. 23. "In some parts of Chili, it seldom or ever rains."—Willett's Geog. "If Pompey shall but never so little seem to like it."—Walker's Particles, p. 346. "Latin: 'Si Pompeius paulum modò ostenderit sibi placere.' Cic. i, 5."—Ib. "Though never such a power of dogs and hunters pursue him."—Walker, ib. "Latin: 'Quamlibet magnâ canum et venantium urgente vi.' Plin. l. 18, c. 16."—Ib. "Though you be never so excellent."—Walker, ib. "Latin: 'Quantumvis licet excellas.' Cic. de Amic."—Ib. "If you do amiss never so little."—Walker, ib. "Latin: 'Si tantillum peccâssis.' Plaut. Rud. 4, 4"—Ib. "If we cast our eyes never so little down."—Walker, ib. "Latin: 'Si tantulum oculos dejecerimus.' Cic. 7. Ver."—Ib. "A wise man scorneth nothing, be it never so small or homely."—Book of Thoughts, p. 37. "Because they have seldom or ever an opportunity of learning them at all."—Clarkson's Prize-Essay, p. 170. "We seldom or ever see those forsaken who trust in God."—Atterbury.

"Where, playing with him at bo-peep,
 He solved all problems, ne'er so deep."—Hudibras.

UNDER NOTE X.—OF THE FORM OF ADVERBS.

"One can scarce think that Pope was capable of epic or tragic poetry; but within a certain limited region, he has been outdone by no poet."—Blair's Rhet., p. 403. "I, who now read, have near finished this chapter."—Harris's Hermes, p. 82. "And yet, to refine our taste with respect to beauties of art or of nature, is scarce endeavoured in any seminary of learning."—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. viii. "By the Numbers being confounded, and the Possessives wrong applied, the Passage is neither English nor Grammar."—Buchanan's Syntax, p. 123. "The letter G is wrong named jee."—Creighton's Dict., p. viii. "Last; Remember that in science, as in morals, authority cannot make right, what, in itself, is wrong."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 194. "They regulate our taste even where we are scarce sensible of them."—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 96. "Slow action, for example, is imitated by words pronounced slow."—Ib., ii, 257. "Sure, if it be to profit withal, it must be in order to save."—Barclay's Works, i, 366. "Which is scarce possible at best."—Sheridan's Elocution, p. 67. "Our wealth being near finished."—Harris: Priestley's Gram., p. 80.

CHAPTER IX.—CONJUNCTIONS.

The syntax of Conjunctions consists, not (as L. Murray and others erroneously teach) in “their power of determining the mood of verbs,” or the “cases of nouns and pronouns,” but in the simple fact, that they link together such and such terms, and thus “mark the connexions of human thought.”—Beattie.

RULE XXII.—CONJUNCTIONS.

Conjunctions connect words, sentences, or parts of sentences: as, “Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we are brethren.”—Gen., xiii, 8.

“Ah! if she lend not arms as well as rules.
What can she more than tell us we are fools?”—Pope.

EXCEPTION FIRST.

The conjunction that sometimes serves merely to introduce a sentence which is made the subject or the object of a finite verb;* as, “That mind is not matter, is certain.”

“That you have wronged me, doth appear in this.”—Shak.

“That time is mine, O Mead! to thee, I owe.”—Young.

EXCEPTION SECOND.

When two corresponding conjunctions occur, in their usual order, the former should generally be parsed as referring to the latter, which is more properly the connecting word; as, “Neither sun nor stars in many days appeared.”—Acts, xxvii, 20. “Whether that evidence has been afforded [or not,] is a matter of investigation.”—Keith’s Evidences, p. 18.

EXCEPTION THIRD.

Either, corresponding to or, and neither, corresponding to nor or not, are sometimes transposed, so as to repeat the disjunction or negation at the end of the sentence; as, “Where then was their capacity of standing, or his either?”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 359. “It is not dangerous neither.”—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 135. “He is very tall, but not too tall neither.”—Spect., No. 475.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XXII.

OBS. 1.—Conjunctions that connect particular words, generally join similar parts of speech in a common dependence on some other term. Hence, if the words connected be such as have cases, they will of course be in the same case; as, “For me and thee”—Matt., xvii, 27. “Honour thy father and thy mother.”—Ib., xviii, 19. Here the latter noun or pronoun is connected by and to the former, and governed by the same preposition or verb.

---

* The conjunction that, at the head of a sentence or clause, enables us to assume the whole preposition as one thing; as, “All arguments whatever are directed to prove one or other of these three things: that something is true; that it is morally right or fit; or that it is profitable and good.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 318. Here each that may be parsed as connecting its own clause to the first clause in the sentence; or, to the word things with which the three clauses are in a sort of apposition. If we conceive it to have no such connecting power, we must make this too an exception.

Conjunctions themselves have no government, unless the questionable phrase “than whom” may be reckoned an exception. See Obs. 17th below, and others that follow it.

OBS. 2.—Those conjunctions which connect sentences or clauses, commonly unite one sentence or clause to an other, either as an additional assertion, or as a condition, a cause, or an end, of what is asserted. The conjunction is placed between the terms which it connects, except there is a transposition, and then it stands before the dependent term, and consequently at the beginning of the whole sentence: as, “He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second.”—Heb., x, 9. “That he may establish the second, he taketh away the first.”

OBS. 3.—The term that follows a conjunction, is in some instances a phrase of several words, yet not therefore a whole clause or member, unless we suppose it elliptical, and supply what will make it such: as, “And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men”—Col., iii, 23. If we say, this means, “as doing it to the Lord, and not as doing it unto men,” the terms are still mere phrases; but if we say, the sense is, “as if ye did it to the Lord, and not as if ye did it unto men,” they are clauses, or sentences. Churchill says, “The office of the conjunction is, to connect one word with an other, or one phrase with an other.”—New Gram., p. 152. But he uses the term phrase in a more extended sense than I suppose it will strictly bear: he means by it, a clause, or member; that is, a sentence which forms a part of a greater sentence.

OBS. 4.—What is the office of this part of speech, according to Lennie, Bullions, Brace, Hart, Hiley, Smith, M’Culloch, Webster, Wells, and others, who say that it “joins words and sentences together,” (see Errors on p. 434 of this work,) it is scarcely possible to conceive. If they imagine it to connect “words” on the one side, to “sentences” on the other; this is plainly absurd, and contrary to facts. If they suppose it to join sentence to sentence, by merely connecting word to word, in a joint relation; this also is absurd, and self-contradictory. Again, if they mean, that the conjunction sometimes connects word with word, and sometimes, sentence with sentence; this sense they have not expressed, but have severally puzzled their readers by an ungrammatical use of the word “and.” One of the best among them says, “In the sentence, ‘He and I must go,’ the word and unites two sentences, and thus avoids an unnecessary repetition; thus instead of saying, ‘He must go,’ ‘I must go,’ we connect the words He, I, as the same thing is affirmed of both, namely, must go.”—Hiley’s Gram., p. 53. Here is the incongruous suggestion, that by connecting words only, the conjunction in fact connects sentences; and the stranger blunder concerning those words, that “the same thing is affirmed of both, namely, [that they] must go.” Whereas it is plain, that nothing is affirmed of either: for “He and I must go,” only affirms of him and me, that “we must go.” And again it is plain, that and here connects nothing but the two pronouns; for no one will say, that, “He and I must go together” is a compound sentence, capable of being resolved into two simple sentences; and if, “He and I must go,” is compound because it is equivalent to, “He must go, and I must go;” so is, “We must go,” for the same reason, though it has but one nominative and one verb. “He and I were present,” is rightly given by Hiley as an example of two pronouns connected together by and. (See his Gram., p. 105.) But, of verbs connected to each other, he absurdly supposes the following to be examples: “He spake, and it was done.”—“I know it, and I can prove it.”—“Do you say so, and can you prove it?”—Ib. Here and connects sentences, and not particular words.

OBS. 5.—Two or three conjunctions sometimes come together; as, “What rests, but that the mortal sentence pass?”—Milton. “Nor yet that he should offer himself often.”—Heb., ix, 25. These may be severally parsed as “connecting what precedes and what follows,” and the observant reader will not fail to notice, that such combinations of connecting particles are sometimes required by the sense; but, since nothing that is needless, is really proper, conjunctions should not be unnecessarily accumulated: as, “But AND if that evil servant say in his heart,” &c.—Matt., xxiv, 48. Greek, “Ἐὰν δὲ εἴπῃ ὁ κακὸς δοῦλος ἐκεῖνος,” &c. Here is no and. “But AND if she depart.”—1 Cor., vii, 11. This is almost a literal rendering of the Greek, “Ἐὰν δὲ καὶ χωρισθῇ.”—yet either but or and is certainly useless. “In several cases,” says Priestley, “we content ourselves, now, with fewer conjunctive particles than our ancestors did [say used]. Example: ‘So AS that his doctrines were embraced by great numbers.’ Universal Hist., Vol. 29, p. 501. So that would have been much easier, and better.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 139. Some of the poets have often used the word that as an expletive, to fill the measure of their verse; as,

“When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept.”—Shakspeare.

“If that he be a dog, beware his fangs.”—Id.

“That made him pine away and moulder,
As though that he had been no soldier.”—Butler’s Poems, p. 164.

OBS. 6.—W. Allen remarks, that, “And is sometimes introduced to engage our attention to a following word or phrase; as, ‘Part pays, and justly, the deserving steer.’ [Pope.] ‘I see thee fall, and by Achilles’ hand.’ [Id.].”—Allen’s E. Gram., p. 184. The like idiom, he says, occurs in these passages of Latin: “Forsan et hæc olim meminisse juvabit.” Virg. ‘Mors et fugacem persequitur virum.’ Hor.”—Allen’s Gram., p. 184. But it seems to me, that and and et are here regular connectives. The former implies a repetition of the preceding verb: as, “Part pays, and justly pays, the deserving steer.”—“I see thee fall, and fall by Achilles’ hand.” The latter refers back to what was said before: thus, “Perhaps it will also hereafter delight you to recount these evils.”—“And death pursues the man that flees.” In the following text, the conjunction is more like an expletive; but even here it suggests an extension of the discourse then in progress: “Lord, and what shall this man do?”—John, xxi, 21. “Κύριε, οὗτος δὲ τί;”—“Domine, hic autem quid?”—Beza.

OBS. 7.—The conjunction as often unites words that are in apposition, or in the same case; as, “He offered himself AS a journeyman.”—“I assume it AS a fact.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 94. “In an other example of the same kind, the earth, AS a common mother, is animated to give refuge against a father’s unkindness.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol ii, p. 168. “And then to offer himself up AS a sacrifice and propitiation for them.”—Scougal, p. 99. So, likewise, when an intransitive verb takes the same case after as before it, by Rule 6th; as, “Johnson soon after engaged AS usher in a school.”—L. Murray. “He was employed AS usher.” In all these examples, the case that follows as, is determined by that which precedes. If after the verb “engaged” we supply himself, usher becomes objective, and is in apposition with the pronoun, and not in agreement with Johnson: “He engaged himself as usher.” One late writer, ignorant or regardless of the analogy of General Grammar, imagines this case to be an “objective governed by the conjunction as,” according to the following rule: “The conjunction as, when it takes the meaning of for, or in the character of, governs the objective case; as, Addison, as a writer of prose, is highly distinguished.”—J. M. Putnam’s Gram., p. 113. S. W. Clark, in his grammar published in 1848, sets as in his list of prepositions, with this example: “That England can spare from her service such men as HIM.”—Lord Brougham.—Clark’s Practical Gram., p. 92. And again: “When the second term of a Comparison of equality is a Noun, or Pronoun, the Preposition AS is commonly used. Example—‘He hath died to redeem such a rebel as ME.’—Wesley.” Undoubtedly, Wesley and Brougham here erroneously supposed the as to connect words only, and consequently to require them to be in the same case, agreeably to OBS. 1st, above; but a moment’s reflection on the sense, should convince any one, that the construction requires the nominative forms he and I, with the verbs is and am understood.

OBS. 8.—The conjunction as may also be used between an adjective or a participle and the noun to which the adjective or participle relates; as, “It does not appear that brutes have the least reflex sense of actions AS distinguished from events; or that will and design, which constitute the very nature of actions AS such, are at all an object of their perception.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 277.

OBS. 9.—As frequently has the force of a relative pronoun, and when it evidently sustains the relation of a case, it ought to be called, and generally is called, a pronoun, rather than a conjunction; as, “Avoid such as are vicious,”—Anon. “But as many as received him,” &c.—John, i, 12. “We have reduced the terms into as small a number as was consistent with perspicuity and distinction.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. ix. Here as represents a noun, and while it serves to connect the two parts of the sentence, it is also the subject of a verb. These being the true characteristics of a relative pronoun, it is proper to refer the word to that class. But when a clause or a sentence is the antecedent, it is better to consider the as a conjunction, and to supply the pronoun it, if the writer has not used it; as, “He is angry, as [it] appears by this letter.” Horne Tooke says, “The truth is, that AS is also an article; and (however and whenever used in English) means the same as It, or That, or Which.”—Diversions of Purley, Vol. i, p. 223. But what definition he would give to “an article,” does not appear.

OBS. 10.—In some examples, it seems questionable whether as ought to be reckoned a pronoun, or ought rather to be parsed as a conjunction after which a nominative is understood; as, “He then read the conditions as follow.”—“The conditions are as follow.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 106. “The principal evidences on which this assertion is grounded, are as follow.”—Gurney’s Essays, p. 166. “The Quiescent verbs are as follow.”—Pike’s Heb. Lex., p. 184. “The other numbers are duplications of these, and proceed as follow”—Dr. Murray’s Hist. of Lang., Vol. ii, p. 35. “The most eminent of the kennel are bloodhounds, which lead the van, and are as follow.”—Steele, Tattler, No. 62. “His words are as follow.”—Spect., No. 62. “The words are as follow.”—Addison, Spect., No. 513. “The objections that are raised against it as a tragedy, are as follow.”—Gay, Pref. to What d’ ye call it. “The particulars are as follow.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 93. “The principal interjections in English are as follow.”—Ward’s Gram., p. 81. In all these instances, one may suppose the final clause to mean, “as they here follow;”—or, supposing as to be a pronoun, one may conceive it to mean, “such as follow.” But some critical writers, it appears, prefer the singular verb, “as follows”. Hear Campbell: “When a verb is used impersonally, it ought undoubtedly to be in the singular number, whether the neuter pronoun be expressed or understood: and when no nominative in the sentence can regularly be construed with the verb, it ought to be considered as impersonal. For this reason, analogy as well as usage favour [say favours] this mode of expression, ‘The conditions of the agreement were as follows;’ and not ‘as follow.’ A few late writers have inconsiderately adopted this last form through a mistake of the construction. For the same reason we ought to say, 'I shall consider his censures so far only as concerns my friend's conduct;' and not 'so far as concern.'"—Philosophy of Rhet., p. 229. It is too much to say, at least of one of these sentences, that there is no nominative with which the plural verb can be regularly construed. In the former, the word as may be said to be a plural nominative; or, if we will have this to be a conjunction, the pronoun they, representing conditions, may be regularly supplied, as above. In the latter, indeed, as is not a pronoun; because it refers to "so far," which is not a noun. But the sentence is bad English; because the verb concern or concerns is improperly left without a nominative. Say therefore, 'I shall consider his censures so far only as they concern my friend's conduct;'—or, 'so far only as my friend's conduct is concerned.' The following is an other example which I conceive to be wrong; because, with an adverb for its antecedent, as is made a nominative: "They ought therefore to be uttered as quickly as is consistent with distinct articulation."—Sheridan's Elocution, p. 76. Say rather, "They ought therefore to be uttered with as much rapidity as is consistent with distinct articulation."

OBS. 11.—Lindley Murray was so much puzzled with Tooke's notion of as, and Campbell's doctrine of the impersonal verb, that he has expressly left his pupils to hesitate and doubt, like himself, whether one ought to say "as follows" or "as follow," when the preceding noun is plural; or—to furnish an alternative, (if they choose it,) he shows them at last how they may dodge the question, by adopting some other phraseology. He begins thus: "Grammarians differ in opinion, respecting the propriety of the following modes of expression: 'The arguments advanced were nearly as follows;' 'the positions were, as appears, incontrovertible.'"—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 146. Then follows a detail of suggestions from Campbell and others, all the quotations being anonymous, or at least without definite references. Omitting these, I would here say of the two examples given, that they are not parallel instances. For, "as follows," refers to what the arguments were,—to the things themselves, considered plurally, and immediately to be exhibited; wherefore the expression ought rather to have been, "as follow," or, "as they here follow." But, "as appears" means "as it appears," or "as the case now appears;" and one of these plain modes of expression would have been much preferable, because the as is here evidently nothing but a conjunction.

OBS. 12.—"The diversity of sentiment on this subject," says L. Murray, "and the respectability of the different opponents, will naturally induce the readers to pause and reflect, before they decide."—Octavo Gram., p. 147. The equivalent expressions by means of which he proposes to evade at last the dilemma, are the following: "The arguments advanced were nearly such as follow;"—"The arguments advanced were nearly of the following nature;"—"The following are nearly the arguments which were advanced;"—"The arguments advanced were nearly those which follow;"—"These, or nearly these, were the arguments advanced;"—"The positions were such as appear incontrovertible;"—"It appears that the positions were incontrovertible;"—"That the positions were incontrovertible, is apparent;"—"The positions were apparently incontrovertible;"—"In appearance, the positions were incontrovertible."—Ibid. If to shun the expression will serve our turn, surely here are ways enough! But to those who "pause and reflect" with the intention to decide, I would commend the following example: "Reconciliation was offered, on conditions as moderate as were consistent with a permanent union."—Murray's Key, under Rule 1. Here Murray supposes "was" to be wrong, and accordingly changes it to "were," by the Rule, "A verb must agree with its nominative case in number and person." But the amendment is a pointed rejection of Campbell's "impersonal verb," or verb which "has no nominative;" and if the singular is not right here, the rhetorician's respectable authority vouches only for a catalogue of errors. Again, if this verb must be were in order to agree with its nominative, it is still not clear that as, is, or ought to be, the nominative; because the meaning may perhaps be better expressed thus:—"on conditions as moderate as any that were consistent with a permanent union."

OBS. 13.—A late writer expresses his decision of the foregoing question thus: "Of all the different opinions on a grammatical subject, which have arisen in the literary world, there scarcely appears one more indefensible than that of supposing as follows to be an impersonal verb, and to be correctly used in such sentences as this. 'The conditions were as follows.' Nay, we are told that, 'A few late writers have adopted this form, 'The conditions were as follow,' inconsiderately;" and, to prove this charge of inconsiderateness, the following sentence is brought forward: 'I shall consider his censure [censures is the word used by Campbell and by Murray] so far only as concern my friend's conduct.' which should be, it is added, 'as concerns, and not as concern.' If analogy, simplicity, or syntactical authority, is of any value in our resolution of the sentence, 'The conditions were as follows,' the word as is as evident a relative as language can afford. It is undoubtedly equivalent to that or which, and relates to its antecedent those or such understood, and should have been the nominative to the verb follow; the sentence, in its present form, being inaccurate. The second sentence is by no means a parallel one. The word as is a conjunction; and though it has, as a relative, a reference to its antecedent so, yet in its capacity of a mere conjunction, it cannot possibly be the nominative case to any verb. It should be, 'it concerns.' Whenever as relates to an adverbial antecedent; as in the sentence, 'So far as it concerns me,' it is merely a conjunction; but when it refers to an adjective antecedent; as in the sentence, 'The business is such as concerns me;' it must be a relative, and susceptible of case, whether its antecedent is expressed or understood; being, in fact, the nominative to the verb concerns."—Nixon's Parser, p. 145. It will be perceived by the preceding remarks, that I do not cite what is here said, as believing it to be in all respects well said, though it is mainly so. In regard to the point at issue, I shall add but one critical authority more: "The circumstances were as follows.' Several grammarians and critics have approved this phraseology: I am inclined, however, to concur with those who prefer 'as follow.'"—Crombie, on Etym. and Synt., p. 388.

OBS. 14.—The conjunction that is frequently understood; as, "It is seldom [that] their counsels are listened to."—Robertson's Amer., i, 316. "The truth is, [that] grammar is very much neglected among us."—Lowth's Gram., Pref., p. vi. "The Sportsman believes [that] there is Good in his Chace [chase]."—Harris's Hermes, p. 296.

"Thou warnst me [that] I have done amiss;
I should have earlier looked to this."—Scott.

OBS. 15.—After than or as, connecting the terms of a comparison, there is usually an ellipsis of some word or words. The construction of the words employed may be seen, when the ellipsis is supplied; as, "They are stronger than we" [are.]—Numb., xiii. 31. "Wisdom is better than weapons of war" [are.]—Eccl., ix, 18. "He does nothing who endeavours to do more than [what] is allowed to humanity."—Dr. Johnson. "My punishment is greater than [what] I can bear."—Gen., iv, 13. "Ralph gave him more than I" [gave him.]—Churchill's Gram., p. 351. "Ralph gave him more than [he gave] me."—Ibid. "Revelation, surely, was never intended for such as he" [is.]—Campbell's Four Gospels, p. iv. "Let such as him sneer if they will."—Liberator, Vol. ix, p. 182. Here him ought to be he, according to Rule 2d, because the text speaks of such as he is or was. “You were as innocent of it as me.’ ‘He did it as well as me.’ In both places it ought to be I: that is, as I was, as I did.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 352.

“Rather let such poor souls as you and I Say that the holidays are drawing nigh.”—Swift.

OBS. 16.—The doctrine above stated, of ellipses after than and as, proceeds on the supposition that these words are conjunctions, and that they connect, not particular words merely, but sentences, or clauses. It is the common doctrine of nearly all our grammarians, and is doubtless liable to fewer objections than any other theory that ever has been, or ever can be, devised in lieu of it. Yet as is not always a conjunction; nor, when it is a conjunction, does it always connect sentences; nor, when it connects sentences, is there always an ellipsis; nor, when there is an ellipsis, is it always quite certain what that ellipsis is. All these facts have been made plain, by observations that have already been bestowed on the word: and, according to some grammarians, the same things may severally be affirmed of the word than. But most authors consider than to be always a conjunction, and generally, if not always, to connect sentences. Johnson and Webster, in their dictionaries, mark it for an adverb; and the latter says of it, “This word signifies also then, both in English and Dutch.”—Webster’s Amer. Dict., 8vo, w. Than. But what he means by “also,” I know not; and surely, in no English of this age, is than equivalent to then, or then to than. The ancient practice of putting then for than, is now entirely obsolete;* and, as we have no other term of the same import, most of our expositors merely explain than as “a particle used in comparison.”—Johnson, Worcester, Maunder. Some absurdly define it thus: “THAN, adv. Placed in comparison.”—Walker, (Rhym. Dict.,) Jones, Scott. According to this definition, than would be a participle! But, since an express comparison necessarily implies a connexion between different terms, it cannot well be denied that than is a connective word; wherefore, not to detain the reader with any profitless controversy, I shall take it for granted that this word is always a conjunction. That it always connects sentences, I do not affirm; because there are instances in which it is difficult to suppose it to connect anything more than particular words: as, “Less judgement than wit is more sail than ballast.”—Penn’s Maxims. “With no less eloquence than freedom. ‘Pari eloquentiâ ac libertate.’ Tacitus.”—Walker’s Particles, p. 200. “Any comparison between these two classes of writers, cannot be other than vague and loose.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 347. “This far more than compensates all those little negligences.”—Ib., p. 200.

“Remember Handel? Who that was not born
Deaf as the dead to harmony, forgets,
Or can, the more than Homer of his age?”—Cowper.

OBS. 17.—When any two declinable words are connected by than or as, they are almost always, according to the true idiom of our language, to be put in the same case, whether we suppose an ellipsis in the construction of the latter, or not; as, “My Father is greater than I.”—Bible. “What do ye more than others?”—Matt., v, 47. “More men than women were there.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 114. “Entreat him as a father, and the younger * “Note. Then and than are distinct Particles, but use hath made the using of then for than after a Comparative Degree at least passable. See Butler’s Eng. Gram. Index.”—Walker’s Eng. Particles, Tenth Ed., 1691, p. 333.

men as brethren.”—1 Tim., v, 1. “I would that all men were even as I myself.”—1 Cor., vii, 7. “Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?”—John, xxi, 15. This last text is manifestly ambiguous; so that some readers will doubt whether it means—“more than thou lovest these,” or—“more than these love me.” Is not this because there is an ellipsis in the sentence, and such a one as may be variously conceived and supplied? The original too is ambiguous, but not for the same reason: “Σίμων Ἰωνᾶ ἀγαπᾷς με πλεῖον τούτων;”—And so is the Latin of the Vulgate and of Montanus: “Simon Jona, diligis me plus his?” Wherefore Beza expressed it differently: “Simon fili Jonæ, diligis me plus quàm hi?” The French Bible has it: “Simon, fils de Jona, m’aimes-tu plus que ne font ceux-ci?” And the expression in English should rather have been, “Lovest thou me more than do these?”

OBS. 18.—The comparative degree, in Greek, is said to govern the genitive case; in Latin, the ablative: that is, the genitive or the ablative is sometimes put after this degree without any connecting particle corresponding to than, and without producing a compound sentence. We have examples in the phrases, “πλεῖον τούτων” and “plus his,” above. Of such a construction our language admits no real example; that is, no exact parallel. But we have an imitation of it in the phrase than whom, as in this hackneyed example from Milton:

“Which, when Beëlzebub perceived, than whom,
Satan except, none higher sat,” &c.—Paradise Lost, B. ii, l. 300.

The objective, whom, is here preferred to the nominative, who, because the Latin ablative is commonly rendered by the former case, rather than by the latter: but this phrase is no more explicable according to the usual principles of English grammar, than the error of putting the objective case for a version of the ablative absolute. If the imitation is to be judged allowable, it is to us a figure of syntax—an obvious example of Enallagè, and of that form of Enallagè, which is commonly called Antiptosis, or the putting of one case for an other.

OBS. 19.—This use of whom after than has greatly puzzled and misled our grammarians; many of whom have thence concluded that than must needs be, at least in this instance, a preposition,* and some have extended the principle beyond this, so as to

* “When the relative who follows the preposition than, it must be used as in the accusative case.”—Bucke’s Gram., p. 93. Dr. Priestley seems to have imagined the word than to be always a preposition; for he contends against the common doctrine and practice respecting the case after it: “It is, likewise, said, that the nominative case ought to follow the preposition than; because the verb to be is understood after it; As, You are taller than he, and not taller than him; because at full length, it would be, You are taller than he is; but since it is allowed, that the oblique case should follow prepositions; and since the comparative degree of an adjective, and the particle than have, certainly, between them, the force of a preposition, expressing the relation of one word to another, they ought to require the oblique case of the pronoun following.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 105. If than were a preposition, this reasoning would certainly be right; but the Doctor begs the question, by assuming that it is a preposition. William Ward, an other noted grammarian of the same age, supposes that, “ME sapientior es, may be translated, Thou art wiser THAN ME.” He also, in the same place, avers, that, “The best English Writers have considered than as a Sign of an oblique Case; as, ‘She suffers more THAN ME.’ Swift, i.e. more than I suffer.

Thou art a Girl as much brighter THAN HER,
As he was a Poet sublimer THAN ME.’ Prior.

i.e. Thou art a Girl as much brighter than she was, as he was a Poet sublimer than I am.”—Ward’s Practical Gram., p. 112. These examples of the objective case after than, were justly regarded by Lowth as bad English. The construction, however, has a modern advocate in S. W. Clark, who will have the conjunctions as, but, save, saving, and than, as well as the adjectives like, unlike, near, next, nigh, and opposite, to be prepositions. “After a Comparative the Preposition than is commonly used. Example—Grammar is more include than which, than whose with its following noun, and other nominatives which they will have to be objectives; as, “I should seem guilty of ingratitude, than which nothing is more shameful.” See Russell’s Gram., p. 104. “Washington, than whose fame naught earthly can be purer.”—Peirce’s Gram., p. 204. “You have given him more than I. You have sent her as much as he.”—Buchanan’s Eng. Syntax, p. 116. These last two sentences are erroneously called by their author, “false syntax,” not indeed with a notion that than and as are prepositions, but on the false supposition that the preposition to must necessarily be understood between them and the pronouns, as it is between the preceding verbs and the pronouns him and her. But, in fact, “You have given him more than I,” is perfectly good English; the last clause of which plainly means—“more than I have given him.” And, “You have sent her as much as he,” will of course be understood to mean—“as much as he has sent her,” but here, because the auxiliary implied is different from the one expressed, it might have been as well to have inserted it: thus, “You have sent her as much as he has.” “She reviles you as much as he,” is also good English, though found, with the foregoing, among Buchanan’s examples of “false syntax.”

OBS. 20.—Murray’s twentieth Rule of syntax avers, that, “When the qualities of different things are compared, the latter noun or pronoun is not governed by the conjunction than or as, but agrees with the verb,” &c.—Octavo Gram., p. 214; Russell’s Gram., 103; Bacon’s, 51; Alger’s, 71; Smith’s, 179; Fisk’s, 138. To this rule, the great Compiler and most of his followers say, that than whom “is an exception.” or “seems to form an exception;” to which they add, that, “the phrase is, however, avoided by the best modern writers.”—Murray, i, 215. This latter assertion Russell conceives to be untrue: the former he adopts; and, calling than whom “an exception to the general rule,” says of it, (with no great consistency,) “Here the conjunction than has certainly the force of a preposition, and supplies its place by governing the relative.”—Russell’s Abridgement of Murray’s Gram., p. 104. But this is hardly an instance to which one would apply the maxim elsewhere adopted by Murray: “Exceptio probat regulam.”—Octavo Gram., p. 205. To ascribe to a conjunction the governing power of a preposition, is a very wide step, and quite too much like straddling the line which separates these parts of speech one from the other.

OBS. 21.—Churchill says, “If there be no ellipsis to supply, as sometimes happens when a pronoun relative occurs after than; the relative is to be put in the objective case absolute: as, ‘Alfred, than whom a greater king never reigned, deserves to be held up as a model to all future sovereigns.’”—New Gram., p. 153. Among his Notes, he has one with reference to this “objective case absolute,” as follows: “It is not governed by the conjunction, for on no other occasion does a conjunction govern any case; or by any word understood, for we can insert no word, or words, that will reconcile the phrase with any other rule of grammar: and if we employ a pronoun personal instead of the relative, as he, which will admit of being resolved elliptically, it must be put in the nominative case.”—Ib., p. 352. Against this gentleman’s doctrine, one may very well argue, as he himself does against that of Murray, Russell, and others; that on no other occasion do we speak of putting “the objective case absolute,” and if, agreeably to the analogy of our own tongue, interesting than all my other studies.”—Clark’s Practical Gram., p. 178. “As, like, than, &c., indicate a relation of comparison. Example ‘Thou hast been wiser all the while than me.’ Southey’s Letters.”—Ib., p. 96. Here correct usage undoubtedly requires I, and not me. Such at least is my opinion.

---

our distinguished authors would condescend to say than who,* surely nobody would think of calling this an instance of the nominative case absolute,—except perhaps one swaggering new theorist, that most pedantic of all scoffers, Oliver B. Peirce.

OBS. 22.—The sum of the matter is this: the phrase, than who, is a more regular and more analogical expression than than whom; but both are of questionable propriety, and the former is seldom if ever found, except in some few grammars; while the latter, which is in some sort a Latinism, may be quoted from many of our most distinguished writers. And, since that which is irregular cannot be parsed by rule, if out of respect to authority we judge it allowable, it must be set down among the figures of grammar; which are, all of them, intentional deviations from the ordinary use of words. One late author treats the point pretty well, in this short hint: “After the conjunction than, contrary to analogy, whom is used in stead of who.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 106. An other gives his opinion in the following note: “When who immediately follows than, it is used improperly in the objective case; as, ‘Alfred, than whom a greater king never reigned;’—than whom is not grammatical. It ought to be, than who; because who is the nominative to was understood.—Than whom is as bad a phrase as ‘he is taller than him.’ It is true that some of our best writers have used than whom; but it is also true, that they have used other phrases which we have rejected as ungrammatical; then why not reject this too?”—Lennie’s Grammar, Edition of 1830, p. 105.

OBS. 23.—On this point. Bullions and Brace, two American copyists and plagiarists of Lennie, adopt opposite notions. The latter copies the foregoing note, without the last sentence; that is, without admitting that “than whom” has ever been used by good writers. See Brace’s Gram., p. 90. The former says, “The relative usually follows than in the objective case, even when the nominative goes before; as, ‘Alfred, than whom a greater king never reigned.’ This anomaly it is difficult to explain. Most probably, than, at first had the force of a preposition, which it now retains only when followed by the relative.”—Bullions, E. Gram., of 1843, p. 112. Again: “A relative after than is put in the objective case; as, ‘Satan, than whom none higher sat.’ This anomaly has not been satisfactorily explained. In this case, some regard than as a preposition. It is probably only a case of simple enallage”—Bullions, Analyt. and Pract. Gram., of 1849, p. 191. Prof. Fowler, in his great publication, of 1850, says of this example, “The expression should be, Satan, than who None higher sat.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., §482, Note 2. Thus, by one single form of antiptosis, have our grammarians been as much divided and perplexed, as were the Latin grammarians by a vast number of such changes; and, since there were some among the latter, who insisted on a total rejection of the figure, there is no great presumption in discarding, if we please, the very little that remains of it in English.

OBS. 24.—Peirce’s new theory of grammar rests mainly on the assumption, that no correct sentence ever is, or can be, in any wise, elliptical. This is one of the “TWO GRAND PRINCIPLES” on which the author says his “work is based.”—The Grammar, p. 10. The other is, that grammar cannot possibly be taught without a thorough reformation of its nomenclature, a reformation involving a change of most of the names and technical terms heretofore used for its elucidation. I do not give precisely his own words, for one half of

---

* In respect to the case, the phrase than who is similar to than he, than they, &c., as has been observed by many grammarians; but, since than is a conjunction, and who or whom is a relative, it is doubtful whether it can be strictly proper to set two such connectives together, be the case of the latter which it may. See Note 5th, in the present chapter, below.

this author's system is expressed in such language as needs to be translated into English in order to be generally understood; but this is precisely his meaning, and in words more intelligible. In what estimation he holds these two positions, may be judged from the following assertion: "Without these grand points, no work, whatever may be its pretensions, can be A GRAMMAR of the LANGUAGE."—Ib. It follows that no man who does not despise every other book that is called a grammar, can entertain any favourable opinion of Peirce's. The author however is tolerably consistent. He not only scorns to appeal, for the confirmation of his own assertions and rules, to the judgement or practice of any other writer, but counsels the learner to "spurn the idea of quoting, either as proof or for defence, the authority of any man." See p. 13. The notable results of these important premises are too numerous for detail even in this general pandect. But it is to be mentioned here, that, according to this theory, a nominative coming after than or as, is in general to be accounted a nominative absolute; that is, a nominative which is independent of any verb; or, (as the ingenious author himself expresses it,) "A word in the subjective case following another subjective, and immediately preceded by than, as, or not, may be used without an ASSERTER immediately depending on it for sense."—Peirce's Gram., p. 195. See also his "Grammatical Chart, Rule I, Part 2."

OBS. 25.—"Lowth, Priestley, Murray, and most grammarians say, that hypothetical, conditional, concessive, or exceptive conjunctions; as, if, lest, though, unless, except, require, or govern the subjunctive mood. But in this they are certainly wrong: for, as Dr. Crombie rightly observes, the verb is put in the subjunctive mood, because the mood expresses contingency, not because it follows the conjunction: for these writers themselves allow, that the same conjunctions are to be followed by the indicative mood, when the verb is not intended to express a contingency. In the following sentence: 'Though he be displeased at it, I will bolt my door; and let him break it open if he dare;' may we not as well affirm, that and governs the imperative mood, as that though and if govern the subjunctive?"—Churchill's Gram., p. 321.

OBS. 26.—In the list of correspondents contained in Note 7th below, there are some words which ought not to be called conjunctions, by the parser; for the relation of a word as the proper correspondent to an other word, does not necessarily determine its part of speech. Thus, such is to be parsed as an adjective; as, sometimes as a pronoun; so, as a conjunctive adverb. And only, merely, also, and even, are sometimes conjunctive adverbs; as, "Nor is this only a matter of convenience to the poet, it is also a source of gratification to the reader."—Campbell's Rhet., p. 166. Murray's Gram., i, 362. Professor Bullions will have it, that these adverbs may relate to nouns—a doctrine which I disapprove. He says "Only, solely, chiefly, merely, too, also, and perhaps a few others, are sometimes joined to substantives; as, 'Not only the men, but the women also were present.'"—English Gram., p. 116. Only and also are here, I think, conjunctive adverbs; but it is not the office of adverbs to qualify nouns; and, that these words are adjuncts to the nouns men and women, rather than the verb were, which is once expressed and once understood, I see no sufficient reason to suppose. Some teachers imagine, that an adverb of this kind qualifies the whole clause in which it stands. But it would seem, that the relation of such words to verbs, participles, or adjectives, according to the common rule for adverbs, is in general sufficiently obvious: as, "The perfect tense not only refers to what is past, but also conveys an allusion to the present time."—Murray's Gram., p. 70. Is there any question about the true mode of parsing "only" and "also" here? and have they not in the other sentence, a relation similar to what is seen here?

NOTES TO RULE XXII.

NOTE I.—When two terms connected are each to be extended and completed in sense by a third, they must both be such as will make sense with it. Thus, in stead of saying, “He has made alterations and additions to the work,” say, “He has made alterations in the work, and additions to it,” because the relation between alterations and work is not well expressed by to.

NOTE II.—In general, any two terms which we connect by a conjunction, should be the same in kind or quality, rather than different or heterogeneous. Example: “The assistance was welcome, and seasonably afforded.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 249. Better: “The assistance was welcome, and it was seasonably afforded.” Or: “The assistance was both seasonable and welcome.”

NOTE III.—The conjunctions, copulative or disjunctive, affirmative or negative, must be used with a due regard to their own import, and to the true idiom of the language. Thus, say, “The general bent or turn of the language is towards the other form;” and not, with Lowth and Churchill, “The general bent and turn of the language is towards the other form.”—Short Introd., p. 60; New Gram., p. 113. So, say, “I cannot deny that there are perverse jades;” and not, with Addison, “I cannot deny but there are perverse jades.”—Spect., No. 457. Again, say, “I feared that I should be deserted;” not, “lest I should be deserted.”

NOTE IV.—After else, other,* otherwise, rather, and all English comparatives, the latter term of an exclusive comparison should be introduced by the conjunction than—a word which is appropriated to this use solely: as, “Style is nothing else than that sort of expression which our thoughts most readily assume.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 92. “What we call fables or parables are no other than allegories.”—Ib., p. 151; Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 243. “We judge otherwise of them than of ourselves.”—R. Ainsworth. “The premeditation should * After else or other, the preposition besides is sometimes used; and, when it recalls an idea previously suggested, it appears to be as good as than, or better: as, “Other words, besides the preceding, may begin with capitals.”—Murray’s Gram., Vol. i. p. 285. Or perhaps this preposition may be proper, whenever else or other denotes what is additional to the object of contrast, and not exclusive of it; as, “When we speak of any other quantity besides bare numbers.”—Tooke’s Diversions, Vol. i, p. 215. “Because he had no other father besides God.”—Milton, on Christianity, p. 109. Though we sometimes express an addition by more than, the following example appears to me to be bad English, and its interpretation still worse: “The secret was communicated to more men than him.” That is, (when the ellipsis is duly supplied,) “The secret was communicated to more persons than to him.”—Murray’s Key, 12mo, p. 61; his Octavo Gram., p. 215; Ingersoll’s Gram., 252. Say rather,—“to other men besides him.” Nor, again, does the following construction appear to be right: “Now shew me another Popish rhymester but he.”—DENNIS: Notes to the Dunciad, B. ii, l. 268. Say rather, “Now show me an other popish rhymester besides him.” Or thus: “Now show me any popish rhymester except him.” This too is questionable: “Now pain must here be intended to signify something else besides warning.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 121. If “warning” was here intended to be included with “something else,” the expression is right; if not, besides should be than. Again: “There is seldom any other cardinal in Poland but him.”—Life of Charles XII. Here “but him” should be either “besides him,” or “than he,” for but never rightly governs the objective case, nor is it proper after other. “Many more examples, besides the foregoing, might have been adduced.”—Nesbit’s English Parsing, p. xv. Here, in fact, no comparison is expressed; and therefore it is questionable, whether the word “more” is allowably used. Like else and other, when construed with besides, it signifies additional; and, as this idea is implied in besides, any one of these adjectives going before is really pleonastic. In the sense above noticed, the word beside is sometimes written in stead of besides, though not very often; as, “There are other things which pass in the mind of man, beside ideas.”—Sheridan’s Elocution, p. 136.

---

be of things rather than of words.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 262. “Is not the life more than meat?”—Com. Bible. “Is not life a greater gift than food?”—Campbell’s Gospels.

NOTE V.—Relative pronouns, being themselves a species of connective words, necessarily exclude conjunctions; except there be two or more relative clauses to be connected together; that is, one to the other. Example of error: “The principal and distinguishing excellence of Virgil, and which, in my opinion, he possesses beyond all poets, is tenderness.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 439. Better: “The principal and distinguishing excellence of Virgil, an excellence which, in my opinion, he possesses beyond all other poets, is tenderness.”

NOTE VI.—The word that, (as was shown in the fifth chapter of Etymology,) is often made a pronoun in respect to what precedes it, and a conjunction in respect to what follows it—a construction which, for its anomaly, ought to be rejected. For example: “In the mean time that the Muscovites were complaining to St. Nicholas, Charles returned thanks to God, and prepared for new victories.”—Life of Charles XII. Better thus: “While the Muscovites were thus complaining to St. Nicholas, Charles returned thanks to God, and prepared for new victories.”

NOTE VII.—The words in each of the following pairs, are the proper correspondents to each other; and care should be taken, to give them their right place in the sentence:

1. To though, corresponds yet; as, “Though he were dead, yet shall he live.”—John, xi, 25.
2. To whether, corresponds or; as, “Whether it be greater or less.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 77.
3. To either, corresponds or; as, “The constant indulgence of a declamatory manner, is not favourable either to good composition, or [to] good delivery.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 334.
4. To neither, corresponds nor; as, “John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine.”—Luke, vii, 33. “Thou shalt neither vex a stranger nor oppress him.”—Exod., xxii, 21.
5. To both, corresponds and; as, “I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, both to the wise and to the unwise.”—Rom., i, 14.
6. To such, corresponds as; (the former being a pronominal adjective, and the latter a relative pronoun;) as, “An assembly such as earth saw never.”—Cowper.
7. To such, corresponds that; with, a finite verb following, to express a consequence: as, “The difference is such that all will perceive it.”
8. To as, corresponds as; with an adjective or an adverb, to express equality of degree: as, “And he went out from his presence a leper as white as snow.”—2 Kings. v. 27.
9. To as, corresponds so; with two verbs, to express proportion or sameness: as, “As two are to four, so are six to twelve.”—“As the tree falls, so it must lie.”
10. So is used before as; with an adjective or an adverb, to limit the degree by comparison: as, “How can you descend to a thing so base as falsehood?”
11. So is used before as; with a negative preceding, to deny equality of degree: as, “No lamb was e’er so mild as he.”—Langhorne. “Relatives are not so useful in language as conjunctions.”—BEATTIE: Murray’s Gram., p. 126.
12. To so, corresponds as; with an infinitive following, to express a consequence: as, “We ought, certainly, to read blank verse so as to make every line sensible to the ear”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 332.
13. To so, corresponds that; with a finite verb following, to express a consequence: as, “No man was so poor that he could not make restitution.”—Milman’s Jews, i, 113. “So run that ye may obtain.”—1 Cor., ix, 24.

14. To not only, or not merely, corresponds but, but also, or but even; as, "In heroic times, smuggling and piracy were deemed not only not infamous, but [even] absolutely honourable."—Maunder's Gram., p. 15. "These are questions, not of prudence merely, but of morals also."—Dymond's Essay, p. 82.

NOTE VIII.—"When correspondent conjunctions are used, the verb, or phrase, that precedes the first, applies [also] to the second; but no word following the former, can [by virtue of this correspondence,] be understood after the latter."—Churchill's Gram., p. 353. Such ellipses as the following ought therefore in general to be avoided: "Tones are different both from emphasis and [from] pauses."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, i, 250. "Though both the intention and [the] purchase are now past."—Ib., ii, 24.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XXII.

EXAMPLES UNDER NOTE I.—TWO TERMS WITH ONE.

"The first proposal was essentially different and inferior to the second."—Inst., p. 171.

[FORMULE,—Not proper, because the preposition to is used with joint reference to the two adjectives different and inferior, which require different prepositions. But, according to Note 1st under Rule 22d, "When two terms connected are each to be extended and completed in sense by a third, they must both be such as will make sense with it." The sentence may be corrected thus: "The first proposal was essentially different from the second, and inferior to it."]

"A neuter verb implies the state a subject is in, without acting upon, or being acted upon, by another."—Alex. Murray's Gram., p. 30. "I answer, you may and ought to use stories and anecdotes."—Student's Manual, p. 220. "ORACLE, n. Any person or place where certain decisions are obtained."—Webster's Dict. "Forms of government may, and must be occasionally, changed."—Ld. Lyttelton. "I have, and pretend to be a tolerable judge."—Spect., No. 555. "Are we not lazy in our duties, or make a Christ of them?"—Baxter's Saints' Rest. "They may not express that idea which the author intends, but some other which only resembles, or is a-kin to it."—Blair's Rhet., p. 94. "We may, we ought therefore to read them with a distinguishing eye."—Ib., p. 352. "Compare their poverty, with what they might, and ought to possess."—Sedgwick's Econ., p. 95. "He is a much better grammarian than they are."—Murray's Key, 8vo, p. 211. "He was more beloved, but not so much admired as Cinthio."—Addison, ON MEDALS: in Priestly's Gram., p. 200. "Will it be urged, that the four gospels are as old, or even older than tradition?"—Bolingb. Phil. Es., iv, §19. "The court of Chancery frequently mitigates, and breaks the teeth of the common law."—Spectator, No. 564; Ware's Gram., p. 16. "Antony, coming along side of her ship, entered it without seeing or being seen by her."—Goldsmith's Rome, p. 160. "In candid minds, truth finds an entrance, and a welcome too."—Murray's Key, ii, 168. "In many designs, we may succeed and be miserable."—Ib., p. 169. "In many pursuits, we embark with pleasure, and land sorrowfully."—Ib., p. 170. "They are much greater gainers than I am by this unexpected event."—Ib., p. 211.

UNDER NOTE II.—HETEROGENEOUS TERMS.

"Athens saw them entering her gates and fill her academies."—Chazotte's Essay, p. 30. "We have neither forgot his past, nor despair of his future success."—Duncan's Cicero, p. 121. "Her monuments and temples had long been shattered or crumbled into dust."—Lit. Conv., p. 15. "Competition is excellent, and the vital principle in all these things."—DR.

LIEBER: ib., p. 64. "Whether provision should or not be made to meet this exigency."—ib., p. 128. "That our Saviour was divinely inspired, and endued with supernatural powers, are positions that are here taken for granted."—Murray's Gram., i. 206. "It would be much more eligible, to contract or enlarge their extent, by explanatory notes and observations, than by sweeping away our ancient landmarks, and setting up others."—ib., i. p. 30. "It is certainly much better, to supply the defects and abridge superfluities, by occasional notes and observations, than by disorganizing, or altering a system which has been so long established."—ib., i. 59. "To have only one tune, or measure, is not much better than having none at all"—Blair's Rhet., p. 126. "Facts too well known and obvious to be insisted on."—ib., p. 233. "In proportion as all these circumstances are happily chosen, and of a sublime kind."—ib., p. 41. "If the description be too general, and divested of circumstances."—Ibid. "He gained nothing further than to be commended."—Murray's Key, ii, 210. "I cannot but think its application somewhat strained, and out of place."—VETHAKE: Lit. Conv., p. 29. "Two negatives in the same clause, or referring to the same thing, destroy each other, and leave the sense affirmative."—Maunders Gram., p. 15. "Slates are stone and used to cover roofs of houses."—Webster's El. Spelling-Book, p. 47. "Every man of taste, and possessing an elevated mind, ought to feel almost the necessity of apologizing for the power he possesses."—Influence of Literature. Vol. ii, p. 122. "They very seldom trouble themselves with Enquiries, or making useful observations of their own."—Locke, on Ed., p. 376.

"We've both the field and honour won;

The foe is profligate, and run."—Hudibras, p. 93.

UNDER NOTE III.—IMPORT OF CONJUNCTIONS.

"The is sometimes used before adverbs in the comparative and superlative degree."—Lennie's Gram., p. 6; Bullions's, 8; Brace's, 9. "The definite article the is frequently applied to adverbs in the comparative and superlative degree."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 33; Ingersoll's, 33; Louth's, 14; Fisk's, 53; Merchant's, 24; and others. "Conjunctions usually connect verbs in the same mode or tense."—Sanborn's Gram., p. 137. "Conjunctions connect verbs in the same style, and usually in the same mode, tense, or form."—ib. "The ruins of Greece and Rome are but the monuments of her former greatness."—Day's Gram., p. 88. "In many of these cases, it is not improbable, but that the articles were used originally."—Priestley's Gram., p. 152. "I cannot doubt but that these objects are really what they appear to be."—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 85. "I question not but my reader will be as much pleased with it."—Spect., No. 535. "It is ten to one but my friend Peter is among them."—ib., No. 457. "I doubt not but such objections as these will be made."—Locke, on Education, p. 169. "I doubt not but it will appear in the perusal of the following sheets."—Buchanan's Syntax, p. vi. "It is not improbable, but that, in time, these different constructions may be appropriated to different uses."—Priestley's Gram., p. 156. "But to forget or to remember at pleasure, are equally beyond the power of man."—Idler, No. 72. "The nominative case follows the verb, in interrogative and imperative sentences."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, Vol. ii, p. 290. "Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive berries? either a vine, figs?"—James, iii, 12. "Whose characters are too profligate, that the managing of them should be of any consequence."—Swift, Examiner, No. 24. "You that are a step higher than a philosopher, a divine; yet have too much grace and wit than to be a bishop."—Pope, to Swift, Let. 80. "The terms rich or poor enter not into their language."—Robertson's America, Vol. i, p. 314. "This pause is but seldom or ever sufficiently dwelt upon."—Music of Nature, p. 181. "There would be no possibility of any such thing as human life and human happiness.”—Butler’s Anal., p. 110. “The multitude rebuked them, because they should hold their peace.”—Matt., xx, 21.

UNDER NOTE IV.—OF THE CONJUNCTION THAN.

“A metaphor is nothing else but a short comparison.”—Adam’s Gram., p. 243; Gould’s, 236. “There being no other dictator here but use.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 167. “This Construction is no otherwise known in English but by supplying the first or second Person Plural.”—Buchanan’s Syntax, p. xi. “Cyaxares was no sooner in the throne, but he was engaged in a terrible war.”—Rollin’s Hist., ii, 62. “Those classics contain little else but histories of murders.”—Am. Museum, v, 526. “Ye shall not worship any other except God.”—Sale’s Koran, p. 15. “Their relation, therefore, is not otherwise to be ascertained but by their place.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 260. “For he no sooner accosted her, but he gained his point.”—Burder’s Hist., i, 6. “And all the modern writers on this subject have done little else but translate them.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 336. “One who had no other aim, but to talk copiously and plausibly.”—Ib., p. 317. “We can refer it to no other cause but the structure of the eye.”—Ib., p. 46. “No more is required but singly an act of vision.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 171. “We find no more in its composition, but the particulars now mentioned.”—Ib., i, 48. “He pretends not to say, that it hath any other effect but to raise surprise.”—Ib., ii, 61. “No sooner was the princess dead, but he freed himself.”—Johnson’s Sketch of Morin. “Ought is an imperfect verb, for it has no other modification besides this one.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 113. “The verb is palpably nothing else but the tie.”—Neef’s Sketch, p. 66. “Does he mean that theism is capable of nothing else except being opposed to polytheism or atheism?”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 104. “Is it meant that theism is capable of nothing else besides being opposed to polytheism, or atheism?”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 307. “There is no other method of teaching that of which any one is ignorant, but by means of something already known”—DR. JOHNSON: Murray’s Gram., i, 163; Ingersoll’s, 214. “O fairest flower, no sooner blown but blasted!”—Milton’s Poems, p. 132. “Architecture and gardening cannot otherwise entertain the mind, but by raising certain agreeable emotions or feelings.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 318. “Or, rather, they are nothing else but nouns.”—British Gram., p. 95.

“As if religion were intended

For nothing else but to be mended.”—Hudibras, p. 11.

UNDER NOTE V.—RELATIVES EXCLUDE CONJUNCTIONS.

“To prepare the Jews for the reception of a prophet mightier than him, and whose shoes he was not worthy to bear.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 214. “Has this word which represents an action an object after it, and on which it terminates?”—Osborn’s Key, p. 3. “The stores of literature lie before him, and from which he may collect, for use, many lessons of wisdom.”—Knapp’s Lectures, p. 31. “Many and various great advantages of this Grammar, and which are wanting in others, might be enumerated.”—Greenleaf’s Gram., p. 6. “About the time of Solon, the Athenian legislator, the custom is said to have been introduced, and which still prevails, of writing in lines from left to right.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 19. “The fundamental rule of the construction of sentences, and into which all others might be resolved, undoubtedly is, to communicate, in the clearest and most natural order, the ideas which we mean to transfuse into the minds of others.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 120; Jamieson’s, 102. “He left a son of a singular character, and who behaved so ill that he was put in prison.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 221. “He discovered some qualities in the youth, of a disagreeable nature, and which to him were wholly unaccountable.”—Ib.,

p. 213. "An emphatical pause is made, after something has been said of peculiar moment, and on which we want ['desire' M.] to fix the hearer's attention."—Blair's Rhet., p. 331; Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 248. "But we have duplicates of each, agreeing in movement, though differing in measure, and which make different impressions on the ear."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 259.

UNDER NOTE VI.—OF THE WORD THAT.

"It will greatly facilitate the labours of the teacher, at the same time that it will relieve the pupil of many difficulties."—Frost's El. of E. Gram., p. 4. "At the same time that the pupil is engaged in the exercises just mentioned, it will be a proper time to study the whole Grammar in course."—Bullions, Prin. of E. Gram., Revised Ed., p. viii. "On the same ground that a participle and auxiliary are allowed to form a tense."—BEATTIE: Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 76. "On the same ground that the voices, moods, and tenses, are admitted into the English tongue."—Ib., p. 101. "The five examples last mentioned, are corrected on the same principle that the preceding examples are corrected."—Ib., p. 186; Ingersoll's Gram., 254. "The brazen age began at the death of Trajan, and lasted till the time that Rome was taken by the Goths."—Gould's Lat. Gram., p. 277. "The introduction to the Duodecimo Edition, is retained in this volume, for the same reason that the original introduction to the Grammar, is retained in the first volume."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, Vol. ii, p. iv. "The verb must also be of the same person that the nominative case is."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 16. "The adjective pronoun their, is plural for the same reason that who is."—Ib., p. 84. "The Sabellians could not justly be called Patripassians, in the same sense that the Noetians were so called."—Religious World, Vol. ii, p. 122. "This is one reason that we pass over such smooth language, without suspecting that it contains little or no meaning."—Murray's Gram., 8vo, p. 298. "The first place that both armies came in sight of each other was on the opposite banks of the river Apsus."—Goldsmith's Rome, p. 118. "At the very time that the author gave him the first book for his perusal."—Campbell's Rhetoric, Preface, p. iv. "Peter will sup at the time that Paul will dine."—Fosdick's De Sacy, p. 81. "Peter will be supping at the time that Paul will enter."—Ibid. "These, at the same time that they may serve as models to those who may wish to imitate them, will give me an opportunity to cast more light upon the principles of this book."—Ib., p. 115.

"Time was, like thee, they life possest,
And time shall be, that thou shalt rest."—Parnell; Mur. Seq., p. 241.

UNDER NOTE VII.—OF THE CORRESPONDENTS.

"Our manners should neither be gross, nor excessively refined."—Merchant's Gram., p. 11. "A neuter verb expresses neither action or passion, but being, or a state of being."—O. B. Peirce's Gram., p. 342. "The old books are neither English grammars, or grammars, in any sense of the English Language."—Ib., p. 378. "The author is apprehensive that his work is not yet as accurate and as much simplified as it may be."—Kirkham's Gram., p. 7. "The writer could not treat some topicks as extensively as was desirable."—Ib., p. 10. "Which would be a matter of such nicety, as no degree of human wisdom could regulate."—Murray's Gram., i, 26. "No undertaking is so great or difficult which he cannot direct."—Duncan's Cic., p. 126. "It is a good which neither depends on the will of others, nor on the affluence of external fortune."—Harris's Hermes, 299; Murray's Gram., i, 289. "Not only his estate, his reputation too has suffered by his misconduct."—Murray's Gram., i, 150; Ingersoll's, 238. "Neither do they extend as far as might be imagined at first view.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 350. “There is no language so poor, but it hath two or three past tenses.”—Ib., p. 82. “As far as this system is founded in truth, language appears to be not altogether arbitrary in its origin.”—Ib., p. 56. “I have not that command of these convulsions as is necessary.”—Spect., No. 474. “Conversation with such who know no arts which polish life.”—Ib., No. 480. “And which can be neither very lively or very forcible.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 78. “To that degree as to give proper names to rivers.”—Dr. Murray’s Hist of Lang., i, 327. “In the utter overthrow of such who hate to be reformed.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 443. “But still so much of it is retained, as greatly injures the uniformity of the whole.”—Priestley’s Gram., Pref., p. vii. “Some of them have gone to that height of extravagance, as to assert,” &c.—Ib., p. 91. “A teacher is confined—not more than a merchant, and probably not as much.”—Abbott’s Teacher, p. 27. “It shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.”—Matt., xii, 32. “Which no body presumes, or is so sanguine to hope.”—Swift, Drap. Let. v. “For the torrent of the voice, left neither time or power in the organs, to shape the words properly.”—Sheridan’s Elocution, p. 118. “That he may neither unnecessarily waste his voice by throwing out too much, or diminish his power by using too little.”—Ib., p. 123. “I have retained only such which appear most agreeable to the measures of Analogy.”—Littleton’s Dict., Pref. “He is both a prudent and industrious man.”—Day’s Gram., p. 70. “Conjunctions either connect words or sentences.”—Ib., pp. 81 and 101.

“Such silly girls who love to chat and play, Deserve no care, their time is thrown away.”—Tobitt’s Gram., p. 20.

“Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As to be hated needs but to be seen.”—POPE: Mur. Gram., ii, 17.

“Justice must punish the rebellious deed:
Yet punish so, as pity shall exceed.”—DRYDEN: in Joh. Dict.

UNDER NOTE VIII.—IMPROPER ELLIPSES.

“That, whose, and as relate to either persons or things.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 93. “Which and what, as adjectives, relate either to persons or things.”—Ib., p. 70. “Whether of a public or private nature.”—Adam’s Rhet., i, 43. “Which are included both among the public and private wrongs.”—Ib., i, 308. “I might extract both from the old and new testament numberless examples of induction.”—Ib., ii, 66. “Many verbs are used both in an active and neuter signification.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 30; Alger’s, 26; Guy’s, 21; Murray’s, 60. “Its influence is likely to be considerable, both on the morals, and taste of a nation.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 373. “The subject afforded a variety of scenes, both of the awful and tender kind.”—Ib., p. 439. “Restlessness of mind disqualifies us, both for the enjoyment of peace, and the performance of our duty.”—Murray’s Key, ii, 166; Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 10. “Adjective Pronouns are of a mixed nature, participating the properties both of pronouns and adjectives.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 55; Merchant’s, 43; Flint’s, 22. “Adjective Pronouns have the nature both of the adjective and the pronoun.”—Frost’s El. of Gram., p. 15. “Pronominal adjectives are a kind of compound part of speech, partaking the nature both of pronouns and adjectives.”—Nutting’s Gram., p. 36. “Nouns are used either in the singular or plural number.”—Blair’s Gram., p. 11. “The question is not, whether the nominative or accusative ought to follow the particles than and as; but, whether these particles are, in such particular cases, to be regarded as conjunctions or prepositions.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 204. “In English many verbs are used both as transitives and intransitives.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 83. “He sendeth rain both on the just and unjust.”—Guy’s Gram., p. 56. “A foot consists either of two or three syllables.”—Blair’s Gram., p.

118. "Because they participate the nature both of adverbs and conjunctions."—Murray's Gram., i, 116. "Surely, Romans, what I am now about to say, ought neither to be omitted nor pass without notice."—Duncan's Cicero, p. 196. "Their language frequently amounts, not only to bad sense, but non-sense."—Kirkham's Gram., p. 14. "Hence arises the necessity of a social state to man both for the unfolding, and exerting of his nobler faculties."—Sheridan's Elocution, p. 147. "Whether the subject be of the real or feigned kind."—Blair's Rhet., p. 454. "Not only was liberty entirely extinguished, but arbitrary power felt in its heaviest and most oppressive weight."—Ib., p. 249. "This rule is applicable also both to verbal Critics and Grammarians."—Hiley's Gram., p. 144. "Both the rules and exceptions of a language must have obtained the sanction of good usage."—Ib., p. 143.

CHAPTER X.—PREPOSITIONS.

The syntax of Prepositions consists, not solely or mainly in their power of governing the objective case, (though this alone is the scope which most grammarians have given it,) but in their adaptation to the other terms between which they express certain relations, such as appear by the sense of the words uttered.

RULE XXIII.—PREPOSITIONS.

Prepositions show the relations of words, and of the things or thoughts expressed by them: as; "He came from Rome to Paris, in the company of many eminent men, and passed with them through many cities"—Analectic Magazine.

"Ah! who can tell the triumphs of the mind,
By truth illumin'd, and by taste refin'd?"—Rogers.

EXCEPTION FIRST.

The preposition to, before an abstract infinitive, and at the head of a phrase which is made the subject of a verb, has no proper antecedent term of relation; as, "To learn to die, is the great business of life."—Dillwyn. "Nevertheless, to abide in the flesh, is more needful for you."—ST. PAUL: Phil., i, 24. "To be reduced to poverty, is a great affliction."

"Too much to know, is, to know nought but fame;
And every godfather can give a name."—Shakspeare.

EXCEPTION SECOND.

The preposition for, when it introduces its object before an infinitive, and the whole phrase is made the subject of a verb, has properly no antecedent term of relation; as, "For us to learn to die, is the great business of life."—"Nevertheless, for me to abide in the flesh, is more needful for you."—"For an old man to be reduced to poverty is a very great affliction."

"For man to tell how human life began,
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew?"—Milton.

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XXIII.

OBS. 1.—In parsing any ordinary preposition, the learner should name the two terms of the relation, and apply the foregoing rule, after the manner prescribed in Praxis 12th of this work. The principle is simple and etymological, being implied in the very definition of a preposition, yet not the less necessary to be given as a rule of syntax. Among tolerable writers, the prepositions exhibit more errors than any other equal number of words. This is probably owing to the careless manner in which they are usually slurred over in parsing. But the parsers, in general, have at least this excuse, that their text-books have taught them no better; they therefore call the preposition a preposition, and leave its use and meaning unexplained.

OBS. 2.—If the learner be at any loss to discover the true terms of relation, let him ask and answer two questions: first, with the interrogative what before the preposition, to find the antecedent; and then, with the same pronoun after the preposition, to find the subsequent term. These questions answered according to the sense, will always give the true terms. For example: “They dashed that rapid torrent through.”—Scott. Ques. What through? Ans. “Dashed through.” Ques. Through what? Ans. “Through that torrent.” For the meaning is—“They dashed through that rapid torrent.” If one term is perfectly obvious, (as it almost always is,) find the other in this way; as, “Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge.”—Psal., xix, 2. Ques. What unto day? Ans. “Uttereth unto day.” Ques. What unto night? Ans. “Showeth unto night” For the meaning is—“Day uttereth speech unto day, and night showeth knowledge unto night.” To parse rightly, is, to understand rightly; and what is well expressed, it is a shame to misunderstand or misinterpret. But sometimes the position of the two nouns is such, that it may require some reflection to find either; as,

“Or that choice plant, so grateful to the nose,
Which in I know not what far country grows.”—Churchill, p. 18.

OBS. 3.—When a preposition begins or ends a sentence or clause, the terms of relation, if both are given, are transposed; as, “To a studious man, action is a relief.”—Burgh. That is, “Action is a relief to a studious man.” “Science they [the ladies] do not pretend to.”—Id. That is, “They do not pretend to science.” “Until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of.”—Gen., xxviii, 15. The word governed by the preposition is always the subsequent term of the relation, however it may be placed; and if this be a relative pronoun, the transposition is permanent. The preposition, however, may be put before any relative, except that and as; and this is commonly thought to be its most appropriate place: as, “Until I have done that of which I have spoken to thee,” Of the placing of it last, Lowth says, “This is an idiom which our language is strongly inclined to,” Murray and others, “This is an idiom to which our language is strongly inclined:” while they all add, “it prevails in common conversation, and suits very well with the familiar style in writing; but the placing of the preposition before the relative, is more graceful, as well as more perspicuous, and agrees much better with the solemn and elevated style.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 95; Murray’s, 8vo, p. 200; Fisk’s, 141; R. C. Smiths, 167; Ingersoll’s, 227; Churchill’s, 150.

OBS. 4.—The terms of relation between which a preposition may be used, are very various. The former or antecedent term may be a noun, an adjective, a pronoun, a verb, a participle, or an adverb: and, in some instances, we find not only one preposition put before an other, but even a conjunction or an interjection used on this side; as, “Because of offences.”—“Alas for him!”—The latter or subsequent term, which is the word governed by the preposition, may be a noun, a pronoun, a pronominal adjective, an infinitive verb, or an imperfect or preperfect participle: and, in some instances, prepositions appear to govern adverbs, or even whole phrases. See the observations in the tenth chapter of Etymology.

OBS. 5.—Both terms of the relation are usually expressed; though either of them may, in some instances, be left out, the other being given: as, (1.) THE FORMER—“All shall know me, [reckoning] FROM the least to the greatest.”—Heb., viii, 11. [I say] “IN a word, it would entirely defeat the purpose.”—Blair. “When I speak of reputation, I mean not only [reputation] IN regard to knowledge, but [reputation] IN regard to the talent of communicating knowledge.”—Campbell's Rhet., p. 163; Murray's Gram., i, 360. (2.) THE LATTER—“Opinions and ceremonies [which] they would die FOR.”—Locke. “IN [those] who obtain defence, or [in those] who defend.”—Pope. “Others are more modest than [what] this comes TO.”—Collier's Antoninus, p. 66.

OBS. 6.—The only proper exceptions to the foregoing rule, are those which are inserted above, unless the abstract infinitive used as a predicate is also to be excepted; as, “In both, to reason right, is to submit.”—Pope. But here most if not all grammarians would say, the verb “is” is the antecedent term, or what their syntax takes to govern the infinitive. The relation, however, is not such as when we say, “He is to submit,” that is, “He must submit, or ought to submit,” but, perhaps, to insist on a different mode of parsing the more separable infinitive or its preposition, would be a needless refinement. Yet some regard ought to be paid to the different relations which the infinitive may bear to this finite verb. For want of a due estimate of this difference, the following sentence is, I think, very faulty: “The great business of this life is to prepare, and qualify us, for the enjoyment of a better.”—Murray's Gram., Vol. i, p. 373. If the author meant to tell what our great business in this life is, he should rather have said: “The great business of this life is, to prepare and qualify ourselves for the enjoyment of a better.”

OBS. 7.—In relation to the infinitive, Dr. Adam remarks, that, “To in English is often taken absolutely; as, To confess the truth; To proceed; To conclude.”—Latin and Eng. Gram., p. 182. But the assertion is not entirely true; nor are his examples appropriate; for what he and many other grammarians call the infinitive absolute, evidently depends on something understood; and the preposition is, surely, in no instance independent of what follows it, and is therefore never entirely absolute. Prepositions are not to be supposed to have no antecedent term, merely because they stand at the head of a phrase or sentence which is made the subject of a verb; for the phrase or sentence itself often contains that term, as in the following example: “In what way mind acts upon matter, is unknown.” Here in shows the relation between acts and way; because the expression suggests, that mind acts in some way upon matter.

OBS. 8.—The second exception above, wherever it is found applicable, cancels the first; because it introduces an antecedent term before the preposition to, as may be seen by the examples given. It is questionable too, whether both of them may not also be cancelled in an other way; that is, by transposition and the introduction of the pronoun it for the nominative: as, “It is a great affliction, to be reduced to poverty.”—“It is hard FOR man to tell how human life began.”—“Nevertheless it is more needful for you, THAT I should abide in the flesh.” We cannot so well say, “It is more needful for you, FOR me to abide in the flesh;” but we may say, “It is, on your account, more needful FOR me to abide in the flesh.” If these, and other similar examples, are not to be accounted additional instances in which to and for, and also the conjunction that, are without any proper antecedent terms, we must suppose these particles to show the relation between what precedes and what follows them.

OBS. 9.—The preposition (as its name implies) precedes the word which it governs. Yet there are some exceptions. In the familiar style, a preposition governing a relative or an interrogative pronoun, is often separated from its object, and connected with the other term of relation; as, “Whom did he speak to?” But it is more dignified, and in general more graceful, to place the preposition before the pronoun; as, “To whom did he speak?” The relatives that and as, if governed by a preposition, must always precede it. In some instances, the pronoun must be supplied in parsing; as, “To set off the banquet [that or which] he gives notice of.”—Philological Museum, i, 454. Sometimes the objective word is put first because it is emphatical; as, “This the great understand, this they pique themselves upon.”—Art of Thinking, p. 66. Prepositions of more than one syllable, are sometimes put immediately after their objects, especially in poetry; as, “Known all the world over.”—Walker’s Particles p. 291. “The thing is known all Lesbos over.”—Ibid.

“Wild Carron’s lonely woods among.”—Langhorne.

“Thy deep ravines and dells along.”—Sir W. Scott.

OBS. 10.—Two prepositions sometimes come together; as, “Lambeth is over against Westminster abbey.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 118. “And from before the lustre of her face, White break the clouds away.”—Thomson. “And the meagre fiend Blows mildew from between his shrivell’d lips.”—Cowper. These, in most instances, though they are not usually written as compounds, appear naturally to coalesce in their syntax, as was observed in the tenth chapter of Etymology, and to express a sort of compound relation between the other terms with which they are connected. When such is their character, they ought to be taken together in parsing; for, if we parse them separately, we must either call the first an adverb, or suppose some very awkward ellipsis. Some instances however occur, in which an object may easily be supplied to the former word, and perhaps ought to be; as, “He is at liberty to sell it at [a price] above a fair remuneration.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 258. “And I wish they had been at the bottom of the ditch I pulled you out of, instead of [being] upon my back.”—Sandford and Merton, p. 29. In such examples as the following, the first preposition, of, appears to me to govern the plural noun which ends the sentence; and the intermediate ones, from and to, to have both terms of their relation understood: “Iambic verse consists of from two to six feet; that is, of from four to twelve syllables.”—Blair’s Gram., p. 119. “Trochaic verse consists of from one to three feet.”—Ibid. The meaning is—“Iambic verse consists of feet varying in number from two to six; or (it consists) of syllables varying from four to twelve.”—“Trochaic verse consists of feet varying from one foot to three feet.”

OBS. 11.—One antecedent term may have several prepositions depending on it, with one object after each, or more than one after any, or only one after both or all; as, “A declaration for virtue and against vice.”—Butler’s Anal., p. 157. “A positive law against all fraud, falsehood, and violence, and for, or in favour of, all justice and truth.” “For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things.”—Bible. In fact, not only may the relation be simple in regard to all or any of the words, but it may also be complex in regard to all or any of them. Hence several different prepositions, whether they have different antecedent terms or only one and the same, may refer either jointly or severally to one object or to more. This follows, because not only may either antecedents or objects be connected by conjunctions, but prepositions also admit of this construction, with or without a connecting of their antecedents. Examples: “They are capable of, and placed in, different stations in the society of mankind.”—Butler’s Anal., p. 115. “Our perception of vice and ill desert arises from, and is the result of, a comparison of actions with the nature and capacities of the agent.”—Ib., p. 279. “And the design of this chapter is, to inquire how far this is the case; how far, over and above the moral nature which God has given us, and our natural notion of him, as righteous governor of those his creatures to whom he has given this nature; I say, how far, besides this, the principles and beginnings of a moral government over the world may be discerned, notwithstanding and amidst all the confusion and disorder of it.”—Ib., p. 85.

OBS. 12.—The preposition into, expresses a relation produced by motion or change; and in, the same relation, without reference to motion as having produced it: hence, “to walk into the garden,” and, “to walk in the garden,” are very different in meaning. “It is disagreeable to find a word split into two by a pause.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 83. This appears to be right in sense, but because brevity is desirable in unemphatic particles, I suppose most persons would say, “split in two.” In the Bible we have the phrases, “rent in twain,”—“cut in pieces,”—“brake in pieces the rocks,”—“brake all their bones in pieces,”—“brake them to pieces,”—“broken to pieces,”—“pulled in pieces.” In all these, except the first, to may perhaps be considered preferable to in; and into would be objectionable only because it is longer and less simple. “Half of them dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.”—SHAK.: Kames, ii, 246.

OBS. 13.—Between, or betwixt, is used in reference to two things or parties; among, or amongst, amid, or amidst, in reference to a greater number, or to something by which an other may be surrounded: as, “Thou pendulum betwixt a smile and tear.”—Byron. “The host between the mountain and the shore.”—Id. “To meditate amongst decay, and stand a ruin amidst ruins.”—Id. In the following examples, the import of these prepositions is not very accurately regarded; “The Greeks wrote in capitals, and left no spaces between their words.”—Wilson’s Essay, p. 6. This construction may perhaps be allowed, because the spaces by which words are now divided, occur severally between one word and an other; but the author might as well have said, “and left no spaces to distinguish their words.” “There was a hunting match agreed upon betwixt a lion, an ass, and a fox.”—L’Estrange. Here by or among would, I think, be better than betwixt, because the partners were more than two. “Between two or more authors, different readers will differ, exceedingly, as to the preference in point of merit.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 162; Jamieson’s, 40; Murray’s Gram., i, 360. Say, “Concerning two or more authors,” because between is not consistent with the word more. “Rising one among another in the greatest confusion and disorder.”—Spect., No. 476. Say, “Rising promiscuously,” or, “Rising all at once,” for among is not consistent with the distributive term one an other.

OBS. 14.—Of two prepositions coming together between the same terms of relation, and sometimes connected in the same construction, I have given several plain examples in this chapter, and in the tenth chapter of Etymology, a very great number, all from sources sufficiently respectable. But, in many of our English grammars, there is a stereotyped remark on this point, originally written by Priestley, which it is proper here to cite, as an other specimen of the Doctor’s hastiness, and of the blind confidence of certain compilers and copyists: “Two different prepositions must be improper in the same construction, and in the same sentence: [as,] The combat between thirty Britons, against twenty English. Smollett’s Voltaire, Vol. 2, p. 292.”—Priestley’s Gram., p. 156. Lindley Murray and others have the same remark, with the example altered thus: “The combat between thirty French against twenty English.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 200; Smith’s New Gram., 167: Fisk’s, 142; Ingersoll’s, 228. W. Allen has it thus: “Two different prepositions in the same construction are improper; as, a combat between twenty French against thirty English.”—Elements of E. Gram., p. 179. He gives the odds to the latter party. Hiley, with no expense of thought, first takes from Murray, as he from Priestley, the useless remark, “Different relations, and different senses, must be expressed by different prepositions;” and then adds, “One relation must not, therefore, be expressed by two different prepositions in the same clause; thus, ‘The combat between thirty French against thirty English,’ should be, ‘The combat between thirty French and thirty English.’”—Hiley’s E. Gram., p. 97. It is manifest that the error of this example is not in the use of two prepositions, nor is there any truth or fitness in the note or notes made on it by all these critics; for had they said, “The combat of thirty French against twenty English,” there would still be two prepositions, but where would be the impropriety, or where the sameness of construction, which they speak of? Between is incompatible with against, only because it requires two parties or things for its own regimen; as, “The combat between thirty Frenchmen and twenty Englishmen.” This is what Smollett should have written, to make sense with the word “between.”

OBS. 15.—With like implicitness, Hiley excepted, these grammarians and others have adopted from Lowth an observation in which the learned doctor has censured quite too strongly the joint reference of different prepositions to the same objective noun: to wit, “Some writers separate the preposition from its noun, in order to connect different prepositions to the same noun; as, ‘To suppose the zodiac and planets to be efficient of, and antecedent to, themselves.’ Bentley, Sermon. 6. This [construction], whether in the familiar or the solemn style, is always inelegant; and should never be admitted, but in forms of law, and the like; where fullness and exactness of expression must take place of every other consideration.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 96; Murray’s, i, 200; Smith’s, 167; Fisk’s, 141; Ingersoll’s, 228; Alger’s, 67; Pickett’s, 207. Churchill even goes further, both strengthening the censure, and disallowing the exception: thus, “This, whether in the solemn or in the familiar style, is always inelegant, and should never be admitted. It is an awkward shift for avoiding the repetition of a word, which might be accomplished without it by any person who has the least command of language.”—New Gram., p. 341. Yet, with all their command of language, not one of these gentlemen has told us how the foregoing sentence from Bentley may be amended; while many of their number not only venture to use different prepositions before the same noun, but even to add a phrase which puts that noun in the nominative case: as, “Thus, the time of the infinitive may be before, after, or the same as, the time of the governing verb, according as the thing signified by the infinitive is supposed to be before, after, or present with, the thing denoted by the governing verb.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 191; Ingersoll’s, 260; R. C. Smith’s, 159.

OBS. 16.—The structure of this example not only contradicts palpably, and twice over, the doctrine cited above, but one may say of the former part of it, as Lowth, Murray, and others do, (in no very accurate English,) of the text 1 Cor., ii, 9: “There seems to be an impropriety in this sentence, in which the same noun serves in a double capacity, performing at the same time the offices both of the nominative and objective cases.”—Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 224. See also Lowth’s Gram., p. 73; Ingersoll’s, 277; Fisk’s, 149; Smith’s, 185. Two other examples, exactly like that which is so pointedly censured above, are placed by Murray under his thirteenth rule for the comma; and these likewise, with all faithfulness, are copied by Ingersoll, Smith, Alger, Kirkham, Comly, Russell, and I know not how many more. In short, not only does this rule of their punctuation include the construction in question; but the following exception to it, which is remarkable for its various faults, or thorough faultiness, is applicable to no other: “Sometimes, when the word with which the last preposition agrees, is single, it is better to omit the comma before it: as, ‘Many states were in alliance with, and under the protection of Rome.’”—Murray’s Gram., p. 272; Smith’s, 190; Ingersoll’s, 284; Kirkham’s, 215; Alger’s, 79; Alden’s, 149; Abel Flint’s, 103; Russell’s, 115. But the blunders and contradictions on this point, end not here. Dr. Blair happened most unlearnedly to say, “What is called splitting of particles, or separating a preposition from the noun which it governs, is always to be avoided. As if I should say, ‘Though virtue borrows no assistance from, yet it may often be accompanied by, the advantages of fortune.’”—Lect. XII, p. 112. This too, though the author himself did not always respect the rule, has been thought worthy to be copied, or stolen, with all its faults! See Jamieson’s Rhetoric, p. 93; and Murray’s Octavo Gram., p. 319.

OBS. 17.—Dr. Lowth says, “The noun aversion, (that is, a turning away,) as likewise the adjective averse, seems to require the preposition from after it; and not so properly to admit of to, or for, which are often used with it.”—Gram., p. 98. But this doctrine has not been adopted by the later grammarians: “The words averse and aversion (says Dr. Campbell) are more properly construed with to than with from. The examples in favour of the latter preposition, are beyond comparison outnumbered by those in favour of the former.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 201; Fisk’s, 142; Ingersoll’s, 229. This however must be understood only of mental aversion. The expression of Milton, “On the coast averse from entrance,” would not be improved, if from were changed to to. So the noun exception, and the verb to except, are sometimes followed by from, which has regard to the Latin particle ex, with which the word commences; but the noun at least is much more frequently, and perhaps more properly, followed by to. Examples: “Objects of horror must be excepted from the foregoing theory.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 268. “From which there are but two exceptions, both of them rare.”—Ib., ii, 89. “To the rule that fixes the pause after the fifth portion, there is one exception, and no more.”—Ib., ii, 84. “No exception can be taken to the justness of the figure.”—Ib., ii, 37. “Originally there was no exception from the rule.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 58. “From this rule there is mostly an exception.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 269. “But to this rule there are many exceptions.”—Ib., i, 240. “They are not to be regarded as exceptions from the rule,”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 363.

OBS. 18.—After correcting the example. “He knows nothing on [of] it,” Churchill remarks, “There seems to be a strange perverseness among the London vulgar in perpetually substituting on for of, and of for on.”—New Gram., p. 345. And among the expressions which Campbell censures under the name of vulgarism, are the following: “‘Tis my humble request you will be particular in speaking to the following points.”—Guardian, No. 57. “The preposition ought to have been on. Precisely of the same stamp is the on’t for of it, so much used by one class of writers.”—Philosophy of Rhet., p. 217. So far as I have observed, the use of of for on has never been frequent; and that of on for of, or on’t for of it, though it may never have been a polite custom, is now a manifest archaism, or imitation of ancient usage. “And so my young Master, whatever comes on’t, must have a Wife look’d out for him.”—Locke, on Ed., p. 378. In Saxon, on was put for more than half a dozen of our present prepositions. The difference between of and on or upon, appears in general to be obvious enough; and yet there are some phrases in which it is not easy to determine which of these words ought to be preferred: as, “Many things they cannot lay hold on at once.”—HOOKER: Joh. Dict. “Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it.”—2 SAM.: ib. “Rather thou shouldst lay hold upon him.”—BEN JONSON: ib. “Let them find courage to lay hold on the occasion.”—MILTON: ib. “The hand is fitted to lay hold of objects.”—RAY: ib. “My soul took hold on thee.”—ADDISON: ib. “To lay hold of this safe, this only method of cure.”—ATTERBURY: ib. “And give fortune no more hold of him.”—DRYDEN: ib. “And his laws take the surest hold of us.”—TILLOTSON: ib. “It will then be impossible you can have any hold upon him.”—SWIFT: ib. “The court of Rome gladly laid hold on all the opportunities.”—Murray’s Key, ii, p. 198. “Then did the officer lay hold of him and execute him.”—Ib., ii, 219. “When one can lay hold upon some noted fact.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 311. “But when we would lay firm hold of them.”—Ib., p. 28. “An advantage which every one is glad to lay hold of.”—Ib., p. 75. “To have laid fast hold of it in his mind.”—Ib., p. 94. “I would advise them to lay aside their common-places, and to think closely of their subject.”—Ib., p. 317. “Did they not take hold of your fathers?”—Zech., i, 6. “Ten men shall take hold of the skirt of one that is a Jew.”—Ib., viii, 23. “It is wrong to say, either ‘to lay hold of a thing,’ or ‘to take hold on it.’”—Blair’s Gram., p. 101. In the following couplet, on seems to have been preferred only for a rhyme:

“Yet, lo! in me what authors have to brag on!
Reduc’d at last to hiss in my own dragon.”—Pope.

OBS. 19.—In the allowable uses of prepositions, there may perhaps be some room for choice; so that what to the mind of a critic may not appear the fittest word, may yet be judged not positively ungrammatical. In this light I incline to view the following examples: “Homer’s plan is still more defective, upon another account.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 299. Say—“on an other account.” “It was almost eight of the clock before I could leave that variety of objects.”—Spectator, No. 454. Present usage requires—“eight o’clock.” “The Greek and Latin writers had a considerable advantage above us.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 114. “The study of oratory has this advantage above that of poetry.”—Ib., p. 338. “A metaphor has frequently an advantage above a formal comparison.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., p. 150. This use of above seems to be a sort of Scotticism: an Englishman, I think, would say—“advantage over us,” &c. “Hundreds have all these crowding upon them from morning to night.”—Abbott’s Teacher, p. 33. Better—“from morning till night.” But Horne Tooke observes, “We apply TO indifferently to place or time; but TILL to time only, and never to place. Thus we may say, ‘From morn TO night th’ eternal larum rang;’ or, ‘From morn TILL night.’ &c.”—Diversions of Purley, i, 284.

NOTES TO RULE XXIII.

NOTE I.—Prepositions must be chosen and employed agreeably to the usage and idiom of the language, so as rightly to express the relations intended. Example of error: “By which we arrive to the last division.”—Richard W. Green’s Gram., p. vii. Say,—“arrive at.”

NOTE II.—Those prepositions which are particularly adapted in meaning to two objects, or to more, ought to be confined strictly to the government of such terms only as suit them. Example of error: “What is Person? It is the medium of distinction between the speaker, the object addressed or spoken to, and the object spoken of.”—O. B. Peirce’s Gram., p. 34. “Between three” is an incongruity; and the text here cited is bad in several other respects.

NOTE III.—An ellipsis or omission of the preposition is inelegant, except where long and general use has sanctioned it, and made the relation sufficiently intelligible. In the following sentence, of is needed: “I will not flatter you, that all I see in you is worthy” love.”—Shakspeare. The following requires from: “Ridicule is banished France, and is losing ground in England.”—Kames, El. of Crit., i, 106.

NOTE IV.—The insertion of a preposition is also inelegant, when the particle is needless, or when it only robs a transitive verb of its proper regimen; as, “The people of England may congratulate to themselves.”—DRYDEN: Priestley’s Gram., p. 163. “His servants ye are, to whom ye obey.”—Rom., vi, 16.

NOTE V.—The preposition and its object should have that position in respect to other words, which will render the sentence the most perspicuous and agreeable. Examples of error: “Gratitude is a forcible and active principle in good and generous minds.”—Murray’s Key, 8vo, p. 169. Better: “In good and generous minds, gratitude is a forcible and active principle.” “By a single stroke, he knows how to reach the heart.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 439. Better: “He knows how to reach the heart by a single stroke.”

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX UNDER RULE XXIII.

EXAMPLES UNDER NOTE I.—CHOICE OF PREPOSITIONS.

“You have bestowed your favours to the most deserving persons.”—Swift, on E. Tongue.

[FORMULE.—Not proper because the relation between have bestowed and persons is not correctly expressed by the preposition to. But, according to Note 1st under Rule 23d, “Prepositions must be chosen and employed agreeably to the usage and idiom of the language, so as rightly to express the relations intended.” This relation would be better expressed by upon; thus, “You have bestowed your favours upon the most deserving persons.”]

“But to rise beyond that, and overtop the crowd, is given to few.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 351. “This also is a good sentence, and gives occasion to no material remark.”—Ib., p. 201. “Though Cicero endeavours to give some reputation of the elder Cato, and those who were his cotemporaries.”—Ib., p. 245. “The change that was produced on eloquence, is beautifully described in the Dialogue.”—Ib., p. 249. “Without carefully attending to the variation which they make upon the idea.”—Ib., p. 367. “All of a sudden, you are transported into a lofty palace.”—Hazlitt’s Lect., p. 70. “Alike independent on one another.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 398. “You will not think of them as distinct processes going on independently on each other,”—Channing’s Self-Culture, p. 15. “Though we say, to depend on, dependent on, and independent on, we say, independently of.”—Churchill’s Gram., p. 348. “Independently on the rest of the sentence.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 78; Guy’s, 88; Murray’s, i, 145 and 184; Ingersoll’s, 150; Frost’s, 46; Fisk’s, 125; Smith’s New Gram., 156; Gould’s Lat. Gram., 209; Nixon’s Parser, 65. “Because they stand independent on the rest of the sentence.”—Fisk’s Gram., p. 111. “When a substantive is joined with a participle in English independently in the rest of the sentence.”—Adam’s Lat. and Eng. Gram., Boston Ed. of 1803, p. 213; Albany Ed. of 1820, p. 166. “Conjunction, comes of the two Latin words con, together, and jungo, to join.”—Merchant’s School Gram., p. 19. “How different to this is the life of Fulvia!”—Addison’s Spect., No. 15. “Loved is a participle or adjective, derived of the word love.”—Dr. Ash’s Gram., p. 27. “But I would inquire at him, what an office is?”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 463. “For the capacity is brought unto action.”—Ib., iii, 420. “In this period, language and taste arrive to purity.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 94. “And should you not aspire at distinction in the republick of letters.”—Kirkham’s Gram., p.

13. "Delivering you up to the synagogues, and in prisons."—Keith's Evidences, p. 55. "One that is kept from falling in a ditch, is as truly saved, as he that is taken out of one."—Barclay's Works, i, 312. "The best on it is, they are but a sort of French Hugonots."—Addison, Spect., No. 62. "These last Ten Examples are indeed of a different Nature to the former."—Johnson's Gram. Com., p. 333. "For the initiation of students in the principles of the English language."—ANNUAL REVIEW: Murray's Gram., ii, 299. "Richelieu profited of every circumstance which the conjuncture afforded,"—Bolingbroke, on Hist., p. 177. "In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life."—Murray's Key, ii, 165. "In order to the carrying on its several parts into execution."—Butler's Analogy, p. 192. "His abhorrence to the superstitious figure."—HUME: Priestley's Gram., p. 164. "Thy prejudice to my cause."—DRYDEN: ib., p. 164. "Which is found among every species of liberty."—HUME: ib., p. 169. "In a hilly region to the north of Jericho."—Milman's Jews, Vol. i, p. 8. "Two or more singular nouns, coupled with AND, require a verb and pronoun in the plural."—Lennie's Gram., p. 83.

"Books should to one of these four ends conduce,
For wisdom, piety, delight, or use."—Denham, p. 239.

UNDER NOTE II.—TWO OBJECTS OR MORE.

"The Anglo-Saxons, however, soon quarrelled between themselves for precedence."—Constable's Miscellany, xx, p. 59. "The distinctions between the principal parts of speech are founded in nature."—Webster's Essays, p. 7. "I think I now understand the difference between the active, passive, and neuter verbs."—Ingersoll's Gram., p. 124. "Thus a figure including a space between three lines, is the real as well as nominal essence of a triangle."—Locke's Essay, p. 303. "We must distinguish between an imperfect phrase, a simple sentence, and a compound sentence."—Lowth's Gram., p. 117; Murray's, i, 267; Ingersoll's, 280; Guy's, 97. "The Jews are strictly forbidden by their law, to exercise usury among one another."—Sale's Koran, p. 177. "All the writers have distinguished themselves among one another."—Addison. "This expression also better secures the systematic uniformity between the three cases."—Nutting's Gram., p. 98. "When a disjunctive occurs between two or more Infinitive Modes, or clauses, the verb must be singular."—Jaudon's Gram., p. 95. "Several nouns or pronouns together in the same case, not united by and, require a comma between each."—Blair's Gram., p. 115. "The difference between the several vowels is produced by opening the mouth differently, and placing the tongue in a different manner for each."—Churchill's Gram., p. 2. "Thus feet composed of syllables, being pronounced with a sensible interval between each, make a more lively impression than can be made by a continued sound."—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. ii, p. 32. "The superlative degree implies a comparison between three or more."—Smith's Productive Gram., p. 51. "They are used to mark a distinction between several objects."—Levizac's Gram., p. 85.

UNDER NOTE III.—OMISSION OF PREPOSITIONS.

"This would have been less worthy notice."—Churchill's Gram., p. 197. "But I passed it, as a thing unworthy my notice."—Werter. "Which, in compliment to me, perhaps, you may, one day, think worthy your attention."—Bucke's Gram., p. 81. "To think this small present worthy an introduction to the young ladies of your very elegant establishment."—Ib., p. iv. "There are but a few miles portage."—Jefferson's Notes on Virginia, p. 17. "It is worthy notice, that our mountains are not solitary."—Ib., p. 26. "It is of about one hundred feet diameter."—Ib., 33. "Entering a hill a quarter or half a mile."—Ib., p. 47. "And herself seems passing to that awful dissolution, whose issue is not given human foresight to scan.”—Ib., p. 100. “It was of a spheroidal form, of about forty feet diameter at the base, and had been of about twelve feet altitude.”—Ib., p. 143. “Before this it was covered with trees of twelve inches diameter, and round the base was an excavation of five feet depth and width.”—Ibid. “Then thou mayest eat grapes thy fill at thine own pleasure.”—Deut., xxiii, 24. “Then he brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary.”—Ezekiel, xlv, 1. “They will bless God that he has peopled one half the world with a race of freemen.”—Webster’s Essays, p. 94. “What use can these words be, till their meaning is known?”—Town’s Analysis, p. 7. “The tents of the Arabs now are black, or a very dark colour.”—The Friend, Vol. v, p. 265. “They may not be unworthy the attention of young men.”—Kirkham’s Elocution, p. 157. “The pronoun that is frequently applied to persons, as well as things.”—Merchant’s Gram., p. 87. “And who is in the same case that man is.”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 148. “He saw a flaming stone, apparently about four feet diameter.”—The Friend, vii, 409. “Pliny informs us, that this stone was the size of a cart.”—Ibid. “Seneca was about twenty years of age in the fifth year of Tiberius, when the Jews were expelled Rome.”—Seneca’s Morals, p. 11. “I was prevented* reading a letter which would have undeceived me.”—Hawkesworth, Adv., No. 54. “If the problem can be solved, we may be pardoned the inaccuracy of its demonstration.”—Booth’s Introd., p. 25. “The army must of necessity be the school, not of honour, but effeminacy.”—Brown’s Estimate, i. 65. “Afraid of the virtue of a nation, in its opposing bad measures.”—Ib., i, 73. “The uniting them in various ways, so as to form words, would be easy.”—Music of Nature, p. 34. “I might be excused taking any more notice of it.”—Watson’s Apology, p. 65. “Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.”—Matt., xxiv, 42. “Here, not even infants were spared the sword.”—Millvaine’s Lectures, p. 313. “To prevent men turning aside to corrupt modes of worship.”—Calvin’s Institutes, B. I, Ch. 12, Sec. 1. “God expelled them the Garden of Eden.”—Burder’s Hist., Vol. i, p. 10. “Nor could he refrain expressing to the senate the agonies of his mind”—Art of Thinking, p. 123. “Who now so strenuously opposes the granting him any new powers.”—Duncan’s Cicero, p. 127. “That the laws of the censors have banished him the forum.”—Ib., p. 140. “We read not that he was degraded his office any other way.”—Barclay’s Works, iii, 149. “To all whom these presents shall come, Greeting.”—Hutchinson’s Mass., i, 459. “On the 1st, August, 1834.”—British Act for the Abolition of Slavery.

“Whether you had not some time in your life
Err’d in this point which now you censure him.”—Shak.

UNDER NOTE IV.—OF NEEDLESS PREPOSITIONS.

“And the apostles and elders came together to consider of this matter.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 481. “And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter.”—Acts, xv, 6. “Adjectives in our Language have neither Case, Gender, nor Number; the only Variation they have is by Comparison.”—Buchanan’s Gram., p. 27. “It is to you, that I am indebted for this privilege;’ that is, ‘to you am I indebted;’ or, ‘It is to you to whom I am indebted.’”—Sanborn’s Gram., p. 232. “Books is a noun, of the third person, plural

* A few of the examples under this head might be corrected equally well by some preceding note of a more specific character; for a general note against the improper omission of prepositions, of course includes those principles of grammar by which any particular prepositions are to be inserted. So the examples of error which were given in the tenth chapter of Etymology, might nearly all of them have been placed under the first note in this tenth chapter of Syntax. But it was thought best to illustrate every part of this volume, by some examples of false grammar, out of the infinite number and variety with which our literature abounds.

number, of neuter gender,”—Ingersoll’s Gram., p. 15. “Brother’s is a common substantive, of the masculine gender, the third person, the singular number, and in the possessive case.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 229. “Virtue’s is a common substantive, of the third person, the singular number, and in the possessive case.”—Id., i, 228. “When the authorities on one side greatly preponderate, it is in vain to oppose the prevailing usage.”—Campbell’s Rhet., p. 173; Murray’s Gram., i, 367. “A captain of a troop of banditti, had a mind to be plundering of Rome.”—Collier’s Antoninus, p. 51. “And, notwithstanding of its Verbal power, we have added the to and other signs of exertion.”—Booth’s Introd., p. 28. “Some of these situations are termed CASES, and are expressed by additions to the Noun instead of by separate words.”—Id., p. 33. “Is it such a fast that I have chosen, that a man should afflict his soul for a day, and to bow down his head like a bulrush?”—Bacon’s Wisdom, p. 65. “And this first emotion comes at last to be awakened by the accidental, instead of, by the necessary antecedent.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 17. “At about the same time, the subjugation of the Moors was completed.”—Balbi’s Geog., p. 269. “God divided between the light and between the darkness.”—Burder’s Hist., i, 1. “Notwithstanding of this, we are not against outward significations of honour.”—Barclay’s Works, i, 242. “Whether these words and practices of Job’s friends, be for to be our rule.”—Id., i, 243. “Such verb cannot admit of an objective case after it.”—Lowth’s Gram., “For which God is now visibly punishing of these Nations.”—Right of Tythes, “In this respect, Tasso yields to no poet, except to Homer.”—Blair’s Rhet., “Notwithstanding of the numerous panegyrics on the ancient English liberty.”—HUME: Priestley’s Gram., “Their efforts seemed to anticipate on the spirit, which became so general afterwards.”—Id., ib., p. 167.

UNDER NOTE V.—THE PLACING OF THE WORDS.

“But how short are my expressions of its excellency!”—Baxter. “There is a remarkable union in his style, of harmony with ease.”—Blair’s Rhet., “It disposes in the most artificial manner, of the light and shade, for viewing every thing to the best advantage.”—“Aristotle too holds an eminent rank among didactic writers for his brevity.”—“In an introduction, correctness should be carefully studied in the expression.”—“Precision is to be studied, above all things in laying down a method.”—“Which shall make the impression on the mind of something that is one, whole and entire.”—“At the same time, there are some defects which must be acknowledged in the Odyssey.”—“Beauties, however, there are, in the concluding books, of the tragic kind.”—“These forms of conversation by degrees multiplied and grew troublesome.”—Spectator, No. 119. “When she has made her own choice, for form’s sake, she sends a congé-d’-élire to her friends.”—“Let us endeavour to establish to ourselves an interest in him who holds the reins of the whole creation in his hand.”—“Let us endeavour to establish to ourselves an interest in him, who, in his hand, holds the reins of the whole creation.”—Kames, El. of Crit., ii, 53. “The most frequent measure next to this in English poetry is that of eight syllables.”—Blair’s Gram., “To introduce as great a variety as possible of cadences.”—Jamieson’s Rhet., “He addressed several exhortations to them suitable to their circumstances.”—Murray’s Key, ii, “Habits must be acquired of temperance and self-denial.”—“In reducing the rules prescribed to practice.”—Murray’s Gram., “But these parts must be so closely bound together as to make the impression upon the mind, of one object, not of many.”—Blair’s Rhet., “Errors are sometimes committed by the most distinguished writer, with respect to the use of shall and will”—Butler’s Pract. Gram.,

CHAPTER XI—INTERJECTIONS.

Interjections, being seldom any thing more than natural sounds or short words uttered independently, can hardly be said to have any syntax; but since some rule is necessary to show the learner how to dispose of them in parsing, a brief axiom for that purpose, is here added, which completes our series of rules: and, after several remarks on this canon, and on the common treatment of Interjections, this chapter is made to embrace Exercises upon all the other parts of speech, that the chapters in the Key may correspond to those of the Grammar.

RULE XXIV.—INTERJECTIONS.

Interjections have no dependent construction; they are put absolute, either alone, or with other words: as, “O! let not thy heart despise me.”—Dr. Johnson. “O cruel thou!”—Pope, Odys., B. xii, l. 333. “Ah wretched we, poets of earth!”—Cowley,

“Ah Dennis! Gildon ah! what ill-starr’d rage Divides a friendship long confirm’d by age?” Pope, Dunciad, B. iii,

OBSERVATIONS ON RULE XXIV.

OBS. 1.—To this rule, there are properly no exceptions. Though interjections are sometimes uttered in close connexion with other words, yet, being mere signs of passion or of feeling, they seem not to have any strict grammatical relation, or dependence according to the sense. Being destitute alike of relation, agreement, and government, they must be used independently, if used at all. Yet an emotion signified in this manner, not being causeless, may be accompanied by some object, expressed either by a nominative absolute, or by an adjective after for: as, “Alas! poor Yorick!”—Shak. Here the grief denoted by alas, is certainly for Yorick; as much so, as if the expression were, “Alas for poor Yorick!” But, in either case, alas, I think, has no dependent construction; neither has Yorick, in the former, unless we suppose an ellipsis of some governing word.

OBS. 2.—The interjection O is common to many languages, and is frequently uttered, in token of earnestness, before nouns or pronouns put absolute by direct address; as, “Arise, O Lord; O God, lift up thine hand.”—Psalms, x, 12. “O ye of little faith!”—Matt., vi, 30. The Latin and Greek grammarians, therefore, made this interjection the sign of the vocative case; which case is the same as the nominative put absolute by address in English. But this particle is no positive index of the vocative; because an independent address may be made without that sign, and the O may be used where there is no address: as, “O scandalous want! O shameful omission!”—“Pray, Sir, don’t be uneasy.”—Burgh’s Speaker, p. 86.

OBS. 3.—Some grammarians ascribe to two or three of our interjections the power of governing sometimes the nominative case, and sometimes the objective. First, NIXON; in an exercise entitled, “NOMINATIVE GOVERNED BY AN INTERJECTION,” thus: “The interjections O! Oh! and Ah! require after them the nominative case of a substantive in the second person; as, ‘O thou persecutor!’—‘O Alexander! thou hast slain thy friend.’ O is an interjection, governing the nominative case Alexander.”—English Parser, Again, under the title, “OBJECTIVE CASE GOVERNED BY AN INTERJECTION,” he says: “The interjections O! Oh! and Ah! require after them the objective case of a substantive in the first or third person; as, ‘Oh me!’ ‘Oh the humiliations!’ Oh is an interjection, governing the objective case humiliations.”—These two rules are in fact contradictory, while each of them absurdly suggests that O, oh, and ah, are used only with nouns. So J. M. PUTNAM: “Interjections sometimes govern an objective case; as, Ah me! O the tender ties! O the soft enmity! O me miserable! O wretched prince! O cruel reverse of fortune! When an address is made, the interjection does not perform the office of government.”—Putnam’s Gram., So KIRKHAM; who, under a rule quite different from these, extends the doctrine of government to all interjections: “According to the genius of the English language, transitive verbs and prepositions require the objective case of a noun or pronoun after them; and this requisition is all that is meant by government, when we say that these parts of speech govern the objective case. THE SAME PRINCIPLE APPLIES TO THE INTERJECTION. ‘Interjections require the objective case of a pronoun of the first person after them; but the nominative of a noun or pronoun of the second or third person; as, Ah me! Oh thou! O my country!’ To say, then, that interjections require particular cases after them, is synonymous with saying, that they govern those cases; and this office of the interjection is in perfect accordance with that which it performs in the Latin, and many other languages.”—Kirkham’s Gram., According to this, every interjection has as much need of an object after it, as has a transitive verb or a preposition! The rule has, certainly, no “accordance” with what occurs in Latin, or in any other language; it is wholly a fabrication, though found, in some shape or other, in well-nigh all English grammars.

OBS. 4.—L. Murray’s doctrine on this point is thus expressed: “The interjections O! Oh! and Ah! require the objective case of a pronoun in the first person after them, as, ‘O me! oh me! Ah me!’ But the nominative case in the second person: as, ‘O thou persecutor! Oh ye hypocrites! O thou, who dwellest,’ &c.”—Octavo Gram., INGERSOLL copies this most faulty note literally, adding these words to its abrupt end,—i. e., to its inexplicable “&c.” used by Murray; “because the first person is governed by a preposition understood: as, ‘Ah for me!’ or, ‘O what will become of me!’ &c., and the second person is in the nominative independent, there being a direct address.”—Conversations on E. Gram., So we see that this grammarian and Kirkham, both modifiers of Murray, understand their master’s false verb “require” very differently. LENNIE too, in renouncing a part of Murray’s double or threefold error, “Oh! happy us!” for, “O happy we!” teaches thus: “Interjections sometimes require the objective case after them, but they never govern it. In the first edition of this grammar,” says he, “I followed Mr. Murray and others, in leaving we, in the exercises to be turned into us; but that it should be we, and not us, is obvious; because it is the nominative to are understood; thus, Oh happy are we, or, Oh we are happy, (being) surrounded with so many blessings.”—Lennie’s Gram., Fifth Edition, Twelfth, Here is an other solution of the construction of this pronoun of the first person, contradictory alike to Ingersoll’s, to Kirkham’s, and to Murray’s; while all are wrong, and this among the rest. The word should indeed be we, and not us; because we have both analogy and good authority for the former case, and nothing but the false conceit of sundry grammatists for the latter. But it is a nominative absolute, like any other nominative which we use in the same exclamatory manner. For the first person may just as well be put in the nominative absolute, by exclamation, as any other; as, “Behold I and the children whom God hath given me!”—Heb., “Ecce ego et pueri quos mihi dedit Deus!”—Beza. “O brave we!”—Dr. Johnson, often. So Horace: “O ego lævus,” &c.—Ep. ad Pi., 301.

“Ah! luckless I! who purge in spring my spleen—Else sure the first of bards had Horace been.”—Francis’s Hor., ii, 209.

OBS. 5.—Whether Murray's remark above, on "O! Oh! and Ah!" was originally designed for a rule of government or not, it is hardly worth any one's while to inquire. It is too lame and inaccurate every way, to deserve any notice, but that which should serve to explode it forever. Yet no few, who have since made English grammars, have copied the text literally; as they have, for the public benefit, stolen a thousand other errors from the same quarter. The reader will find it, with little or no change, in Smith's New Grammar, p. 96 and 134; Alger's, 56; Allen's, 117; Russell's, 92; Blair's, 100, Guy's, 89; Abel Flint's, 59; A Teacher's, 43, Picket's, 210; Cooper's* Murray, 136; Wilcox's, 95; Bucke's, 87; Emmons's, 77; and probably in others. Lennie varies it indefinitely, thus: "RULE. The interjections Oh! and Ah! &c. generally require the objective case of the first personal pronoun, and the nominative of the second; as, Ah me! O thou fool! O ye hypocrites!"—Lennie's Gram., p. 110; Brace's, 88. M'Culloch, after Crombie, thus: "RULE XX. Interjections are joined with the objective case of the pronoun of the first person, and with the nominative of the pronoun of the second; as, Ah me! O ye hypocrites."—Manual of E. Gram., p. 145; and Crombie's Treatise, p. 315; also Fowler's E. Language, p. 563. Hiley makes it a note, thus: "The interjections. O! Oh! Ah! are followed by the objective case of a pronoun of the first person; as, 'Oh me!' 'Ah me!' but by the nominative case of the pronoun in the second person; as, 'O thou who dwellest.'"—Hiley's Gram., p. 82. This is what the same author elsewhere calls "THE GOVERNMENT OF INTERJECTIONS;" though, like some others, he had set it in the "Syntax of PRONOUNS." See Ib., p. 108. Murray, in forming his own little "Abridgment," omitted it altogether. In his other grammars, it is still a mere note, standing where he at first absurdly put it, under his rule for the agreement of pronouns with their antecedents. By many of his sage amenders, it has been placed in the catalogue of principal rules. But, that it is no adequate rule for interjections, is manifest; for, in its usual form, it is limited to three, and none of these can ever, with any propriety, be parsed by it. Murray himself has not used it in any of his forms of parsing. He conceived, (as I hinted before in Chapter 1st,) that, "The syntax of the Interjection is of so very limited a nature, that it does not require a distinct, appropriate rule."—Octavo Gram., i. 224.

OBS. 6.—Against this remark of Murray's, a good argument may be drawn from the ridiculous use which has been made of his own suggestion in the other place. For, though that suggestion never had in it the least shadow of truth, and was never at all applicable either to the three interjections, or to pronouns, or to cases, or to the persons, or to any thing else of which it speaks, it has not only been often copied literally, and called a "RULE" of syntax, but many have, yet more absurdly, made it a general canon which imposes on all interjections a syntax that belongs to none of them. For example: "An interjection must be followed by the objective case of a pronoun in the first person; and by a nominative of the second person; as—Oh me! ah me! oh thou! All hail, ye happy men!"—Jaudon's Gram., p. 116. This is as much as to say, that every interjection must have a

---

* "The Rev. Joab Goldsmith Cooper, A. M.," was the author of two English grammars, as well as of what he called "A New and Improved Latin Grammar," with "An Edition of the Works of Virgil, &c.," all published in Philadelphia. His first grammar, dated 1828, is entitled, "An Abridgment of Murray's English Grammar, and Exercises." But it is no more an abridgement of Murray's work, than of mine; he having chosen to steal from the text of my Institutes, or supply matter of his own, about as often as to copy Murray. His second is the Latin Grammar. His third, which is entitled, "A Plain and Practical English Grammar," and dated 1831, is a book very different from the first, but equally inaccurate and worthless. In this book, the syntax of interjections stands thus: "RULE 21. The interjections O, oh and ah are followed by the objective case of a noun or pronoun, as: 'O me! ah me! oh me!' In the second person, they are a mark or sign of an address, made to a person or thing, as: O thou persecutor! Oh, ye hypocrites! O virtue, how amiable thou art!"—Page 157. The inaccuracy of all this can scarcely be exceeded.

pronoun or two after it! Again: “Interjections must be followed by the objective case of the pronoun in the first person; as, O me! Ah me! and by the nominative case of the second person; as, O thou persecutor! Oh ye hypocrites!”—Merchant’s Murray, p. 80; Merchant’s School Gram., p. 99. I imagine there is a difference between O and oh,* and that this author, as well as Murray, in the first and the last of these examples, has misapplied them both. Again: “Interjections require the objective case of a pronoun of the first person, and the nominative case of the second; as, Ah me! O thou”—Frost’s El. of E. Gram., p. 48. This, too, is general, but equivocal; as if one case or both were necessary to each interjection!

OBS. 7.—Of nouns, or of the third person, the three rules last cited say nothing;† though it appears from other evidence, that their authors supposed them applicable at least to some nouns of the second person. The supposition however was quite needless, because each of their grammars contains an other Rule, that, “When an address is made, the noun or pronoun is in the nominative case independent,” which, by the by, is far from being universally true, either of the noun or of the pronoun. Russell imagines, “The words depending upon interjections, have so near a resemblance to those in a direct address, that they may very properly be classed under the same general head,” and be parsed as being, “in the nominative case independent.” See his “Abridgment of Murray’s Grammar,” p. 91. He does not perceive that depending and independent are words that contradict each other. Into the same inconsistency, do nearly all those gentlemen fall, who ascribe to interjections a control over cases. Even Kirkham, who so earnestly contends that what any words require after them they must necessarily govern, forgets his whole argument, or justly disbelieves it, whenever he parses any noun that is uttered with an interjection. In short, he applies his principle to nothing but the word me in the phrases, “Ah me!” “Oh * “Oh is used to express the emotion of pain, sorrow, or surprise. O is used to express wishing, exclamation, or a direct address to a person.”—Lennie’s Gram., 12th Ed., p. 110. Of this distinction our grammarians in general seem to have no conception; and, in fact, it is so often disregarded by other authors, that the propriety of it may be disputed. Since O and oh are pronounced alike, or very nearly so, if there is no difference in their application, they are only different modes of writing the same word, and one or the other of them is useless. If there is a real difference, as I suppose there is, it ought to be better observed; and O me! and oh ye! which I believe are found only in grammars, should be regarded as bad English. Both O and oh, as well as ah, were used in Latin by Terence, who was reckoned an elegant writer; and his manner of applying them favours this distinction: and so do our own dictionaries, though Johnson and Walker do not draw it clearly, for oh is as much an “exclamation” as O. In the works of Virgil, Ovid, and Horace, we find O or o used frequently, but nowhere oh. Yet this is no evidence of their sameness, or of the uselessness of the latter; but rather of their difference, and of the impropriety of confounding them. O, oh, ho, and ah, are French words as well as English. Boyer, in his Quarto Dictionary, confounds them all; translating “O!” only by “Oh!” “OH!” ou HO!” by “Ho! Oh!” and “AH!” by “Oh! alas! well-a-day! ough! A! ah! hah! ho!” He would have done better to have made each one explain itself; and especially, not to have set down “ough!” and “A!” as English words which correspond to the French ah!

---

† This silence is sufficiently accounted for by Murray’s; of whose work, most of the authors who have any such rule, are either piddling modifiers or servile copyists. And Murray’s silence on these matters, is in part attributable to the fact, that when he wrote his remark, his system of grammar denied that nouns have any first person, or any objective case. Of course he supposed that all nouns that were uttered after interjections, whether they were of the second person or of the third, were in the nominative case; for he gave to nouns two cases only, the nominative and the possessive. And when he afterwards admitted the objective case of nouns, he did not alter his remark, but left all his pupils ignorant of the case of any noun that is used in exclamation or invocation. In his doctrine of two cases, he followed Dr. Ash: from whom also he copied the rule which I am criticising: “The Interjections, O, Oh, and Ah, require the accusative case of a pronoun in the first Person: as, O me, Oh me, Ah me: But the Nominative in the second: as, O thou, O ye.”—Ash’s Gram., p. 60. Or perhaps he had Bicknell’s book, which was later: “The interjections O, oh, and ah, require the accusative case of a pronoun in the first person after them; as, O, me! Oh, me! Ah, me! But the nominative case in the second person; as, O, thou that rulest! O, ye rulers of this land!”—The Grammatical Wreath, Part I, p. 105.

me!” and “Me miserable!” and even these he parses falsely. The second person used in the vocative, or the nominative put absolute by direct address, whether an interjection be used or not, he rightly explains as being “in the nominative case independent;” as, “O Jerusalem, Jerusalem!”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 130. “O maid of Inistore!”—Ib., p. 131. But he is wrong in saying that, “Whenever a noun is of the second person, it is in the nominative case independent;” (Ib., p. 130;) and still more so, in supposing that, “The principle contained in the note” [which tells what interjections require,] “proves that every noun of the second person is in the nominative case.”—Ib., p. 164. A falsehood proves nothing but the ignorance or the wickedness of him who utters it. He is wrong too, as well as many others, in supposing that this nominative independent is not a nominative absolute; for, “The vocative is [generally, if not always,] absolute.”—W. Allen’s Gram., p. 142. But that nouns of the second person are not always absolute or independent, nor always in the nominative case, or the vocative, appears, I think, by the following example: “This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders.”—Acts, iv, II. See Obs. 3d on Rule 8th.

OBS. 8.—The third person, when uttered in exclamation, with an interjection before it, is parsed by Kirkham, not as being governed by the interjection, either in the nominative case, according to his own argument and own rule above cited, or in the objective, according to Nixon’s notion of the construction; nor yet as being put absolute in the nominative, as I believe it generally, if not always is; but as being “the nominative to a verb understood; as, ‘Lo,’ there is ‘the poor Indian!’ ‘O, the pain’ there is! ‘the bliss’ there is ‘IN dying!’”—Kirkham’s Gram., p. 129. Pope’s text is, “Oh the pain, the bliss of dying!” and, in all that is here changed, the grammarian has perverted it, if not in all that he has added. It is an other principle of Kirkham’s Grammar, though a false one, that, “Nouns have but two persons, the second and [the] third.”—P. 37. So that, these two being disposed of agreeably to his own methods above, which appear to include the second and third persons of pronouns also, there remains to him nothing but the objective of the pronoun of the first person to which he can suppose his other rule to apply; and I have shown that there is no truth in it, even in regard to this. Yet, with the strongest professions of adhering to the principles, and even to “the language” of Lindley Murray, this gentleman, by copying somebody else in preference to “that eminent philologist,” has made himself one of those by whom Murray’s erroneous remark on O, oh, and ah, with pronouns of the first and second persons, is not only stretched into a rule for all interjections, but made to include nouns of the second person, and both nouns and pronouns of the third person: as, “Interjections require the objective case of a pronoun of the first person after them, but the nominative of a noun or pronoun of the second or third person; as, ‘Ah! me; Oh! thou; O! virtue!’”—Kirkham’s Gram., 2d Ed., p. 134; Stereotype Ed., p. 177. See the same rule, with examples and punctuation different, in his Stereotype Edition, p. 164; Comly’s Gram., 116; Greenleaf’s, 36; and Fisk’s, 144. All these authors, except Comly, who comes much nearest to the thing, profess to present to us “Murray’s Grammar Simplified,” and this is a sample of their work of simplification!—an ignorant piling of errors on errors!

“O imitatores servum pecus! ut mihi sæpe
Bilem, sæpe jocum vestri movêre tumultus!”—Horace.

OBS. 9.—Since so many of our grammarians conceive that interjections require or govern cases, it may be proper to cite some who teach otherwise. “Interjections, in English, have no government.”—Lowth’s Gram., p. 111. “Interjections have no government, or admit of no construction.”—Coar’s Gram., p. 189. “Interjections have no connexion with other word's."—Fuller's Gram., p. 71. "The interjection, in a grammatical sense, is totally unconnected with every other word in a sentence. Its arrangement, of course, is altogether arbitrary, and cannot admit of any theory."—Jamieson's Rhet., p. 83. "Interjections cannot properly have either concord or government. They are only mere sounds excited by passion, and have no just connexion with any other part of a sentence. Whatever case, therefore, is joined with them, must depend on some other word understood, except the vocative, which is always placed absolutely."—Adam's Latin Gram., p. 196; Gould's, 193. If this is true of the Latin language, a slight variation will make it as true of ours. "Interjections, and phrases resembling them, are taken absolutely; as, Oh, world, thy slippery turns! But the phrases Oh me! and Ah me! frequently occur."—W. Allen's Gram., p. 188. This passage is, in several respects, wrong; yet the leading idea is true. The author entitles it, "SYNTAX OF INTERJECTIONS," yet absurdly includes in it I know not what phrases! In the phrase, "thy slippery turns!" no word is absolute, or "taken absolutely" but this noun "turns;" and this, without the least hint of its case, the learned author will have us to understand to be absolute, because the phrase resembles an interjection! But the noun "world" which is also absolute, and which still more resembles an interjection, he will have to be so for a different reason—because it is in what he chooses to call the vocative case. But, according to custom, he should rather have put his interjection absolute with the noun, and written it, "O world," and not, "Oh, world." What he meant to do with "Oh me! and Ah me!" is doubtful. If any phrases come fairly under his rule, these are the very ones; and yet he seems to introduce them as exceptions! Of these, it can hardly be said, that they "frequently occur." Lowth notices only the latter, which he supposes elliptical. The former I do not remember to have met with more than three or four times; except in grammars, which in this case are hardly to be called authorities: "Oh! me, how fared it with me then?"—Job Scott. "Oh me! all the horse have got over the river, what shall we do?"—WALTON: Joh. Dict.

"But when he was first seen, oh me!

What shrieking and what misery!"—Wordsworth's Works, p. 114.

OBS. 10.—When a declinable word not in the nominative absolute, follows an interjection, as part of an imperfect exclamation, its construction (if the phrase be good English) depends on something understood; as, "Ah me!"—that is, "Ah! pity me;" or, "Ah! it grieves me;" or, as some will have it, (because the expression in Latin is "Hei mihi!") "Ah for me!"—Ingersoll. "Ah! wo is to me."—Lowth. "Ah! sorrow is to me."—Coar. So of "oh me!" for, in these expressions, if not generally, oh and ah are exactly equivalent the one to the other. As for "O me" it is now seldom met with, though Shakspeare has it a few times. From these examples, O. B. Peirce erroneously imagines the "independent case" of the pronoun I to be me, and accordingly parses the word without supposing an ellipsis; but in the plural he makes that case to be we, and not us. So, having found an example of "Ah Him!" which, according to one half of our grammarians, is bad English, he conceives the independent case of he to be him; but in the plural, and in both numbers of the words thou and she, he makes it the nominative, or the same in form as the nominative. So builds he "the temple of Grammatical consistency!"—P. 7. Nixon and Cooper must of course approve of "Ah him!" because they assume that the interjection ah "requires" or "governs" the objective case of the third person. Others must condemn the expression, because they teach that ah requires the nominative case of this person. Thus Greenleaf sets down for false syntax, "O! happy them, surrounded with so many blessings!"—Gram. Simplified, p. 47. Here, undoubtedly, the word should be they; and, by analogy, (if indeed the instances are analogous,) it would seem more proper to say, "Ah he!" the nominative being our only case absolute. But if any will insist that “Ah him!” is good English, they must suppose that him is governed by something understood; as, “Ah! I lament him,” or, “Ah! I mourn for him.” And possibly, on this principle, the example referred to may be most correct as it stands, with the pronoun in the objective case: “Ah Him! the first great martyr in this great cause.”—D. WEBSTER: Peirce’s Gram., p. 199.

OBS. 11.—If we turn to the Latin syntax, to determine by analogy what case is used, or ought to be used, after our English interjections, in stead of finding a “perfect accordance” between that syntax and the rule for which such accordance has been claimed, we see at once an utter repugnance, and that the pretence of their agreement is only a sample of Kirkham’s unconscionable pedantry. The rule, in all its modifications, is based on the principle, that the choice of cases depends on the distinction of persons—a principle plainly contrary to the usage of the Latin classics, and altogether untrue. In Latin, some interjections are construed with the nominative, the accusative, or the vocative; some, only with the dative; some, only with the vocative. But, in English, these four cases are all included in two, the nominative and the objective; and, the case independent or absolute being necessarily the nominative, it follows that the objective, if it occur after an interjection, must be the object of something which is capable of governing it. If any disputant, by supposing ellipses, will make objectives of what I call nominatives absolute, so be it; but I insist that interjections, in fact, never “require” or “govern” one case more than an other. So Peirce, and Kirkham, and Ingersoll, with pointed self-contradiction, may continue to make “the independent case,” whether vocative or merely exclamatory, the subject of a verb, expressed or understood; but I will content myself with endeavouring to establish a syntax not liable to this sort of objection. In doing this, it is proper to look at all the facts which go to show what is right, or wrong. “Lo, the poor Indian!” is in Latin, “Ecce pauper Indus!” or, “Ecce pauperem Indum!” This use of either the nominative or the accusative after ecce, if it proves any thing concerning the case of the word Indian, proves it doubtful. Some, it seems, pronounce it an objective. Some, like Murray, say nothing about it. Following the analogy of our own language, I refer it to the nominative absolute, because there is nothing to determine it to be otherwise. In the examples. “Heu me miserum! Ah wretch that I am!”—(Grant’s Latin Gram., p. 263.) and “Miser ego homo! O wretched man that I am!”—(Rom., vii, 24,) if the word that is a relative pronoun, as I incline to think it is, the case of the nouns wretch and man does not depend on any other words, either expressed or implied. They are therefore nominatives absolute, according to Rule 8th, though the Latin words may be most properly explained on the principle of ellipsis.

OBS. 12.—Of some impenetrable blockhead, Horace, telling how himself was vexed, says: “O te, Bollane, cerebri Felicem! aiebam tacitus.”—Lib. i, Sat. ix, 11. Literally: “O thee, Bollanus, happy of brain! said I to myself.” That is, “O! I envy thee,” &c. This shows that O does not “require the nominative case of the second person” after it, at least, in Latin. Neither does oh or ah: for, if a governing word be suggested, the objective may be proper; as, “Whom did he injure? Ah! thee, my boy?”—or even the possessive; as, “Whose sobs do I hear? Oh! thine, my child?” Kirkham tells us truly, (Gram., p. 126,) that the exclamation “O my” is frequently heard in conversation. These last resemble Lucan’s use of the genitive, with an ellipsis of the governing noun: “O miseræ sortis!” i.e., “O [men] of miserable lot!” In short, all the Latin cases as well as all the English, may possibly occur after one or other of the interjections. I have instanced all but the ablative, and the following is literally an example of that, though the word quanto is construed adverbially: “Ah, quanto satius est!”—Ter. And., ii, 1. “Ah, how much better it is!” I have also shown, by good authorities, that the nominative of the first person, both in English and in Latin, may be properly used after those interjections which have been supposed to require or govern the objective. But how far is analogy alone a justification? Is “O thee” good English, because “O te” is good Latin? No: nor is it bad for the reason which our grammarians assign, but because our best writers never use it, and because O is more properly the sign of the vocative. The literal version above should therefore be changed; as, “O Bollandus, thou happy numskull! said I to myself.”

OBS. 13—Allen Fisk, “author of Adam’s Latin Grammar Simplified,” and of “Murray’s English Grammar Simplified,” sets down for “False Syntax” not only that hackneyed example, “Oh! happy we,” &c., but, “O! You, who love iniquity,” and, “Ah! you, who hate the light.”—Fisk’s E. Gram., p. 144. But, to imagine that either you or we is wrong here, is certainly no sign of a great linguist; and his punctuation is very inconsistent both with his own rule of syntax and with common practice. An interjection set off by a comma or an exclamation point, is of course put absolute singly, or by itself. If it is to be read as being put absolute with something else, the separation is improper. One might just as well divide a preposition from its object, as an interjection from the case which it is supposed to govern. Yet we find here not only such a division as Murray sometimes improperly adopted, but in one instance a total separation, with a capital following; as, “O! You, who love iniquity,” for, “O you who love iniquity!” or “O ye,” &c. If a point be here set between the two pronouns, the speaker accuses all his hearers of loving iniquity; if this point be removed, he addresses only such as do love it. But an interjection and a pronoun, each put absolute singly, one after the other, seem to me not to constitute a very natural exclamation. The last example above should therefore be, “Ah! you hate the light.” The first should be written, “O happy we!”

OBS. 14.—In other grammars, too, there are many instances of some of the errors here pointed out. R. C. Smith knows no difference between O and oh; takes “Oh! happy us” to be accurate English; sees no impropriety in separating interjections from the pronouns which he supposes them to “govern;” writes the same examples variously, even on the same page; inserts or omits commas or exclamation points at random; yet makes the latter the means by which interjections are to be known! See his New Gram., pp. 40, 96 and 134. Kirkham, who lays claim to “a new system of punctuation,” and also stoutly asserts the governing power of interjections, writes, and rewrites, and finally stereotypes, in one part of his book. “Ah me! Oh thou! O my country!” and in another, “Ah! me; Oh! thou; O! virtue.” See Obs. 3d and Obs. 8th above. From such hands, any thing “new” should be received with caution: this last specimen of his scholarship has more errors than words.

OBS. 15.—Some few of our interjections seem to admit of a connexion with other words by means of a preposition or the conjunction that as, “O to forget her!”—Young. “O for that warning voice!”—Milton. “O that they were wise!”—Deut., xxxii, 29. “O that my people had hearkened unto me!”—Ps., lxxxi, 13, “Alas for Sicily!”—Cowper. “O for a world in principle as chaste As this is gross and selfish!”—Id. “Hurrah for Jackson!”—Newspaper. “A bawd, sir, fy upon him!”—SHAK.: Joh. Dict. “And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe!”—SPENCER: ib. This connexion, however, even if we parse all the words just as they stand, does not give to the interjection itself any dependent construction. It appears indeed to refute Jamieson’s assertion, that, “The interjection is totally unconnected with every other word in a sentence;” but I did not quote this passage, with any averment of its accuracy; and, certainly, many nouns which are put absolute themselves, have in like manner a connexion with words that are not put absolute: as, “O Lord God of hosts, hear my prayer; give ear, O God of Jacob. Selah.”—Ps., lxxxiv, 8. But if any will suppose, that in the foregoing examples something else than the interjection must be the antecedent term to the preposition or the conjunction, they may consider the expressions elliptical: though it must be confessed, that much of their vivacity will be lost, when the supposed ellipses are supplied: as, “O! I desire to forget her.”—“O! how I long for that warning voice!”—“O! how I wish that they were wise!”—“Alas! I wail for Sicily.”—“Hurrah! I shout for Jackson.”—“Fy! cry out upon him.” Lindley Murray has one example of this kind, and if his punctuation of it is not bad in all his editions, there must be an ellipsis in the expression: “O! for better times.”—Octavo Gram., ii, 6; Duodecimo Exercises, p. 10. He also writes it thus: “O. for better times.”—Octavo Gram., i, 120; Ingersoll's Gram., p. 47. According to common usage, it should be, “O for better times!”

OBS. 16.—The interjection may be placed at the beginning or the end of a simple sentence, and sometimes between its less intimate parts; but this part of speech is seldom, if ever, allowed to interrupt the connexion of any words which are closely united in sense. Murray's definition of an interjection, as I have elsewhere shown, is faulty, and directly contradicted by his example: “O virtue! how amiable thou art!”—Octavo Gram., i, 28 and 128; ii. 2. This was a favourite sentence with Murray, and he appears to have written it uniformly in this fashion; which, undoubtedly, is altogether right, except that the word “virtue” should have had a capital Vee, because the quality is here personified.

OBS. 17.—Misled by the false notion, that the term interjection is appropriate only to what is “thrown in between the parts of a sentence,” and perceiving that this is in fact but rarely the situation of this part of speech, a recent critic, (to whom I should owe some acknowledgements, if he were not wrong in every thing in which he charges me with error,) not only denounces this name as “barbarous,” preferring Webster's loose term, “exclamation,” but avers, that, “The words called interjection should never be so used—should always stand alone; as, ‘Oh! virtue, how amiable thou art.’ ‘Oh? Absalom, my son.’ G. Brown,” continues he, “drags one into the middle of a sentence, where it never belonged; thus, ‘This enterprise, alas! will never compensate us for the trouble and expense with which it has been attended.’ If G. B. meant the enterprize of studying grammar, in the old theories, his sentiment is very appropriate; but his alas! he should have known enough to have put into the right place:—before the sentence representing the fact that excites the emotion expressed by alas! See on the Chart part 3, of RULE XVII. An exclamation must always precede the phrase or sentence describing the fact that excites the emotion to be expressed by the exclamation; as: Alas! I have alienated my friend! Oh! Glorious hope of bliss secure!”—Oliver B. Peirce's Gram., p. 375. “O Glorious hope of bliss secure!”—Ib., p. 184. “O glorious hope!”—Ib., p. 304.

OBS. 18.—I see no reason to believe, that the class of words which have always, and almost universally, been called interjections, can ever be more conveniently explained under any other name; and, as for the term exclamation, which is preferred also by Cutler, Felton, Spencer, and S. W. Clark, it appears to me much less suitable than the old one, because it is less specific. Any words uttered loudly in the same breath, are an exclamation. This name therefore is too general; it includes other parts of speech than interjections; and it was but a foolish whim in Dr. Webster, to prefer it in his dictionaries.

When David “cried with a loud voice, O my son Absalom! O Absalom, my son, my son!” * he uttered two exclamations, but they included all his words. He did not, like my critic above, set off his first word with an interrogation point, or any other point. But, says Peirce, “These words are used in exclaiming, and are what all know them to be, exclamations; as I call them. May I not call them what they are?”—Ibid. Yes, truly. But to exclaim is to cry out, and consequently every outcry is an exclamation; though there are two chances to one, that no interjection at all be used by the bawler. As good an argument, or better, may be framed against every one of this gentleman’s professed improvements in grammar; and as for his punctuation and orthography, any reader may be presumed capable of seeing that they are not fit to be proposed as models.

OBS. 19.—I like my position of the word “alas” better than that which Peirce supposes to be its only right place; and, certainly, his rule for the location of words of this sort, as well as his notion that they must stand alone, is as false, as it is new. The obvious misstatement of Lowth, Adam, Gould, Murray, Churchill, Alger, Smith, Guy, Ingersoll, and others, that, “Interjections are words thrown in between the parts of a sentence,” I had not only excluded from my grammars, but expressly censured in them. It was not, therefore, to prop any error of the old theorists, that I happened to set one interjection “where” according to this new oracle, “it never belonged.” And if any body but he has been practically misled by their mistake, it is not I, but more probably some of the following authors, here cited for his refutation: “I fear, alas! for my life.”—Fisk’s Gram., p. 89. “I have been occupied, alas! with trifles.”—Murray’s Gr., Ex. for Parsing, p. 5; Guy’s, p. 56. “We eagerly pursue pleasure, but, alas! we often mistake the road.”—Smith’s New Gram., p. 40, “To-morrow, alas! thou mayest be comfortless!”—Wright’s Gram., p. 35. “Time flies, O! how swiftly.”—Murray’s Gram., i, 226. “My friend, alas! is dead.”—J. Flint’s Gram., p. 21. “But John, alas! he is very idle.”—Merchant’s Gram., p. 22. “For pale and wan he was, alas the while!”—SPENSER: Joh. Dict. “But yet, alas! O but yet, alas! our haps be but hard haps.”—SYDNEY: ib. “Nay, (what’s incredible,) alack! I hardly hear a woman’s clack.”—SWIFT: ib. “Thus life is spent (oh fie upon’t!) In being touch’d, and crying—Don’t!”—Couper, i, 231. “For whom, alas! dost thou prepare The sweets that I was wont to share”—Id., i, 203. “But here, alas! the difference lies.”—Id., i, 100. “Their names, alas! in vain reproach an age,” &c.—Id., i, 88. “What nature, alas! has denied,” &c.—Id., i, 235. “A. Hail Sternhold, then; and Hopkins, hail! B. Amen.”—Id., i 25.

“These Fate reserv’d to grace thy reign divine, Foreseen by me, but ah! withheld from mine!”—Pope, Dun., iii, 215.

IMPROPRIETIES FOR CORRECTION.

FALSE SYNTAX PROMISCUOUS.

☞ [The following examples of bad grammar, being similar in their character to others already exhibited, are to be corrected, by the pupil, according to formules previously given.]

* See 2 Sam., xix, 4; also xviii, 33. Peirce has many times misquoted this text, or some part of it; and, what is remarkable, he nowhere agrees either with himself or with the Bible! “O! Absalom! my son!”—Gram., p. 283. “O Absalom! my son, my son! would to God I had died for thee.”—Ib., p. 304. Pinneo also misquotes and perverts a part of it, thus: “Oh, Absalom! my son”—Primary Gram., Revised Ed., p. 57.

LESSON I.—ANY PARTS OF SPEECH.

“Such an one I believe yours will be proved to be.”—PEET: Farnum’s Gram., p. 1. “Of the distinction between the imperfect and the perfect tenses, it may be observed,” &c.—Ainsworth’s Gram., p. 122. “The subject is certainly worthy consideration.”—Ib., p. 117. “By this means all ambiguity and controversy is avoided on this point.”—Bullions, Principles of Eng. Gram., 5th Ed., Pref., p. vi. “The perfect participle in English has both an active and passive signification.”—Ib., p. 58. “The old house is at length fallen down.”—Ib., p. 78. “The king, with the lords and commons, constitute the English form of government.”—Ib., p. 93. “The verb in the singular agrees with the person next it.”—Ib., p. 95. “Jane found Seth’s gloves in James’ hat.”—Felton’s Gram., p. 15. “Charles’ task is too great.”—Ibid., 15. “The conjugation of a verb is the naming, in regular order, its several modes tenses, numbers and persons.”—Ib., p. 24. “The long remembered beggar was his guest.”—Ib., 1st Ed., p. 65. “Participles refer to nouns and pronouns.”—Ib., p. 81. “F has an uniform sound in every position except in of.”—Hallock’s Gram., 1st Ed., p. 15. “There are three genders; the masculine, the feminine and neuter.”—Ib., p. 43. “When so that occur together, sometimes the particle so is taken as an adverb.”—Ib., p. 124. “The definition of the articles show that they modify the words to which they belong.”—Ib., p. 138. “The auxiliaries shall, will, or should is implied.”—Ib., p. 192. “Single rhyme trochaic omits the final short syllable.”—Ib., p. 244. “Agreeable to this, we read of names being blotted out of God’s book,”—BURDER: ib., p. 156; Webster’s Philos. Gram., 155; Improved Gram., 107. “The first person is the person speaking.”—Goldsbury’s Common School Gram., p. 10. “Accent is the laying a peculiar stress of the voice on a certain letter or syllable in a word.”—Ib., Ed. of 1842, p. 75. “Thomas’ horse was caught.”—Felton’s Gram., p. 64. “You was loved.”—Ib., p. 45. “The nominative and objective end the same.”—Rev. T. Smith’s Gram., p. 18. “The number of pronouns, like those of substantives, are two, the singular and the plural.”—Ib., p. 22. “I is called the pronoun of the first person, which is the person speaking.”—Frost’s Practical Gram., p. 32. “The essential elements of the phrase is an intransitive gerundive and an adjective.”—Hazen’s Practical Gram., p. 141. “Being rich is no justification for such impudence.”—Ib., p. 141. “His having been a soldier in the revolution is not doubted.”—Ib., p. 143. “Catching fish is the chief employment of the inhabitants. The chief employment of the inhabitants is catching fish.”—Ib., p. 144. “The cold weather did not prevent the work’s being finished at the time specified.”—Ib., p. 145. “The former viciousness of that man caused his being suspected of this crime.”—Ib., p. 145. “But person and number applied to verbs means, certain terminations.”—Barrett’s Gram., p. 69. “Robert fell a tree.”—Ib., p. 64. “Charles raised up.”—Ib., p. 64. “It might not be an useless waste of time.”—Ib., p. 42. “Neither will you have that implicit faith in the writings and works of others which characterise the vulgar,”—Ib., p. 5. “I, is the first person, because it denotes the speaker.”—Ib., p. 46. “I would refer the student to Hedges’ or Watts’ Logic.”—Ib., p. 15. “Hedge’s, Watt’s, Kirwin’s, and Collard’s Logic.”—Parker and Fox’s Gram., Part III, p. 116. “Letters are called vowels which make a full and perfect sound of themselves.”—Cutler’s Gram., p. 10. “It has both a singular and plural construction.”—Ib., p. 23. “For he beholdest thy beams no more.”—Ib., p. 136. “To this sentiment the Committee has the candour to incline, as it will appear by their summing up.”—Macpherson’s Ossian, Prelim. Disc., p. xviii. “This is reducing the point at issue to a narrow compass.”—Ib., p. xxv. “Since the English sat foot upon the soil.”—Exiles of Nova Scotia, p. 12. “The arrangement of its different parts are easily retained by the memory.”—Hiley’s Gram., 3d Ed., p. 262. “The words employed are the most appropriate which could have been selected.”—Ib., p. 182. “To prevent it launching!”—Ib., p. 135. “Webster has been followed in preference to others, where it differs from them.”—Frazee’s Gram., p. 8.

“Exclamation and Interrogation are often mistaken for one another.”—Buchanan’s E. Syntax, p. 160. “When all nature is hushed in sleep, and neither love nor guilt keep their vigils.”—Felton’s Gram., p. 96.

“When all nature’s hushed asleep,
Nor love, nor guilt, their vigils keep.”—Ib., p. 95.

LESSON II.—ANY PARTS OF SPEECH.

“A VERSIFYER and POET are two different Things.”—Brightland’s Gram., p. 163. “Those Qualities will arise from the well expressing of the Subject.”—Ib., p. 165. “Therefore the explanation of network, is taken no notice of here.”—Mason’s Supplement, p. vii. “When emphasis or pathos are necessary to be expressed.”—Humphrey’s Punctuation, p. 38. “Whether this mode of punctuation is correct, and whether it be proper to close the sentence with the mark of admiration, may be made a question.”—Ib., p. 39. “But not every writer in those days were thus correct.”—Ib., p. 59. “The sounds of A, in English orthoepy, are no less than four.”—Ib., p. 69. “Our present code of rules are thought to be generally correct.”—Ib., p. 70. “To prevent its running into another.”—Humphrey’s Prosody, p. 7. “Shakespeare, perhaps, the greatest poetical genius which England has produced.”—Ib., p. 93. “This I will illustrate by example; but prior to which a few preliminary remarks may be necessary.”—Ib., p. 107. “All such are entitled to two accents each, and some of which to two accents nearly equal.”—Ib., p. 109. “But some cases of the kind are so plain that no one need to exercise his judgment therein.”—Ib., p. 122. “I have forbore to use the word.”—Ib., p. 127. “The propositions, ‘He may study,’ ‘He might study,’ ‘He could study,’ affirms an ability or power to study.”—Hallock’s Gram. of 1842, p. 76. “The divisions of the tenses has occasioned grammarians much trouble and perplexity.”—Ib., p. 77. “By adopting a familiar, inductive method of presenting this subject, it may be rendered highly attractive to young learners.”—Wells’s Sch. Gram., 1st Ed., p. 1; 3d, 9; 113th, 11. “The definitions and rules of different grammarians were carefully compared with each other.”—Ib., Preface, p. iii. “So as not wholly to prevent some sounds issuing.”—Sheridan’s Elements of English, p. 64. “Letters of the Alphabet not yet taken notice of.”—Ib., p. 11. “It is sad, It is strange, &c., seems to express only that the thing is sad, strange, &c.”—The Well-Wishers’ Gram., p. 68. “THE WINNING is easier than THE PRESERVING a conquest.”—Ib., p. 65. “The United States finds itself the owner of a vast region of country at the West.”—Horace Mann in Congress, 1848. “One or more letters placed before a word is a Prefix.”—S. W. Clark’s Pract. Gram., p. 42. “One or more letters added to a word is a Suffix.”—Ib., p. 42. “Two-thirds of my hair has fallen off.”—Ib., p. 126. “‘Suspecting,’ describes ‘we,’ by expressing, incidentally, an act of ‘we.’”—Ib., p. 130. “Daniel’s predictions are now being fulfilled.”—Ib., p. 136. “His being a scholar, entitles him to respect.”—Ib., p. 141. “I doubted his having been a soldier.”—Ib., p. 142. “Taking a madman’s sword to prevent his doing mischief, cannot be regarded as robbing him.”—Ib., p. 129. “I thought it to be him; but it was not him.”—Ib., p. 149. “It was not me that you saw.”—Ib., p. 149. “Not to know what happened before you was born, is always to be a boy.”—Ib., p. 149. “How long was you going? Three days.”—Ib., 158. “The qualifying Adjective is placed next the Noun.”—Ib., p. 165. “All went but me.”—Ib., p. 93. “This is parsing their own language, and not the author’s.”—Wells’s School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 73. “Nouns which denote males, are of the masculine gender.”—Ib., p. 49. “Nouns which denote females, are of the feminine gender.”—Ib., p. 49. “When a comparison is expressed between more than two objects of the same class, the superlative degree is employed.”—Ib., p. 133. “Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coalesce into one letter with the radical d or t.”—Dr. Johnson’s Gram., p. 9. “Write words which will show what kind of a house you live in—what kind of a book you hold in your hand—what kind of a day it is.”—Weld’s Gram., p. 7. “One word or more is often joined to nouns or pronouns to modify their meaning.”—Ib., 2d Ed., p. 30. “Good is an adjective; it explains the quality or character of every person or thing to which it is applied.”—Ib., p. 33; Abridg., 32. “A great public as well as private advantage arises from every one’s devoting himself to that occupation which he prefers, and for which he is specially fitted.”—WAYLAND: Wells’s Gram., p. 121; Weld’s, 180. “There was a chance of his recovering his senses. Not thus: ‘There was a chance of him recovering his senses.’ MACAULEY.”—See Wells’s Gram., 1st Ed., p. 121; 113th, 135. “This may be known by its not having any connecting word immediately preceding it.”—Weld’s Gram., 2d Edition, p. 181. “There are irregular expressions occasionally to be met with, which usage or custom rather than analogy, sanction.”—Ib., p. 143. “He added an anecdote of Quinn’s relieving Thomson from prison.”—Ib., p. 150. “The daily labor of her hands procure for her all that is necessary.”—Ib., p. 182. “Its being me, need make no change in your determination.”—Hart’s Gram., p. 128. “The classification of words into what is called the Parts of Speech.”—Weld’s Gram., p. 5. “Such licenses may be explained under what is usually termed Figures.”—Ib., p. 212.

“Liberal, not lavish, is kind nature’s hands.”—Ib., p. 196.

“They fall successive and successive live.”—Ib., p. 213.

LESSON III.—ANY PARTS OF SPEECH.

“A figure of Etymology is the intentional deviation in the usual form of a word.”—Weld’s Gram., 2d Edition, p. 213. “A figure of Syntax is the intentional deviation in the usual construction of a word.”—Ib., 213. “Synecdoche is putting the name of the whole of anything for a part or a part for the whole.”—Ib., 215. “Apostrophe is turning off from the regular course of the subject to address some person or thing.”—Ib., 215. “Even young pupils will perform such exercises with surprising interest and facility, and will unconsciously gain, in a little time, more knowledge of the structure of Language than he can acquire by a drilling of several years in the usual routine of parsing.”—Ib., Preface, p. iv. “A few Rules of construction are employed in this Part, to guide in the exercise of parsing.”—Ibidem. “The name of every person, object, or thing, which can be thought of, or spoken of, is a noun.”—Ib., p. 18; Abridged Ed., 19. “A dot, resembling our period, is used between every word, as well as at the close of the verses.”—W. Day’s Punctuation, p. 16; London, 1847. “Casting types in matrices was invented by Peter Schoeffer, in 1452.”—Ib., p. 23. “On perusing it, he said, that, so far from it showing the prisoner’s guilt, it positively established his innocence.”—Ib., p. 37. “By printing the nominative and verb in Italic letters, the reader will be able to distinguish them at a glance.”—Ib., p. 77. “It is well, no doubt, to avoid using unnecessary words.”—Ib., p. 99. “Meeting a friend the other day, he said to me, ‘Where are you going?’”—Ib., p. 124. “John was first denied apples, then he was promised them, then he was offered them.”—Lennie’s Gram., 5th Ed., p. 62. “He was denied admission.”—Wells’s School Gram., 1st Ed., p. 146. “They were offered a pardon.”—Pond’s Murray, p. 118; Wells, 146. “I was this day shown a new potatoe.”—DARWIN: Webster’s Philos. Gram., p. 179; Imp. Gram., 128; Frazee’s Gram., 153; Weld’s, 153. “Nouns or pronouns which denote males are of the masculine gender.”—S. S. Greene’s Gram., 1st Ed., p. 211. “There are three degrees of comparison—the positive, comparative, and superlative.”—Ib., p. 216; First Les., p. 49. “The first two refer to direction; the third, to locality.”—Ib., Gr., p. 103. “The following are some of the verbs which take a direct and indirect object.”—Ib., p. 62. “I was not aware of his being the judge of the Supreme Court.”—Ib., p. 86. “An indirect question may refer to either of the five elements of a declarative sentence.”—Ib., p. 123. “I am not sure that he will be present = of his being present.”—Ib., p. 169. “We left on Tuesday.”—Ib., p. 103. “He left, as he told me, before the arrival of the steamer.”—Ib., p. 143. “We told him that he must leave = We told him to leave.”—Ib., p. 168. “Because he was unable to persuade the multitude, he left in disgust.”—Ib., p. 172. “He left, and took his brother with him.”—Ib., p. 254. “This stating, or declaring, or denying any thing, is called the indicative mode, or manner of speaking.”—Weld’s Gram., 2d Ed., p. 72; Abr. Ed., 59. “This took place at our friend Sir Joshua Reynold’s.”—Weld’s Gram., 2d Ed., p. 150; Imp. Ed., 154. “The manner of a young lady’s employing herself usefully in reading will be the subject of another paper.”—Ib., 150; or 154. “Very little time is necessary for Johnson’s concluding a treaty with the bookseller.”—Ib., 150; or 154. “My father is not now sick, but if he was your services would be welcome.”—Chandler’s Grammar, 1821, p. 54. “When we begin to write or speak, we ought previously to fix in our minds a clear conception of the end to be aimed at.”—Blair’s Rhetoric, p. 193. “Length of days are in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honor.”—Bullions’s Analytical and Practical Grammar, 1849, p. 59. “The active and passive present express different ideas.”—Ib., p. 235. “An Improper Diphthong, or Digraph, is a diphthong in which only one of the vowels are sounded.”—Fowler’s E. Gram., 8vo, 1850, §115. “The real origin of the words are to be sought in the Latin.”—Ib., §120. “What sort of an alphabet the Gothic languages possess, we know; what sort of alphabet they require, we can determine.”—Ib., §127. “The Runic Alphabet whether borrowed or invented by the early Goths, is of greater antiquity than either the oldest Teutonic or the Moeso-Gothic Alphabets.”—Ib., §129. “Common to the Masculine and the Neuter Genders.”—Ib., §222. “In the Anglo-Saxon his was common to both the Masculine and Neuter Genders.”—Ib., §222. “When time, number, or dimension are specified, the adjective follows the substantive.”—Ib., §459. “Nor pain, nor grief, nor anxious fear Invade thy bounds.”—Ib., §563. “To Brighton the Pavilion lends a lath and plaster grace.”—Ib., §590. “From this consideration nouns have been given but one person, the THIRD.”—D. C. Allen’s Grammatic Guide, p. 10.

“For it seems to guard and cherish
Even the wayward dreamer—I.”—Home Journal.

EXAMPLES FOR PARSING. PRAXIS XIII.—SYNTACTICAL.

In the following Lessons, are exemplified most of the Exceptions, some of the Notes, and many of the Observations, under the preceding Rules of Syntax; to which Exceptions, Notes, or Observations, the learner may recur, for an explanation of whatsoever is difficult in the parsing, or peculiar in the construction, of these examples or others.

LESSON I.—PROSE.

“The higher a bird flies, the more out of danger he is; and the higher a Christian soars above the world, the safer are his comforts.”—Sparke.

“In this point of view, and with this explanation, it is supposed by some grammarians, that our language contains a few Impersonal Verbs; that is, verbs which declare the existence of some action or state, but which do not refer to any animate being, or any determinate particular subject.”—L. Murray’s Gram., 8vo, p. 109.

“Thus in England and France, a great landholder possesses a hundred times the property that is necessary for the subsistence of a family; and each landlord has perhaps a hundred families dependent on him for subsistence.”—Webster's Essays, p. 87.

“It is as possible to become pedantick by fear of pedantry, as to be troublesome by ill timed civility.”—Johnson's Rambler, No. 173.

“To commence author, is to claim praise; and no man can justly aspire to honour, but at the hazard of disgrace.”—Ib., No. 93.

“For ministers to be silent in the cause of Christ, is to renounce it; and to fly is to desert it.”—SOUTH: Crabb's Synonymes, p. 7.

“Such instances shew how much the sublime depends upon a just selection of circumstances; and with how great care every circumstance must be avoided, which by bordering in the least upon the mean, or even upon the gay or the trifling, alters the tone of the emotion.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 43.

“This great poet and philosopher, the more he contemplated the nature of the Deity, found that he waded but the more out of his depth, and that he lost himself in the thought instead of finding an end to it.”—Addison. “Odin, which in Anglo-Saxon was Woden, was the supreme god of the Goths, answering to the Jupiter of the Greeks.”—Webster's Essays, p. 262.

“Because confidence, that charm and cement of intimacy, is wholly wanting in the intercourse.”—Opie, on Lying, p. 146.

“Objects of hearing may be compared together, as also of taste, of smell, and of touch: but the chief fund of comparison are objects of sight.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. ii, p. 136.

“The various relations of the various Objects exhibited by this (I mean relations of near and distant, present and absent, same and different, definite and indefinite, &c.) made it necessary that here there should not be one, but many Pronouns, such as He, This, That, Other, Any, Some, &c.”—Harris's Hermes, p. 72.

“Mr. Pope's Ethical Epistles deserve to be mentioned with signal honour, as a model, next to perfect, of this kind of poetry.”—Blair's Rhet., p. 402.

“The knowledge of why they so exist, must be the last act of favour which time and toil will bestow.”—Rush, on the Voice, p. 253.

“It is unbelief, and not faith, that sinks the sinner into despondency.—Christianity disowns such characters.”—Fuller, on the Gospel, p. 141.

“That God created the universe, [and] that men are accountable for their actions, are frequently mentioned by logicians, as instances of the mind judging.”

LESSON II.—PROSE.

“To censure works, not men, is the just prerogative of criticism, and accordingly all personal censure is here avoided, unless where necessary to illustrate some general proposition.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Introduction, p. 27.

“There remains to show by examples the manner of treating subjects, so as to give them a ridiculous appearance.”—Ib., Vol. i, p. 303.

“The making of poetry, like any other handicraft, may be learned by industry.”—Macpherson’s Preface to Ossian, p. xiv.

“Whatever is found more strange or beautiful than was expected, is judged to be more strange or beautiful than it is in reality.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. i, p. 243.

“Thus the body of an animal, and of a plant, are composed of certain great vessels; these[,] of smaller; and these again[,] of still smaller, without end, as far as we can discover.”—Id., ib., p. 270.

“This cause of beauty, is too extensive to be handled as a branch of any other subject: for to ascertain with accuracy even the proper meaning of words, not to talk of their figurative power, would require a large volume; an useful work indeed, but not to be attempted without a large stock of time, study, and reflection.”—Id., Vol. ii, p. 16.

“O the hourly dangers that we here walk in! Every sense, and member, is a snare; every creature, and every duty, is a snare to us.”—Baxter, Saints’s Rest.

“For a man to give his opinion of what he sees but in part, is an unjustifiable piece of rashness and folly.”—Addison.

“That the sentiments thus prevalent among the early Jews respecting the divine authority of the Old Testament were correct, appears from the testimony of Jesus Christ and his apostles.”—Gurney’s Essays, p. 69.

“So in Society we are not our own, but Christ’s, and the church’s, to good works and services, yet all in love.”—Barclay’s Works, Vol. i, p. 84.

“He [Dr. Johnson] sat up in his bed, clapped his hands, and cried, ‘O brave we!’—a peculiar exclamation of his when he rejoices.”—Boswell’s Life of Johnson, Vol. iii, p. 56.

“Single, double, and treble emphasis are nothing but examples of antithesis.”—Knowles’s Elocutionist, p. xxviii.

“The curious thing, and what, I would almost say, settles the point, is, that we do Horace no service, even according to our view of the matter, by rejecting the scholiast’s explanation. No two eggs can be more like each other than Horace’s Malthinus and Seneca’s Mecenas.”—Philological Museum, Vol. i, p. 477. “Acting, conduct, behaviour, abstracted from all regard to what is, in fact and event, the consequence of it, is itself the natural object of this moral discernment, as speculative truth and [say or] falsehood is of speculative reason.”—Butler’s Analogy, p. 277.

“To do what is right, with unperturbed faculties, is ten times easier than to undo what is wrong.”—Porter’s Analysis, p. 37.

“Some natures the more pains a man takes to reclaim them, the worse they are.”—L’ESTRANGE: Johnson’s Dict., w. Pains.

“Says John Milton, in that impassioned speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing, where every word leaps with intellectual life, ‘Who kills a man, kills a reasonable creature, God’s image; but who destroys a good book, kills reason itself, kills the image of God, as it were, in the eye. Many a man lives a burden upon the earth; but a good book is the precious life-blood of a master spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose for a life beyond life!’”—Louisville Examiner, June, 1850.

LESSON III.—PROSE.

“The philosopher, the saint, or the hero—the wise, the good, or the great man—very often lies hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred and brought to light.”—Addison.

“The year before, he had so used the matter, that what by force, what by policy, he had taken from the Christians above thirty small castles.”—Knolles.

“It is an important truth, that religion, vital religion, the religion of the heart, is the most powerful auxiliary of reason, in waging war with the passions, and promoting that sweet composure which constitutes the peace of God.”—Murray’s Key, p. 181.

“Pray, sir, be pleased to take the part of us beauties and fortunes into your consideration, and do not let us be flattered out of our senses. Tell people that we fair ones expect honest plain answers, as well as other folks.”—Spectator, No. 534. “Unhappy it would be for us, did not uniformity prevail in morals: that our actions should uniformly be directed to what is good and against what is ill, is the greatest blessing in society; and in order to uniformity of action, uniformity of sentiment is indispensable.”—Kames, El. of Crit., Vol. ii, p. 366.

“Thus the pleasure of all the senses is the same in all, high and low, learned and unlearned.”—Burke, on Taste, p. 39.

“Upwards of eight millions of acres have, I believe, been thus disposed of.”—Society in America, Vol. i, p. 333.

“The Latin Grammar comes something nearer, but yet does not hit the mark neither.”—Johnson’s Gram. Com., p. 281.

“Of the like nature is the following inaccuracy of Dean Swift’s.”—Blair’s Rhet., p. 105. “Thus, Sir, I have given you my own opinion, relating to this weighty affair, as well as that of a great majority of both houses here.”—Ib.

“A foot is just twelve times as long as an inch; and an hour is sixty times the length of a minute.”—Murray’s Gram., p. 48.

“What can we expect, who come a gleaner, not after the first reapers, but after the very beggars?”—Cowley’s Pref. to Poems, p. x.

“In our Lord’s being betrayed into the hands of the chief-priests and scribes, by Judas Iscariot; in his being by them delivered to the Gentiles; in his being mocked, scourged, spitted on, [say spit upon,] and crucified; and in his rising from the dead after three days; there was much that was singular, complicated, and not to be easily calculated on before hand.”—Gurney’s Essays, p. 40.

“To be morose, implacable, inexorable, and revengeful, is one of the greatest degeneracies of human nature.”—Dr. J. Owen.

“Now, says he, if tragedy, which is in its nature grand and lofty, will not admit of this, who can forbear laughing to hear the historian Gorgias Leontinus styling Xerxes, that cowardly Persian king, Jupiter, and vultures, living sepulchres?”—Holmes’s Rhetoric?, Part II, p. 14.

“O let thy all-seeing eye, and not the eye of the world, be the star to steer my course by; and let thy blessed favour, more than the liking of any sinful men, be ever my study and delight.”—Jenks’s Prayers, p. 156.

LESSON IV.—PROSE.

“O the Hope of Israel, the Saviour thereof in time of trouble, why shouldest thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a way-faring man, that turneth aside to tarry for a night?”—Jeremiah, xiv, 8.

“When once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved.”—1 Peter, iii, 20.

“Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other.”—Psalms, lxxxv, 10.

“But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.”—Matt., xv, 9.

“Knowest thou not this of old, since man was placed upon the earth, that the triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment?”—Job, xx, 4, 5.

“For now we see through a glass darkly; but then, face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.”—1 Cor., xiii, 12.

“For then the king of Babylon’s army besieged Jerusalem: and Jeremiah the Prophet was shut up in the court of the prison which was in the king of Judah’s house.”—Jer., xxxii, 2.

“For Herod had laid hold on John, and bound him, and put him in prison, for Herodias’ sake, his brother Philip’s wife.”—Matt., xiv, 3.

“And now I have sent a cunning man, endued with understanding, of Hiram my father’s, the son of a woman of the daughters of Dan.”—2 Chron., ii, 13.

“Bring no more vain oblations: incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with: it is iniquity even the solemn meeting.”—Isaiah, i, 13.

“For I have heard the voice of the daughter of Zion, that bewaileth herself, that spreadeth her hands, saying, Woe is me now! for my soul is wearied because of murderers.”—Jer., iv, 31.

“She saw men portrayed upon the wall, the images of the Chaldeans portrayed with vermillion, girded with girdles upon their loins, exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads, all of them princes to look to, after the manner of the Babylonians of Chaldea, the land of their nativity.”—Ezekiel, xxiii, 15.

“And on them was written according to all the words which the Lord spake with you in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly.”—Deut., ix, 10.

“And he charged them that they should tell no man: but the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it.”—Mark, vii, 36.

“The results which God has connected with actions, will inevitably occur, all the created power in the universe to the contrary notwithstanding.”—Wayland’s Moral Science, p. 5.

“Am I not an apostle? am I not free? have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? are not ye my work in the Lord? If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am to you; for the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord.”—1 Cor., ix, 1, 2.

“Not to insist upon this, it is evident, that formality is a term of general import. It implies, that in religious exercises of all kinds the outward and [the] inward man are at diametrical variance.”—Chapman’s Sermons to Presbyterians, p. 354.

LESSON V.—VERSE.

“See the sole bliss Heaven could on all bestow,
Which who but feels, can taste, but thinks, can know;
Yet, poor with fortune, and with learning blind,
The bad must miss, the good, untaught, will find.”—Pope.

“There are, who, deaf to mad Ambition’s call,
Would shrink to hear th’ obstreperous trump of fame;
Supremely blest, if to their portion fall
Health, competence, and peace.”—Beattie.

“High stations tumult, but not bliss, create;
None think the great unhappy, but the great.
Fools gaze and envy: envy darts a sting,
Which makes a swain as wretched as a king.”—Young.

“Lo, earth receives him from the bending skies!
Sink down, ye mountains; and, ye valleys, rise;
 With heads declin’d, ye cedars, homage pay;
Be smooth, ye rocks; ye rapid floods, give way.”—Pope.

“Amid the forms which this full world presents
Like rivals to his choice, what human breast
 E’er doubts, before the transient and minute,
 To prize the vast, the stable, and sublime?”—Akenside.

“Now fears in dire vicissitude invade;
 The rustling brake alarms, and quiv’ring shade:
Nor light nor darkness brings his pain relief;
 One shows the plunder, and one hides the thief.”—Johnson.

“If Merab’s choice could have complied with mine,
 Merab, my elder comfort, had been thine:
 And hers, at last, should have with mine complied,
 Had I not thine and Michael’s heart descried.”—Cowley.

“The people have as much a negative voice
 To hinder making war without their choice,
 As kings of making laws in parliament:
 ‘No money’ is as good as ‘No assent.’”—Butler.

“Full many a gem of purest ray serene
 The dark unfathom’d caves of ocean bear;
 Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
 And waste its sweetness on the desert air.”—Gray.

“Oh fool! to think God hates the worthy mind,
 The lover and the love of human kind,
Whose life is healthful, and whose conscience clear,
 Because he wants a thousand pounds a year.”—Pope.

“O Freedom! sovereign boon of Heav’n,
 Great charter, with our being given;
 For which the patriot and the sage
 Have plann’d, have bled thro’ ev’ry age!”—Mallet.

LESSON VI.—VERSE.

“Am I to set my life upon a throw,
 Because a bear is rude and surly? No.”—Cowper.

“Poor, guiltless I! and can I choose but smile,
 When every coxcomb knows me by my style?”—Pope.

“Remote from man, with God he pass’d his days,
Prayer all his business, all his pleasure praise.”—Parnell.

“These are thy blessings, Industry! rough power;
Whom labour still attends, and sweat, and pain.”—Thomson.

“What ho! thou genius of the clime, what ho!
 Liest thou asleep beneath these hills of snow?”—Dryden.

"What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?
Then get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself."—Shak.

"Then palaces and lofty domes arose;
These for devotion, and for pleasure those."—Blackmore.

"Tis very dangerous, tampering with a muse;
The profit's small, and you have much to lose."—Roscommon.

"Lucretius English'd! 't was a work might shake
The power of English verse to undertake."—Otway.

"The best may slip, and the most cautious fall;
He's more than mortal, that ne'er err'd at all."—Pomfret.

"Poets large souls heaven's noblest stamps do bear, Poets, the watchful angels' darling care."—Stepney.

"Sorrow breaks reasons, and reposing hours;
Makes the night morning, and the noon-tide night."—Shak.

"Nor then the solemn nightingale ceas'd warbling."—Milton.

"And O, poor hapless nightingale, thought I,
How sweet thou singst, how near the deadly snare!"—Id.

"He calls for famine, and the meagre fiend Blows mildew from between his shrivell'd lips."—Cowper.

"If o'er their lives a refluent glance they cast, Theirs is the present who can praise the past."—Shenstone.

"Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave."—Pope.

"Great eldest-born of Dullness, blind and bold!
Tyrant! more cruel than Procrustes old;
Who, to his iron bed, by torture, fits,
Their nobler part, the souls of suffering wits."—Mallet.

"Parthenia, rise.—What voice alarms my ear?
Away. Approach not. Hah! Alexis there!"—Gay.

"Nor is it harsh to make, nor hard to find A country with—ay, or without mankind."—Byron.

"A frame of adamant, a soul of fire,
No dangers fright him, and no labours tire."—Johnson.

"Now pall the tasteless meats, and joyless wines,
And luxury with sighs her slave resigns."—Id.

